"I mean the man I called Steve. He called himself Steve—Sandy McLaurin, of San Francisco, told me you wanted to find him. Well, you can't find him, and I am glad of it. He is far beyond the law and the lawyers. He is at the bottom of the Pacific Ocean, and he is better there than in your cities and more. I wouldn't believe Steve ever did anything wrong, not if you swore yourself black and blue over it."

"Stop, my friend!"

"I am Steve's friend, not yours."

"I am Steve's friend. I am also his brother."

"Oh! that's it!"

"If you believe that Steve Lloyd is wanted for anything but love and honor, you are much mistaken. And if you are telling me that Steve is dead, thinking to lead me on a wrong scent, let me tell you, it is a great cruelty. His mother and wife and sister and children and I, myself, still keep a hope of his return. Do not for God's sake kill that hope, unless you have sure and certain knowledge of his death."

"I have."

"What is it?"

"I saw him die."

"Where? How?"

"I'll tell you. I met Steve when I was second engineer on the Alaska. We were mates and friends and I loved him. Who could help loving him? I don't take to people in general, but I took to Steve, and I loved him. It is no matter to you what fortune took me to 'Frisco, but I was there looking for a job, when one morning I saw Steve on the street, and he was so bright and handsome that I could not help but say, 'God bless you, Steve! I'm out of luck and very shabby, and you needn't speak to me; but I am glad to see you looking like the gentleman you are and always were.' Well sir, if I'd been the richest man and the greatest man in the world, Steve couldn't have been more set up to meet me. He asked me where I was staying, and I said at Sandy McLaurin's, and he said, well then he'd stay there, too. We talked a bit, and then agreed to meet at Sandy's for supper at six o'clock, and I never thought for a moment that he was going to quit the first hotel in the place to come to me."

"Stay. Do you remember the date of this meeting?"

"To be sure. It was on May the sixth of last year."

"Yes," said John, sadly: "the proprietor told me that he paid his bill on the afternoon of the sixth, and said he would come for his trunks later."

"Well sir, he intended to do so, no doubt; but just after I left Steve, the captain of a coast steamer stopped me, and asked if I would run his engines down the water about thirty miles the next day. He was going to take a party of women and children on a picnic to some big orange grove. I said I would go and I begged Steve to come with me; and I begged him so hard that he finally consented, though I could see he didn't want to go. And he told me he intended taking the ten o'clock train at night for the East, but I assured him we would be back by eight at the latest, and so he would have two hours to come and go on. He thought it would be enough and so went with me."

"Do you remember the name of the place?"

"San Justa, but it is nothing of a place, only some big gardens and a grove and a few houses. All went well enough, the women had tea-parties under the trees, and the children ate fruit and danced and played; but the captain spent the day in a drinking house, and when he came aboard he was reckless and quarrelsome. There was a full moon though, and it was light as day, yet I felt in myself that something was going to happen. I told Steve so, and asked him to keep the captain in sight. Half an hour afterwards, a big steamer struck us, and went straight ahead."

"But she stopped to see what damage she had done?"

"No, she didn't, and I can't blame her much. She was badly hurt herself, and our captain gave her such blaspheming ill-words as were not fit to get help with; and very likely they thought, if we needed help, we would have found decent language to say so. Any way, we were left alone, and I knew what was coming. I went on deck, and the first thing I saw was the cowardly captain and crew putting off in a boat, and Steve standing by the gunwale, with an iron bar in his hand, threatening to brain any man who got into a boat, while there was a woman or a child to save. I saw him standing on the sloping deck of the fast-sinking ship, helping them into the boats, while the water rose to his knees—and higher—and higher—but he got every woman and child safely off; and he went down with a blessing on his lips."

Both men were weeping, and John could not utter a word. The stranger continued, "I had stood by him and helped him all I could, and he saw me in the water just as he was sinking, and he called out: 'Good bye, David! God help, and save, and bless'—that is all. But it is enough to comfort you I hope." Then seeing John take out his check book, he added, "Stop that. I heard about the reward, but I wouldn't touch a penny for nothing in the world."

"Take your expenses at any rate."

"I will not. I was coming to New York on my own affairs. While Steve was living I would have done anything for him heart and hands could do free and welcome. It isn't likely I'll pocket money for a kindness to the dead. What do you take me for? I am sorry enough for those who loved him, but he died a good death. No man could die better than Steve did. Tell them that; and good bye, sir!"

Then John sat still with his eyes covered, but seeing the whole tragedy. He understood the situation, the strong arm which would work miracles of salvation, the kind encouragement to the weak, the sunny trust that at the last moment could pray for help for another rather than for himself;—and he could weep no longer. He thought of his friend as knocking all his life long at a door not opened—longing and wistfully watching—and then suddenly—a door opened into heaven, and a Voice heard saying, "Come up hither." No, he could not weep for Steve. The long yearning of his heart for freedom was stilled. His soul had slipped the bonds of its incarnation. Steve was forever among the Freedmen of God.

So the agony of the long waiting was at last over. The grief not sure was now certain. And in spite of his grief he found grace to say, "Thank God for a death so noble." It was best now, that all who loved Steve should know the truth. He went out at once to Jessie's home and found Mrs. Lloyd and Alice sitting with her. She had not been expecting John, and the moment he entered she divined the news he brought.

"What is it, John?" she asked in a whisper. "Is Steve dead?"

"Steve is alive forever!"

Then sitting down by the three women, and mingling his tears with theirs, John told the story of Steve's heroic death. "He gave his life a ransom for many lives, for the helpless women and children who would have been left to perish if Steve had not stood at the sinking gunwale for them. There is nothing to weep for in such a death," and yet John bowed his head and wept bitterly.

Then a marvellous thing took place. Jessie, who had been prostrate in a silent despair for weeks, suddenly rose to her feet, and with clasped hands and uplifted

(Continued on next page.)

Troublesome Pimples

Blood Perfectly Purified by Hood's.

"I have been troubled with small red pimples breaking out on my face. They caused me a great deal of pain. I have taken several bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and it has given me relief. I have not been troubled with the pimples since I began taking it." LUCY FISCHER, 230 West 144th Street, New York City.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills cure constipation. 25 cents.

A BOON TO THE AFFLICTED
HEADACHE AND NEURALGIA
Cured to Stay Cured by Using
DR. RIGGS' MARVELOUS CAPSULES.
NEVER FAIL.

No Opium or other Narcotic
Recall of 35 years medical practice.
At druggists or by mail box 124 capsules 25 cts.
J. V. RIGGS, M.D., AMSTERDAM, N. Y.

8% MUNICIPAL WARRANTS.
Safe short-term paper, earning 8 to 10%.
Write for details. Robt. E. Strahorn & Co.,
Equitable Building, Boston, Mass.

Royal makes the food pure, wholesome and delicious.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

B&H
LAMPS

Our Little Book—mailed free—tells why, and will interest you in our line of : : : : :
Art Metal Goods, 9.
B. & H. Oil Heaters,
Leading Dealers will supply Our Goods.
Bradley & Hubbard Mfg. Co., Meriden, Conn.
NEW YORK, BOSTON, CHICAGO, PHILADELPHIA

Conservatory Life

is most healthful and delightful. The teachers are masters; the students are enthusiasts. Everything in the equipment and environment of the

New England
CONSERVATORY
OF MUSIC

tends to encourage high ideals: a devotion to art.

GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Musical Director.

Send for our catalogue to

FRANK W. HALE, Gen'l Mgr., Boston, Mass.

X-RAY PUR
The greatest practical remedy for all skin diseases, including eczema, psoriasis, and all other eruptions. It is a powerful antiseptic and disinfectant, and will cure all skin diseases in a few days. It is sold in bottles of 25, 50, and 100 cents. Send for a free trial bottle. ROBT. H. INGERSOLL, 65 Cortlandt St., N.Y.

WALL PAPER
In U.S. largest & finest stock of wall paper. From 2 1/2 cts. to 50 cts. per roll. Our prices 80 per cent. lower. KAYSER & ALLMAN, 932-934 Market St., N.Y.

Stamped Steel Ceilings
Most Durable and Decorative
Suitable for all buildings. Numerous samples. Send for Catalogue. H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., N.Y.

PARSONS Guaranteed CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS. Home Treatment. GOLD CURE. Send for Booklet FREE. C.A. PARSONS, 154 Comm. St., Boston, Mass.

DROPSY TREATED. Positively cured. Many thousands have been cured. From symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days all of all symptoms are removed. FREE. 10000 DRUMS. DR. GREEN & SONS, SINGAPORE.

FREE TO BALD We will mail on application information how to grow hair bald head, stop falling hair, move scalp diseases. Address: Attenheim Medical Disp., Dept. N. A., Box 779, Omaha, Neb.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS. 102 Fulton St., New York, sell all makes under one price. Exchanges. Immense stock for shipment for trial. Guaranteed first class. List in the world. Dealers supplied. 62-page illus.

THE KING'S HIGHWAY.

(Continued from preceding page.)

a rapture of rejoicing, gave God for Steve's glorious discharge from sorrows of mortality. "I can weep no more. There is a better way before me," she cried, stretching out her arms to him. "Show me how to stand in his place. You know what good he planned. I will carry them out toward. I consecrate my life to this man. As Steve's wife, I too often as Steve's widow I will pay to the Lord as long as I live, the debt of love I owe him. Steve, I know, has left me all his money. I give with all my heart the dollars of it as a thank-offering for the love he gave, and for the fact that he has taken away—blessed be the Lord!"

"Blessed be the name of the Lord!" were his joys and triumphs for those moments. With heart crushed, and on the borders of despair, Jessie found it to say, "Thy will be done," and in the moment the song of the redeemed in the Lord made her glad, keeping she turned to work, from the thought of herself and her own sorrow to the thought of others, and the sorrows of the world.

In as far as she took Steve's labors on the King's Highway, she gave with a hand; and not money, but time, influence and all her charities, as she had of before. Her day—like an ever stream among the shadows—from her tired hands—hardly giving for their own nameless, little trials of wife and motherhood.

First she worked for the thought of her soul; but she rose higher, to the thought of God; and sometimes disdained, when every errand drags, the thought of God steadies her heart.

Her strength was helped by Mrs. Grund Alice, who with her right hand left, the three are constantly preparing the way for the Lord, and lifting the gates of holiness that the King may come in, and fill the whole with righteousness, and peace, and joy.

"Good day is coming! Coming in the face of all oppositions and discouragements. The work Steve and John began is going on steadily forward. The nations soon became too little for its scope, and Mrs. Lloyd and Alice and others have added to the fund. The gates of sin are being broken down, through places of suffering smoothed and edged over; and the day of the Lord is at hand! John knows it, and he wears no weary nor falters in well-doing, inspires him, and humanity inspires him; and if his heart ever fails him for a moment, he has but to cast his eyes upward and around. For all around—over the earth and on the lintels of the door, the seal of their work, and on the pages of every paper, is the grand picture of Steve chose for it: "Thy Will Be Done." It is even carved on the line of the exquisite portrait of Steve which Mrs. Lloyd has given to the charities he founded; and it is but to gaze on that radiant face and virtue from it. Often he whispers the words before it:

"You have been a pillar of fire, still I can hear you say, 'Be strong, be strong, and again, be strong.' Be, kind soul, by what shore tarriest thou?"

In some far shining sphere Conscious or not of the past— Still thou performest the Word Of the Spirit in whom thou didst live."

And to this joyful certainty, all who love Steve still work, having in their hearts a sure and certain hope that he "in some far shining sphere" is working with them in the great end towards which all creation travaileth together—

Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done, On earth, as it is in Heaven.

THE END.

A Jewish Massacre Feared.

A recent cable dispatch from Teheran, the Persian capital, brings the startling rumor that the Mollahs, or Persian Mohammedan priests, are urging a general warfare on the Hebrews in the Shah's dominions. "Sayid Rayhan Allah (the Mollah) has planned the extermination of all the Hebrews in Persia," the news declares. "He has summoned the chief rabbi and informed him that Hebrews must accept the Mohammedan faith or he will do all that he can to oppress and exterminate them." The dispatch adds:

"He has formulated a series of restrictions, directing that every Hebrew must have all his hair cut off, must never ride an animal throughout the city, must wear European dress, and must wear a mark to distinguish him from the Mohammedan. Hebrew women must veil. A Hebrew must not build a house higher than his Mohammedan neighbor, and the entrance to the house must be distinguished from the Moslems'. He is not to come out of his house on a rainy day, and is not to touch certain food. When a Hebrew dies any relative who is a convert to Mohammedanism may possess all his property. A Hebrew who, having once accepted Islam, renounces it, will be put to death.

PERSIAN MOLLAHS OR PRIESTS.

"Fanatical Moslems attacked the Hebrew quarter on May 9, and pillaged the houses, dragged every Hebrew inmate out and brutally beat them, and cut off their hair, and put red patches on their clothes. Many Hebrews have accepted the offer of Islam in order to save their lives. Hebrews cannot leave their houses, and Hebrew women have been assaulted and their houses plundered. A final attack for the extermination of all the Hebrews is feared.

"The Hebrew quarter is guarded by soldiers, but the persecution is so terrible that it is almost beyond the power of the government to protect. The situation is so grave that the Shah has abandoned his intention of going to Europe. The government has ordered a mark, with the word 'Moosaih' (a follower of Moses, a Hebrew), to be written on it, to be worn by every Hebrew to distinguish him from a Moslem."

The Mollahs are expounders of both civil and criminal laws and of the religion of the state. Under them are the cadis or judges. The "sadr" or chief of the Mollahs, is a sort of Mohammedan pope, and if he should be disposed to heed the clamor of the fanatics, the worst fears of the Hebrews may be realized. Persia has been tolerant to its subjects in matters of religion of late years, and the new complexion of affairs may indicate a serious change of policy throughout the empire.

A Famous Hymn Recalled.

Quite recently a writer in an English publication called attention to the fact that Toplady, the author of the world-famed hymn, "Rock of Ages," became editor of The Gospel Magazine, in 1775, and that the hymn appeared in its pages in March 1776 under the expressive title: "A Living and Dying Prayer for the Holiest Believer in the World." It was the favorite of the late Prince Albert, and Mr. Gladstone has exercised in connection with it his powers as a translator. Replying to a query as to where Toplady got the expression "Rock of Ages," the Rev. J. Noyes writes that he must have taken it from Isaiah 26: 4 (see the margin A. V.).

THE BOWERY MISSION

and Young Men's Home.

Located at 105 Bowery, New York City.

(Conducted under the auspices of The Christian Herald.)

ONE hundred and fifty beds, Restaurant, and Free Dispensary. Women's Tea and Gospel Service, Saturday 2 P. M.; Gospel Meetings every evening in the year; Sunday Services, 10 A.M. and 8 P.M.

Recapitulation of last Annual Statement.

Gospel Meetings Held 469
Men Professed Conversion 3,474
Men and Boys Sheltered in Lodging House 40,768
Meals Served in Restaurant 588,321
Patients Treated in Free Dispensary
Opened Aug. 24, 1895

Number of Men and Boys for whom Employment was Secured 933

The following contributions have been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the Bowery Mission since last issue:

Prev. ack'd.....	$461.30
Friend, Soudan.....	1.00
Mrs Henry Breck.....	2.00
F A Flower.....	1.00
Grace A Graham.....	5.00
Mrs Amoret Lewis.....	1.00
Mrs May J Clark.....	1.00
L G Vance.....	1.00
Jas Sproul.....	6.70
Mrs Remsen Rushmore.....	2.00
Mrs Chas Miller.....	3.00
Osceola, Ia.....	15.00
C T H. Phila.....	5.00
Mrs Banel Wheeler.....	35.00
Mrs L E Wheeler.....	64.00
Mrs S M Davis.....	1.00
M J Bryant.....	1.00
Jennie P Smith.....	2.00
Jas Tiernan.....	3.00
Two friends, Nichols, N.Y.....	2.00
The Lord's money, Dudley, Mass.....	2.00
Total.....	$501.65

All contributions for the Bowery Mission will be acknowledged in these columns.

THE PRESENCE OF GOD.

"The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him." Psalm 147: 18.

CAN it be true, I wonder,
As true as it is sweet,
That God, the great All-Father,
Will come if I entreat?

That neither sin, nor weakness,
Will keep him from my side,
But 'neath the wings eternal,
In peace I may abide?

And e'en if death should rob me
Of all I love the best,
The "God of comfort" near me,
I surely still am blest.

His ear is ever open.
He hears the faintest cry;
To all who call upon him,
The Lord our God is nigh.

Irvington, N. Y. —CHRISTINE MULLER.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN New York.
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER
MISSOURI St. Louis.
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & PROSCO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

IGNORANCE in regard to paint materials or painting would seem in this age to be inexcusable, when full information can be had free. If interested, it will pay to get pamphlet and color cards, also twelve pictures of houses painted in different shades or combinations of colors, free. Send your address.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

"He that works easily works successfully."
'Tis very easy to clean house with

SAPOLIO

The Bane of Beauty.

Beauty's bane is the fading or falling of the hair. Luxuriant tresses are far more to the matron than to the maid whose casket of charms is yet unfried by time. Beautiful women will be glad to be reminded that falling or fading hair is unknown to those who use

Ayer's Hair Vigor.

"Time is money. My machine is worth its weight in gold."

This is the verdict of the thousands who are using the

SINGER SEWING MACHINE

But it not only SAVES TIME, it SAVES BOTHER AND FUSS, and the marring of material. It is quickly threaded and runs so smoothly and easily that an hour's work is an hour's pleasure.

Unscrupulous dealers are trying to use the good name of the Singer on inferior machines. Always look for the Singer trade-mark.

SOLD ONLY THROUGH OUR OWN OFFICES, LOCATED IN EVERY CITY.

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

HEISKELL'S Medicinal Soap does double work; while cleansing the skin it also heals and whiten it. It's the soap your skin needs.

If you have eruptions on the face, hands or body due to impure blood, use HEISKELL'S Pills. They do not gripe or nauseate. At druggists or by mail, 25 cents.

JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., 531 Commerce St., Philada.

HEROIC PERSONALITIES

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

The Heroism of the Pastor.

THE life of a true Christian minister is like an iceberg at sea, in that by far the largest portion of it is hid from the public gaze. When one thinks of the heroism of a minister, he is likely to think only of his faithfulness to conscience and the Gospel, in his public sermons or addresses. There is room enough for heroism there, and there have been many conspicuous examples of such courage in the past, and despite occasional criticisms, I do not believe there is any reason to fear that there is a letting-down in courageous fidelity on the part of the Christian ministry.

THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

The greatest temptation that comes to the minister to be easy and indulgent, and lacking in heroic faithfulness, is in the opportunities of pastoral work. More souls are won, or lost, in hand to hand or face to face struggles, than in the public congregations. The temptation to be a pleasant friend, a genial companion, a good fellow, and nothing more, to the members of his congregation, is a most insidious one to many ministers of the Gospel. One may be all these things that have been mentioned, and yet have added to them the crowning grace of heroic loyalty to the great mission of his life, to save the souls of his people, and win and keep them to personal fellowship with Jesus Christ.

One of the most honored and conspicuous examples of such heroism is witnessed in the career of that Nestor of the American pastorate, Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler. This is the more marked in Dr. Cuyler's case, because he had all those qualities which would be likely to tempt him away from what many men regard as the drudgery of pastoral work. His brilliant service in the Christian press is known and read of all men. He is at once the most voluminous and brilliant of all the contributors of religious articles to the newspaper press of the past generation. He has always been in great demand as a preacher and platform speaker, and that in the face of all this he should have held himself steadily day by day through his long pastoral career, to faithful pastoral visitation, in which he sought with infinite tact and sympathy, and yet with fearless honesty to Christ, to advise and rebuke, and win men to Christ is an illustration of the highest heroism.

The result is that there is many a home in Brooklyn today where the family altar is established, and where Christ reigns supreme, that never could have been captured even by Dr. Cuyler's vivid and forceful sermons, but were stormed and won by that persistent personal visitation, their door being again and again, and reinforced the truth proclaimed on the Sabbath by pungent, heart-searching conversation. Many and many a young man in the "City of Churches" has said to me, while his face glowed with a tender light, "I am one of Dr. Cuyler's boys;" and when these "boys" have come to be gray-headed grandsires, long after the good doctor is wearing his crown in heaven, they will still recall with loving reminiscence the pastor who knew all their names in the big church, and made all the children feel that they were his boys and his girls.

The good doctor once said to me in a conversation about pastoral work, that while a sermon scattered like a shot-gun, private conversation could be sent straight to its mark, like the ball from a rifle. He relates how he once spent an evening in a vain endeavor to bring a man to a decision for Christ. As he was about to take his departure, the gentleman whom he had been seeking to win, took him upstairs to the nursery to show the faithful pastor his beautiful children in their cribs. This was the doctor's golden opportunity. After looking on the little sleepers with loving admiration, for a moment, he turned to his host and said tenderly: "Do you mean that these sweet children shall never have any help from their father to get to heaven?" The arrow went straight to its mark. The man was deeply moved, and in a few weeks became an active member of the church.

Another instance shows his mingled tact and courage in seizing upon an opportunity to carry his point for the good of a man's soul. Dr. Cuyler had called on a rich merchant in New York, on a very cold winter evening. As the door opened for him to leave, the piercing wind swept in to the hallway, and he said: "What an awful night for the poor!" The merchant shivered at the remark, and asking the doctor to wait a moment, stepped back to his library, and bringing a roll of bank bills, he said: "Please hand these for me to the poorest people you know!" A few days later Dr. Cuyler wrote to the merchant the grateful thanks of some poor families whom his bounty had relieved in their great distress, and added: "How is it that a man who is so kind to his fellow-creatures, has always been so unkind to his Saviour as to refuse him his heart?" That single sentence was blessed of God to the merchant's salvation. He immediately sent Dr. Cuyler to come and talk with him, and at once gave his heart to the Master. He has been a most valuable and gracious Christian man ever since. He assured Dr. Cuyler that he was the first person that had talked to him about his soul in nearly twenty years. The heroism of the pastor did more than a thousand sermons had been able to do to win him to open loyalty to Christ.

The best part of it all is that this kind of heroism is within the reach of every living ambassador of the Lord.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Myths of Israel: by Amos Kidder Fiske; pp. 355; price $1.50; published by The Macmillan Company, 60 Fifth Ave., New York.

The Old Testament under Fire: by A. I. F. Behrends, D.D., S. T. D., an answer to some of the Higher Critics showing that the attacks on the authority and genuineness of the book are unwarranted; pp. 246; price $1.50; published by Funk & Wagnalls, New York.

A Sunshine Trip: glimpses of the Orient: extracts from letters written by Margaret Bottoms; pp. 215; price $1. Published by Edward Arnold, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

Have You Asthma or Hay Fever?

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma and Hay-fever in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, West Va., writes that it cured him of Asthma of thirty years' standing, and Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair in Hay-fever season, being unable to lie down night or day. The Kola Plant cured him at once. Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, editor of the Farmer's Magazine, was also cured when he could not lie down for fear of choking, being always worse in Hay-fever season. Others of our readers give similar testimony, proving it truly a wonderful remedy. If you suffer from Asthma or Hay-fever we advise you to send your address to the Kola Importing Co., 115 Broadway, New York, who to prove its power will send a large case by mail free to every reader of The Christian Herald, who needs it. All they ask in return is that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

If you are nervous and irritable, your blood needs cleansing and Hood's Sarsaparilla is the medicine which you should take. It will make you strong in every way. It creates an appetite.

An Exceptional Opportunity

To Secure a Beautiful and Book at a B

Is the title of a magnificent manual for family worship and home teaching, and a book that should be in every Christian home in the land, and those who are fortunate to secure a copy of this book will find it a delightful companion. It contains 480 pages,

210 Illustrations,

Two Beautiful Colored Pictures, the Lord's Prayer and Ten Commandments, Lesson, Hymn and Prayer constituting a complete family worship for every day in the year. Readings and Meditations for Special Occasions.

New Year's Day, Good Friday, Easter, Whit Sunday, Independence Day, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day and Days of Affliction; Memory Texts for Every Day in the Year, The Church Steps, Home Lessons, Special Collects, Bible Biography, Picture Lessons for Children, Old and New Tunes, Wisdom in Proverbs, Blot Pages for Records and Autographs.

Altogether it is the Most Complete Help for Family Worship Published. . . .

By the purchase of the entire stock from the original publishers, we are enabled to offer the subscribers of "The Christian Herald" a remarkable bargain, provided the stock is not exhausted when your order is received, as follows:

Cloth Illuminated Cover, former price $3.00.	Special Price, 1.50.
Half Morocco, " " 4.00.	" " 2.00.
Full Morocco, " " 5.00.	" " 2.50.

Remember this special price pays all express charges and covers this magnificent book weighing 4 1/2 lbs. when closed 8 1-2 x 10 1-2 inches, absolutely free of expense.

If the stock is exhausted when your order is received, we will refund the money at once, and as we have only sufficient copies to supply a small percentage of the subscribers of "The Christian Herald," you will be fortunate enough to avail yourself of this exceptional offer.

Send money by money order or registered letter. Write name and address plainly, giving your nearest express office.

P. B. BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

other, our eggs are beaten. our meat is minced. our potatoes are pounded. our grain is reaped. our newspapers are printed on machines. of which we knew only the merest alphabet when the youthful Queen began to reign.

Our ocean-travel a matter of weeks sixty years ago, is now a scudding over the Atlantic's ferry at race-horse speed, and the fine steamers are palaces replete with every luxury. Our land journeys are no longer cold in winter and scorching in summer, for our parlor cars are home-like in their appointments and we may go where we will with little inconvenience, and great pleasure.

As for house furnishing it has increased in tastefulness since Victoria's early days when at least in this country gloomy hair cloth and solemn rep maintained funereal state in everybody's parlor. Indeed everything has advanced in elegance and beauty since the little lady took the sceptre into her dainty hands.

But it is as wife, most loyal to that good and tender husband who too early passed away, Albert the Good, who bore so well "that fierce light which beats upon a throne," that we admire Victoria. And next as mother, so gentle, so devoted, so wise, so benignant, that as mother and grandmother nearly all the royalties of Europe revere her. Somehow her motherly character looms largest before us, and we feel that in the great Jubilee, all English speaking peoples had taken part, either as spectators or sympathizers, and they honored the great lady not only but also the dear loving mother, whose sons and grandsons and sons-in-law and cousins and nephews surround her in a brilliant and stately body-guard as she went on her regal way, in the pleasant light of June. Queen's weather was hers, the fine sturdy old gentle-woman that she is, full of grace and full of pluck, and still holding her own in the end of the century as in its earlier days.

The mother-country has had three long reigns in which women bore rule. Queen Anne, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, all had reigns of exceptional magnificence. It would seem that the womanly distinctions of patience, of attention to detail, of good sense in choosing counsellors, and of knowing when to let well enough alone have stood the royal ladies in good stead.

In literature, what pomp of names we find adding lustre to Victoria's reign. What great statesmen have aided her, what great soldiers have fought for her, what great preachers have spoken in her pulpits, what a galaxy of famous men, still here, or gone to the majority, add splendor to her record! Across the seas we reached our hands in loving congratulation to Victoria of England and of India, and said of her on her Diamond Jubilee, we American mothers and daughters, "God save the Queen!"

The sixty years, two full generations pray observe, have brought about a great change of feeling between England and America, and a better understanding the one of the other, though still it is not sufficiently strong to have made possible the Strange New Shrub that Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc. Free.

We have previously described the new botanic discovery, Alkavis, which proves a specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disorders of the Kidney or urinary organs. It is now known that Kava-Kava is a part of the same well known Kava-Kava Shrub, and is a specific cure for these diseases just as quinine is for malaria. Hon. R. C. Wood of Lowell, Ind., writes that in four weeks Alkavis cured him of Kidney and bladder disease of ten year's standing, and Rev. Thomas M. Owen, of West Pawlet, Vt., gives similar testimony. Many ladies also testify to its wonderful curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. The only importers of Alkavis so far are The Church Kidney Cure Co. of 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepared by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who sends a notice of their name and address to the publisher, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Pain in Back, Female Complaint, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative power.

great forward step in civilization which we had hoped for, when we still thought "Arbitration" would become a fact, instead of a vision. But bitterness on the one hand, and scorn on the other have passed away, and we seldom see or hear expressions of animosity once commonly heard in public speech, and familiar on the lips even of childhood. It is to be regretted, indeed, that the swing of the pendulum is a bit too far in the other direction, and we notice a silly imitation of things and ways that are English, when our own American ways are really better. It is no credit to anybody to adopt a transatlantic method of pronunciation, or affect a transatlantic fashion of any kind, unless there is improvement in the first, and progress in the second. So must conservative people think, and among them we are enrolled.

Margaret E. Sangster

Sad Orphans at Van.

Dr. G. C. Reynolds, American Missionary at Van, Armenia, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the following interesting description of a recent event among the orphans at the mission: "On the first of May (O. S.) the teachers arranged a little festival in the enlarged school room, and the orphans and day pupils together nearly filled the room, their number amounting to over 600. The teachers of two other schools were invited and a number of essays were read, with the intention of making it a happy and even gay occasion, but the shadow of the terrible scenes, now so near their first anniversary, still rest so heavily on the whole people that they could not be thrown off, and even the essays called forth more tears than smiles."

"Last Saturday we put the boys into their Sabbath clothes (neat suits made of blue mixed cotton cloth manufactured and made up in our own shops), and they look very well and were truly thankful. Just before time for our Sunday morning service, I heard multitudinous footsteps coming this way, and looking out saw that the boys were being drawn up under my window, and so I opened it and sat in it, while they sang a hymn composed by one of their number, giving expression to their thankfulness. Each boy had a flower in his button-hole. It was a very gratifying sight and touched us deeply."

Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk

A PERFECT SUBSTITUTE FOR MOTHERS MILK. FOR 40 YEARS THE LEADING BRAND.

"INFANT HEALTH" SENT FREE.
N.Y. CONDENSED MILK CO., NEW YORK

BOOKKEEPING

Shorthand; Mechanical and Architectural Drawing; Machine Design; Stationary Marine and Locomotive Engineering; Architecture; Railroad, Municipal, 31 COURSES Hydraulic and Bridge Engineering; Surveying and Mapping; Sheet Metal Pattern Cutting; Plumb; Electricity; Mining; Metal Prospecting; English Branches. All who study GUARANTEED SUCCESS. Fees Moderate. Advance or Installments. Circular Free: State subject you wish to study. International Correspondence Schools, Inc., 1912 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"Mizpah" Valve Nipples

WILL NOT COLLAPSE

and therefore prevent much colic. The valve prevents a vacuum being formed to collapse them. The ribs inside prevent collapsing when the child bites them. The rim is such that they cannot be pulled off the bottle.

Sample Free by Mail.

WALTER F. WARE, 512 Arch St., Philada., Pa.

SACRED SONGS No. 1.

No other New book equal to it. $25 per 100; 30 cts.
each, if by mail. THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
Lakeside Building, Chicago. 16 E. Ninth St., New York

History and Description of the Tabernacle and Temple of the Children of Israel prepaid on receipt of 3 2c. stamps.

TEMPLE BLOCK CO., Williamsport, Pa.

CRAZY WORK: 800 SILK REMNANTS, enough for a Quilt 4-yd. yds. 50c. IMMENSE PACK. with Boss & patterns, 10c. postpaid. Lemarie's Silk Mill, Little Ferry, N.J.

Don't bear

the burden of the wash-board any longer. Hasn't it caused enough damage and trouble and weariness? Do you realize the amount of wear and tear that it brings to your clothes in a single year? Get Pearline—get rid of the wash-board and that eternal rubbing. Be a free woman. You ought to see for yourself that Pearline's easy way of washing—soaking, boiling, rinsing—is better for the clothes and better for you. 513

Don't bear

the burden of the wash-board any longer. Hasn't it caused enough damage and trouble and weariness? Do you realize the amount of wear and tear that it brings to your clothes in a single year? Get Pearline—get rid of the wash-board and that eternal rubbing. Be a free woman. You ought to see for yourself that Pearline's easy way of washing—soaking, boiling, rinsing—is better for the clothes and better for you.

Millions NOW USE Pearline

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON

QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION

MODERNE

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.

Discovered by Accident.—In COMPOUNDING, 33 incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes and the hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used.

NOTE! If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, at which all hair will be removed at each application, and without slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward. MODERN SUBCUTANEOUS ELECTROLYTICS.

Recommended by all who have tested it merits—Used by people of refinement:—
Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a price as high as life which is away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use M. J. Lee's to destroy its growth. Modern sent by mail in safety mailing box, for the price of 50 cents.

to destroy its growth. Iodene sent by mail in safety mailing cases, postage paid (securely sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. ☒ Correspondence sacredly private. Postage stamps received the same as cash. (ALWAYS MENTION YOUR COUNTY AND THIS PAPER.) Cut this advertisement out.

LOCAL AND GENERAL AGENTS WANTED. MODENE MANUFACTURING CO., CINCINNATI, O., U. S. A. Manufacturers of the Highest Grade Hair Preparations. You can register your letter at any Post-office to insure its safe delivery. LUBE or the SLIGHTEST INJURY, & EVERY BOTTLE GUARANTEED.

WANTED. You can register your letter at any Post-office to insure its safe delivery.
We Offer $1,000 FOR FAILURE or the SLIGHTEST INJURY. EVERY BOTTLE GUARANTEED.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 PURE

There is a "comfortable feeling" that comes after a bath with Ivory Soap.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI

The Prudential

Has Nearly 2,500,000 Policies in Force.

These are guaranteed by

The PRUDENTIAL has the STRENGTH of GIBALTAR.

Assets, - - $19,541,827
Income, - - 14,158,445
Surplus, - - 4,034,116

Life Insurance in every form.
Ages 1 to 70. Amounts, $15 to $50,000. Premiums payable yearly, half-yearly, quarterly, weekly.

If you wish to make application or to know something more of THE PRUDENTIAL'S plans, write

The Prudential Insurance Company of America,

Home Office, Newark, N. J.

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President.

$25.00 and up.

INCORPORATED FOR 60 YEARS

FREE

PIANO

ORGAN

BEETHOVEN

PIANO & ORGAN CO.

P. O. Box 741

Washington, N. J.

DO YOU STAMMER? Write for our 140 page book, THE ORIGIN OF STAMMERING. A practical and scientific treatise on the Cause and Correction of Speech Defects by GEORGE ANDREW LEWIS, who stammered for more than 20 years. Send FREE with full particulars regarding treatment. Answer at once, enclosing 6 cents to cover postage, and you will receive in addition to the above a beautiful Souvenir containing 25 illustrations and half-tone engravings, interesting to every Stammerer. Address: The Lewis School for Stammerers, No. 30 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

Buggies, Phaetons, Surreys, Traps, Harness
Buy direct from factory at Wholesale Prices. 30 per cent saved. Guaranteed two years. Write for Illustrated Catalogue showing latest styles. Prices in plain figures. Testimonials from every state. Highest awards World's Fair and Atlanta Exposition. The largest and finest display at the Nashville Exposition. Write to day for free Catalogue.
Price $14.—Offices & Factories ALLIANCE CARRIAGE CO., 223 E. Court St., CINCINNATI, O.—Price $60.

BOYS AND GIRLS
Watches, Clocks, Tea Sets and Toilet Sets, with $5, $10 and $100 orders. Now is your chance to get orders for our TEA SETS, $1.00. Send for new Premium and Price List.
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
31 & 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y. P. O. Box 250.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING CHURCH BELLS & CHIMES
PUREST BELL METAL (COOPER AND TIN). Send for Price and Catalogue.
McHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

BLUMYER BELL FOUNDRY
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

MONUMENTS
DON'T buy marble or granite till you investigate WHITE BRONZE. More artistic and enduring; less expensive. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.
NO MORE GROWING. NO CRUMBLING. NO CLEANING. NO CRACKING.
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

NO DIRT LEFT
In clothes washed with the "BUSY BEE WASHING" machine in one hour and no hard work done. That's the record. AGENTS WANTED. Exclusive sale. Write for terms.
Lake Erie Mfg. Co., 119 E. 13 St., Erie, Pa.

Interested in Typewriters?
If so, you should know all about the latest improvements. The Smith Premier

Typewriter

Is the Leader in Improvements.
This company has issued an Art Catalogue containing much of value. It is free. Send for one
The Smith Premier Typewriter Co.,
SYRACUSE, N. Y., U. S. A.
BRANCH OFFICES
in 42 Principal Cities in the United States and England.

Irritable Stomachs

make irritable people. A food that is nourishing and that does not cloy the appetite is

Somatose

Somatose is a Perfect Food, Tonic and Restorative. It contains the nourishing elements of meat. Prepared for invalids and dyspeptics and those needing nourishment and a restored appetite. May be taken dry, or in water, milk, etc.

At druggists, in 2-oz., 1/4, 1/2 and 1 lb. tins.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium,

An Institution for the Scientific Treatment of Cancer

Tumors, and all forms of Malignant Growths, WITHOUT THE USE OF THE KNIFE

We have never failed to effect a permanent cure where we have had a reasonable opportunity. Books and circulars giving description of Sanatorium, Treatment, Terms, and References, free.
DRS. W. E. BROWN & SON, North Adams, Mass.

1897 High Grade Bicycles
for Men, Women, Girls & Boys. Complete line at lowest prices ever quoted.
$100 "Oakwood" for $15.00
$85 "Arlington" for $12.50
$55 " " " $10.75
$20 Bicycle " $7.50
$75 "Maywood" Simplest, Strongest Bicycle on Earth " $32.00
Fully guaranteed. Shipped anywhere C.O.D. with privilege to examine. No money in advance. Buy direct from manufacturers, save agents and dealers profits. Large illustrated catalogue free. Address (in full):
CashBuyers' Union, 162 W. Van Buren St. B 18 Chicago

600 Second Hand Bicycles
to close out. All makes, GOOD AS NEW, $5 to $15. NEW, HIGH GRADE '96 Models, fully guaranteed, $16 to $24.
$17 Model $20 to $30. Shipped anywhere on approval. Special Clearing Sale.
EARN A BICYCLE
by helping advertise us. Will give one sent in each week FREE. Look sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our Special Offer.
D. S. READ CYCLE CO., WARREN AVE. CHICAGO, ILL.

PEARS' is the best soap for the complexion, face and hands.

Established over 100 years. 20 additional awards. Be sure you get the genuine.

A Cure For Rheumatism.

DR. J. G. CONNER, IONIA, MICH.

Dear Sirs:—An old friend handed me a couple of small vials of Tartarilithine some time ago and on myself, having suffered from Rheumatism for several years. I was so pleased with its effects that I cured a full sized bottle, and since it I have been entirely free from Rheumatism during the past year. I observed that it is not surpassed by other preparation as a PROPERLY EFFICIENT diuretic; besides it is a 'minister'. Please send me a bottles for use among my patients with Rheumatism.

Pamphlet on the cure of Rheumatism Tartarilithine sent free by

McKESSON & ROBB S.,
91 Fulton Street, NEW YORK
Sole Agents for
The Tartarilithine Co.

LUBRICATE YOUR CHAIN

Dixon's Graphite

thoroughly lubricates the smallest part of them from wearing. Prepared from the smoothest soft graphite. Put up in tin gum or hold dust or dirt. Send 15c. for Dixon's No. 691 Cycle Chain Graphite to Dixon's JOSEPH DIXON CYCABLE CO., JERICHO, N. Y.

ELECTRIC STROKE BELL, 25c

The cheapest electric stroke bell ever offered. Pure bell metal, headed, perfect continuous ringing. Regular price 50c. place a sample and our consumers' hands we for ONLY 25 CENTS. Send for postage. AGENTS W. E. B. Ingersoll & Bro., 65 Garland St., Dept. 30

ROZBY
Can be used to or taken for cycle. Does it with rider. For children. Combines weight with safety. If you not have it, place a sample and our consumers' hands we for ONLY 25 CENTS. Send for postage. AGENTS W. E. B. Ingersoll & Bro., 65 Garland St., Dept. 30

AGENTS' OUTFIT FREE.
Weekly sales pay big money.
We make a high grade BICYCLE as low as $21.00. Fully guaranteed. Shipped anywhere on approval, direct from our factory.
ALPINE CYCLE CO., Dept. 250, Cincinnati, O.

MUST HAVE AGENTS
and Door Holders. Sample each Local agent stamp. Immense better than with proof. $10 a day. Write quick. Address: BROTHARD & Co., Box 22, Philadelphia.
500 Celebrated "Syn" cycles. New in original plus 96 stock must be sold at once. Shipped on approval. Send for T. Brown-Lewis Cycle Co., Chicago.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICE: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

COPYRIGHT 1897. BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

VOLUME 20.—NUMBER 29.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor.

NEW YORK, JULY 21, 1897.

PRICE FIVE CENTS.

ABDUL HAMID DEFIES ALL EUROPE.

He Threatens to Re-open the War Against Greece, and Refuses to Give up Thessaly—
The Powers to Take Coercive Action.

THE Autocrat of Turkey, Sultan Abdul Hamid, whose reign has already passed into history as the worst known to either Europe or Asia in a century, has once more assumed an attitude of contemptuous defiance of the powers.

For months he has been laboring to arrange for a permanent peace between Turkey and Greece. He has overrun the right of the Greek government to the occupied territory in all opposition to the European governments. He apparently refuses to prevent the result is a complication of the Constantinian government and the European embassies. He has far the hope of the European Cabinets. He has permitted the Sultan to be unchecked is a question which any solution may not be the first note of a war in history will repeat itself, and all the powers will be once more arrayed against

SULTAN ABDOUL HAMID.

Moslem race from European soil to their natural habitation in Asia, and the ridance of an evil potentiality, which has blighted civilization in a very large part of the whole world for over a thousand years.

At the close of the late war with Greece, and when the victorious Turks had entered Thessaly and driven the disheartened and outnumbered Greeks to their last stand near the ancient pass of Thermopylae, peace negotiations were begun. King George's government voluntarily submitted its case to the powers to make terms with the Porte, but during the months that have elapsed since Edhem Pasha's armies halted, the Sultan has opposed every proposition advanced by the Council of Ambassadors who represent the European Concert, looking to the arrangement of a lasting peace. It had been announced by the powers, at the beginning of the war, that neither Turkey nor Greece would be permitted to benefit territorially by the result. In accordance with this declaration it was agreed, after the war, that Turkey should have an adequate the war, that neither Turkey nor Greece would be permitted to benefit territorially by the result. In accordance with this declaration it was agreed, after the war, that Turkey should have an adequate senting to the rectification of the Greco-Turkish frontier. To this Turkey promptly demurred, declaring that it would consider no frontier north of the Salamvria river—a boundary which would add to the Sultan's dominions the greater part of the occupied province. This conclusion was formally announced by the Turkish Ministerial Council in a report to the Embassies, to which was added the conviction that it was impossible to come to terms with the powers, and that the sooner hostilities were resumed against Greece, the better.

Such an attitude on the part of Turkey was not wholly unexpected by the powers. It is known that the Sultan's armies in Thessaly have been receiving constant augmentations in artillery, cavalry and infantry, and that Edhem Pasha had been advised from Constantinople to hold himself in readiness for the resumption of the war at a moment's notice. This he has done, and his troops are prepared to advance instantly on the Greek position at Thermopylae, should such an order come from Constantinople. This is the Sultan's threat: to reopen the war, and after forcing the last position held by the Greeks, to march with his triumphant is being strongly urged by the rampant military party in Constantinople, who will hear of nothing short of the thorough humiliation of the Greeks, and who hold that Turkey should not submit to any interference designed to deprive her of the spoils of conquest—as Japan was robbed of the fruits of her victorious campaign against China.

This defiance of European authority by the Sultan's Government is well understood in Constantinople to have the open approval of Abdul Hamid personally. He has repeatedly declared that Edhem Pasha should have been in Athens long ago, and added that if concessions "are not made (by the powers as representing Greece), I shall give the order to advance, and dictate my own terms from the Acropolis." He believes he has "nothing to fear from the powers." He has trifled with and even snubbed their ambassadors. In view the intel Moslem power. Should such come to pass, the result would be the sweeping back of the indemnity, and that the Sultan's troops should be withdrawn from Thessaly, the united powers, in behalf of Greece, conlegions upon Athens and dictate his terms of peace from the Greek capital and from King George's palace. To this course he of this state of affairs the six powers—Russia, Germany, Austria, Britain, France

THE IMPERIAL CITY OF CONSTANTINOPLE AND THE BOSPHORUS—THE MOSQUE OF YENI DJAMI.

(Continued on page 339)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Reader, Medina, O. 1. What is the distinction between a Jew, and a Gentile? 2. How old was Daniel when he was led into captivity?

1. The word "Gentile" (goyim), was applied by the Jews to other nations than themselves, to imply that all such nations were more or less barbarians, and foreigners, and to distinguish them from the "specially favored people." Originally the word was used to refer to any nation, including the Jews themselves. 2. Jerome says he was a boy when taken to Babylon, and Ignatius asserts that he was twelve years old when he entered the king's service.

W. D. G. Riverside, Cal. 1. Do you know of a single instance of a person being cured by Christian Science as practised by Mrs. Eddy? 2. If Christian ministers were as consecrated and devoted now as the apostles were, could they not work miracles?

1. We do not happen to know of such a case, but we have no doubt that there are many such cases. The connection between the mind and the body is so close that it is possible to affect the body through the mind. If the body has all its organs, but is suffering because one of them is not doing its work, or because it is doing it inefficiently, it may get relief if some strong mental emotion can quicken or stimulate that organ. You may have read of cases of utter helplessness, where at the cry of "Fire!" the patient has risen from his bed and walked, after years of incapacity. 2. We believe there are many Christian persons fully as consecrated and devoted as the Apostles. The Apostles did not receive the power to work miracles because of their devotion, but to enable them to do a work requiring superhuman power. When you consider that the commission to make Christianity known throughout the world was given to such men as they were, you will see that they needed special gifts and credentials, and these Christ conferred upon them. If an emergency arose in our day, Christ might confer the power again, but he now prefers to have men use the ordinary powers of human nature. But he gives spiritual power, and you may see men whose natures are transformed under preaching that seems to us by no means extraordinary. The change of the drunken, vicious man to a sober, virtuous man is a greater miracle than the healing of the lame man by Peter (Acts 3:1-9).

Anxious Inquirer, Philadelphia. 1. What is meant by being in the vine and not bearing fruit (John 15:2)? 2. If, as stated in the fourth verse of that chapter, the branch cannot bring forth fruit of itself, why should it be threatened with being taken away in the second verse?

1. Do you not know persons whose religion seems genuine, yet whose lives do not recommend the Gospel, and who make no effort to win souls for Christ? Christianity was never intended to be a selfish religion. The man who is simply content with the conviction that his soul will be saved and is careless about the souls of those around him is a fruitless branch. 2. God does not operate by compulsion. The most successful soul-winners know that the power is not in themselves. But they seek to win souls and God uses them. Even the graces of the Christian character—another kind of fruit—are not self-produced; but the man who makes the effort to attain them finds himself divinely helped. He does not and cannot bring forth fruit of himself, but if he does not bear fruit it is his own fault, because God will help those who long to bear fruit. The parging is a painful process, but it is necessary to avoid the worse fate of being taken away.

Miss Lida F. Hewett, Leslie, S. C., writes: With a Christian's love and gratitude, I thank your readers for the many responses to the appeal for liberal aid in the Wallis Ranch Sunday School, De Witt county, Texas. I have received valuable papers, cards, lessons, etc., from Illinois, Wyoming, New York, New Jersey, Maine, Ohio, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Montana, New Hampshire, Mississippi, and Louisiana.

B. W. R. Wabikon, Ia. 1. Can a person be a Christian and use liquor moderately? 2. Should a man going into the ministry have always possessed the highest character or does it matter what he has been?

1. Liquor, like everything else in this world, poisons included, has its uses, but these are mainly medical. It is not an article of food nor a necessity, and there is no excuse for the indulgence of a habit which, even in its most temperate aspect, is pernicious, morally and physically, like all other sinful indulgences. The Bible admonishes us to avoid all such practices, and especially to avoid drink. The "temperate drinker," who believes he is doing no wrong in tampering lightly with this great evil, should remember that he is incurring a double responsibility—risking the wreck of his own soul and body, and also leading others by his bad example, to a like fate. (See Cor. 8:9 to 13; and 10:21, 31, 32; Rom. 14:21; Matt. 18:6, 7, and other passages.) 2. The Lord chooses his own instruments, and sometimes makes what seems to mortals a strange choice. Saul was a persecutor and "the chief of sinners," before he became Paul the faithful apostle. Thousands have been taken from the ranks of sin and after undergoing a change of heart, have become valiant captains in God's army. John Bunyan, the converted tinker; John Newton, once infidel and libertine; Richard Weaver, the drunken pitman, and thousands on thousands of others have been called from the depths of sin to become active workers for souls. Every mission in the land can point to once notorious sinners now reformed and laboring as preachers and evangelists, and not a few as regular pastors. The fact that some of our ablest spiritual leaders, in all ages, have been thus chosen, demonstrates that a man's past sins, when pardoned through redeeming grace, should not weigh against him among Christians, since all are sinners and under condemnation by law.

SPECIMENS OF ORNAMENTAL POTTERY OF THE ANCIENT INCAS.

These remarkable relics (called "Huacas" by the Peruvians), were unearthed at Cuzco, Peru, and the originals are now in the National Museum, at Lima. They are ornamental domestic jars or vases, of the latest Inca period, and are probably about 400 years old. The finest specimens were taken from the ruins of the "Temple of the Sun." Various animals are represented: the dog, the parrot, frog, swan, fish, pig, &c., and one vase is a grotesque delineation of a mother and children. These are among the most perfect examples of ancient art yet found in the Western Hemisphere.

J. H. H., Repanpo, N. J. What was the names of Cornelius' two servants and the soldier he sent with the message to Peter who dwelt at Joppa? Their names are nowhere mentioned in Scripture nor in any of the earlier writings.

G. A. H., Winchester, N. D. 1. Is it possible for a person to become so indifferent to the Holy Spirit's influence as to hear the Gospel every Sunday and be unmoved by it, being quite satisfied owing to his conscience not troubling him? 2. If a man leads a good, clean life and is kind and benevolent, but does not accept Christ, will he be saved?

1. It is quite possible. Paul describes such people (1 Timothy 4:3) "as having their consciences seared with a hot iron." They are people very difficult to win, because their armor of self-esteem cannot be easily penetrated. 2. It is not for human beings to set bounds to God's mercy, but it seems to us that mercy has not been promised to such a man. Christ said, "no man cometh to the Father but by me." Peter said, (Acts 4:12), "neither is there salvation in any other." He is like the man in the Parable of the Wedding Garment (Matt. 22:7-13) who refused the dress provided by the king. He prefers to plead his own merits at the bar of God, rather than the merits of Christ and we do not think much of the value of the plea. God having provided a way of salvation, is not likely to approve a man who "climbs up some other way." (John 10:1).

M. H., Udora, Okla. If a man takes up a serpent and it bites him, must he conclude according to Christ's words (Mark 16:17, 18), that he is not a true believer?

No, he should draw no such inference from the fact. A serpent will bite a believer just as readily as an unbeliever. Christ's promise was kept (see Acts 28:3-6), but gradually as the necessity for signs and wonders ceased, the power was lost. All through Christ's life he insisted that the miracles were merely his credentials. They were merely to convince the people that he had divine authority for his teaching. They were worked not as an end in themselves, but that people seeing them might believe in his teaching. As the child age, for which such wonders were effective, passed away, the value of miracles ceased and men came to understand the spiritual nature of Christianity and to learn that safety and helpfulness in spiritual things were the fulfilment of the promise.

F. E. L., Jefferson, Me. Will friends recognize each other in heaven? 2. Do you think little children will grow up in heaven? If so, how shall I recognize my little child who died recently?

1. There is very little revealed on which to base an answer to your question; but our faith in a loving Father leads us to believe that this universally coveted power will be granted to us. Paul's assurance of companionship with each other and with Christ (1 Thess. 4:17), would be meaningless if we were unable to

Important Notices

Some Premium Offers With

We cannot supply to new Subscribers a plain gilt-edged Bible, which heretofore was offered with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year at $2.

We cannot supply to new Subscribers Margaret E. Sangster's "Home Life Made Beautiful."

We cannot supply to new Subscribers Harland's "Home of the Bible."

Of the above three books we have enough left to meet, for the balance of the year, the requirements of our own Renewing Subscribers, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD always makes an effort to protect its subscribers first. Therefore, the above propositions are still available for present Christian Herald Subscribers renewing in the year, but we cannot fill orders for subscribers for any of the above premiums.

Premium Propositions Still

Until further notice the following are open to both old and new Subscribers:

1st. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Library, 1897—ten beautiful and exceedingly voluminous aggregating 3,200 pages, in handsome bookcase,—and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, for $3.

2d. The International Self-Proclaiming Teacher's Bible with red under gold leather-bound, silk-sewed and leather together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at $3; and, of course,

3d. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with the Premium for one year at $1.50.

How to Get Premiums For

We are frequently in receipt of communications from persons who desire to obtain Premiums, but who cannot afford to pay them, yet who would be willing to risk new subscribers in payment if such a condition would commend itself to us.

Now, if any of our friends who desire to cure either the 1897 Library or a Thumb-Indexed Bible will send us Three New Subscriptions, Premium or non-Premium, return therefor, we will present them their choice of an 1897 Library, ten volumes aggregating 3,200 pages and handsome case, or a Thumb-Indexed, Silk-sewed, pronouncing Teacher's Bible, with non-gold edges.

Three to One.

Please bear in mind that it takes three subscribers, with or without Premium, to earn either one of the two Premiums mentioned, and that the offer will hold good only as long as our stock may last.

It is almost needless to add that commissions can be allowed under this other Premium offer.

We beg especially to direct the attention of all our friends who contemplate availing themselves of this opportunity to the fact that we cannot supply new subscribers with the plain gilt-edged Bible, or "Home of the Bible," "Home Life Made Beautiful," as has been set forth at the beginning of this notice.

W. P. L., Hampton, N. H. How long do the Children's Home open?

About twelve or possibly thirteen from mid-June to mid-September.

Subscriber, St. Anne de Prescott, W. D. kindly give name of a book that is studying the Bible—a good Bible help.

The best in existence is the Bible bound in with the International Bible which can be secured by readers of the journal, at $3.00 with subscription for one year included.

R. A. McP., Harrisburg, Pa. I see in many daily newspapers, that Victoria is the oldest monarch who ever sat on the throne. What are the facts?

The oldest Queen, but not the oldest monarch. George III was 82 when he died. George II was 77. Victoria is 78. King or queen of England has exceeded 75.

C. H. Barnes, Arkansas, Ont. There is a story told which runs something like this: A certain monarch at one time met a man under which, if broken, the criminal would lose both his eyes. It so happened that the monarch broke the law and rather than become blind he had one of the eyes destroyed and one of his own. Where is the story?

Possibly some of our readers can discover the source of this legend.

W. H. Bussow, missionary to W. I., for whom copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and aid was asked, gratefully acknowledges replies from the readers of the paper. He will explain the need to write him at Dabadai, Trinidad.

LIGHTING TEPEE AND CABIN.

How the Devoted American Sunday School Union Missionaries are Carrying forward the Gospel amid the Mountains and Valleys of Oregon.

ONEER work, in many of our Western States, has already lost much of its attractiveness, and all of its perils, owing to the rapid settlement of the public lands and the extraordinary increase of population. There are still many localities, however, where the wild woods and virgin soil have not yet attracted the adventurous immigrant and in such sections — often amid scenes of the wildest grandeur imaginable—he has and organized a Sunday School in the neighborhood. The country is a very rough one."

Concerning one of the illustrations on this page the missionary tells this incident:

There is a passage way back and the dark place in the foliage is the opening to it. The nearest regular preacher and preaching-place were forty miles off. The people had not had any opportunity to have several of their children baptized, and asked me to baptize them, which I did. We organized a Sunday School there. It is at the mouth of the South Fork of the John Day River. At the head of this South Fork is a place called Izee. It is named, post-office and all from the letters I and Z, with which a stockman used to brand his cattle. For intelligence and refinement its young people are beyond the average for such isolated and back-woods places. In going my rounds, a good old Presbyterian lady with trembling voice if not tears, told me how anxious she was that somebody would come there and do something. Her boys had promised her a new calico dress, but she would do without her dress another year if they would pay some preacher to come there and preach.

Another missionary, Mr. Thomas Lain, located at Muscogee, Indian Territory, gives us this glimpse of border experiences:

Rock Grove Sunday School house was built last summer purposely for the Sunday School which was organized in a grove nearby. Not more than two religious services had been held in the neighborhood, previous to my meeting. Rock Grove is in the Cherokee nation, Indian Territory. At another place named Kelleyville, in the Western part of the Creek Nation, Indian Territory, I addressed the people, and organized a Sunday School in the street, while men sat about with their Winchester rifles, in anticipation of outlaws. But a good work was begun.

Rev. W. H. Gill, another of the A. S. S. U. faithful workers, is laboring among the Salt River Pima Indians, in New

Dear Friends: Brother Gill, the missionary, left home with his Mexican helper on the 2nd inst., expecting to be gone a month. We hear of him on the Santa Cruz River. He is afflicted with a severe carbuncle on his right wrist, making it painful to write, and he has asked me to write you a letter. I am an Indian girl who came to aid Mr. and Mrs. Gill in bringing these Salt River Pimas to the to white settlement. Sunday Schools and churches have been established among whites and Indians alike, from New Mexico to Oregon, and thousands bless the day when the missionary comes in Jesus' name, to preach the Gospel to the dwellers in Indian tepee or white man's cabin.

Every passing year sees hundreds of new centres of Gospel activity founded by these tireless workers, who (like our own Sunday School missionary in the Southwest), deem hardship an honor, and privation pleasure, when they are endured for the Master's sake.

We heartily commend the support of the American Sunday School extend with difficulties and dangers very similar to those encountered by the early pioneers of twenty-five and fifty years ago. But even in such remote settlements the red man is no longer feared, as he is savage ancestors. Homes and farms in those lonely localities, are some-where far from the nearest church or any school, but very many of them are visited by the energetic missionaries of the American Sunday School Union. In the letters written by these missionaries tell most interesting stories of their experience in spreading the Gospel among the Indians and whites in the Western States. Rev. W. R. Winans, who is laboring among the Indians of Oregon, writes: "Most of the Indians in Oregon are on reservations; but there are a few scattering ones who live where and as they can in different parts of the State. There are five reservations: the Grande Ronde, the Siletz, the Umatilla, the Waiilatpu, and the Warm Springs. They are in different parts of the State, and quite a distance apart, except the Grande Ronde and the Siletz. The two are on the coast and the other three are in the Cascade Mountains. I have visited all five, except the Grande Ronde, but not all with the same equal care. I have preached to the Indians at all I have visited, except the Warm Springs. The reservation has religious services carried on within its bounds more or less continuously.

LITTLE SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOLARS IN OREGON.

The Indian's eye, taste and fancy for beads, and trinkets, and images of bright colors, and blankets, and at once take up the same barbarous and idolatrous forms, fancies and presentations which are prominent in Rome, and this makes it hard for Protestantism to compete with Romanism in gaining the attention of the Indian. Not long ago I was at the Government school on the Siletz reservation where the teachers is a nun, who goes about dressed in her Papal garb. On this reservation there are perhaps 300 Indians, and possibly 100 of them belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church. This reservation now has a minister living there, who divides his time between the Indians and the white people who are situated about eight miles away. He is the only Protestant minister, and at present has no church building. I expect to have one as soon as funds are available and the building can be erected.

In another letter, Missionary Winans gives some details of his Sunday School work. "In one typical farm house which I visited (nearly in the centre of the State of Oregon), I urged the occupants to start a Sunday School, but I found that my presence was not welcome. I slept by a straw stack that night, among the thrashers. Afterward I preached Mexico. The spiritual interest increased so greatly that Mr. Gill and his family found it best to go out and make their home among them, where he could carry on more effectually the work of teaching them. A church is being built, and a few acres of desert put under irrigation for their home. At present they are living in a tent, but hope before winter to be able to build a small adobe house. One of Missionary Gill's converts and helpers is a young Indian girl who writes this remarkably interesting letter:

A VINE-SHELTERED HOME

white people's way of living, and above all to bring them to Christ. I came here on the 29th ult., and the following day was Sunday, and about 10-30 A. M. we had our meeting under an arbor. On our way to the arbor I was asked if I could interpret, and I said "I'll try." So when the Pimas were seated on the ground and the white people on a seat made of a long board, we sang some familiar hymns. Mr. Gill preached and the Pimas listened attentively.

A few days after I first interpreted, two old men came to our tent and were talking about me, and finally they said that some English words expressed the meaning differently from Pima language, but yet mean a right thing. They hope they can get much good, even if not plainly said in Pima. They said they understood me when I interpreted, but one word did not seem to be used right. It was where we speak of the heavenly home where all who strive to do and bear things for Christ will live and be saved.

Pimanam, one of the chiefs, who is about ninety years of age, says he thinks many will accept Christ. He is one of the men who did not quite understand how we could be saved after we die. He seems to understand now. One day he came to our tent and asked me to tell Mrs. Gill that he wished to talk to her.

AN OREGON FARM-HOUSE.

work to our readers. It is a most worthy cause, and one that should not be neglected. Any inquiries or contributions sent for that purpose to the Rev. E. P. Bancroft, Secretary, 111 Fifth ave., N. Y., will receive prompt acknowledgment.

Abdul Hamid Defies all Europe.

(Continued from First Page.)

and Italy—are now considering the adoption of coercive measures. Lord Salisbury is said to favor peremptory action, which would compel the Sultan either to abandon his purpose of resuming the war, or of confronting the fleets and armies of united Europe. Russia, too, is said to be disposed to energetic measures, and so also is France. The Austrian Ambassador, acting for all the foreign ministers, has presented a note to Tewfik Pasha, the Sultan's Minister of Foreign Affairs, stating that unless the Porte consents to discuss the strategic frontier proposed by the powers, the ambassadors will join in requesting their governments to take steps to compel Turkey to listen to the voice of Europe. To this note the Sultan has replied with a contemptuous silence. He has, however, appealed individually to France and Austria requesting their aid and influence in securing Turkey's interests, and both governments have replied, urging him to accept the terms of peace proposed by the powers.

Meanwhile, the greatest activity prevails among the European navies, and a grand naval demonstration in the Bosphorus at an early date is expected. There is much apprehension felt in Constantinople, whose Moslem population is so excited against all Europeans, that a wholesale massacre might be precipitated by any movement looking to the coercion of Turkey by the European navies. It is undoubtedly true that a very large proportion of the Turkish people inflated by their recent military successes in the field, confidently believe that the Sultan's armies are able to fight all Europe, and this opinion seems to be shared even by the advisers at the palace. Europe is far from desiring war; but the strain is so intense at present and the whole situation so critical, that a day might precipitate a crisis such as some of the powers at least have long and earnestly striven to avert.

AN INDIAN TEPEE AND A MISSIONARY'S CABIN AS NEXT DOOR NEIGHBORS IN OREGON.

He said he had never killed a white man, had never stolen anything and had not drank for three years. He now accepts Jesus and believes he will be a very happy man when he dies. Pimanam prayed that God might be in the home of every Indian, and that many might accept Christ. Others have talked to me in the same way.

EFFIE COOK.

When we consider the blessed results that flow from the ministries of these zealous workers for souls, it is not difficult to understand why they are so warmly welcomed in the newer sections of those States and territories most recently opened

SALESMEN AND SALESWOMEN.

A Sermon by
Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Acts 16: 14 and Prov. 22: 29.

And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us: whose heart the Lord opened.
Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings.

HE first passage introduces to you Lydia, a Christian merchantess. Her business is to deal in purple cloths or silks. She is not a giggling nonentity, but a practical woman, not ashamed to work for her living. All the other women of Philippi and Thyatira have been forgotten; but God has made immortal in our text Lydia, the Christian saleswoman. The other text shows you a man with head, and hand, and heart, and foot all busy toiling on up until he gains a princely success. "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings."

Great encouragement in these two passages for men and women who will be busy, but no solace for those who are waiting for good luck to show them, at the foot of the rainbow, a casket of buried gold. It is folly for anybody in this world to wait for something to turn up. "It will turn down." The law of thrift is as inexorable as the law of the tides. Fortune, the magician, may wave her wand in that direction until castles and palaces come; but she will, after a while, invert the same wand, and all the splendors will vanish into thin air.

There are certain styles of behavior which lead to usefulness, honor, and permanent success, and there are certain styles of behavior which lead to dust, dishonor, and moral default. I would like to fire the ambition of young people. I have no sympathy with those who would prepare young folks for life by whittling down their expectations. That man or woman will be worth nothing to Church or State who begins life cowed down. The business of Christianity is not to quench but to direct human ambition. Therefore it is that I utter words of encouragement to those who are occupied as clerks in the stores, and shops, and banking houses of the country.

In the first place, I counsel clerks to remember that for the most part their clerkship is only a school from which they are to be graduated. It takes about eight years to get into one of the learned professions. It takes about eight years to get to be a merchant. Some of you will be clerks all your lives, but the vast majority of you are only in a transient position. Either in the store or bank where you are now, or in some other store or bank, you will take a higher position than that which you now occupy. So I feel I am now addressing people who will yet have their hand on the helm of the world's commerce, and you will turn it this way or that; now clerks, but to be bankers, importers, insurance company directors, shippers, contractors, superintendents of railroads—your voice might "change" standing foremost in the great financial and religious enterprises of the day. For, though we who are in the professions may, on the platform, plead for the philanthropies, after all, the merchants must come forward with their millions to sustain the movement.

Be, therefore, patient and diligent in this transient position. You are now where you can learn things you can never learn in any other place. You see every day the folly of people going into a business they know nothing about. A man makes a fortune in one business; thinks there is another occupation more comfortable, goes into it and sinks all. Many of the commercial establishments of our cities are giving their clerks a mercantile education as thorough as Yale, or Harvard, or Princeton are giving scientific attainment to the students matriculated,

The reason there are so many men foundering in business from year to year, is because their early mercantile education was neglected. Ask the men in high commercial circles, and they will tell you they thank God for this severe discipline of their early clerkship. You can afford to endure the wilderness march, if it is going to end in the vineyards and orchards of the promised land.

But you say: "Will the womanly clerks in our stores have promotion?" Yes. Time is coming when women will be as well paid for their toil in mercantile circles as men are now paid for their toil. Time is coming when a woman will be allowed to do anything she can do well.

The second counsel I have to give to clerks is that you seek out what are the lawful regulations of your establishment, and then submit to them. Every well-ordered house has its usages. In military life, on ship's deck, in commercial life, there must be order and discipline. Those people who do not learn how to obey will never know how to command. I will tell you what young man will make ruin, financial and moral; it is the young man who thrusts his thumb into his vest and says: "Nobody shall dictate to me, I am my own master; I will not submit to the regulations of this house." Between an establishment in which all the employees are under thorough discipline and the establishment in which the employees do about as they choose, is the difference between success and failure—between rapid accumulation and utter bankruptcy. Do not come to the store ten minutes after the time. Be there within two seconds, and let it be two seconds before instead of two seconds after. Do not think anything too insignificant to do well. Do not say, "It's only just once." From the most important transaction in commerce down to the particular style in which you tie a string around a bundle, obey orders. Do not get easily disgusted. While others in the store may lounge, or fret, or complain, you go with ready hands, and cheerful face, and contented spirit to your work. When the bugle sounds, the good soldier asks no questions, but should his knapsack, fills his canteen and listens for the command of "March!"

Do not get the idea that your interests and those of your employer are antagonistic. His success will be your honor. His embarrassment will be your dismay. Expose none of the frailties of the firm. Tell no store secrets. Do not blab. Rebuff those persons who come to find out from clerks what ought never to be known outside the store. Do not be among those young men who take on a mysterious air when something is said against the firm that employs them, as much as to say: "I could tell you something if I would, but I won't." Do not be among those who imagine they can build themselves up by pulling somebody else down. Be not ashamed to be a subaltern.

Again, I counsel clerks to search out what are the unlawful and dishonest demands of an establishment, and resist them. In the six thousand years that have passed, there has never been an occasion when it was one's duty to sin against God. It is never right to do wrong. Do not, because of seeming temporary advantage, give up your character, young man. Under God, that is the only thing you have to build on. Give up that, you give up everything. That employer asks a young man to hurt himself for time and for eternity, who expects him to make a wrong entry, or change an invoice, or say goods cost so much when they cost less, or impose upon the veracity of a customer, or misrepresent a style of fabric. How dare he demand of you anything so insolent?

Again, I counsel all clerks to conquer the trials of their particular position. One great trial for clerks is the inconsideration of customers. There are people who are entirely polite everywhere else, but gruff and dictatorial, and contemptible when they come into a store to buy anything. There are thousands of men and women who go from store to store to price things, without any idea of purchase. I call that a dishonesty on the part of the customer. If a boy runs into a store and takes a roll of cloth off the counter, and sneaks out into the street, you all join in the cry pell-mell: "Stop thief!" When I see you go into a store, not expecting to buy anything but to price things, stealing the time of the clerk, and stealing the time of his employer, I say, too: "Stop thief!"

Then a great trial comes to clerks in the fact that they see the parsimonious side of human nature. You talk about lies behind the counter—there are just as many lies before the counter. Oh, lay not aside your urbanity when you go into a store. Treat the clerks like gentlemen and ladies—proving yourself to be a gentleman or a lady. Remember, that if the prices are high and your purse is lean, that is no fault of the clerks. And if you have a son or a daughter amid those perplexities of commercial life, and such a one comes home all worn out, be lenient, and know that the martyr at the stake no more certainly needs the grace of God than our young people amid the seven-times-heated exasperations of a clerk's life.

Then there are all the trials which come to clerks from the treatment of inconsiderate employers. There are professed Christian men who have no more regard for their clerks than they have for the scales on which the sugars are weighed. A clerk is no more than so much store furniture. No consideration for their rights or interests. Not one word of encouragement from sunrise to sunset, nor from January to December. But when anything goes wrong—a streak of dust on the counter, or a box with the cover off—thunder-showers of scolding. Men imperious, capricious, cranky toward their clerks—their whole manner as much as to say: "All the interest I have in you is to see what I can get out of you." Then there are all the trials of incompetent wages, not in such times as these, when if a man gets half a salary for his services he ought to be thankful; but I mean in prosperous times. Some of you remember when the war broke out and all merchandise went up, and merchants were made millionaires in six months by the simple rise in the value of goods. Did the clerks get advantage of that rise? Sometimes, not always. I saw estates gathered in those times over which the curse of God has hung ever since. The cry of unpaid men and women in those stores reached the Lord of Sabaoth, and the indignation of God has been around those establishments ever since.

Then, there are boys ruined by lack of compensation. In how many prosperous stores it has been for the last twenty years that boys were given just enough money to teach them how to steal! Some were seized upon by the police. The vast majority of instances were not known. The head of the firm asked: "Where is George now?" "Oh, he isn't here any more." A lad might better starve to death on a blasted heath than take one farthing from his employer. Woe be to that employer who unnecessarily puts a temptation in a boy's way. There have been great establishments in these cities, building marble palaces, their owners dying worth millions, and millions, and millions, who made a vast amount of their estate out of the blood, and muscle, and nerve of half-paid clerks. Such men as—well, I will not mention any name. But I mean men who have gathered up vast estates at the expense of the people who were ground under their heel. "Oh," say such merchants, "if you don't like it here, than go and get a better place." As much as to say: "I've got you in my grip, and I mean to hold you; you can't get any other place."

Oh, what a contrast between those men and Christian merchants who to-day are sympathetic with their clerks—when they pay the salary, acting in his way: "This salary that I give you is not all my interest in you. You are an immortal man; you are an immortal woman; I am interested in your present and your everlasting welfare; I want you to understand that, if I am a little higher up in this, I am beside you in Christian sympathy." Go back forty or fifty years to a Tappen's store in New York—a store whose worst enemies never questioned honesty. Every morning, he brought the clerks, and the accountants, and neighbors into a room for devotion. Monday morning the clerks were there where they had attended church the previous day, and what the sermons were about. It must have sounded strange that voice of praise along the streets of the devotees of mammon were counting their golden beads. You say, a Tappen failed. Yes, he was unfortunate like a great many good men; but I understand he met all his obligations before he left this world, and I know that he did the peace of the Gospel, and that before the throne of God to-day—blessed. If that be failing, I wish might all fail.

There are a great many young men and young women who want a word of encouragement—Christian encouragement—smile of good cheer would be worth to them to-morrow morning in their business than a present of $15,000 years hence. Oh, I remember the tension and the tremor of entering a profession. I remember very well the man who greeted me in the ecclesiastical with the tip ends of the long fingers of his left hand; and I remember the other who took my hand in both of his and said: "God bless you, my brother; have entered a glorious profession faithful to God and he will see through." Why, I feel this minute thrill of that hand-shaking, though the man who gave me the Christian greeting been in heaven twenty years. There are old men here to-day who can look back forty years ago, when some one said kind word to them. Now, old men say back what you got then. It is a great word for old men to be able to encourage young. There are many young people in our cities who have come from inland counties, from the granite hills of North, from the savannas of the South, from the prairies of the West. They come here to get their fortune. They are in boarding-houses where everybody seems to be thinking of himself. They want companionship, and they want Christian encouragement. Give it to them.

My word is to all clerks: Be mighty than your temptations. A Sancha Islander used to think when he saw an enemy, all the strength of that enemy came into his own right arm. And I want to tell you that every misfortune you conquer is so much added to your own power. With omnipotence for an arm, and the throne of God for a fulcrum, you can move earth and heaven. While there are other young men putting the curse of sin to their lips, you stoop down and drink out of the fountains of God, and you rise up strong to thresh the mountains. The ancients used to think that pearls were fallen rain-drops, which, touching the surface of the sea, hardened into pearls, then dropped to the bottom. I want to tell you to-day, that storms of trial have showered imperishable pearls into many a young man's lap.

After the last store has been closed, after the last bank has gone down, after the shuffle of the quick feet on the bottom House steps has stopped, after the long line of merchantmen on the sea have taken sail of flame, after Washington and New York, and London, and Vienna have gone down into the grave where Tyne and Babylon, and Tyre lie buried, after the great fire-bells of the judgment have tolled at the burning of a world, that day, all the affairs of banking-houses and stores will come up for inspection. What an opening of account books! By the way, the clerks and the men who employed them. Oh, that will be a great day for you, honest Christian clerk. No getting up early; no retiring late; no walking around with weary limbs; I want a mansion in which to live, and a real light, and love, and joy over which to hold everlasting dominion. Hoist him up on glory to glory, and from song to song from throne to throne; for while others go down into the sea with their gold like a millstone hanging to their neck, this one shall come up the heights of amethyst and alabaster, holding in his right hand the pearl of great price in a sparkling, glowing, flaming casket.

THE MODERN JEW IN HIS ANCESTRAL HOME

BY HON. SELAH MERRILL D.D. L.L.D.

JERUSALEM, A CITY OF GRAVES.

Its Vast Silent Population—Burial Customs of the Various Nationalities and Creeds.

[URING my long residence in Jerusalem I never became reconciled to the Oriental method of conducting funerals. I never saw one without feeling in a degree shocked at the haste son, while they are never used by the Mohammedans or Jews. Thus, ordinarily, no time is required to get ready a coffin, for none is needed, and a shop where undertaker's supplies can be bought is a thing unknown. Whatever crape or black cloth is needed can be purchased at one of the small dry goods stores, and whenever a coffin is to be used, a carpenter can in a few hours put the rough boards together.

A singular thing among Orientals is their indifference to disease. Measles which sometimes carries off hundreds of children, fevers of various kinds, and even small-pox, which is very prevalent and to a large degree fatal, are thought as lightly of as ordinary colds are with us. A person dies of small-pox in the room where the family live; his body is handled and his clothing divided and worn by the friends without its being cleansed. Such cases I have known. But no one thought that anything improper had been done. In case of death by small-pox, there is no privacy in the funeral; the body is carried exposed through the streets, and is considered just as harmless as if the person had died of old age; at least no one ever thinks to the contrary. In the long list of human sicknesses, the only one that Orientals are afraid of is the cholera. Let a rumor be started that cholera is approaching from Baghdad or elsewhere, and the entire native population becomes panic stricken at once.

When a coffin is used, the lid is removed so that the body is exposed as it is being carried to the grave. The body, when no coffin is used, is carried on a bier, and, in case of Mohammedans, is always covered. At the head is a post a foot or more in height, fastened to the bier, on which is placed the head-dress, red fez, or turban, white or green, as the case may be, of the deceased. If the deceased is a woman, her veil is tied over the top of the post and a small colored scarf is wound about it. The Jews have a sort of stretcher, a piece of canvas fastened to two long sticks with no crossbars to keep the sticks apart. The slowly to the grave, and never in a straight line, but always zigzag; their idea is that the spirit of the deceased wishes the body to be kept back from burial as long as possible.

The Jewish burial committee hire a man to dig a number of graves, say a dozen or more, by the job, and as persons die they are buried in these graves in the order of their death, with no reference whatever to families or family lots. The last part of this statement is true likewise of Mohammedans and Christians, although they do not contract for a number of graves to be dug at once.

Until about six years past, the Greeks, Latins, and Armenians buried in different parts of an open field on Mount Zion, south of the south wall of the city. The American cemetery, in the same field, was the only one that was inclosed by a wall. As these graves became crowded, the plan was adopted of digging up the bones of recent interments, levelling the ground, and starting afresh. A large section of the Greek ground was thus remodelled, and a ghastly pile of skulls and bones collected, of which, before they were finally removed, I took a photograph. This, of course, is not the place to exhibit such a picture. A very few bodies were reinterred, but in the great majority of instances all signs of burial places were wiped out. On the new ground they began to bury in order, one body next to another, as soldiers are buried on a battle-field.

The same thing was done by the Latins. A few faint voices said it was not right, but the only vigorous and effective protest was from a high-minded Catholic who had resided twelve years in England and had there learned something about liberty of action and what the sacredness of burial-places meant. He was so eloquent in his denunciations of this outrageous sacrilege that the high officials of that Church stopped their work of desecrating graves. This man had a true Lutheran soul, and the few Protestants who were cognizant of the facts wondered at his boldness.

Our American cemetery on Mount Zion

A MOHAMMEDAN FUNERAL.

Copts, Armenians, Abyssinians, and Syrians. On the east slope of Mount Zion there are a few graves of Karite Jews, but with this exception the Jews bury on the western slope of the Mount of Olives. This graveyard covers eighty or perhaps one hundred acres, and the area is increasing year by year, for the death rate among this section of the inhabitants is unusually high. All these myriads of graves face the Temple and the Holy City. The Mohammedans have a cemetery under the east wall of the city, another small one on the top and north slopes of Calvary Hill, and a third called "The Turkish Cemetery," west of the city around the Upper Pool of Gihon. The Germans bury with the English, except those belonging to the German colony about one mile from the city, who have a Gottesacker of their own.

The Pauper Tomb on Calvary Hill, of which an illustration is given, is wholly unlike anything that exists with us. One notices a curious, oblong, rounded place, formed of earth and stones, rising three or four feet above the ground. At one end it appears simply like a pile of stones and a person might pass it without observing that it was different from hundreds of other heaps of stones with which the country abounds. But this arch-shaped mound is really the roof of a pit holding the dust of some of the earliest missionaries of the American Board to that country, among them the wife of the Rev. Dr. Wm. M. Thomson, the mother of Wm. H. Thomson, M.D., of New York, was purchased and occupied upwards of sixty years ago. The soil to the depth of six feet is composed of which is the burying-place of paupers. But what a vast graveyard is Jerusalem itself! Sometimes on Sunday afternoon I have gone to the city wall above Zion Gate, whence a wide view over Jerusalem and the surrounding country is obtained, and tried to picture to myself the scenes of other days, when great multitudes were gathered round these walls, bent upon destruction. Many times this has been true during the thirty centuries since the Jebusites held the place. How many soldiers have been slain in the shock of battle! How many people have died in the twenty-six sieges Jerusalem has undergone! That under Titus, in the year 70 of our era, cost upwards of one million lives. Where were all these myriads upon myriads buried? Or was the work too great for the living to accomplish, so that the bodies lay and perished where they fell? Out of the earth itself, army after army seems to rise and pass before me, till all these sacred hills are covered with living men. What a place of the dead! Is there any other cemetery on earth like it? Yet not a trace of these countless hosts remains.

THE JEWISH CEMETERY ON MOUNT OF OLIVES.

SELAH MERRILL.

with which the body, after the breath had left, was taken to the grave, and at the lamentable lack of quiet and order which attended the burial. My previous ideas of moderation and solemnity on such occasions, of respect for the living and the dead, were wholly at variance with all that I saw or heard. At such times we, (i. e., Americans), are slow and deliberate in all our movements; the Oriental is quick and hasty. After death we wait considerable time before burying; the Oriental buries as soon as possible. We are quiet in our expressions of grief, while the Oriental is loud and boisterous. For example, a person dies in the early part of the night, he is buried as early the following morning as possible. If a person dies before daybreak, he is buried before noon, although occasionally there is a delay till afternoon. If a person dies in the morning or before noon, he is always buried before night. The burial follows the death as soon as the grave can be made ready. Let my readers imagine what a shock it would be to them, were they to leave home in the morning, having said good-by to a certain neighbor and on returning in the evening be told that that neighbor is dead and buried! Such an experience is not infrequent in Jerusalem. When the funeral services are over, just a few hours only after a friend or a neighbor has ceased to breathe, much of the solemnity of death is taken away. I am sure that this was the effect on myself of the hasty funerals.

Only the Protestants that invariably bury their dead in coffins. In recent years the Latins have done so as a rule, with very many exceptions, but it is the rare exception where the Greeks use a coffin—say the case of some distinguished per-body in its every-day clothing is laid on the stretcher, and frequently without any covering is carried to burial. Both Mohammedans and Jews always carry the body on the shoulders, while Christians carry it in their hands. It is very common for Jews to bury their dead at night, which other sects do not do. When Christians carry a body to the grave they chant music in low dull tones, while the Mohammedans have hired mourners who cry aloud and shriek as the procession passes along. The body of a Moslem is carried very rubbish which in former times was carted there and dumped, perhaps after some battle, for this deposit is full of human bones.

At first the English buried their dead (this was when there were very few foreigners in the city), with the Americans, but for many years they have had a burial-ground of their own, a beautiful place under the south brow of Mount Zion. The American cemetery is, as I have said, on the top of Mount Zion, and there also are the cemeteries of the Greeks, Latins,

THE AMERICAN CEMETERY ON MOUNT ZION.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

LOUIS KOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage

EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadian and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by early renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald will not be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-office at New York, as Second-class Matter

Solution of the Labor Question.

It is not a question which can be solved. Or, if solved to-day, like Banquo's ghost it comes back for solution to-morrow. When we used to ride on steamboats they carried barrels of ballast which were rolled from one quarter on deck to another, according as necessity required. It is so with the labor question. There would be no labor question if the condition of laborers and their families in the United States were not better than their condition anywhere else in the world. The question is, how to make wages which are sufficient for the absolute wants of nature meet the demands of advancing civilization. The laboring man in the United States has to educate his children. They want what other children have. Perhaps they are smarter—an American word—than the children of his neighbors. Their schools have introduced them to the treasures of literature; so they want Shakespeare and Milton, Tennyson and Browning, Bryant and Longfellow; they want Scott and Dickens and Cooper on the family bookshelves. Well, they want tennis rackets and cycles—things not absolutely necessary, but good for their unfolding; good to help them keep pace with their associates. This laborer had no such wants in his boyhood. The children of his native land to-day, of England or Ireland or Germany, who are growing up there as his children are growing up here, have no such wants. The labor question here is different from what it is there. The American laborer is bringing up children in a new atmosphere, surrounded by new environments. He must have more wages. The barrel of ballast must be rolled to a new quarter on the deck.

Hon. Carroll D. Wright, in his recent address at Dartmouth College, puts it all in a nutshell, thus:

"There is no solution to the labor question. It means the struggle for a higher standard of living. It always has existed, and it always will, so long as ambition lasts. It doesn't mean how wages are going to be increased or hours of labor shortened.

"The labor question changes as conditions and environments change. Under the iron law of wages, as announced by Ricardo, it is a struggle simply to secure barely enough of food, raiment and shelter to preserve the working physical machine, the rule being that wages ought not to be paid over the bare necessities.

"To-day the standard of living of the ordinary wage receiver involves margins above the iron law of from ten to fifteen per cent, out of which margin is to be found what are now called spiritual necessities, means of leisure, reading, music, recreation, etc., so that the demand of the worker in all civilized countries is for expansion of their margin. He feels entitled to this because society has insisted upon educating him, giving him a taste for higher things, making him a social and political factor; in fact, fitting him for membership in a democratic community."

The Nineteenth Century Woman.

GOD'S idea of woman is that of a help-meet for man; humanity crowned, completed by the union of husband and wife. And yet only a part of the female sex ever can participate in this divine consummation; only a part can know the sweet and elevating discipline of home-life. Because of this, in part, at least, has come the modern determination of woman to be more independent of man; the tendency toward self-help. What will be the result of this upon woman's character, upon man's character, upon social questions—industrial questions, too—it is difficult to anticipate. Probably there will be no general modification that can be foreseen, perhaps none that is distinctly indicated. There will be sporadic cases that seem to prove something, without proving it.

It does not make woman any less a woman to ride a cycle, to steer a yacht, to row a boat, to ride after the hounds; nor does it make her any less a woman to graduate at Wellesley or Smith or Radcliffe. We met a young lady educated at Oberlin, who married a lawyer who was her classmate in college, and though she rides a tandem with her husband and drives a carriage loaded with guests, does it seem to affect her ladylike bearing, her ease or her grace in her own home. Her mother had been warned that such might be her fate, if she went to an institution where young men and young women were educated together. Her reply was, "What of it? Marriage is of God. Home-life is the best life. God's idea of woman's sphere is the true one. Let her have a chance to see what men are and to compare them in the class-room. It is a better place than the ball-room. Can he think? Can he hold his own in a class of a hundred young men and women who are pursuing college studies?" Sensible, Christian mother. And the kind of match made shows that Oberlin is a good place to find a good and sensible husband. Let us not be afraid. This larger liberty and larger culture of woman may surprise us, and set us to conjecturing. But He who made woman for man made no mistake, and knows how to secure the best results.

The Third Time.

IN Matthew we read, "And he prayed the third time, saying the same words." This threefold prayer indicates the perfect humanity of our Lord. In flesh and blood as he was, he accepted human conditions. One human condition in prevailing prayer is perseverance; perseverance in saying the same thing.

If you have watched the history of successful legislation in Congress, of successful suits in the Courts, it has this peculiarity. One failure is not accepted as defeat. When the prophet said to the king, "Smite upon the ground," the unuttered condition of success was not in the smiting alone, but in the repeated smiting. He was to have victories to correspond to the number of his blows. The Saviour, who is the model in prayer as well as action, says, "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you." Notice the change of word, but still the exhortation repeated three times. "And he prayed the third time."

We are in the days of our flesh. Let us not be surprised, if it is our lot also, to offer up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears; to watch thereunto with all perseverance and supplication; to come under the obligation. "Men ought always to pray and not to faint."

Trees of Wonder and Worship

THERE are no objects in nature that blend so wonderfully in the spiritual aspect of our humanity as do trees. Of an elder creation, they were present at the birth of man, and their green shadows and protecting foliage were both the home and the temple of Eden. That trees should have been objects of idolatry is not remarkable, it is even wonderful that their worship did not altogether supersede that of images. For there is something infinitely more suggestive of Deity in the stately trunk and bending boughs, life-like motion, and whispering leaves, than in the uncouth idols made from the mutilated wood.

The prominence given in the Bible to trees, from the first of Genesis—where we are introduced to that wondrous Tree in the Garden—to the sealing of the Apocalypse, and the revelation of the "tree of healing for all nations" is a very remarkable one. Most famous of all is the Apple tree, the fruit of which "brought death into the world and all our woe." I have pointed out in a previous paper, that not only Scripture, but universal tradition, assert this fact; that not only the Greek Aphrodite but the great Northern deities lie under it, and that still further back, among the primeval races of Assyria and Egypt, the same tradition is written on their vast monuments. In Arabian tales, it has the gift of healing; and the Mohammedans place it in the hand of Azrael, the angel of Death, that its perfume may separate the soul from the body. Both Jewish and Mohammedan legends assert, that when Adam was dying, he received a branch of the tree of which he had eaten, with directions to plant it, and a promise that it should bear fruit of healing. From this tree came Aaron's rod, and the pole on which the serpent was lifted in the wilderness. For centuries it lay in the pool of Bethesda, imparting to the water its healing properties; but rising to the surface before the Crucifixion, it was taken by the Jews for the Cross of Christ. Another common opinion is that the Cross was made of aspen wood, and that ever since the Crucifixion her leaves have shivered with horror at the awful weight she had to bear.

In the Old Testament the Oak has a very interesting history. Under this tree, or a Terebinth, Abraham received his heavenly guests on the plain of Mamre. Jacob hid his strange idols under an Oak at Shechem, while he went up to Bethel to build an altar to God, who had "answered him in his distress," and it was probably under this very Oak, Joshua set up a stone to commemorate Israel's promise "The Lord our God will we serve, and his voice will we obey." Under an Oak in Ophrah, an angel communed with Gideon and "did wondrously." Isaiah, Ezekiel, and Hosea all reprove Israel for making idols of Oak, and offering burnt incense under these trees; indeed all through the historical and prophetic Scriptures, there is a constant protest against the idolatry connected with Oak trees.

In Grecian and Scandinavian mythologies the Oak is equally sacred. The dark, dense groves of Dodona, in their dusk and silence interlarded, gave out their mystic sentences; and there are in various parts of England, at this day, remains of the thick groves of Oak in which our own ancestors cut the sacred Mistletoe, and offered sacrifices to Thor and Woden. Indeed to the ancient Briton the Oak tree was inexpressably sacred; and St. Augustine took advantage of this feeling, and first preached "Christ crucified" to the court of Ethelbert, under the shade of one of these sacred trees.

The Olive had early a peculiar sanctity. God might have sent an angel to Noah with a pledge of a restored world, but he sent an Olive branch. The Cherubim that overshadowed the Sacred Oracle in the Temple, were of this wood; and among the Olive groves shading Gethsemane, Jesus wrestled with the anguish of his approaching sacrifice.

The Cedar with its "fair branches," and "shadowing shroud," its "high stature," and its "top among the thick boughs" is described by Ezekiel in some wonderful verses, chapter 39, verses 3-10. It was the chief wood used in building the temple; and Job, David, and Solomon, and all the prophets, speak of it in terms of praise and honorable comparison.

I have not left myself space to write of the Willows, the White Thorn, the mysterious Ash or the lovely Myrtle; a branch of which Adam is said to have brought in his hand out of Eden; for I desire to close this paper with the Palm; the tree that has been for centuries the emblem of victory and rejoicing. The very mention of it recalls Elim, and Jericho and the shadowing fruitful trees on Mount Ephraim, where Deborah dwelt. It figured largely in all Jewish festivals, and its carved image beautified both the early and the latter temple.

When Zion's King came to her, and that "very great multitude" went out to meet him with hosannas, then the Palm spoke for all the trees of the forest, and shouted "Victory!" The peculiar species so honored was doubtless the date palm. The Church in all ages has sanctioned this opinion; and Christians buy the leaves in the spring for Palm Sunday, and Jews buy them in the autumn for the Passover. Where no Palms are procurable, humbler trees often supply their place; thus Goethe says:

In Rome upon Palm Sunday, they bear true Palms; The Cardinals bow reverently, and sing of psalms.

Elsewhere the psalms are sung, mid olive branches: The holy tree supplies their place, among the avalanches.

And to the Palm tree is added one grace to its fellows—it is planted for eternity. St. John, in the Apocalypse, shows us the redeemed, in all nations, clothed in the garments of beauty and holiness, and waving the palms of triumph.

This subject is by no means exhausted indeed I have but introduced it. Trees bear in the most wonderful manner with the Oriental and Scandinavian mythologies; and may be traced in the ever-recurring union with the Serpent, not only throughout the Bible, but in the sculptures of all times, and all nations.

Amelia E. Pa

BRIEF NOTES.

Out of ninety missionaries sent out by the Congo by the Baptist Society, thirty-two are in the Congo district.

The smallest diocese in the world is that of St. Helena. Besides the Bishop Thompson E. Welby, whose salary is $500, only three clergymen.

Two Chinese women educated in the Mission Schools of Peking have been elected to the International Council of Women to be held in London next year.

Bishop Tucker, of Uganda, has made two of the nine languages spoken by the people of his diocese. It is about fifteen hundred miles and contains nearly fifteen million persons.

Protestant workers report that in parts of France a spirit of inquiry is abroad among Roman Catholics and notwithstanding the opposition of the priesthood, the people are turning to the Bible to find out the truth.

The Board of Church Erection of the Presbyterian Church, since its organization, has distributed $3,500,000, and has aided in building more than 5,000 churches. The whole number of churches, as given in the Assembly's Minutes of last year is 7,575.

At the recent commencement of Franklin College, New Athens, O., there were two graduates in the Classical, Philosophical and scientific courses. It is worthy of notice that the whole number not one uses intoxicants or tobacco. Fourteen of the graduates have given themselves to the ministry.

The Church Zenana Mission in China has two valuable workers by the recent wreck of the Aden. Miss Weller and Miss F. M. Lloyd, who were on their way home for rest after six years' toil, they were lost in the wrecked steamer. Miss Weller had been working at Ku-Cheng, the town loved by the blood of the missionaries martyred about two years ago.

Taylor University, at Upland, Indiana, has recently taken in charge the Chinese Seminary, the largest Methodist school in Japan. It is an associate college of Taylor University. Dr. Reade, in communicating this news, adds: "We shall graduate two Japanese students this year. Taylor University deserves hearty congratulations on its enterprise as well as on its excellent work."

A beautiful Long Island farm has been opened for the exclusive benefit of the women of the Brooklyn Young Women's Christian Association. This opportunity for a summer outing is provided by Mrs. Kate A. Jamieson, sister of the late Chas. Arbuckle, into whose hands the farm fell on her brother's death. The farm is situated a short distance from Brentwood, L. I.

The Brotherhood of the Kingdom, a new denominational order of men who are pledged to the promotion of religion in everyday life, held its annual conference at Marlborough, N. Y., Monday, August 2, to Friday, August 6. Rev. Williams, Rev. Samuel Z. Batten, Ernest Crosby, and a number of other well known Christian workers took part in the proceedings.

A company of Christian Endeavorers from the Broadway Baptist Church, Cambridgeport, Mass., held weekly meetings in a rescue mission in Boston, providing a free lunch for the men in position to a free-lunch saloon in the neighborhood. These meetings have resulted in many conversions and in several cases accessions to the church. The Endeavorers make it a practice to secure a new convert for the converts when possible.

Major D. W. Whittle has returned from the other side of the Atlantic and is in Boston again, conducting a series of noon meetings at the Broadway Church. He speaks daily upon evangelistic themes, and goes into churches as opportunity offers to gather evening audiences interested in Moody's colportage work among prisoners. On June 27 he supplied Park Street Church in Boston and evening.

Dr. Harry Guinness, speaking at a very interesting meeting, characterized as "influenced by the administration by the Belgian Government of the Congo State, where the Congo Rolo is at work. Forced labor traffic, he said, is the condition of the natives hardly distinguishable from slavery, and he earnestly wondered at the gallant treatment to which they were subjected precipitated a revolution.

Japan has, according to the Protestant report of a census of Christian charities, 11,000 February, twelve theological seminaries, 11 students; twenty-nine boys' schools, with 1,100 students; ten women's training schools, with 1,100 students; fourteen kindergartens, with 32,000 poor; fifty-six day or night schools, mostly for poor, with 2,788 scholars; ten orphan asylums, with 664 inmates; thirteen homes for various classes, with 235 inmates; fifteen hospitals and dispensaries.

The method of dividing the instruction at the Chautauque Summer College into sections will be continued during the coming season of 1907. More than a hundred courses are offered in all departments of collegiate instruction under professors from Yale, the University of Chicago, Johns Hopkins, University of the Northwestern University, University of Michigan, Ohio, Kenyon Hamline and other institutions. Harper will continue in charge of the literary work, and will give a course of lectures, beside regular instruction in the Sacred Literature.

ESUVIUS DISTURBED.

ABLE dispatches from Naples report ominous disturbances from the great volcano, which at various periods of the world's history, has overwhelmed the surrounding country with destructive fires. For some weeks earthquakes have been felt in widely scattered places, the most serious being at June 12, in Calcutta. It is significant that such seismic disturbances have preceded or accompanied an outbreak from Vesuvius. There is consequently all the more uneasiness about the signs of activity in the volcano. We can foresee from one hour to another when there may be an eruption. It can be said, is that the volume of smoke which rises from the crater, is increasing and convulsive throbs have been felt as of subterranean explosions. Of late years the eruptions have been more frequent than in earlier years, but of far less intensity. Nearly all eruptions have been chronicled in the past two and a-half centuries, though none of them attained the proportions of the outbreak of 1631, when the lava destroyed several villages and caused the death of eighteen thousand persons. Nor was this so great as the famous eruption of 79, when Pompeii and Herculaneum were destroyed. In the latter eruption, however, the remarkable feature was its suddenness. The molten lava poured down the sides of the mountain without the usual preliminary escape of smoke and noise. Then, as now, the base of the volcano was bordered by an almost continuous line of populous towns and the inhabitants were surprised by the inundation of lava due escape of many of them. Prior to that time there was an eruption on an average once in a century, but since then, scarcely a period of twenty years has passed without an outbreak of greater or less intensity. One of the most remarkable was the eruption of 1882, which did little damage but caused a panic among the people of the vicinity. An American traveler who happened to be contains nothing reassuring to the imperilled people, who if they were better instructed would cease appealing to the saints and address their prayers to God for protection:

He looketh on the earth and it trembleth; he toucheth the hills and they smoke. (Ps. 104: 32.)

A Tree Walled Up.

One of the most remarkable attempts to preserve a tree has been made by a citizen of New Jersey. Outside his home is a fine elm tree which tradition credits with the age of two centuries. A few years ago he noticed that some insect was at work on the trunk, and in spite of his efforts to protect the tree from its tiny enemies, they succeeded in eating its heart. On the following Fourth of July a spark from the fire-works set fire to the dry interior and destroyed much of it. But the fire was extinguished before it spread to the branches, and it effectually cleared the tree of its insect devourers. Only a thin shell of bark remained on one side, and only a small thickness of wood and bark on the other. Before the autumn winds the tree shook, and it seemed cer-

This was at Mamaroneck, N. Y., where a dog has made an enviable record. He arrived in the town with a tramp about ten years ago and has since made it his home, boarding at the hotels in town. He patrolled the streets at night and actually caught a burglar who was robbing the savings bank and held him until the constable arrived. Twice he discovered fires and alarmed the inmates of the burning houses, in one instance only just in time for them to save their lives. Three times he has rescued children from drowning and has done other valuable services. Recently an ordinance was passed by the trustees condemning all unlicensed dogs to be shot, but when it was pointed out to them that it would involve his death, as he had no owner to pay for a license for him, they added a clause to the law, specially exempting this particular dog, specified by name, from the operation of the law. Thus even a dog may have a character entitling him to grateful recognition. Young people who are ambitious may learn a useful lesson from it. The sure passport to honor is in service. Neither beauty nor wealth can win favor so surely as self-sacrificing effort for the benefit and the advantage of others.

Do they not err that devise evil? But mercy and truth shall be to them that devise good. (Prov. 14:22.)

A Double Identity.

Physicians are taking a deep interest in a patient who is undergoing treatment in a hospital at Binghampton, N. Y. The patient is a tall, beautiful, golden-haired girl, thirteen years of age, who recently terms the duality of spiritual life, in which there are not only two distinct entities but entities inimical to each other:

I delight in the law of God after the inward man, but I see a different law in my members warring against the law of my mind and bringing me into captivity. (Rom. 7: 22, 23.)

A Baggage Lottery.

The sale of a quantity of unclaimed chests, valises and parcels by a railroad company is recorded in the New York Sun. It is a curious commentary on the credulity of people who attend such sales that they are willing to buy old bags and bundles that, as far as they can see, give no indication of being of any value. Unclaimed baggage is sold in this fashion every year by some of the railroads and express companies, and the total receipts of such sales are as a rule much in excess of the real value of the articles sold. It occasionally happens that a man buys a trunk for a small price and finds inside of it jewelry or money, and such luck always spurs on a lot of people, each of whom expects to find something of value. In one of these sales of unclaimed baggage the fiercest bidding was over a prosperous looking trunk. It was strongly made and although not heavy the speculators who examined its exterior concluded that it contained articles of value. One of them finally secured it for $55 and promptly pried it open. His disgust was only equalled by the glee of the unsuccessful bidders when he found within it a disjointed human skeleton, undoubtedly the property of some medical student. It is easy to understand the chagrin of the purchaser when, instead of the gold and jewels he hoped to find, he found only these relics of death. Multitudes have experienced a similar disappointment, but infinitely more disconcerting, when they discovered the real nature of the prizes which they gained by sin.

He knoweth not that the dead are there. (Prov. 9: 18.)

A Glove Marriage.

An extraordinary ceremony which took place in Amsterdam, with a counterpart in Africa is reported by the New York Herald. It appears that a young man left Holland some years ago to serve in the telegraphic department of the Transvaal. It had been his ambition to make a certain young lady in Amsterdam his wife if he ever attained to prosperity. But when success was achieved, he was unable to leave his work for a journey to Holland. In this difficulty a marriage by proxy—known in Holland as a glove marriage—was suggested. The details were all carefully arranged, the difference of time exactly calculated, and continuous cable connection between Pretoria and Amsterdam secured.

The bridegroom and his friends assembled in the Hotel Kruger. An operator using a wire from the cable notified the lady's family in Holland that all was in readiness, and the reply came that the ceremony would then begin. In the Amsterdam mansion a friend of the bridegroom made the responses, and when the time came to clasp hands, produced a glove belonging to the bridegroom, which he had worn. The proxy holding one end of the glove and the bride the other, the promises were exchanged and the ceremony completed. A cablegram from the bride to her husband, six thousand miles away, gave him her wifely greeting, to which he responded. There was a wedding feast in Pretoria and another in Amsterdam, and the cable was kept busy with congratulations. Then the bride said farewell to her family and went on board the steamer to begin her voyage to her new home. The custom of the glove marriage dates back to old Dutch colonial days, when they were more common than in these times of rapid and cheap journeys. But there is a contract far older that resembles it in many of its particulars. Many a tearful farewell to mourning loved ones assembled around a death-bed, is like that bride's good-bye to her family, merely the parting with one who goes to Him who has long been loved, and to enter the mansion prepared before the foundation of the world.

In my Father's house are many mansions... I go to prepare a place for you... that where I am ye may be also. (John 14: 2, 3.)

THE VOLCANO VESUVIUS, NOW THREATENING ERUPTION.

Notes at the time, took advantage of a gust of wind, which blew the smoke and ash seaward, to crawl up to the edge of the crater and look in. He says that the sight was terrifying in the extreme. The surface of the molten rock was like a horrible sea, tossing in fury and torn twice in a minute by exploding gases, which hurled dust and pellets to a height of several hundred feet. Some of the fragments a foot or more in diameter exploded as they rose and made a great rent as they fell on the mountain side. When there was a momentary cessation of the eruption, the hot vapor struck the spectators producing a scalding sensation, like that caused by steam, and almost suffocated him by their sulphurous fumes. Meanwhile, the sides of the crater palpitated and throbbed, so he grew alarmed and should be shaken from the side and hurried away from the scene in alarm. That was about fifteen years ago and since then the activity of the volcano has increased, but is now again gathering itself as if preparing for another outbreak. Special prayers are being offered by the Roman Catholic inhabitants of the city, to St. Januarius and St. Agatha, who are superstitiously supposed to have power to prevent an eruption. Scientific observers, on the other hand, explain that the channels leading to the crater are clogged with molten lava, which prevents the imprisoned gases harmlessly escaping and is their struggle to find a vent that causes the explosions now heard. That is doubtless the true explanation, but it tain that in some winter storm it must fall. It was then that the citizen, whose house it shaded, made his original device to preserve the tree. He set a mason to line the trunk with bricks, and fully one-half of its thickness is now solid masonry. The tree flourishes around its brick heart, and this year seems to have taken new life. As it was not in human power to renew the living wood that the tree had lost, probably no better course could have been pursued than this of giving it stability. It is well for us that when the evil in our natures has been removed by the Holy Spirit, as the insect pests were removed by fire from this tree, we are not left to human devices for the renewal of our hearts. God fulfils his promise:

I will put a new spirit within you I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them a heart of flesh. (Ezekiel 11: 19.)

Dogs Provided For.

A press dispatch from Chicago reports the contents of a will in which a dog is legatee. The testator is a retired sailor. He instructed his lawyer to make a will leaving $1,700 for the support of his dog, and constituting a Guarantee Company trustee for the amount. The dog is to be properly cared for out of the income from the money, and at his death the principal and any unexpended income are to be paid to the testator's sister. The old sailor said: "I do not mean, after my death, to have my dog kicked and cuffed about the world as I have been." By a curious coincidence, public provision was made for another dog about the same time.

recovered from a severe illness. After her recovery, she was afflicted with hysteria and gradually a peculiar mental condition developed which, so far as is known, is without precedent. There is a duality of consciousness, making her mentally like two persons. She can read and memorize at the same time, and can recite verses which she declares she does not know. The two parts of her mind appear to act independently of each other, and one is not conscious of what is done by the other. She said she could not see out of her left eye, and experiments proved that she could not. Yet, there was nothing abnormal about the eye, and the physicians who attend her found that the eye did see, though one part of the brain received no impressions from what the eye saw. She frequently writes sentences while engaged in conversation on a totally different topic, and is not aware that she has been writing at all. The two parts of the brain act simultaneously on different lines and appear to be entirely independent of each other. The girl appears to be wholly unconscious of the operations of one part of her mind, and to be incredulous of what she has said or done by that part. The doctors think that further study of her case may give the clue to the action of some notorious criminals, whose crimes are inconsistent with their ordinary disposition and conduct. This is a new mental phenomenon, but Christian men have long been familiar with a similar spiritual condition. The Apostle describes under very similar

STILL SUFFERING IN INDIA.

An Appeal by Cable for More Help for India's Starving Millions—Dr. Bryan's Experience

MADRAS, India, July 10, 1897.
"Wire more famine relief. NEWCOMB."

THE above urgent appeal for help reached THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office on July 10 from Rev. John Newcomb who with his wife is laboring under the auspices of the Baptist Missionary Union at Cumbum in the Madras district of India. As Mr. Newcomb had already received five hundred dollars and as we had been confidently assured by Baptist publications that there was no famine, nor likelihood of any in the fields occupied by missionaries of the American Baptist Union, his cable-message is distinctly ominous. It shows that the area of the famine is extending and is reaching districts which were supposed to be safe from its inroads. It is gratifying to think that this journal was not misled by optimistic opinions and had already provided Mr. Newcomb and his devoted brethren in that district with the means of grappling with the dread monster at its first appearance. Another five hundred dollars has already been sent to the missionary whose need of further help must have been very pressing to cause him to go to the expense of a cable dispatch.

A BUNYAH'S STORE.

A pathetic story of sorrow and suffering is told by Miss M. E. Bryan, M. D., who called at the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on July 10, to express her thanks for the help rendered to her in her work in India by its subscribers. Dr. Bryan has been laboring for five years past, at Bareilly, in the North-western provinces, and has just returned to her native land for a brief period of rest and recuperation. The greater part of that time has been spent in the Hospital there, for Dr. Bryan is fitted by ability and training to minister to the body as well as the soul. Her work brought her in contact with some of the worst cases of suffering, which, she says, bad as they were, and numerous as they were, did not approach the horrors seen in the Central Provinces. Referring to a picture of a skeleton of a man supported by two Salvation Army officers, which appeared in this journal on July 7, she said: "I saw just such a man near the railroad station, the day I came away. They are on all the roads on their way from their villages to the cities in the hope of finding employment. The farmers who employ them in the good times have no work to give them, their ground is parched, their seed is eaten, their cattle are dead and these poor helpers must either starve at home, or wander away to the cities to get work. Many of them die by the way. Some are brought by some kindly person to the hospital, but very often when they arrive, they are beyond human help. Gangrene of the stomach sets in as the result of the decay of the structure of the stomach. Having no nutriment it shrivels and decays and when that stage is reached there is no remedy."

Dr. Bryan was one of our missionary distributors. "We were enabled," she said, "to take care of over a hundred famine children. Some are orphans, some had been turned out of doors by their parents when all means of supporting them failed. They were poor, listless little creatures, when they came, and it was necessary to feed them very carefully. They were so ravenous that they would have over eaten and died if we had not restricted them. It was necessary to put them in a part of the compound apart from the other children, lest their pitiful condition should lead the well-fed children, in their kindness, to give them their own portions of food. It is marvelous to see how soon they change. In a few days they look well, and you can hear them laughing and singing at their play. There are any number of these children who might be rescued. I have seen them on the streets and in the bazaars searching among the dirt for a stray grain that has been dropped. Many of them contract disease by eating offal or anything that will alleviate the awful pangs of hunger. It is a grand work to take them and give them food and Christian teaching. They will grow up to carry the Gospel to their race. The Mohammedans and Hindoos have realized this fact, and have protested against our taking any more orphan children from the relief camps. They have made so much disturbance about it that in many instances the superintendent of the relief camp has forbidden the missionaries taking in more children. The Mohammedans and Hindoos who are protesting would rather the children died of starvation than live to become Christians. Though we are thus debarred from succoring those children, there is no lack of supply. Parents often bring their children themselves, and there are many without parents who are wandering about half-starved."

Dr. Bryan has had very pleasant association with Mrs. Lawson, of Alligarh, and Mrs. Jackson, in Bombay, who are both engaged in this work among the children, which is really the most hopeful department of Christian missionary work in India. She believes that if money were given freely to those ladies and others doing kindred work, Christianity would make great advance through the children. "The poverty of these people," says Dr. Bryan, "is extreme. A man who becomes a servant to a white family often receives the equivalent of only one dollar a month as wages, and he frequently has a wife and children to be kept out of it. The woman sometimes contributes a little by weaving or some such occupation, but that help is very precarious. Where the income is so small, you can easily see that when he goes for his supply of grain to the banyah, the retail grain merchant, and gets only fifteen pounds for his rupee when he has been accustomed to get forty-five, or at the worst thirty-six, the man and his family must be in sore straits. There is no doubt that the banyahs have raised their prices more than was justifiable. It is their opportunity of making a fortune and if their customers starve to death, they are not worried over it. I believe the corn you have sent will be heartily welcome. It may cause the banyahs to reduce their prices. Many of the people know how to use it, as it is the equivalent of their maize. They will need your help for at least a year yet, as even if the rains come, as we hope, there are so many farmers who have no seed to sow nor any cattle left alive for ploughing."

Rev. W. O. Ballantine, the American Board's missionary, at Rahuri, India, writes: "I have pleasure to acknowledge the receipt through the treasurer of our Mission of another $500 from your subscription list. I am very thankful for this, and shall spend the money in addition to the ways already mentioned in my last, in taking care of homeless and friendless boys and girls. As the famine increases in severity, many are in great distress and straits about their children, and come to us begging us to take their children, and thus leave them free to earn a bare living for themselves. The fathers and in some cases the mothers of some of these children, have died from overwork and starvation, and these children we feel especially called upon to help, if possible. The rainy season is now close upon us, and is much longed for and prayed for by all classes of the community. But with all its desirableness, it will undoubtedly be also the means of great suffering for many, as they have no means of shelter, and the rain will cause much discomfort as well as disease. All cases that come to us we are trying to relieve to the best of our ability, and are thankful enough to you and the Christian public of America, that we have the means at our command to enable us to do so to some extent, although to attempt to relieve all the distress in this whole region would be a matter requiring more than human effort could accomplish."

AWAY FROM THE KILLING HEAT.

Hundreds of Tenement Waifs Enjoy Life-Giving Breezes at our Children's Home.

EARTH is reaping a wide swath among the little tenement children of New York, these sweltering July days and nights. As the mercury reaches up toward the nineties, and streets and sidewalks radiate intense heat, life in the more thickly populated sections of the metropolis becomes almost intolerable, and everybody who can do so, tries to get away somewhere, to a region of cooler and purer air and comparative comfort. But what of the quarter of a million of tenement children, who pass year after year of their young lives in the same annual mid-summer torture—a fiery furnace, indeed, and one from which there is, for the majority, no escape." The few thousands who are taken to the country every year form only a fraction of the great army of "the children of poverty," to whom every summer means a struggle against sickness, if not with death itself. To such little ones, the comfort and the joy of a ten days' outing at Mont-Lawn rob the summer of most of its terrors, besides strengthening the frail bodies against becoming sick and enervated by the torrid heat.

It is astonishing to witness the transformation a vacation at Mont-Lawn produces in the little tenement children. Once in the country, and far from the hot, sickly, foul-smelling rookeries which many call "home," they throw off all care, and with it their listlessness and pallor also disappear. The photographs on the next page will interest our readers, as showing, more faithfully than mere words can do, how our little guests pass the time at Mont-Lawn. Usually the sail up the Hudson River, from the hot city to the cool, verdant country, awakens all the latent enthusiasm of the children. An animated group is seen (in one of the photographs) viewing the noble scenery from the awning-covered deck of the steamer Chryse-nah. Another picture shows the little folks already absorbed in the delights of country freedom and innocent play—at the swings, tree-climbing, and the game of "cane-ring." These and many other sports provided for the youngsters, are all prime favorites. One photograph presents, with spirited effect, a section of the "grand march" from the chapel, or, it may be, to the big dining tent, where keen appetites never fail to do justice to the wholesome food.

FAMINE SUFFERERS WAITING RELIEF.

Little Rachel K—, the six thousandth child at the Home, was the happiest of girls last week, for she had secured not only a delightful holiday for herself, but for her brothers and sisters as well—all being found eligible as candidates for a ten days' outing at Mont-Lawn. They make together a very pretty group—the six children, with thirteen-year chael as the "little mother." The are Isabel (11), Morris (10), Lily tilda (6), Sarah (fifteen months), all live in Henry street, in the populous East-side of New York, who is a very bright talker remarkable story. Her parents are liavers, and, much against their she some time ago began to attend services at the Mariners' Temple York, where, after a time she g heart to Jesus.

She listened to the testimonies of and older converts, and with the enthusiasm of childhood, she took one day, to stand up and tell, with eloquence that touched all her own change. The face of the brightened as she spoke, and she heard her felt that the words cal her heart. Rachel never tires of ing of Jesus and the happiness in his keeping. She visits the Mission, the Mariners' Temple, different missions in New York Brooklyn to tell of her love for and his wonderful goodness to her graduated from Grammar School in June, and will now attend a school, as it is her purpose to be a medical missionary to Jerusalem, may work among her own race, and labor for their conversion. I is beautiful and might well put many an aged Christian to the "When graduation day came," plained, "I had not received a dress as I expected, and was comp appear in my only dress—this you wearing now. Besides, I didn't prize I had striven for. These may seem little to others but to meant a great deal; and it was thought of Christ's love for me abled me to bear the disappointment to feel satisfied that he knew w best."

For one so young Rachel has responsibilities. At home she cooking and helps otherwise, worked very hard to prepare her brothers and sisters for Mont-Lawn she wished to have them look n clean. The story of little Rachel that should be an inspiration to people everywhere.

Contributions in aid of the world Children's Home will be gladly and all will be promptly acknowledged these columns. The following sum been contributed:

Previously acknowledged.....	23
Eddy J.....
Morley, Mrs E.....
Anaheim, Cal.....
Joslin, Mrs E W.....
Meyers, Miss Mary.....
Miss Ronnd's S S class.....
M M B. Brooklyn.....
M G. Portis.....
Van Zandt, M M.....
Subr, Morrison.....
Mother and daughter, Clyde.....
O M D. Ala.....
I H N. Lancaster.....
Read Mrs E E.....
Mary I. Wright.....
Mrs Ann Fuller.....
S S Birthday box, Ft Calhoun.....
M A H. Brooklyn.....
Miss Tompkins.....
Miss Gilliam Farley.....
C E C. Hudson.....
C C & B B H. Mercer.....
B G Bryan.....
Mrs Hargrave's Class.....
Mrs S Z Bean.....
A Friend, Lafayette.....
W J Flinders (through).....
Mrs A B Harlow.....
Mrs Edwin Fonda.....
Friend, Waddington.....
Rachel M Huston.....
Mr & Mrs T R Pearson.....
R Kneustler.....
King's Daughter, Mercer.....
Rev Wm Gay.....
—, Hackensack.....
Friend, Tarrytown.....
Well-wisher, New London.....
Friend, Newtown.....
M A Hines.....
Friend, Dawson.....
R P R. Binghamton.....
The Pansy Club, Cambridge.....
Miss J A Wright.....
Mrs C L Walker.....
Mrs Emma Batchelor.....
Mr and Mrs J W Godbold.....
Golden Rule Circle of K D, Mariners' Har.....
Girls' Mission Band Presby Ch, Succasun.....
Charlotte, Elizabeth & Willie Emma, Ruthe.....
Total.....

Contributions of Clothing.

A package clothing from Mrs. Robert ham; In His Name, Painesville, 23 dresses; old lady In His Name, package; Mrs. E lock, box of clothing; Lydia Hinkamp; clothing; Whatsoever Circle of K. D.; box; Ruth Hall, Grace and Helen Slep Ginton, Maud Ramsey, and Maggie St box; Friends, Grafton, box; Mrs. E. 18 gingham dresses and 13 skirts; Mr Brager, package.

LITTLE TENEMENT GUESTS AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOME AT MONT-LAWN.

1. THE SWINGS. 2. ASSEMBLING FOR THE GRAND MARCH TO THE DINING-TEXT. 3. A SHADY NOOK ON THE STEAMER "CHRYSTENAH." 4. PLAYING AT "CANE-RINGING." 5. IMPROVISING A SWING.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Paul's Ministry in Corinth.

Sunday School Lesson for Aug. 1. Acts 18:
1-11. Golden Text: 1. Cor. 3: 11.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

HOW unlike are God's ways to those of men! Man would have judged that the learned disciple of Gamaliel was far more adapted to deal with the cultured Athenians than with the commercial Corinthians or Ephesians or the barbarous people of Melita. And yet it was in Athens that the record of results is the smallest perhaps of all the labors of this Apostle of the Gentiles! He left Athens for Corinth, the great commercial city of Greece, and here, in accordance with his usual custom while in Europe he sought for and found work whereby he might support himself that he might "make the Gospel of Christ without charge." On the Sabbath days, as he had done previously at Thessalonica, he went into the synagogue to teach.

In Athens there was no persecution, but no sooner did Paul begin to preach in Corinth than persecution broke out. His appeal now was directly to the Jews. "And when they opposed themselves and blasphemed, he shook his raiment and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads. I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles." It will be remembered that in his first missionary journey, at Antioch in Pisidia, Paul and Barnabas had said to blaspheming Jews: "It was necessary that the Word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." But now a second time the truth entered more deeply into Paul's heart that God had called him to bear his name before the Gentiles. (Acts 9: 15.) This time Paul took

A NEW STEP.

Dear as were his people to him, and ready as he was, if it could have been, to be even accursed from Christ for his brethren, (Rom. 9: 3), he did at this time just what would be calculated to injure his prestige with the priestly powers at Jerusalem and with the rulers of the synagogues wherever he should travel. He departed from the synagogue as his place of teaching and went into the house of Justus close by. This could only look like opposition, but Paul may have learned a lesson from his comparative want of success at Athens which bore fruit now, for he afterwards wrote to the Corinthians speaking of this time, and said, "I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of man but in the power of God." (1. Cor. 2: 3-5.) In such a spirit it was not difficult for him to brave all the misconception and contempt which might come upon him from the scribes and Pharisees, that he, a Jew, should open a kind of rival synagogue to teach the Scriptures in a way unauthorized by the powers.

God honored him in this, for his time for such a step had come, and one of the first fruits of this move was the conversion of the ruler of that very synagogue which he had left. "Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house, and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized." Paul was more and more laying down his own life, and as he taught others he was himself learning in the school of Christ; his own wisdom was once his very life, now he would know it no more. His prestige as a Jew had been his very life, now the cross of Christ had crucified to him both his own wisdom and his religious reputation. But God was with him and his life in God deepened: it was life out of death; the life of God out of death to his own life.

It was just at this juncture that the Lord "spoke to Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace: for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee, for I have much people in this city." And in face of all it cost him and the continued opposition of the Jews, he continued a year and a half teaching among them.

But this was not going to last much longer. The prince of this world will not relinquish any part of his dominions without a struggle. The jealous Jews were an easy prey, and the great adversary stirred them up to make an insurrection against Paul so that they apprehended him, and brought against him the indictment that he "persuaded men to worship God contrary to the law." Gallio was a just judge; in his eyes the law was not made to distinguish between creeds, but to judge of good or evil deeds. Thus Gallio declined to be judge of such matters, and he "drove them from the judgment seat." "But they" (R.V., that is the Jews, or A.V., the Greeks) took Sosthenes, the present ruler of the synagogue, and beat him before the judgment seat. Thus we learn that yet another ruler of the synagogue had be-with a price," to be a temple of the Holy Ghost (1. Cor. 6: 19, 20.) He shows the wonderful independence of the members of the body, and how the whole body, head and members, is Christ (verse 12.) Wonderful truths are given in this Epistle. Then the teaching of the resurrection and the transfiguration of our bodies in a moment, in the "twinkling of an eye at the last trump." (1. Cor. 15: 51, 52.) Then his wonderful look into the future where he sees, beyond the millennial reign of Christ, the conquest of "the last enemy," death, when there shall be a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

WHEN we read that Paul, the energetic, restless missionary, stayed a year and a half in Corinth, we naturally inquire what there could have been in the city to hold him there. It could not have been the natural beauty of the place, though it was singularly beautiful. It stood on a level plain, at the foot of a mountain, on the narrow neck of rocky land which unites Morea to the northern part of Greece. It was an ideal situation for a commercial city, accessible on both sides by sea and on the great highway of traffic by land. The Romans had destroyed it with all its art treasures about two hundred years before Paul's visit, and after allowing it to lie desolate for a century, had rebuilt it with great magnificence, and had peopled it come a believer in Jesus, else he would not have been persecuted.

THE SITE OF ANCIENT CORINTH.

But the time of Paul's ministry at Corinth was drawing to an end, he had done there the work which God had given him to do, and the Lord whose he was and whom he served, wanted him elsewhere. His epistles to the Corinthians are clear evidence of the condition of this Church of Corinth. Having learned his lesson, he teaches the Corinthians how God sent him to preach the Gospel, "not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none-effect" (1. Cor. 1: 17), and after showing how it is "the foolishness of preaching" which saves them that believe because "the foolishness of God is stronger than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men," he tells them that "not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are."

In his own humiliation, as crucified with Christ, Paul laid the foundation, Jesus Christ, deep in this Church of Corinth. He could build upon this foundation the expectation of the Lord's coming. He could bring out the wonderful teaching of the Body of Christ (chap. 12), after having first shown that our human body must take its rightful place as a living sacrifice. "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a colony of merchants, freedmen and slaves. Its unrivalled opportunities for trade had attracted capitalists and manufacturers and workmen of all crafts. There was a resident population of about four hundred thousand, and a floating contingent of visitors who came for business or pleasure. The city was as famous for its wealth as Athens was for its learning; but it was famous, too, for its immorality. Nowhere, probably, on earth at that time, was there a city in which so much money was spent in vile orgies. The very religion of the city was vicious. There was a temple there to Aphrodite, the Greek Venus, the worship of which was shamelessly corrupt. Merchants who came there and sold the cargo of a ship have been known to spend the whole proceeds on the wicked women who officiated in the temple. Not a promising field we should have thought for the Apostle. But he settled down there, and, hearing in a vision that there was much people for the Lord there, he stayed to bring them in. The possibility of winning souls was the attraction which kept the Apostle at Corinth. In addition, there was a special need for his stay in the condition from which his converts were won and the temptations which surrounded them. They needed his oversight and the fortitude which his continued presence gave them. We know, from the letters he wrote them how much anxiety and distress some of them caused him, and how deeply grieved he was by the scandal which soon after his departure disgraced the church. Paul, as usual, began at the synagogue, but his work there seems to have been brief. The Jews opposed him and he ceased to argue with them, and commenced meetings in his own house. He was gradually winning that his most hopeful field was the portion of the synagogue congregation which consisted of proselytes, i.e., Gentiles who had been a part of the surrounding heathenism and had been purified by Jewish monotheism. They were less prejudiced than the Jews, and accepted a faith better than heathenism. They were prepared to accept a still better in Christianity. Justus was probably one of these, and Crispus may have been another. The latter as chief ruler of the synagogue was an important convert. It appears to have been deposed from office, as far as the church was concerned, is mentioned as holding it, probably being elected to succeed him. Paul departed from Athens, and his hearers had said, "We will be again of this matter," but there were two parties to such an arrangement: never know when our last opportunity of accepting the Gospel may come. A legend that when the Magi were way to worship the infant Christ, expressed a wish to accompany them. They consented, but she wished her house in order first, and as she did not wait for her, it was arranged that she should follow them when her work was done. But when she was ready they were out of sight and she overtook them. So she missed the opportunity that only came once in the history of tendering homage to the Son of God.

He was of the same craft. A father, however wealthy he might be, expected to have his son taught handicraft, by which in an emergency might earn an honest livelihood. Paul was taught the art of making tents, which, to this day, are used for various purposes and by travelers in that region. The cloth of which they are made is woven from the hair of the Cilician goat. Whether Paul was a weaver of tents or made the tents from the cloth is not told. Perhaps he may have done so. When he learned the art, he probably not expect ever to maintain himself by it, but in Corinth he found it useful. Silas and Timothy came, when it seemed that he was able to give himself entirely to preaching. They brought him help from the other converts. "How much are you paid for this work?" a sceptical cynical man asked one of the speakers at a mission, recently. "Not a cent," was the reply. "How do you live?" "The same way that you do—by work." "Then, why do you come here if it is not to earn money?" The answer was significant: "Because I love my low men and want to give them something there is in the world."

A certain Jew named Aquila, in the presence of Aquila and his wife in Corinth was due to one of the caprices of the imbecile emperor Claudius. This was not permanent. When Paul wrote his epistle to the Romans shortly afterwards, Aquila and Priscilla had returned (see Romans 16: 3). Perhaps the people thought themselves hardly treated by this peremptory edict expelling them from Rome; but what a blessing it brought to have the daily companionship of the Apostle Paul for a year and a half! A magnificent compensation. When the missionary, was on his way to New Zealand home, his ship was caught at the Isle of Wight. Marsden, never over the delay, but he went ashore and preached. The sermon was the means of converting one hearer. She afterwards came the famous "dairyman's daughter" whose biography written by Legh Richmond has been blessed to many souls.

No man shall set on thee. These words must have been very comforting to Paul and it is remarkable that Corinth was one of the few places that he left so peacefully and in peace. He generally fled to save his life. Inglis describes a incident which illustrates the kind of protection that God can interpose for his servants. A lady was aroused from sleep by a pecking at her window. Going for the cause, she saw a beautiful butterfly fluttering inside her room near the glass. Outside, was a bird making darts at it. The butterfly was annoyed and the bird was puzzled. She understood the sheet of plate glass between them which kept the butterfly as safe as the bird was a hundred miles away.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE.

MOTHERS OF PERSIA.

Belot Not Likely to be Improved Under the present Shah—The Persecution of the Nestorians and Hebrews.

DR. JOSEPH.

JUDGING from the news published in our last week's issue, the outlook for the peace and continued prosperity of the Christian population of Persia is not reassuring. Should the Shah's government permit the fanaticism of the Moslems to run unchecked, we may soon chronicle accounts of the persecution of the Persian Nestorians and Hebrews as distressing as any that have come from other Moslem-ruled lands in centuries. Our readers have a special interest in the Gospel work that is now being carried on in Persia at the present time. In the letters that have appeared on these pages from the pen of Dr. Joseph, our special correspondent and medical missionary, some very graphic and instructive incidents of that work have been given.

As to the women of Persia that Dr. Joseph's efforts are specially addressed—the Nestorians, but the mothers of the Moslem and Jewish children as well. With her message of healing to the sick body, she also conveys a message of love and encouragement of every soul. In the Christian households that she visits in our photograph, she is seen seated in the centre of a group of Nestorians; she is warmly welcomed but she finds many opportunities to do Zenana work in Mohammedan households where the story of "gentle Issa" is told to women and girls, to whom it is all new and strange and wonderful.

A medical missionary who has labored among the Mohammedans said: "If there is any Christian influence among Mohammedans it is due to the Christian doctor. Mohammedans ever expect to convert Mohammedans to Christ, it will have to be the tough Christian medical men and men of iron doors of caste, society, religion, personal and national ill-will melt away before a physician as warm as a summer sun. His office is regarded as sacred and honored as that of a priest, and his influence is immense, even the highest and greatest in the land.

First, in the interest of Christianity and humanity, that the impending persecution of all non-Mohammedans in Persia is averted, and that the comparative tolerance which marked the reign of the late Shah may be continued by his predecessor, thus assuring the peace of the homes of Persia and the progress of the Gospel in that ancient land.

Wise and Economical.

There are many economies that can be classified as absurd, and on the other hand, there are economies that seem to be based as a pretext or justification for the contemplated extravagance. It requires an exceptionally judicious mind to know where to economize and where to spend. It is frequently the way of thrift that melts away before a physician as warm as a summer sun. His office is regarded as sacred and honored as that of a priest, and his influence is immense, even the highest and greatest in the land.

had better be devoted to dustcloths or to some other purposes of cleaning where a soft, old rag is required. The picking up of pins is certainly a doubtful economy. Almost all of us have some pet economy. Some people will hoard old dresses of wool which they have no time to clean, and which would not be fit for wear if they were cleaned. The result of this hoarding is an interesting collection of mothballs. The hoarding of newspapers may be classed among the same extravagant fancies. They merely collect dust. The saving of fruit and vegetable cans, except to paint and use for flower-pots, is absurd. An old tin can is usually a menace to health. A hundred such petty economies are indulged in by thoughtless women, who imagine that thrift can come from such foolish hoarding.

The Value of Laughter.

Laughter has an important place in hygiene. Learn to laugh and smile. Have a cheery word for all comers and you will be liked by everybody. Laugh out loud, if you please. It may be artificial at first.

DR. JOSEPH SURROUNDED BY A GROUP OF PERSIAN PEASANT WOMEN.

but it gets to be natural after awhile. Hide your pains and aches under that laugh. The world has troubles of its own and can't stop to coddle yours. The good-humored man or woman is always welcome, but the dyspeptic or hypochondriac is not wanted anywhere, and is considered a public nuisance.

The Old-fashioned Garden.

There is something very pleasing in the recollection of the old-fashioned gardens of our own childhood, especially at this season, when every garden and woodland bank is ablaze with color. The writer of these verses will awaken many precious memories:

Oh, for the dear old-fashioned posies,
Growing close by the kitchen door;
Poppies soft to bring forgetting,
Balm and mint for a spirit sore.
Heart's-ease, sweet for hearts that are aching;
Ragged robins and four-o'clocks;
Marigold and wealth uncounted,
Cabbage roses and hollyhocks.
Sunflowers tall, that turn their faces
Out to the west as the sun goes down;
Morning-glories that close and cower
Under the rays of his burning frown.
Oh, for the dear old-fashioned posies,
Growing close by the kitchen door,
And for the loved familiar faces
Gone from our gaze forever more.

Music and Worship.

There is a very wide distinction between music and worship, which it would be well for us to recognize. When we go to church or to any service in which praise forms a part, all voices should join in the strains. An old legend relates that a band of monastics who had no voices and no idea of music, were filled with regret that their service was so imperfect. One day they found a little boy lying outside of the chapel door. They took him in and educated him and to their joy they found that he had a splendid voice. In due course he was ready to take part in the service, and the old men thought that it was the most glorious they had ever attended. That night their spiritual leader asked why they had forgotten their evening hymn. The old men replied that they had not forgotten it; on the contrary, they had had a most magnificent service. "Magnificent it may have been," said the leader, "but not one sound of worship has entered heaven this night." In listening to the singer they had forgotten the object of the service. Let us take the lesson to ourselves, lest in our admiration of the beauties of the material world we forget the spiritual, and so grasp the bubble and lose the crown.

Disappointments.

"I do not pretend to be a superior scholar in the school of providence," said Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, "but many of the best lessons of life have been taught me by disappointment. One lesson we have all learned is that this world was not made and is not managed only for us. If it were, then the sun would shine just when we wanted a fair day, and the rain would fall when our garden needed to be watered. But we have found that God goes right on and orders things as pleaseth

THE OLD PATHS.

Ask for the old path, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. Jer. 6: 16.

ASK for the faith of my fathers,
I ask for the paths that were trod,
By Abraham, Moses, and David,
And all the old prophets of God.

I seek not a plan of salvation,
Where merit of mine hath a place;
I want the old-fashioned salvation,
That saveth the sinner by grace.

I ask for the God of my fathers,
Whose promise forever is true;
The God of my only salvation,
A Refuge for me and for you.

I ask for the path of my fathers,
That leadeth to heaven's bright goal
The old way of life everlasting,
Where I may find rest for my soul.

I ask for the God of my fathers,
Who comforts in time of distress,
Who liveth forever and ever
The hearts of his people to bless.

Vineland, N. J. —MRS. FRANK A. BRECK.

Happy Children.

ONE of the secrets of happy childhood is occupation. In dealing with our children at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Fresh Air Fund Home at Mont Lawn it is aimed to keep them always busy at something. There are no children to be found there standing about listless and unemployed. Recreation is occupation, and whether they are playing at any of their child-games on the lawn, flower-gathering or leaf-picking in the woods, or singing in the little chapel, the visitor is always sure to find them occupied.

Froebel long ago discovered that occupation was the key-note to a child's happiness, says an observant writer. Bearing this in mind, a mother may help herself almost unlimitedly in the care of her children, particularly on a journey, which restless children often make a serious trial to their guardians. A pencil and a pad of paper have proved the best sort of nurse-maid to one mother on many an otherwise difficult railroad trip with her little son. In a Hudson River train lately another mother was noticed converting the restless fatigue of her young pair, a boy and girl, into contented and happy occupation with the aid only of a time-table map. It was a sufficiently large affair, when opened, to show a dozen States, and the ingenious woman improvised a game which completely absorbed her charges. Each in turn selected a city, the other endeavoring to discover its whereabouts, the mother letting the child who had not chosen guide her pencil as a pointer over the map, the other child following its course with the significant words "hot" or "cold," as the location of the place selected was approached or receded from.

For an hour and a-half the game was kept up with unabated interest on the part of the children. Peals of laughter and exclamations of eager excitement greeted the halting progress of the improvised pointer. It is safe to say that the mother will see that a time-table map is in her traveling-bag every time she sets out on a journey with her active youngsters. The same principles can be profited by for rainy days in the summer outing. Some simple, easily carried games or devices for children's entertainment will be found invaluable.

The Queen and the Children.

One of the prettiest sights of the recent royal Jubilee in London was at Constitution Hill where were gathered 10,000 children associated with the public schools, under the care of some 2,000 teachers. The children in their many-colored clothes, with the trees as a background, afforded a most picturesque scene. Several hours elapsed when the cry was raised "The Queen!" First came an escort of Indian Princes, and then the royal carriage, in which was seated the Queen, the ex-Empress of Germany, the Princess Beatrice and the Duke of Connaught. A halt being made there was a momentary pause, and the leading representatives of the schools were presented. Each in turn was introduced by the Duke of Connaught to the Queen, who bowed her acknowledgments. Then came the national anthem, Victoria being moved almost to tears by the singing of the fresh young voices. It was a scene to live in the memory of the ten thousand children who were present.

"Sense Games" for Children.

That lover of children, Froebel, laid great stress on "sense games" in his book for mothers, writes Katherine Beebe. He would have them train the senses of their children to acuteness and discrimination by means of play. In one kindergarten this idea was carried out last fall by means of the fruits so abundant at that time. A number of these were provided, the number suited to the ages and abilities of the children, who named them and counted them, and also drew them with colored chalk. One child's eyes being blindfolded, another child hid one of the fruits. It was then the turn of the blindfolded one to guess which fruit was missing, and if he guessed correctly he was "heartily cheered"; if his guess was wrong he tried again another time. This was played as long as the children were interested, and on another occasion a game of guessing by feeling the fruits, filled a merry half hour.

"GOD'S PORCELAIN."

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

By EDITH FERGUSON BLACK.

Author of "A Princess in Calico," and other Stories.

THE sultry day had burned itself out and the sun was slowly dying in a mass of purple clouds. Down near the river the heat had blazed with a scorching glare that made the pavements feel like red-hot plough-shares, and now hung in heavy, stifling waves over the crowded tenement houses. Out in Lincoln Park the tigers lay panting, and the polar bears plunged up to their necks in their ponds or kept up a weary march around their enclosure in the vain hope of escape.

On one of the benches fronting the water a woman sat knitting. The large bundle of denim trousers on the bench beside her was tacit evidence that she belonged to the mighty army of the unknown who drag out a livelihood beneath the grinding curse of the sweat shops. A dress of rusty black, in which she had mourned for her mother three years before, an old felt hat which did duty summer and winter, and a pair of stout boots, guilts of any attempt at shape, completed her attire. Her hands were large and bony, the knuckles swollen and red from years of incessant toil, and the deep seams in her fingers cried to heaven for vengeance on the system which grows fat upon the life-blood of the poor. Her hair, of a dingy straw color, was drawn into a tight wisp at the back, her sunken eyes were faded and almost colorless from their efforts to follow the lines of countless button-holes by the light of a wretched lamp, and her jaw bones stood out from her hollow cheeks with startling distinctness. She was bent and misshapen, and rheumatism had laid its relentless hand upon her so that she limped painfully as she walked. She was old and poor and homely. The world crushed her beneath its iron heel, the boys jeered after her in the streets, and she had once overheard a medical student describe her to his fellows as an anatomical monstrosity, but her soul was filled with the peace which passeth knowledge, and on her heart was graven the hidden name God gives to his chosen.

She sat drinking in the beauty and the freshness while her practised fingers tossed off unseen stitches on the sock of coarse blue wool which she was knitting for the only relative she possessed—her father. An afternoon in the park was the one treat which she allowed herself. She did not count it a lost day, since she had to break into it to go to the shop for a fresh supply of garments, and she lived on the remembrance through the rest of the week, when the tenement seemed unbearable and she felt weak and ill. She had always had an unconquerable longing for the country, with the dim cool shadows among its forests, its rippling brooks, the fragrance of its meadows, and the sweet breath of the coo, as she remembered it in the far distant past, before her parents had forsaken beautiful New Hampshire for the hurry and bustle of Chicago.

Suddenly her knitting dropped in her lap and she leaned forward breathless. A vision had blazed upon her beauty-loving soul. A young girl and her lover stopped near her to admire the view. "Lizer Ann had never even dreamed of such loveliness before. She gazed at it all in her quick, comprehensive way. The dress of soft, rich silk, shot through with flashes of light which glowed and shimmered in the sun, the suede gloves of delicate pearl, the dainty shoes, the hat with its graceful tangle of cream-colored plumes, and the rich lace parasol. She laid these away in her memory. She would take pleasure from them later on; they were only the accessories, what she wanted was the face. Was there ever such a face! So sweet and rich and tender in its ever-changing expression, with great brown eyes which glowed and sparkled until Lizer Ann's heart melted within her with a keen aesthetic joy that was almost pain. She watched the play of the exquisitely-curved nostril, the curve of the lip over the dazzling teeth, the bewitching, dimpled cheeks and the perfectly formed ears, like tinted shells, about which the brown hair clustered lovingly in curling waves. A subtle perfume smote upon her senses. She was seized with a sudden fit of trembling. Then the vision passed and she was left alone with her blue woolen sock and the denim trousers on the bench beside her.

"GOD WILL HELP, FATHER," SAID 'LIZER ANN, SOOTHINGLY.

She watched lovingly as the beautiful girl strolled along the broad paths and finally was handed by her lover into a handsome carriage in waiting and whirled away. There was no touch of envy in her grand, sweet soul.

"She's a bit of the Lord's porcelain," she murmured; "twas good of Him to let me have a look at it."

Her eye was caught by a glimpse of white under a shrub near by. She went over to it and picked up a fragment of gossamer and lace, filled with the same subtle perfume that had overpowered her a moment before.

"Why, it's her's!" she cried softly—"her hankercher, and she's dropped it!"

She held it reverently in her toil-worn hands, while the delicious fragrance rose about her and intoxicated her with delight. She caught sight of a name and bent her head to spell out the delicately traced letters.

"Muriel Hazelton." Yes, that was she of course. How the name fitted her! Muriel Hazelton. She whispered it lovingly as though it belonged to her. Then she contrasted it with her own. Muriel Hazelton; Eliza Ann Hobbs.

"I said she was a bit of the Lord's porcelain!" she cried exultantly. "And I'm an old piece of delft, full of cracks and chips; but then He's made us both, and He makes no mistake in His patterns. I'm a Hobbs and a hobbler," she continued with a soft merriment that had no bitterness. "And she, she walks as I think the angels must when they're not using their wings."

The shrill scream of a steam whistle brought her back to the present. She must hurry or her father would have to wait for his supper. She folded the handkerchief as well as she could with her roughened fingers and put it safely in her bosom. She could not hope to return it, she could find no trace and the idea of the city directory or an advertisement was beyond the limit of her thought. Then she lifted her heavy bundle and limped slowly out of the Park, counting herself richer than when she had entered it—richer by the memory of a face.

Her father was late, and the scanty supper of dried fish, weak tea, and bread was ready before she heard him coming slowly up the stairs which led to the wretched place they called home. He sank wearily into a chair near the door. She noticed with a pang how old and feeble he looked.

"It's all up with us, 'Lizer Ann," he said in a low, hopeless tone; "they've given me the sack at the wharf."

"Father!" she cried. "Why, father, you can't mean it!"

"Old men don't count nowadays. They've ben a cuttin' me down for awhile back, and I knew when they giv' me this job of watchman they couldn't git no lower, but I didn't think it of 'em to turn me off so!"

"They say they've only ben keepin' me on out of kindness—kindness—after me a workin' faithful for 'em nigh on to thirty years! God help us, 'Lizer Ann, whatever will we do?" He burst into tears—pitiful tears, which a man only sheds when his heart is breaking.

She crossed the room to where he sat, put her arms about him and laid his head against her brave, true heart.

"God will help, father; don't hurt Him by doubting. Come and have your supper and you'll feel better."

"They said they caught me napping," he broke out again, "that was the excuse. I do feel powerful drowsy some days, but they might have passed it by, after me a workin' faithful for 'em nigh on to thirty years!"

She stroked the white hair with a strange new dread in her heart. The rough hands were wondrously tender.

"Poor father! It's no wonder you're tired! You've had a hard life. You shall stay home with me and there'll be no one to find fault with you for sleeping. Don't you fret. I can put in some extra time on the pants and there's plenty of work at the shop now. God is good, father."

That night 'Lizer Ann did as John's disciples of old—she "went and told Jesus." She had made light to her father of the loss of his wages, but only God knew what it meant for them both. She worked to the limit of her strength as it was. Would it be possible to do any more? And if her father fell sick!—she shut her eyes then resolutely, with the tears still upon the lashes—

"God never asks us to do impossible things. We're His sparrows; He knows when the trees grow bare;" and so she fell asleep.

Her father fretted a good deal. He had never expected to be a burden on her, he said.

"Don't!" she answered, gently. "Think (Continued on next page.)"

Scrofula Cured

Hood's Sarsaparilla Just Was Needed.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for scrofula troubles and it has given me relief. I find it drives away that tired feeling and it is just what is needed when the system is run down. I gladly recommend Hood's." CHARLES A. BAKER, Little Utica, New York.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is the Best in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills cure all liver ills. 25 cents.

Royal makes the food pure, wholesome and delicate.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

A Cure For Rheumatism.

DR. J. G. CONNER, IONIA, MICH.

Dear Sirs:—An old friend handed me a couple of small vials of Tartaralithine some time ago and on myself, having suffered from Rheumatism for several years. I was so pleased with its effects that I cured a full sized bottle, and since it I have been entirely free from Rheumatism during the past year. I observed that it is not surpassed by any other preparation as a powerful and efficient diuretic; besides it is easy to administer. Please send me a bottle for use among my patients afflicted with Rheumatism.

Pamphlet on the cure of Rheumatism with lithine sent free by McKESSON & ROBB, S. 91 Fulton Street, NEW YORK. Sole Agents for The Tartaralithine Co.

URIC ACID POISON

Eminent medical authorities emphatically attest the claim that

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

IS A NATURAL SPECIFIC for URIC ACID POISONING in its various forms embracing Gout, Rheumatism, Liver Stone of the Kidney or Bladder, Bright Disease, Neuralgic Affections, Prostration, Nervous Headache, Dyspepsia, etc., etc. In other words also this poison shows itself in various parts of the body, Dropsy, an unnatural Drowsiness, Convulsions, and not infrequently sudden and fatal in effect. Used as a common beverage or table water it will found a sure PREVENTIVE of all arising from URIC ACID POISON.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is for sale by Grocers and Druggists. Pamphlets on application. Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, N. Y. Springs open for guests June 15 to Oct. 1.

GOD'S PORCELAIN."

(continued from preceding page.)

years and years you have worked inexorable conscience rebuked her lie. She could not remember when she had not worked for weeks slipped by. Autumn had and winter was approaching. 'Lizer led unceasingly from dawn till midnight. Her father went out occasionally for odd jobs, often bringing back some starving soul he had met on the way. There was always enough more with 'Lizer Ann; if there was none knew it but herself. But he st to stay with the brave daughter always a cheery word to drive the shadows. He slept a great deal.
 her at first, but she grew accusto it. The poor have no time for it.
 One Sunday they spent at the mission.
 Her enjoyed the singing and for it was a taste of heaven. Her numbered peacefully beside her, she carefully brushed blue coat he had from other days, giving voice to "hallelujahs" during his rare instants of consciousness: their meagre posed under the seat in a card-shoe box, but 'Lizer Ann felt no physical food: she had meat to which the world knew nothing, her given softly, fed by the sunlight in and her face was touched with a tle of the glory which Moses' wore came down from the Mount.
 eergyman in charge of the mission her out to a friend one day.
 face is my standing argument of ur of the Gospel of Jesus over the us of environment," he said.
 understand," answered his friend, "it without words."
 ever forgot Muriel. She carried akerchief always in her bosom, pain a piece of silver paper which at had picked up in his wander-seemed to keep her warm. She tender thoughts of her beautiful o the seams of the denim trous-every night the toil-worn, hunger-child of the people knelt in her otatic to plead for heaven's richings on the girl who was clothed r and fine linen and who fared ussily every day.
 a bitter winter. Out in the subuth-snow lay piled in high drifts and of coals went up. 'Lizer Ann every nerve to meet the added en f expense, for her father must ne. Long hours after he had gone she sat stitching, till the needle from her benumbed fingers and eong chill struck to her heart. At came a day when her father attempt to leave his bed. She angements with a neighbor to n him occasionally and then startook for a physician.
 u you tell me who is the best doc-tory city?" She put the question y a policeman whom she knew by
 t. Randolph," was the prompt reply, is waste time going to him, he only st quality."
 e tried on unheeding. Her father ve the best.
 eys breathless when she reached his Central Station. Dr. Ran-led out of the city. The train s leaving. She sank into a seat.
 le in her body ached with a dull, n pain: a mist came before her and numbness seemed to be creepeter limbs. She started forward, u keep well for her father's sake.
 about her. A fat woman sat in er with three children and a seat eels. How happy they seemed!
 ay he legs of a turkey protruding n their baskets. Everyone seem-o erriment. They all had furs and ck wraps. She was the only ivered. She thought of Muriel a tender smile on her pinched face.
 ay she must be to-day! Then k out of the window. The sky ean grey, stray whiffs of snow in the air and close beside the track, e Migan fumed like an imprisoned dling great sheets of spray in er; futile wrath against the mas-ces which were piled in rugged dew along the shore. Then the train slowed up and the conductor called her station.

She was shown into a handsome reception room filled with people, waiting, as she must wait, to catch the ear of the celebrated physician. Abashed she sank into the nearest chair. All the occupants of the room had greeted her entrance with a silent stare—cold, contemptuous, quizzical, supercilious, wondering. Every face expressed one or the other of these, and 'Lizer Ann, with her keen intuitions, read them all and sat looking down at her purple, swollen hands, while a surge of crimson flooded her cheeks and a confused singing sounded in her ears.

"They think I've no right here," she said to herself, "he's their doctor and they're all rich folks." She remembered the warning of the policeman. "He only tends the quality." "Perhaps I was wrong to come, but I'll do the best I can, for father's sake.
 He can only say 'No,' and that won't hurt me." She shivered with dread at the apprehension. It was a terrible ordeal, for she was naturally timid.

After a long time she gained courage to lift her eyes. No one noticed her in the least. Dr. Randolph's patients prided themselves on being perfectly well bred.
 Three ladies sat at a table writing; the gentlemen were buried in their newspapers; on a sofa at the end of the room two college girls kept up a merry conversation in whispers, while their aunt smiled indulgently behind the covers of her book. A very young woman sat beside a colored nurse, who held her baby, its little body strapped on a board in the first long misery of spinal disease; a young man was amusing a little fellow of four with a picture book; while just near him sat a beautiful child of eight—her golden curls fell in happy contrast over her rich fur cape with its hood of crimson silk, but the dark shadows under the blue eyes and the tiny crutch at her side told their own pitiful story. Her face was full of a patient sadness which made 'Lizer Ann's heart ache, and a great longing came over her to take the little creature in her arms and give her the love which she felt sure she looked for in vain from the haughty mother, who shook her royal sables so impatiently and glanced with such an air of ennui at her diamond-studded watch.

At intervals a servant opened a door which led into the doctor's consulting room and the patients entered in order of precedence. At last her turn came and she rose trembling.

The room was large and lofty, several fine pictures hung upon the wall, a magnifcent St. Bernard lay stretched upon a rug in front of the fire, which snapped softly, a table of plate glass in a mahogany setting was covered with rows of shining instruments and at a desk a fair-faced girl in the costume of a nurse was busily entering names and data in a large record book.

Dr. Randolph was too thorough a gentleman and a physician to evince any surprise at his humble visitor. He would simply tell her he never paid any visits except to a few special patients.

"What do you wish, madam?"
 He had a kindly face, though people called him reserved and cold. They said he had lost his heart to his profession and cared nothing for men or women, except as they became subjects for his skill.

"It's father, sir," cried 'Lizer Ann through quivering lips, while the tears glistened in her faded eyes. "Could you spare time to see him? I know it's asking a favor, but I'm afraid he's dying!"

Something in the pathetic figure and the trembling tone, so full of love, checked the words which were upon his lips. He took her address and asked the nature of her father's illness.

"I will call," he said, "at three." Then he held the door open and bowed her into the hall.

"Just as if I'd been a princess!" said
 'Lizer Ann to herself as she hurried home, happy in the thought that her father would have the best.

(To be Concluded.)

Mayesville Industrial Institute.

The Board of Trustees of the Industrial Institute of Mayesville, S.C., has elected R. H. Dana, Esq., and Rev. Howard N. Brown of Boston, and Dr. Asa Blackburn to membership. The interest these gentlemen have taken in the effort to give the Board a new building thus receives recognition.
 The colored people of Mayesville are doing a noble work under great difficulties and any contribution sent to the fund will be given to a deserving cause.
 Subscriptions sent to this office will be acknowledged in these columns.

Hay= Fever

CHANGE OF CLIMATE as a means of relief from this distressing malady is, at best, uncertain, annoying, and expensive. It never cures, and the relief is but temporary. Year by year the benefit is less, and new places have to be tried. Business interests suffer because of enforced absence; your family may have to suffer because deprived of necessities in order to pay your bills; you suffer yourself if you return "ahead of time."

NOT SO with our patients. They can stay at home in comfort, carry on their usual occupation, and perform their duties;
 have relief from the terrible itching, burning, sneezing, coughing, wheezing, and distress for breath; can sleep sound, and awake refreshed;
 and best of all, can be

CURED TO STAY CURED.

"Having suffered acutely from Hay-Fever for twenty years, and finding relief only in Europe or the mountains, it needed only ten days' trial of your treatment to find perfect relief. I took the medicines six weeks last season and their effect upon my system was constantly beneficial in every way. I sleep, eat and work better than ever, my complexion is clearer than for years, and during the past winter, although the weather has been very trying, I have been absolutely free from any colds or coughs." RALPH EMERSON, 131 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

"I did not send you a report of my condition because I felt so well that I discontinued the use of the medicines. I scarcely know how to thank you for the good results your medicines produced in making the dreaded Hay-Fever and Asthma bearable to me. Every year during the Fever season, I have had to leave the city at great expense and inconvenience to myself and then suffered from the Asthma on my return. I tried every remedy suggested by friends, had operations performed upon my throat and nose, but to no purpose. Since I started to take your medicines, August 7th, I have been absolutely free from Asthma and remained quietly at home, happy and grateful. If you desire, you may publish this in order that your medicines may do for other sufferers what they have done for me." Respectfully yours,
 Oct. 9th, 1896. REV. M. MESSING,
 No. 235 N. Delaware St., INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Send for Examination Blank and 136-page Book on Asthma and Hay-Fever, with 2,000 references. Address

DR. HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

Headache Insurance!

Insure yourself against headaches and neuralgia. Our brush will cure them. We are so positive that it will that we agree to refund the money after six months' trial if you do not find our brush to be all we represent.

Dr. Scott's Electric Hair Brush

IS WARRANTED TO CURE

Nervous Headache in 5 minutes! Bilious Headache in 5 minutes! Neuralgia in 5 minutes! Doudruff and diseases of the scalp! Prevents falling hair and baldness! Makes the hair grow long and glossy!

Prices No. 1 Hair Brush, $1. No. 2 Hair Brush, $1.50
 No. 3 Hair Brush, $2. No. 4 Hair Brush, $2.50
 No. 5 Hair Brush, $3.

Quality the same in all; the price differs only according to size and power.

For Sale at Druggists and Dry Goods Stores.

Ask for Dr. Scott's; take no other; or we will send on approval, postpaid, on receipt of price and ten cents for postage, and if you are not well satisfied with your bargain, write us and we will return the money.

"The Doctor's Story," a valuable book giving information concerning all our goods, sent on request.

Agents Wanted. Quick sales. Liberal pay.
 Satisfaction guaranteed.

GEO. A. SCOTT,

Room 7, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

The sale each year of 800,000
SINGER
Sewing Machines

is evidence that the Singer, which was the first practical sewing machine, is to this day

Preferred to All Others.

Beware of inferior imitations wrongly sold under the Singer name. The real Singer Sewing Machines have this trade-mark, carrying our guarantee.

Machines delivered for trial. Sold on instalments.

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.
 OFFICES IN EVERY CITY.

Home Talks with Mothers and Daughters.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Taking Summer Boarders.

HERE are still in this busy age and in this hustling period—when business goes on with rush and bustle, and men and women alike have forgotten what repose means—there are still quaint places in the country where there are silences that may be felt. In the sweet summer weather when the roses are in bloom, and the daisies “peep up here and there and everywhere,” there are old farm-houses, white, with green blinds, with trees tapping in a friendly way against the panes, and sociable little wrens flitting about the porch and the eaves, and a grey cat purring and blinking in the sun, ready to pounce on the birds if she get a half chance.

I never see the stealthy feline manner of suddenly seizing the prey, which the velvet-footed, claw-sheathed creature of the cat tribe has in common with panthers, tigers, lions, and other savage animals, without a wonder that so many people love cats. For nobody is indifferent, you know, to this mysterious, familiar personage who dwells within our gates. People either like or dislike a cat, and you often see a house divided against itself, solely by reason of the witcheries of Madame Puss. A mother may shudder and shrink from a cat, a daughter may worship the same being, with the fervor of an ancient Egyptian.

One woman gathers up her skirts and jumps on a sofa whenever a cat walks into the room. Another sits comfortably at her sewing machine with one cat on her work-basket and another on the skirt of her dress. I am speaking of real people, not imaginary ones, and I aver that a cat has something uncommon about her, to have the queer influence she has on the human race. She is, of course, a hunter, and she cannot help her instinct to catch birds, but she is thwarted in this when I am around, unless she is too quick for me.

This is a digression. We were talking about pleasant homes in the country where such women live as I have in mind, and it occurs to these women that, as times are hard, and money is slow to come, they may as well eke out an insufficient income by taking summer boarders.

It is a perfectly natural thing to do. The house is large. You have plenty of milk, and eggs, and vegetables. You will have to work harder than you usually do, for six or eight or ten weeks, but that you will not mind, when you take into account the nice little sum you will have in the bank at the end of the season. City people with children to bring up; young married people who do not wish a gay place where they must dress and be always in public, and quiet old ladies who like seclusion, are on the look-out for exactly such accommodations as you have to offer.

Mother talks it over with father, who sits down in the back kitchen, listens and reserves his opinion. He knows it will be settled in the end just as mother has meant it should be from the first, yet nevertheless she enjoys a discussion, and is happier for feeling that she has gained her point over a little good-natured opposition. Sissie and Mary have something to say, too; the whole family are drawn into the conversation before early bedtime arrives and “night pins her sable curtain with a star.”

The girls will have the heavier end of the work, for mother is not so strong as she used to be, and she must be spared. An advertisement is put in the paper, and letters come in reply, and one day father harnesses up and drives to the station, and returns with the jolly load of boarders bent on having a good time.

In the first place if you do take outsiders into your home, remember that it is a commercial transaction, and you must give a fair return for the price on which you insist. Ask a fair price—you should not be underpaid. Then, in essentials, see that your inmates are made comfortable. Determine for one thing to eliminate flies and mosquitoes of which twin pests flies are by far the worst. Flies on the table, flies in the bedroom, flies processioning about the walls, and, horror of horrors, dropping into the milk or the tea, are a sign of poor housekeeping, and are enough to drive a fastidious person into a lunatic asylum.

Screens in every window and in the outer doors, care to dispose of every fly who creeps in when a screen is out or ajar, and you can successfully fight against and overcome this plague of summer living. Do not make light of it. Flies are a dreadful pest and clean people cannot abide them in the house. In a mosquito haunted region, have wire nettings around your verandas, as well as screens in your windows.

Provide lamps in profusion. Send your guests big pitchers of hot water in the morning for their baths, and see that they have ice water in their rooms at night. Let the beds be as good as possible and do not be economical with towels, of which there should be plenty, with fresh ones every morning to replace those which have been soiled. Avoid new towels, stiff, slippery things which are a weariness to the flesh. Have the toilet appointments as tidy and complete as possible, and in the every-day care of rooms see that nothing is overlooked or neglected to which attention should be given.

About the table. Notice that city people who go to the country, leave behind them the cream of the markets, and are used at home to vegetables and fruit freely used at every meal. The charm to them of your garden is that things are so fresh, that they have not lost by packing and transportation the dewy sweetness of mother earth's last kiss. Have vegetables, and berries, and fruits freely, and set the table with daintiness as to dishes and linen. Desserts of pies and cakes may be omitted, if you have always fruit in some form.

Another caution. If you live in a part of the country where you can procure help, be sure that the better wisdom will be in paying a strong woman to assist you than in doing everything yourself. I have seen the roses fade from a young daughter's cheek, and a stoop come into her shoulders from the heavy work and long strain of a housefull of boarders all summer, often with the addition of her father's hired farm-hands to cook for besides. It is poor policy to kill one's self over a cooking stove if it can possibly be avoided.

Margaret E. Sangster

Turkish Ignorance.

It is hardly possible to conceive of a more densely ignorant people than the Turks. In many parts of the Ottoman

DELIGHTFUL SUMMER TOURS.

Two Tones to the North via Pennsylvania Railroad.

For the convenience of those who seek the most attractive way of spending a Summer holiday, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has arranged two delightful tours to the North, under the personally-conducted tourist system, July 27th and August 17th. The points included in the itinerary and the country traversed abound in nature's beauties. No matter how much may be expected, one cannot be disappointed in Watkins Glen, Niagara Falls, Thousand Islands, Quebec, Montreal, Au Sable Chasm, Lakes Champlain and George, Saratoga, or the Highlands of the Hudson.

Each tour will be in charge of one of the company's tourist agents, assisted by an experienced lady as chaperon, whose especial charge will be unaccompanied ladies.

The rate of $100 from New York, Brooklyn, Newark, Trenton, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Baltimore, and Washington covers railway and boat fare for the entire round trip, parlor-car seats, meals en route, hotel entertainment, transfer charges, carriage hire—in fact, every item of necessary expense.

For detailed itinerary, tickets, or any additional information, address Tourist Agent, Pennsylvania Railroad Company, 116 Broadway, New York; 86 Fulton Street, Brooklyn; or Geo. W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

Empire, the people have not the slightest knowledge of the affairs of the outer world. The Haik, an Armenian journal published in New York (in the English and Armenian languages) by Dr. M. S. Gabriel, a scholarly Oriental, relates this incident illustrative of Turkish ignorance: “Dr. Trowbridge, the lamented president of the Central Turkey College at Aintab, told me that, in 1862, while going from Trebizond to Constantinople, he made, on board of the steamer, the acquaintance of a notable Turk, who, on learning from Dr. Trowbridge about the civil war in the United States, asked him whether the kings of America had got permission of the Sultan to wage war.” Turkish ignorance is dense beyond Armenian belief.”

MY REFUGE.

ORD, when my spirits are depressed,
When tempests rage within my breast,
I look to thee, my one true Friend,
On whom I always can depend.

Naught else can comfort in my grief,
Nor give my breaking heart relief;
But Jesus, Thou art my retreat,
I find in thee my comfort sweet.

Deprived of friends or faced by foes
To Jesus I my heart disclose;
In every need to thee I fly,
And thou, my Friend, art ever nigh.

So come what may of trouble here,
Deep wound of heart or scalding tear,
I fly to thee, O Christ, for peace,
And at thy feet my troubles cease.

Noank, Conn.

W. C. MARTIN.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

In India, translated from the French of Andre Chevillon, by William Merchant; pp. 265. Published by Henry Holt & Camp, New York.

Castle Meadow. A story of Norwich a hundred years ago, by Emma Marshall; pp. 286; price $1.25; published by The Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Ave., New York.

In this Present World, by George Hodges, author of “Christianity between Sundays,” “The Heresy of Cain,” etc. Pp. 223; price $1. Published by Thomas Whittaker, Bible House, New York.

Mischievous Goodness, and other Papers. A series of articles on difficult passages of Scripture, by Charles A. Berry, D.D. Pp. 114; price 50 cts. Published by Thos. Whittaker, Bible House, New York.

History of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, by Rev. Daniel Berger, D.D. Pp. 682; with portraits and illustrations. Published at the U. B. Publishing House, Dayton, O.

The Modern Reader's Bible; the Chronicles: Ezekiel, Jeremiah. Bound separately, fifty cents each. These handy little volumes are part of the series which when completed will contain the whole Bible with some of the Apocryphal books. Each volume contains an introduction by the editor. The text is practically that of the Revised Version. Published by Macmillan & Co., 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

The Woman, The Man, And The Pill.

She was a good woman. He loved her. She was his wife. The pie was good; his wife made it; he ate it. But the pie disagreed with him, and he disagreed with his wife. Now he takes a pill after pie and is happy. So is his wife. The pill he takes is Ayer's.

Moral: Avoid dyspepsia by using

Ayer's
Cathartic Pills.

OPUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars FREE. B. M. Woolley, M. D., Box 487, Atlanta, Ga.

Shawknit

TRADE MARK

Remember that no Stocking will wear better than the SHAWKNIT. It is the only Stocking that is Knitted to the Shape of the Human Leg.

The Shawknit is stamped with the Shawknit Trade-mark.

Shaw Stocking Co., Lowell, Mass.

DIREFUL

RHEUMATISM

Cured by a New Remedy.

15,000

Trial Packages

FREE

To the Readers of this paper

For Rheumatism

that foe of mankind, I have a remedy which has proven its powerful curative power in thousands of apparently hopeless cases, in cases pronounced have been the cause of multitudes of former sufferers on its nature's antidote for rheumatism. Many a bedridden person, a man who walked on crutches, regained health through this marvelous remedy in order that every similarly afflicted reader or their friends may learn it, I will gladly mail them a Trial Package with directions for its use, information Free, even if more than 15,000 should apply. Distressing cases of rheumatism from 20 to 30 years standing yielded to the benign influence of this remedy of which I mention a few: In Pittsburg, Ind., a druggist whose rheumatism dated as far as the civil war. In Ketchikan, Idaho, it cured a man who was ridden for 15 years. In Four Corners, Wis., it cured a man who suffered 33 years notwithstanding the efforts of physicians. In Seguin, Texas, it cured a man who was afflicted for 10 years. In Amsterdam, N. Y., it cured a man (Mrs. P. Persohn) who nearly became insane from pain. Mrs. John E. Patterson, 1316 Patterson Ave., Baltimore, was cured after suffering for 10 years of which she spent 2 years in the hospital. Mrs. M. Uebe in Windsor, N. Y., writes: I am 62 years old and have been cured after suffering for 22 years. original letters of above cure can be sent to thousands of others can be sent to my office. No one should doubt the efficacy of this remedy. Write for a Free Trial Package and other information. Address:

JOHN A. SMITH,
No. 188 Summerfield Church, Ind.
MILWAUKEE, WIS.

HEROIC PERSONALITIES

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

Grandpa Sampson's Mail-Bag.

More than twenty years, the Rev. William Sampson has been the Chaplain and Superintendent of the Children's Aid Society and Industrial School and Home, in the city of Cleveland, Ohio. He was an old man when he came out these twenty years of caring for the children have freshened him and renewed his youth, so that though the alma-

REV. WILLIAM SAMPSON.

He is eighty-three, the glow of his youth is on his heart and in his

There is no work more fascinating, nor more full of promise and hope for the future, than that which ministers to the poorest and homeless children. The little child that comes into a home is a treasure. It has some interesting story. Its parents and other evils degraded it. Many families to poverty and distress. Although surrounded with material misery, the child is not to blame. In many cases the mother dies and the father is unable to keep the children together. From such sources and many other sources, the child is thrown out like the waste who loves them, without a place to live. In his spirit, in his dear heart, William Sampson glows with a tender love over every such child. With as much eagerness as a gold miner has found a precious nugget. In his home they are taught habits of cleanliness, civility of manners, respect for the sanctity of religious worship, and the sanctity of religious work. Together with such industries as are appropriate to their capacity. Over five hundred children have received instruction and help in the years that are gone. Of twenty-six hundred of these boys and girls have been placed in good homes in different parts of the country, where they had a fair chance for noble lives. The boys and girls, happily placed in the homes, out on the farms and in the cities of the great West, shower their letters on this good man who has sent them a benediction to them. I have been entering into this mail-bag, and the letters so fresh and redolent of breezy life, and sincere childish affection, that I cannot wonder that Grandpa Sampson renews his youth as he reads them. Here is one from a boy, from Chicago, who takes these lines: "I had a swamp of potatoes, and had fourteen bushels and twenty bushels of potatoes." Then he adds something about the pure country settlement. "I want to tell you about my surroundings. There is not a man in this locality who has any of the vices, such as drink and profane language." Not a bad place that for a boy of fourteen.

There is a little girl who bubbles over with joy. She is happy as a bird, and I go to her every day, and I have such a good time. I sold my lamb and I got three dollars for it, now I have got four dollars and fifty cents."

Here is a pathetic little touch, in a letter from a little colored boy: "How many children have you? How many colored boys and girls? I am trying to be good, grandpa, so that when I die I may meet you in heaven." All through these letters and at the close of every one of them there are expressions like these, "Love to you, grandpa," "I love you and would like to have your picture," "I shall always have pleasant memories of you, you dear grandpa Sampson," "Thank God that he raised up grandpa Sampson," "Lots of love to grandpa!" and so on with ever varying phrase, but breathing the same spirit of gratitude and love.

This mail-bag is Grandpa Sampson's constant garden of delight. I never see him, but I think how happy this old Christ-like hero will be in heaven, where so many children are gathering every year.

"Sayings of Christ" Discovered.

A remarkable "find" appears to have been made by Messrs. Grenfell and Hunt (of the Egypt Exploration Fund), while excavating on the edge of the Libyan Desert. It consists of a papyrus leaf five and a-half by three and a-half inches in size, remarkably well preserved, and clearly written in uncial characters of the ancient Greek. It dates about the year 200. The leaf contains eight sayings, each beginning with the words "Jesus saith." Following is the translation as cabled to the New York Sun:

The first saying is: "Jesus saith: And then thou shalt see clearly to cast out the mote that is in thy brother's eye."

This is identical with Luke 6: 42.

The second saying reads: "Jesus saith except ye fast to the world ye shall in no wise find the kingdom of God: and except ye keep the Sabbath ye shall not see the Father."

This being at variance with the accepted teachings of Christ, it is suggested that it is perhaps a Jewish forgery committed with a view to supporting the Jewish Sabbath. Perhaps it is an erroneous report.

The third saying reads: "Jesus saith: I stood in the midst of the world, and in the flesh was I seen of them, and I found all men drunken and none found I athirst among them. And my soul grieved over the sons of men because they are blind in their heart."

The fourth saying has perished, "only one word remaining. This is the Greek word for beggary. As this was not used by Christ in any Gospel, the logion if we had it would be new.

The fifth saying, which contains certain gaps, reads:

"Jesus saith, wherever there are [there occurs a gap] and there is one [gap] alone I am with him. Raise the stone and there thou shalt find me; cleave the wood and there I am."

The latter part is entirely new, and it is expected that it will arouse controversy.

The sixth saying coincides in part with Luke 4: 24:

"No prophet is accepted in his own country; neither doth a physician work cures upon them that know him."

The seventh saying is similar to Matt. 5: 14, but is incomplete, and reads:

"Jesus saith: A city built upon the top of a high hill and established can neither fall nor be hid."

The eighth saying is undecipherable.

Asthma and Hay-Fever Cure.—Free.

We are glad to inform the readers that a sure specific cure for Asthma and Hay-fever is found in the Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery from the Congo River, West Africa. Many sufferers report most marvelous cures from its use. Among others, Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, Editor of the Farmers' Magazine, and Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, West Va., were completely cured by the Kola Plant after thirty years' suffering. Mr. Lewis could not lie down at night in Hay-fever season for fear of choking, and Mr. Combs was a life-long sufferer from Asthma. Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, writes that for eighteen years he slept propped up in a chair, being much worse in Hay-fever season, and the Kola Plant cured him at once. It is truly a most wonderful remedy. If you are a sufferer would advise you to send your address to the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, who to prove its power will send a Large Case by mail free to every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who needs it. All they ask in return is that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. It costs you nothing, and you should surely try it.

Persons who are afflicted with scrofula, salt rheum, boils, and pimples, will find an absolute cure in Hood's Sarsaparilla. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla, the one true blood purifier.

A Life Saved.

A FOND DAUGHTER WAS NIGH TO DEATH.

Frank B. Trout Tells a Reporter of How His Daughter's Life Was Saved. All Parents Should be Interested in This Narrative.

From the Evening News, Detroit, Mich.

Using as a nucleus for his investigation the rumor that the life of the daughter of Frank B. Trout, well known in Detroit, Mich., real estate circles, had been saved, a reporter called on Mr. Trout at his office, 103 Griswold Avenue. Mr. Trout showed some hesitancy in giving his opinion for publication, but finally said: "Circumstances and a father's love for his child forced me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, but not until the whole medical profession had exhausted their skill. At the age of fourteen we had to take our daughter from school owing to her health. Before this she had been in the best of health, happy and in the best of spirits. She began to fall away and became pale and languid. She was so weak that she would fall down in a faint every time she tried to walk unsupported. The best of physicians attended her, but she continued to grow weaker and seemed to be gradually fading away."

"When she was fifteen she weighed only ninety pounds, and the doctors said it was anæmia. Several physicians said she might outgrow it, but that it would no doubt terminate in consumption. No doctor we had could help her, and we concluded ourselves, we must lose our child, as she was growing weaker every day."

"We had tried all the well-known remedies, and finally about a year ago I bought a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and took them home. That day I had read of a case about the same as my daughter's, and decided to give them a trial, though I must confess I did not have much faith. Before she had taken all of the first box we noticed a change for the better. She, however, gained strength daily and looked brighter. Every one noticed the change, and I bought two more boxes for her."

"When she had taken two boxes she was strong enough to leave her bed, and in less than six months was something like herself. To-day she is entirely cured, and is a big, strong, healthy girl, weighing 130 pounds, and has never had a sick day since."

"I do not think she uses them now, though I always keep them in the house. My wife and I have recommended them to our neighbors, and sent a few to another young girl who seems to be in the same condition as my daughter. Had not Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my daughter's life, I would not recommend them to any one. I know they do all and more than is claimed for them, and I am glad to recommend them to the world. I know Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People saved my daughter's life, and that is enough for me."

F. B. TROUT.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this fourth day of March, 1897.

ROBERT E. HULL, JR., Notary Public, Wayne County, Michigan.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

"I had been in very poor health for 2 years," says Mr. N. Lazelier, of Romeo, Mich., "the result of LaGrippe. Had faint, smothering, dizzy spells; dull pain in head, and stomach was also deranged. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Nerve cured me."

Write for Free Book on heart and nerves. Druggists guarantee first bottle will benefit. Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

ARE NOT TO BE WASHED. Made of fine cloth in all styles. When soiled, reverse, wear again, then discard. Ten collars or five pairs of cuffs for 25 cents. They look and fit better than any other kind. ASK THE DEALERS FOR THEM. If not found at the stores send six cents for sample collar and cuffs, naming style and size. A trial invariably results in continued use. Reversible Collar Co., 79 Franklin St. New York

WANTED—CRAYON ARTISTS and all beginners on Star Prints who want work. Write Eugene Pearl, Artist, 23 E. Union Square, New York for Art Brochure, sent free. Tells how to make $10 to $30 weekly at home. One agent wanted in every town.

"Cleanliness is nae pride, dirt's nae honesty." Common sense dictates the use of

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite till you investigate WHITE BRONZE. More artistic and enduring; less expensive. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate. NO CRUMBLING. NO CRACKING. THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Most Durable and Decorative. Suitable for all buildings. Numerous designs. H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., New York

$18 a Week Easy. No trouble to make $18 a week easy. Write to us quick, you will be surprised at how easy it can be done. Send us your address any way. It will be for your interest to investigate. Write today. You can positively make $18 a week easy. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box A-F, Detroit, Mich.

TREATED FREE for 10 days. All particulars and testimonials of miraculous cures in a book that may be had for the asking. DRS. GREEN & SONS, Specialists, Atlanta, Ga.

SACRED SONGS NO. 1. No other New book equal to it. $25 per 100; 30 cts. each, if by mail. THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., Lakeside Building, Chicago. 76 E. Ninth St., New York

History and Description of the Tabernacle and Temple of the Children of Israel prepaid on receipt of 3 2c. stamps. TEMPLE BLOCK CO., Williamsport, Pa.

SAPOLIO

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 PURE

When you pack for the sea shore or the mountains, fill a tray of your trunk with Ivory Soap and require your laundress to use it. Light summer garments should be washed only with a pure white soap.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI

Light your Veranda,

lawn, barn, mill, or any place where a strong light is desired, with the STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN Co.'s Tubular Globe Hanging Lamp. Burns 4 hours for 1 cent. Send for our catalogue.

Buy it of your dealer. He has it, or can get it if you insist. Mention this paper.

STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN COMPANY, Syracuse, N. Y.

Stewart's Duplex Safety Pins.

IN ALL SIZES

THE GUARD

must be on inside of spring. DUPLEX SAFETY PINS have the only effective Guard to prevent catching or tearing. It is on the arm of pin that passes through the cloth. Patented and cannot be used on any other pin.

DUPLEX PINS work as easily in the dark as in the light. Fasten from either side, but cannot slip through. Dealers may offer you other pins claimed as good. It is your interest to buy "Stewart's Duplex," the best and only pin having the guard inside where it is effective.

Made in nickel plate and jet black.

12 assorted samples for 3 two-cent stamps. Consolidated Safety Pin Co. BOX 10, BLOOMFIELD, N. J. Makers of Halfpenny Aluminum Hair Pins.

SPENCERIAN PENS

WRITE WELL WEAR LONG ONCE TRIED ALWAYS USED

Samples sent on receipt of return postage — 2 cents.

ESTABLISHED 1860

NEW DRESS SET, 10c.

A new and beautiful design set including pair of collared right link cuff buttons, a stude, a collar button and new patent belt retainer. In 14 K. Roman gold or sterling silver. A heavy plate. With 3.30 in any store. To give you an inkling of our 1,000 bargains we send complete set and large catalogue postpaid ONLY 10 CTS. for 24c. Ingersoll & Bro., Dept. 61, 62 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 11y.

BOYS AND GIRLS

Watches, Clocks, Ten Sets and Toilet Sets, with 25, 37 and $10 orders. Now a year's chance to get orders for our LEAN COFFEES, Etc. Send for our Premium and Price List. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 81 & 83 Vesey St., New York, N. Y. P. O. Box 289.

The "Quad" Camera.

Price, $5.00.

Size of Picture 3 1-2 x 3 1-2 inches.

EVERY CAMERA GUARANTEED THE BEST IN THE MARKET.

Before purchasing an amateur outfit for the summer, send 2c. stamp for catalog and sample picture direct to EDWARD G. CONE, 809 Champlain Bldg., Chicago.

A RARE CHANCE.

The opportunity is offered for making money rapidly and with little effort.

BROWN'S PATENT

PICTURE HOOK

can be fixed to the wall without searching for beams, can be transferred from place to place without replacing the plaster; exceedingly ornamental; superior to any picture nail. Guaranteed to bear 100 pounds weight. Send 10 cents for sample; 50 cents per dozen.

H. G. TAYLOR,

171 St. Nicholas Ave., New York

"Sanitas" Book Free.

The American & Continental "Sanitas" Co. Ltd. 636 to 642 West 55th St., New York City.

600 Second Hand BICYCLES

to close out. All makes, GOOD

AS NEW, $5 to $15. NEW, HIGH GRADE $15 to $25.

fully guaranteed, $16 to $24.

'97 Models $20 to $30. Shipped anywhere on approval.

Special Clearing Sale.

EARLY A BICYCLE by helping advertise us. We will give one agent in each town FREE.

Use of sample wheel to introduce them.

Write at once for our Special Offer.

D. S. HEAD CYCLE CO., WABASH AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

LOW Metal Wheels

with Wide Tires. Any size and width of tire wanted. Hooks to fit any axle. Saves labor. No resetting tires. Catalogue free. Address: EMPIRE MFG. CO., Quincy, Ill.

8% Security Safe as Government Bonds. Your money can surely earn it. Can prove it by best Eastern banks. Roll't E. Strathorn & Co., Equitable Building, Boston.

An Exceptional Opportunity.

To Secure a Beautiful and Useful Book at a Bargain,

THE CHURCH AT HOME

By...

Bishop John H. Vincent,

D. D., LL.D.,

Is the title of a magnificent manual for family worship and home teaching, and a book that should be in every Christian home in the land and those who are fortunate enough to secure a copy of this book will find a delightful companion. It contains 480 pages,

210 Illustrations,

Two Beautiful Colored Pictures, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments.

Lesson, Hymn and Prayer, constituting a complete family worship for every day in the year.

Readings and Meditations for Special Occasions: New Year's Day, Good Friday, Easter, Whit Sunday, Independence Day, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day, and Day of Affliction.

Memory Texts for Every Day in the Year, The Church Steps, Home Lessons, Special Collects, Bible Biography, Picture Lessons for Children, Old and New Tunes, Wisdom in Proverbs, Blank Pages for Records and Autographs.

ALTOGETHER IT IS THE MOST COMPLETE HELP FOR FAMILY WORSHIP PUBLISHED

By the purchase of the entire stock from the original publishers, we are enabled to offer the subscribers of "The Christian Herald" ONLY a remarkable bargain, provided the stock is not exhausted when your order is received, as follows:

Cloth, Illuminated Cover, former price $3.00.	Special Price, $ 50
Half Morocco, " " 4.00.	" " 00
Full Morocco, " " 5.00.	" " 50

Remember this special price pays all express charges and delivers this magnificent book weighing 4 lbs. 7 oz. size when closed 8 1-2 x 10 1-2 inches, absolutely free of expense.

If the stock is exhausted when your order is received, we will turn the money at once, and as we have only sufficient copies to supply a small percentage of the subscribers of "The Christian Herald," we trust you will be fortunate enough to avail yourself of this exceptional offer.

Send money by money order or registered letter. Write name and address plainly, giving your nearest express office.

P. B. BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK. VOLUME 20.—NUMBER 30.
 By T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor. NEW YORK, JULY 28, 1897. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

OUR ORPHANS AT OORFA.

Sixty-five of the Armenian Massacre Children, Miss Shattuck Writes, Owe their Rescue and Support to our Readers—A Work Rich in Blessing.

NEARLY a year has passed since the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD became specially interested in the noble rescue work conducted among the Armenian orphan children by Miss Corinna Shattuck, the American missionary, in the venerable city of Oorfa. It will be remembered that Oorfa (the ancient Edessa, and traditionally claimed to be identical with Ur of the Chaldees) was the scene of one of the most appalling massacres of modern times, nearly 5,000 Armenian Christians having perished there by Turkish and Kurdish swords two years ago, at a time when the whole country was deluged with Christian blood. Miss Shattuck at that crisis bravely stood between her mission students and the persecutors, and they were divinely protected. After the massacre the defenceless orphans of those who had been left to Moslem hands, and it was estimated that thousands of Christian children had been taken into Mohammedan homes, and forced to abjure their parents' faith. Miss Shattuck, and the other good Samaritans in Armenia have since been able to rescue many of these helpless little ones, and in their support and education she has been greatly helped by our readers, who have contributed liberally to her work through the Armenian Relief Fund. The letter from Oorfa printed below, will be read with keen interest by those who have had a share in this blessed work of rescue, and specially welcome will be the news that fifty-five of the orphans now in her care at Oorfa are known to us as "CHRISTIAN HERALD Children"—little angels, saved from misery and worse than death, by our friends' generosity. Miss Shattuck writes:

"OORFA, TURKEY, June 25, 1897.
 Dear 'Christian Herald' Friends:—I cannot give you a full letter to-day, but desire to keep you all in sympathy with our state. We have within a week, given over to the new Lepsius Home fifty of our household. We were surrounded by a great crowd, and the orphans were not in order for any. With the exception of a few provided for by English friends, and the twenty orphans of Wistar and his Friends (see page 10), the remaining sixty-five are all our 'CHRISTIAN HERALD orphans.' I will endeavor to make you well acquainted with them. I enclose a photograph of a group of orphans, just as they came to us in the village of Severek. This is a representation of all as they have come in from the villages. We have urgent letters from the three towns, Sevan, Adayaman, and Birjik, asking us to take more. We have received forty-six from Sevan, twenty-seven from Adayaman, and twelve from Birjik. These are scattered in our four Homes, but attend the school-yards daily. I have thought you would be interested in knowing something about our teachers, and also regarding our School Committee. One young man, a member of the Committee, was in general charge of our work in the American Home, and brother of our pastor. Our member of our committee has recently left as Government clerk, which he has held for fourteen years, to take the place of our brother. His good wife was equally ready to undertake the responsibility, though she has two little daughters she must leave them to the crowded home. We rejoice that so good a father and mother have been found for these boys. The German friends are also all we could desire for those in general charge, their own home being next door to that of their boys. Many of the little orphan boys are yet under the care of the female teachers, two of whom are married and have had several years of experience, while three are 'massacre widows,' dependent on their earnings for support; the betrothed lovers of two others were killed, the father of another, and the mother of one, and all are in some degree bereaved. These teachers and the Relief Committee were invited by us to a mountain picnic soon after the arrival of our German co-laborers, and during Easter vacation. We were puzzled to know what we could do with our boys, all but six being mere children, and too young for the long tramp. Then, too, we wanted the house-mothers to come together for a day of rest and relief from the care of the children. Girls we arranged for in their homes, under the care of responsible assistants, and sending salaams to the aged bishop in the monastery, asked if he could endure the noise of our boys for the day in his yard. Gladly he received our children, and very safe we felt about them in that enclosure. One of our teachers was invited to take along his camera, and we present you the party seated for lunch before the cave on the mountain side.

CORFA RELIEF COMMITTEE—MISS SHATTUCK IN CENTRE.

"As it was the first occasion of our going out for such a purpose since the disturbances, we could not properly go without guards. The Pasha pleasantly granted our request for the 'regular' soldiers, who were so long with me during our besiegement, and who were so faithful during the awful days. Our six oldest boys served as waiters at table, and the day was greatly enjoyed by us all. "I enclose a view of the city, in which is plainly seen the great church where the thousands perished. It cannot be used in its present state, and the Armenians have not means to repair it. It is a monument of their sorrow and distress. Meanwhile the temporary arrangement for worship is inadequate, and many are hungry for the Word of comfort. We assemble one group of our children every Thursday and Sabbath morning for worship after the custom of the fathers of those who are of Gregorian parentage. All attend regularly with us also in our church. In both they hear God's Word, and in both places is true heart worship. We rejoice in the rich spiritual blessing which is the outcome of the terrible sorrow. We expect our children—yours and ours—to grow up to be good Christian men and women prepared for the work God gives them.

OUR RESCUE WORK AMONG THE ARMENIAN ORPHANS. A GROUP OF ORPHANS FROM SEVEREK, AS THEY APPEARED AT THE CORFA HOME—A MOUNTAIN PICNIC.

Your continued sympathy, aid, and prayers are invited. Schools soon close and vacation work and play must be systematized. I must tell you later how we succeed in working out the problem. Sincerely yours, CORINNA SHATTUCK.

(Continued on page 375.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Constant Reader, Kittery's Point, Me. Can you give me the number of Sabbath Schools and Sabbath School scholars in United States, in England, and also in the world at the present time?

In 1896 in the United States 121,797 schools, and 9,688,566 scholars; in 1897, 132,639 schools and 10,890,092 scholars. In England in 1896, 37,201 schools and 5,976,537 scholars. In the whole world in 1896, 223,186 schools, and 20,239,007 scholars.

W. E. K., McZena, O. What should a man do who sincerely desires to be a Christian and enjoy the peace that passes understanding, but who is afraid of failure and is distressed by doubts as to his state?

He should direct his thoughts, away from himself, to Christ. No man is healthy who is continually feeling his own pulse and watching his own symptoms. Perhaps he is too anxious about his own peace and happiness. If he were more anxious to do Christ's will and made more efforts for the good of other people, he might make more progress. Peace and happiness are not ends to be sought in the Christian life; they come through faith and love when they are not sought. He should study Christ, try to realize his nature and what he did for him, and how he wants the men whom he saves to live in the world and try to do that. His good deeds do not save him; it is Christ who saves him, but good works are required of him and in doing them for the love of his Lord and forgetting himself he will get peace and happiness.

Henry T. C., Phoenix, Ariz. Would you give as much information as possible about the stone in the English coronation chair, called the "Stone of Destiny," or "Corner-stone of Nations," said to be the one Jacob used for a pillow? (See THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of June 2d, page 443.) Those who recognize in the great Anglo-Saxon race the ten lost tribes of Israel, see in the occupancy of the English throne the fulfillment of the promise to David found in Psalm 89: 3, 4.

To this letter Mrs. Amelia E. Barr has furnished the following reply:

"The Stone of Scone." On this famous stone all the kings of Scotland were crowned for a thousand years. But before it was carried to Scone, it was an ancient stone of record, and most solemn designation. It stood first in Argyshire and it was King Kenneth in the Ninth century who took it to Scone and enclosed it in a wooden chair. Its form is flattish, two feet long, one broad and six inches thick. It is without form or beauty, jagged in every direction and of darkish color. The tradition that it was Jacob's pillow and came to Scotland by way of Spain and Ireland is well known. Its removal to England was by the hands of Edward the First who brought with it the whole of the Scotch regalia and offered crown, sceptre, rings, etc., and the holy stone at the shrine of Edward the Confessor. The gold and silver and gems have long since disappeared; the stone has been made a part of the British Coronation regalia. A lengthy and most curious investigation into the whole history and wanderings of this famous stone may be found in the Gentleman's Magazine (vols. 51 and 52). It is, however, too long to transcribe here.

AMELIA E. BARR.

Subscriber, Davenport, Ia. 1. How do you designate nationality, by birth or by the government which protects one? 2. Is a German, after he has been naturalized here, a German still, or is he an American? 3. Does our government protect our missionaries' children who are born in heathen lands as well as the missionaries themselves? 4. Are children born to our American missionaries in China called Chinese, or are they Americans born in China?

1. One's nationality (i. e., connection with any particular nation) may be changed, but a German, or Frenchman, or Briton by birth, though he might change his allegiance from one government or nation to another, may still be recognized by the country of his birth, thus a German-American, French-American, &c. 2. He is a naturalized American citizen. 3. Certainly, the children of American citizens born where parents temporarily reside abroad, are American citizens also, and entitled to full protection. 4. Americans born in China.

W. G. H., Greenwell, N. Y. Is there any authority in the Bible for bringing into the Church of Christ those who are members of the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League?

The object of those organizations is to cultivate piety in the members, to save young people from temptation, to give them the support of companionship in the Christian life, to encourage active and aggressive Christian work and other most desirable objects. All these things are directly in accord with the Word of God. Any means to promote those ends are legitimate. Both those societies have been blessed of God to the conversion of many. Ministers have testified that their churches have been strengthened by the societies. For each and every part of their work they can find Scriptural authority. The captious critics who opposed them at the outset have been put to shame by the good accomplished through their means.

J. E. D. G., Raymond, Minn. 1. How is 1. Samuel 27: 11-21, describing Saul's visit to the witch of Endor, to be understood? 2. Do the spiritualists of modern times have the same power? 3. Could not a better plan be adopted for the selection of the Sunday School Lessons? 4. Is there any possibility of overcrowding the mind with spiritual things on Sunday? 5. Is any plan possible for bringing about a union of Christian sects?

1. It cannot be understood, at this distance of time. The woman may have been a deceiver.

means for reaching the unconverted and preaching the Gospel to them, to give so much attention as was done some fifty or a hundred years ago to the unprofitable subjects of Divine sovereignty, election, etc. 2. No, he should draw no such inference. There are many people who from their childhood were so near the kingdom of God that they do not know when they crossed its boundaries. Men of depraved habits and strong sensual passions, living lives of sin, would know the day of their conversion, because the turning to God worked so great a revolution in their lives, but happily their experience is not the rule for all. Many very eminent Christians have been unconscious of the change of heart, so gradual was it.

B. F. W., Baltimore, Md. Can you inform me where I can find the following story: A king once sent a number of small children to wash their hands. The girls washed up to their elbows, the boys only washed their hands. As they were all dressed alike, that was the way he took to discover their sex.

It is one of many legends told concerning the visit of the Queen of Sheba to King Solomon, and of the methods she employed to test his wisdom. These legends are found in the ancient Jewish writings.

Reader, Camp Verde, Ariz. Can a person who has taken the Christian Endeavor pledge consistently join in dancing?

There is no explicit prohibition of dancing in the Christian Endeavor pledge, but we think that a person who earnestly and honestly tries part of the sufferer. You may have a boy at school, in spite of all warnings and advice, neglect his lessons and give time to play and idleness. Can he blame teacher or his parents, if at the school life he is ignorant and is unfit for profession? If a young man voluntarily associates with men of foul life and coarse manners and acquires their habits, do you blame a lady if she excludes him from her home? If a child who has been warned against using a hot stove and has had the consequence explained to him, avails himself of absence of his mother to lay his hand glowing metal, he must not blame his mother when he suffers. If he is so badly burned he loses his hand, he goes through life because of that momentary act. We blame the mother, or charge her with inconsistent. All her love cannot save from the consequences of his own per. When a man deliberately chooses sin being warned of the consequences, he refuses the offer of pardon and regeneration what can God do with him?

Miss Bessie L. J., Chatham, N. Y., writes:

I have seen several articles in your MAIL-BAG about the wearing of birds' feathers. A leaf from the Massachusetts Audubon Society gives statement of the case. There is also a Society in New York, and any who help in the bird protection are invited to join. Miss Emma H. Lockwood, 243 West Street, New York.

J. H., Strayhorn, Miss. Can a man or woman live a more consecrated life single or married? Can he do better service in the cause of Christ single than married?

The answer to both questions must be upon circumstances which the writer does not seem to have taken into account. Men and women might be able to do more effective Christian work singly than if married, while a married man might be energized to greater activity by the association of a Christian helpmeet. Both conditions have their advantages and drawbacks, but there is no evidence that Christian marriage ever prevented the development of Christian character and work. Spurgeon, Moody, Gordon, and many others eminent in the Lord's work not mentioned in support of this view. It is probable that those cases in which, on peculiarities in temperament, &c., one would operate as a hindrance to spiritual growth form a very small minority of the whole.

J. B. T., Milford, Ill. I belong to the Christian Church, but am so far out in the country having no way to go am not able to attend services there, so I go to the Methodist Church being close to me. When they administer the Lord's Supper, I go forward, kneel with them and join their endeavors. Am I right in doing?

Entirely right. You would do well to neglect the opportunity, since all are children.

Mrs. M. D. F., Middletown, N. Y. writes this interesting letter regarding the mother of a Christian and missionary household:

Mrs. Densnap was my mother and she lived in heaven March 25th. She was very fond of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and her paper was the last thing she asked for. She was a few days of seventy-eight years. She was a devoted Christian and church-goer. When sixteen years old, she joined the church. William R. Williams, a sketch of whose life was published some time since. Mr. Williams married her in 1838 to her husband, Geo. Densnap, who died in 1873. There were nine children of whom reached maturity. The oldest daughter died in 1881, in Gaboon, Africa, where she labored as a missionary for six years.

Subscriber, Milo, Me. 1. Should a teacher of Sunday School class continue to teach if there has been no conversion in ten years that he has had charge of it? 2. Should the teacher to know whether it is his duty to continue the work or resign it to others?

1. We would rather advise greater earnestness and more prayer for the conversion of each individual scholar, than giving up the work. We do not believe that the necessity and efficiency of the teacher can be accurately estimated by results. A great deal of good may have been done, owing to home influences or social relations, the work may not have come to the teacher. The good may be seen later. 2. In the same way as he learns his other duties. If he needs to be done and he is willing to do it, way seems to be open. God does not hold us responsible for results. He holds us responsible for doing our duty and using all the means which he has endowed us with. If the results may be left to him. We have in some cases labored for many years without a conversion, and then the door has come suddenly, and it has been found that the past years were not so ineffectual as they seemed.

W. Van H., Avenue, Pa. The Bible is the Fourth Avenue, between Eighth and Ninth Streets. Subscriber, Peck's Run, W. Va. No one heard of it, and it sounds nonsensical. There are too many such organizations and societies. Subscriber, Brooklyn. We know of no schools. Vermont Reader, St. John's, N. B. Yes, to all three questions. A. M. C. Falls, Me., writes to thank the SHUT-IN for sending her THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. New York City. Esther, we believe. Newark, N. J. Even conceding the claim, we still regard the character of Victoria's reign and influence as justified in missionary enterprise and Gospel propagation. earthly government is perfect.

ON THE TRAIL TO NEVADA FALLS, YOSEMITE VALLEY.

This striking photograph presents one of the many similar scenes of natural grandeur, that attract the tourist in "America's Wonderland," as the Yosemite region has been justly called. At this season of the year the Yosemite is usually full of visitors, many of whom will see the original of our illustration, as they pass through the canyon to the falls beyond.

You must remember that Saul did not see the apparition, and had only the woman's word for it. 2. We do not know what their methods are. Some of them have certainly been detected in trickery. 3. Most people think so, and new men have been put on the Committee in the hope that they will be able to suggest a better plan. 4. It is certainly possible, but we do not think many people are in danger of it. 5. Several have been suggested, but the sects show little disposition to accept them. An organic union seems impracticable, but perhaps they may eventually co-operate in Christian work. That appears to be practicable, and may be a first step toward closer union.

J. W. G., Kill Creek, Kans. 1. Do Presbyterians or members of any other church believe, as a minister I have heard declares they do, that there are infants in hell a span long? 2. If a person cannot name the day or year of his conversion, must he conclude that he has not been converted?

1. We do not know of any church that believes in so horrible a doctrine. The Assembly catechism does not teach it. Happily, of late years, Christians of all churches have been too busily engaged in planning ways and to live up to it, will have no inclination for dancing. The object of the pledge and the spirit it is intended to promote, is to raise the member above such amusements. No person who is seeking spiritual development would think of dancing. It is an amusement fit only for worldlings, and it often debases them.

M. M., Millersburg, Ill. Does not it appear inconsistent with the character of God that he should condemn his creatures to eternal punishment? Is it not more probable that he will give them another opportunity?

Do you not think that question may be left for the future to determine. We have no ground given us for expecting that God will give another opportunity. He may do so, for there are no limits to his mercy, but it is an awful risk to run. Our duty is to accept the opportunity that is offered now and not to speculate on the possibility of there being another. The terms of the offer read to us like those of a final offer, and as if there would never be another. We cannot conceive of God being inconsistent. The punishment of the impenitent seems to be not so much an infliction by God, as the result of choice on the

OUR SWEET BLIND SINGER!

See Fanny Crosby, in her Old Age, Tells of her Life-work for Christ—Author of Four Thousand Hymns—Her New Book Just Issued.

FANNY CROSBY.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the grandest of all Christian newspapers, and am glad to be able to speak through its columns. It is as if I were speaking truthfully were I to say that the talent for versification has been mine ever since earliest childhood and I have the genius of poetry was born in me. At eight years of age, I began writing, my first poem being a simple little thing, dealing with my own condition.

What a happy soul am I! Although I cannot see, I am resolved that in this world Contented I will be; How many blessings I enjoy That other people don't! To weep and sigh because I'm blind, I cannot and I won't.

My youthful declaration of principles—though others may smile at it—I have kept steadily in view, and I suppose the dominant key-note of my character has been cheerfulness throughout. At all times, my friends who know me best so regard it.

During the first part of my poetic experience, I wrote on a great variety of subjects, but my recollection is that they were principally merry ones, reflecting the lightedness within me. When I was fifteen years old, I entered the New York Institute for the Blind, where I remained a pupil for twelve years, becoming a teacher there in 1847, and held that position until 1858. These years were the developing years of my life. My poetic instinct and vivid imagination found ample room for expansion and exercise, and my teacher, Mr. Hamilton Murray, a finely educated man, with much literary taste, aided me in this development. It was a part of my daily exercise to make poetic paraphrases of selections taken by my instructor from some of the old, standard poets, and I can safely say that in the course of these exercises I became thoroughly acquainted with the works of Milton, Addison, Pope, Dr. Young, Cowper, Wordsworth, and a score of other famous poets. I learned to recognize and analyze their peculiar style and treatment and to paraphrase them with a skill that was highly appreciated. Apart from such exercises, I engaged in other compositions, many of them designed to be humorous, and all of a light and agreeable nature. Some were with my immediate surroundings, my associates, and other familiar topics; even in those early days, I found my mind soaring cloudwards, and it was very difficult to keep it down to earth. One of my compositions, I remember, excited no little interest and amusement. I entitled it, "Musical Sounds," and it was descriptive of the various calls of the New York street vendors. Some of my poetic effusions written in the Institute were a sort of poetic persiflage, which I would compose while combing my hair in the morning or performing some other duty that did not of itself require a mental effort. Occasionally I would soar into blank verse. Yet it was an indulgence, but I was very fond of writing blank verse at that time, and still think that some of my best work in a purely literary sense, has been done in that form.

I collect on one occasion that Mr. Murray, my teacher, had set me a task to paraphrase some verses on "Morning" by S. J. Willis. I had somehow failed to respond to this demand, not feeling any inclination to write. About noon, my instructor called me: "Fanny, have you written those verses?" "I have not, Mr. Murray," I replied quietly. "Well, Fanny," said he, "you understand no verses, no doubt. It is now fifteen minutes to twelve." At twelve o'clock I had my paraphrase complete and the task was finished to Mr. Murray's entire satisfaction. I can repeat it even now, word for word, as well as the lines of Willis on which it was based, and some of my friends have been kind enough to say that they preferred mine to the original. It was a task in which my fancy, once let loose, had wings enough to expand at will. As I have before stated, I was fond of ascending to the stars, and once there, it was not an easy matter to get me down again to our common-place, everyday, literal world.

After 1851 I wrote a number of pieces for Dr. George F. Root, the celebrated musical composer, and in his autobiography he has generously expressed his indebtedness to me for these contributions. Besides well known hymns, I wrote for Prof. Root also many songs that were at one time sung everywhere. Among them I may mention "Rosalie, the Prairie Flower," "Hazel Dell," "Proud World, Good-by, I'm Going Home," "Music in the Air," "Never Forget the Dear Ones," etc.

But there came a time when I began to write more seriously and with higher purpose. All my life a Christian, from my earliest conscious moment I had been impressed with the beauties of nature, as I understood them, with the love that surrounded and kept us, and with the goodness of our Heavenly Father. Besides, this spiritual tendency has been fostered and strengthened by the instructions of my teacher, who, in his selection of poets for me had chosen those whose writings possessed the highest spirituality. The Bible to me was my most familiar book. I had committed to memory the first four books of the Old Testament, also the four Gospels, and these doubtless influenced my poetic career to a greater extent than all other literature combined.

In 1863 I was requested to write a poem counted among my warmest friends nearly all of those who have been foremost in the field of religious musical work: Philip Phillips, Theo. E. Perkins, T. F. Seward, C. G. Allen, Hubert P. Main, John R. Sweney, W. J. Kirkpatrick, Silas J. Vail, Geo. C. Stebbins, and the sweetest of all our Gospel singers, Ira D. Sankey.

One of the precious recollections of my life is an episode which brought me into contact with that bright and shining spirit, Frances Ridley Havergal, whose genius had long held my admiration. In the "Poet's Corner" of one of my books, I had expressed a wish to meet Miss Havergal, to clasp her hand and to kneel together at the same shrine. Her reply came to me, over the Atlantic, a sweet surprise. One of her verses reads:

Sweet blind singer over the sea,
Tuneful and jubilant; how can it be
That the songs of gladness, which float so far,
As if they fell from the evening star,
Are the notes of one who never may see
"Visible music" of flower and tree,
How can she sing in the dark like this?
What is her fountain of light and bliss?
Her heart can see, her heart can see!
Well may she sing so joyously!
For the King Himself, in His tender grace,
Hath shown her the brightness of His face;

I presume that I have written in all between 4,000 and 5,000 hymns. If I were asked to indicate which of my poetic children I preferred—which of all the thousands is the most attractive—I would have no hesitation in saying that I con-

OUR ORPHANS AT OORFA.

(Continued from First Page.)

One of our godly American missionaries, Rev. W. C. Dewey, who was at his post in Mardin, Mesopotamia, during the series of terrible massacres by the Turks and Kurds in 1895-96, is now on a visit to his home and friends in the United States. Dr. Dewey's station at Mardin was the scene of an outbreak early in the recent troubles, and his life was repeatedly in peril, but he was divinely protected through it all. Before leaving the East, he visited to Oorfa, and gives this interesting and encouraging account for the information of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

TEACHERS OF THE ARMENIAN ORPHANS AT OORFA.

I reached Oorfa Friday morning. We were there until Saturday afternoon about two o'clock, that is, a little more than twenty-four hours. We had heard a good deal about Miss Shattuck's heroism and pluck in the terrible massacre that had taken place there, but had no conception of the magnitude of the work she was doing. Miss Shattuck herself took me around, but first Miss Chambers took me to visit the school. They have 1,800 children in the school, without distinction as to creed, and the teachers also, I believe, are employed whether they are Protestant or Armenian. These schools are all under Miss Shattuck's direction, or perhaps now under Miss Chambers' direction, as Miss Shattuck has been turning over some of the work to her, and the Gregorians, as well as the Protestants, accept anything that these ladies consider best for the interest of the school, and so, generally, they are working in hearty sympathy and accord. Services are held in the Gregorian Church at which the Protestant preachers take part, Protestants and Gregorians attending; and the same way with the Protestant Church. I saw the great church, in which it is supposed that at least 3,500 people were killed, with its burned and blackened pillars. An Armenian priest showed us over the waste places, and we saw where the bodies were buried after the massacre. They were all put in a large pit and covered over. The women have made it a weeping-place. They came there to mourn, and finally they allowed the missionary ladies to cover it with flowers.

Then Miss Shattuck took me around to where she had women at work. Some were weaving rugs of different grades, sizes, and qualities; others were learning to make a new kind that might be profitably disposed of. Some were embroidering, manufacturing handkerchiefs. She is doing a large work in manufacturing rugs, handkerchiefs, and embroideries of various sorts. She sends them to Mrs. Bowen at Constantinople, who disposes of them at various places in Europe. They are trying to make the work self-supporting, to put these widows and orphans in the way of supporting themselves. She also took me to a little room where her Committee-men meet, to show me something of the way the accounts are kept, and I am sure everything is most carefully looked after. Accounts are kept with scrupulous exactness, and I believe she is able to tell you just what she has spent in any one line of her work.

Then in the evening, three young Germans who have recently been sent out by Dr. Lepsius' Committee to take care of certain orphans, came in. They seemed to be efficient workers. After dinner the boys living in the same yard were called into the sitting-room for evening prayers. They came filing in until they were squatted on the floor before me. An Armenian teacher conducted the devotions, the children joining in the singing with hearty good-will. Then I had the privilege of saying a few words to them, after which they came up in line, shook hands with me, and bade me "good night" in English. It is very touching to see these little fellows appear before a large company, after the terrible experiences they had been through, and to see them so cheerful, contented and happy. The next day we saw them playing in the yard, and wondered how Miss Shattuck was able to stand so much noise, but she seemed not to mind it at all.

THE CITY OF OORFA, FROM THE EAST.

1. GREGORIAN CHURCH. 2. PROTESTANT CHURCH AND ORPHAN HOMES.

for the Rev. Peter Stryker, the famous evangelical preacher of that time, and I composed "The Old Year." Mr. Stryker was so pleased with what I had written that he gave me a letter to Mr. W. B. Bradbury, who was then having musical services for the young, and I wrote for Mr. Bradbury the first of that long series of hymns which I have been composing during the last thirty-five years, without intermission. Mr. Bradbury, I should explain, was the leading writer of Sunday School song music in the United States, being the pioneer in that particular field. Our acquaintance was a most agreeable one, and while it lasted I became more and more drawn to the writing of spiritual songs exclusively. On his death in 1868, by a strange coincidence, the hymn selected for the funeral was the one I had first written—my earliest Gospel hymn:

We are going, we are going
To a home beyond the skies,
Where the fields are robed in beauty,
And the sunlight never dies;

After the death of Mr. Bradbury, I became associated in similar work with Robert Lowry and W. H. Doane, and subsequently with Biglow & Main, for whom I have written during many years past a long list of Gospel hymns. I have sidered that, for all the purposes of the Gospel hymn, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" is the best I have written, or ever will write. It is a heart poem—a simple and direct expression of absolute faith.

Four volumes of my poems have now been published, the first, issued in 1844, being, "The Blind Girl and other Poems," the second in 1849, called, "Monterey," the third, "A Wreath of Columbia's Flowers," and the fourth (just published by The Biglow & Main Co., New York) called, "Bells at Evening."

I leave to others a critical characterization of my work. It is sufficient for me to say that I prize, as a great privilege, the opportunity the Lord has given me, through the exercise of my peculiar talent, to reach so many hearts. I shall always be grateful that He led me to that special work, and gave me a share, however humble, in the harvesting of precious souls.

FANNY J. CROSBY.

"Bells at Evening and other Verses," by Frances J. Crosby, is the modest title of the new volume of poems by this most gifted and spiritual singer. It is a volume of 192 pages, and contains two excellent half-tone portraits of the author. The book is neatly bound in cloth and copies will be supplied at 50c. postpaid by Biglow & Main, publishers, Ninth St., New York.

RETURNING PROSPERITY.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Wherefore doth a living man complain the Text: Lamentations 3: 39, - - - plain?

CHEERFUL interrogatory in the most melancholy book of the Bible! Jeremiah wrote so many sad things that we have a word named after him, and when anything is surcharged with grief and complaint, we call it a jeremiad. But in my text, Jeremiah, as by a sudden jolt, wakens us to a thankful spirit.

Our blessings are so much more numerous than our deserts that he is surprised that anybody should ever find fault. Having life, and with it a thousand blessings, it ought to hush into perpetual silence everything like criticism of the dealings of God. "Wherefore doth a living man complain?"

While everything in our national finances is brightening, for the last few years the land has been set to the tune of "Naomi." There has been here and there a cheerful soloist, but the grand chorus has been one of lamentation, accompanied by dirges over prostrated commerce, silent manufactories, unemployed mechanism, and all those disorders described by the two short words, "hard times." The fact is that we have been paying for the bloody luxury of war, more than thirty years ago. There were great national differences, and we had not enough Christian character to settle them by arbitration and treaty, and so we went into battle, expending life and treasure, and well nigh swamping the national finances; and North and South, East and West have ever since been paying for those four years' indulgence in barbarism. But the time has come when this depression ought to end—yea, when it will end—if the people are willing to do two or three things by way of financial medicament, for the people as well as Congress must join in the work of recuperation. The best political economists tell us that there is no good reason for continued prostration. Plenty of money awaiting investment. The national health with never so strong an arm or so clear a brain. Yet we go on groaning, groaning, as though God had put this nation upon gruel, and allowed us but one decent breakfast in six months. The fact is the habit of complaining has become chronic in this country, and after all these years of whimper and wailing and oburgation, we are under such a momentum of snivel that we cannot stop.

There are three prescriptions by which I believe that our individual and national finances may be cured of their present depression. The first is cheerful conversation and behavior. I have noticed that the people who are most vociferous against the day in which we live are those who are in comfortable circumstances. I have made inquiry of those persons who are violent in their jeremiads against these times, and I have asked them: "Now, after all, are you not making a living?" After some hesitation and coughing and clearing their throat three or four times, they say, stammeringly: "Y-es." So that with a great multitude of people it is not a question of getting a livelihood, but they are dissatisfied because they cannot make as much money as they would like to make. "Oh! say, for a one," are you not aware that there is a great population out of employment, and there are hundreds of the good families of this country who are at their wits' end, not knowing which way to turn? Yes, I know it better than any man in private life can know that sad fact, for it comes constantly to my eye and ear. But who is responsible for this state of things?

Much of that responsibility I put upon men in comfortable circumstances who, by an everlasting growling, keep public confidence depressed and new enterprises from starting out and new houses from being built. You know very well that one despondent man can talk fifty men into despondency, while one cheerful physician can wake up into exhilaration a whole asylum of hypochondriacs. It is no kindness to the poor or the unemployed for you to join in this deplored. If you have not the wit and the common sense to think of something cheerful to say, then keep silent. There is no man that can be independent of depressed conversation. The medical journals are ever illustrating it. I was reading of five men who resolved that they would make an experiment and see what they could do in the way of depressing a stout, healthy man, and they resolved to meet him at different points in his journey; and as he stepped out from his house in the morning in robust health, one of the five men met him and said: "Why, you look very sick to-day. What is the matter?" He said: "I am in excellent health; there is nothing the matter." But passing down the street, he began to examine his symptoms, and the second of the five men met him and said: "Why, how bad you do look." "Well," he replied, "I don't feel very well!" After awhile the third man met him, and the fourth man met him, and the fifth man came up and said, "Why, you look as if you had had the typhoid fever for six weeks. What is the matter with you?" And the man against whom the stratagem had been laid went home and died. And if you meet a man with perpetual talk about hard times and bankruptcy and dreadful winters that are to come, you break down his courage.

Some people are so overborne with the dolorousness of the times, that they say we shall have communistic outrages in this country such as they had in France. I do not believe it. The parallel does not run. They have no Sabbath, no Bible, no God, in France. We have all these defenses for our American people, and public opinion is such that if the people in this country attempt a cut-throat expedition, they will land in Sing Sing, or from the gallows go up on tight rope. I do not believe the people of this country will ever commit outrages and riot and murder for the sake of getting bread. But all this lugubrosity of tone and face keeps people down. My hearers and readers, representing as you do all professions, all trades, and all occupations, if you should resolve never again to utter a dolorous word about the money markets, but by manner and by voice and by wit and caricature, and above all by faith in God, to try to scatter this national gloom, do you not believe the influence would be instantaneous and wide-spread? The effect would be felt around the world. For God's sake, and for the sake of the poor and for the sake of the employed, quit growling. Depend upon it, if you men in comfortable circumstances do not stop complaining, God will blast your harvests, and see how you will get along without a corn crop; and he will sweep you with floods; and he will devour you with grasshoppers; and he will burn your city. If you men in comfortable circumstances keep on complaining, God will give you something to complain about. Mark that!

The second prescription for the alleviation of financial distresses is proper Christian investment. God demands of every individual, State, and nation a certain proportion of their income. We are parsimonious! We keep back from God that which belongs to him, and when we keep back anything from God, he takes what we keep back, and he takes more. He takes it by storm, by sickness, by bankruptcy, by any one of the ten thousand ways which he can employ. The reason many of you are cramped in business is because you have never learned the lesson of Christian generosity. I am in sympathy with the man who was to be baptized by immersion, and some one said: "You had better leave your pocket-book out, it will get wet." "No," said he, "I want to go down under the wave with everything. I want to consecrate my property and all to God." And so he was baptized. What we want in this country is more baptized pocket-books.

I had a relative whose business seemed to be failing. Here a loss, and there a loss, and everything was bothering, perplexing, and annoying him. He sat down one day, and said: "God must have a controversy with me about something. I believe I haven't given enough to the cause of Christ." And there and then he took out his check-book and wrote a large check for a missionary society. He told me: "That was the turning-point in my business. Ever since then I have been prosperous. From that very day, aye, from that very hour, I saw the change." And, sure enough, he went on, and he gathered a fortune. The only safe investment that a man can make in this world is in the cause of Christ. We often see men who are tight-fisted who seem to get along with their investments very profitably, notwithstanding all their parsimony. But wait. Suddenly in that man's history everything goes wrong. His health fails, or his reason is dethroned, or a domestic curse smites him, or a midnight shadow of some kind drops upon his soul and upon his business. What is the matter? God is punishing him for his small-heartedness. He tried to cheat God, and God worsted him. So that one of the recipes for the cure of individual and national finances is more generosity.

Once the man finds out that secret, and he goes on to fortune. There are men whom I have known who for ten years have been trying to pay God one thousand dollars. They have never been able to get it paid, for just as they were taking out from one fold of their pocket-book a bill, mysteriously somehow in some other fold of their pocket-book there came a larger bill. You tell me that Christian generosity pays in the world to come. I tell you it pays now, pays in hard cash, pays in government securities. You do not believe it? Ah, that is what keeps you back. I knew you did not believe it. The whole world and Christendom is to be reconstructed on this subject, and as you are a part of Christendom, let the work begin in your own soul. Strike, then, a balance for God. Economize in anything rather than in your Christian charities. There is not more than one out of three hundred of you who ever give enough to do you any good, and when some cause of Christianity—some missionary society or Bible society or Church organization comes along and gets anything from you, what do you say? You say, "I have been bled," and there never was a more significant figure of speech than that used in common parlance. Yes, you have been bled, and you are spiritually emaciated, when if you had been courageous enough to go through your property and say: "That belongs to God, and this belongs to God, and the other thing belongs to God," and no more dared to appropriate it to your own use than something that belonged to your neighbor, instead of being bled to death by charities you would have been reinvigorated and recuperated and built up for time and for eternity. God will keep many of you cramped in money matters until the day of your death unless you swing out into larger generousities.

People quote as a joke what is a divine promise: "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and it will return to thee after many days." What did God mean by that? There is an allusion there. In Egypt, when they sow the corn, it is at a time when the Nile is overflowing its banks and they sow the seed corn on the waters, and as the Nile begins to recede this seed corn strikes in the earth and comes up a harvest and that is the allusion. It seems as if they are throwing the corn away on the waters, but after a while they gather it up in a harvest. Now says God in his word: "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and it shall come back to thee after many days." It may seem to you that you are throwing it away on charities, but it will yield a harvest of green and gold—a harvest on earth and a harvest in heaven. If men could appreciate that and act on it we would have no more trouble about individual or national finances.

Prescription the third, for the cure of all our individual and national financial distresses: a great spiritual awakening. It is no mere theory. "Well," you say, "what has spiritual improvement a revival to do with monetary improvement and revival?" Much to do. The religion of Jesus Christ has a direct tendency to make men honest and sober and telling, and are not honesty and sober and truth-telling auxiliaries of monetary prosperity? If we could have an awakening in this country as in the days of Edwards of Northampton, as the days of Dr. Finley of Basking Ridge, in the days of Dr. Griffin of Boston, the whole land would rouse to a higher tone, and with that moral tone the business enterprise of the country would come up. Godliness is profitable to the life that now is as well as for which is to come. But, my friends, not put so much emphasis on worldly success as to let your eternal affairs loose ends. I have nothing to say about money. The more money you get, the better, if it comes honestly and goes usefully. For the lack of it, sickness dies, medicine, and hunger find its coffin empty bread-tray, and nakedness for clothes and fire. All this cant is made against money as though it is impractical use, when I hear a man in it, it makes me think the best use for him would be an everlasting money! No, there is a practical use of money; but while we admit that, we also admit that it cannot satisfy the thirst that cannot pay for our ferrage; the Jordan of death, that it cannot open the gate of heaven for our immortality. Yet there are men who act as though of bonds and mortgages could be taken off for a mansion in heaven, and as though gold were a legal tender in that land, it is so common that they make pavement of it. Salvation by Christ is the only incorruptible treasures. Have ever ciphered out that sum in loss and gain, "What shall it profit a man if he gains the whole world and lose his soul?" He may wear fine apparel now, but the rags of death will flutter it like rags. I have spun and a threadbare coat have many times been the shadow of robes white as the blood of the Lamb. All the mines of Australia and Brazil, strung in one canet, are not worth to you as much as the pearl of great price. You remember, some years ago, the shipwreck of the Central America? A storm on that vessel. The surges tramped the deck and swept down through the hatches and there went up a hundred-voiced shriek. The foam on the jaw of the vessel. The pitching of the steamer, as though it would leap a mountain. The glare of the signal rockets. The long cough of the steam-pipes. The hiss of extinguished furnaces. The walking of God on the wave. O, it was a stupendous spectacle. But that ship did not go down with struggle. The passengers stood motionless trying to bail it out, and men used to toil tugged until their hands were bled and their muscles were strained. After awhile a sail came in sight. A few passengers got off, but the most of them went down. The ship gave one lurch and was lost.

So, there are men who go on in life a fine voyage they are making out of it. Well, till some euroclydon of business disaster comes upon them, and they go down. The bottom of this commercial sea strewn with the shattered hulks. But because your property goes, shall you go? O, no! There is coming a stupendous shipwreck after a while, the world—God launched it six thousand years ago, and it is sailing on; but day it will stagger at the cry of "wreck of a world! So many millions saved! So many millions drowned because your fortunes go, because your property goes, because all your earthly possessions, do not let your soul go! May the Lord Almighty, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, save your souls

Little Waifs at Mont-Lawn.

Flocking Away from the Heated City to Our Children's Home.

THESE sultry midsummer days, when all humanity seems melting, and when the little children of the tenement seek the sickly shade of the foul and close courtyards as a playground, it is a pleasure to look around at the company of happy youngsters at our Children's Home. Mont-Lawn's pure trees and abundant shade put all idea of mid heat out of the question. The little ones who romp and play there all day long and sleep in sweet deep sleep of tired mood at night, forget for the moment at least, the hot streets and the ill hotter rooms whence they

A MERRY GROUP AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOME.

One of our poets in sympathetic verse (which we publish on this page) has made eloquent appeal in behalf of the children, and no word of ours is needed to do the force of his language. It is remembered that for a trifling sum of three dollars, a child can be made absolutely happy for ten days, besides receiving lasting physical and moral benefit, the opportunity for a Christian service to "one of these ones" seems golden indeed.

There are at present nearly 200 guests in our Children's Home, many of them orphans, and most all "children of poverty" in the absolute sense. They are among them little toddlers who, incredible as it may seem, are to a large extent, the "short" of their widowed mothers, every penny they earn always being duly turned in to their slender home purse. Shoeless, coatless and sometimes even hatless, they come to us with faces running over with singleful anticipation of a ten days' stay. There are little girls too, who have since learned the meaning of toil, and even children must work, to keep their wretched home. And there is besides, a contingent of weaklings, who have been crippled in life handicapped by sickness or malformation. To all such the out-look is a rare and a very highly valued one.

Our artists have given us two scenes in contrast, both from the life. The first of tenement children playing in the reeking gutter of a hot street, and the merry ring of youngsters on the green at Mont-Lawn tell their own story. We every day of the seven has its pleasures for our wee guests at Mont-Lawn. Special delights are reserved for today, when the little ones join with the eldest and unanimity in the simple exercises of the day. These consist of the singing of hymns—all the children joining—and short, entertaining games suited to the mental capacity of the hearers and calculated to be helpful and stimulating to all. The fact that the children join so heartily in these exercises is the best evidence that they enjoy themselves to the full.

Some of the addresses delivered are special, and nearly all contain moral lessons more or less simple and attractive. One of the Home Missionary last week, in a short talk, told the listeners all about five different kinds of people we meet, viz: Mr. Always-to-be-depended-upon, who was represented by a phial full of pure crystal water; Mr. Most-always-to-be-depended-upon, whose phial had a little sand and grit at the bottom that caused it to be a trifle mixed when shaken; Mr. Sometimes-to-be-depended-upon, whose phial (the phials representing the hearts or natures of the individuals) held a dingy mixture, but would clear up after awhile; Mr. Hardly-ever-to-be-depended-upon, whose phial was muddy and full of dirt, and lastly, Mr. Never-to-be-depended-upon, whose phial was choked with a black, inky ooze, and hopelessly opaque. From these phials the speaker drew illustrations of character, as to temper, honor, piety, truthfulness, etc., showing that total cleansing could only be effected by emptying out all the contents of the foul phials and filling them like the first, with pure, limpid spring water, emblematic of the regenerating power of Divine love and grace in the sinful human heart. It was an illustration readily understood by the little ones, and keenly appreciated.

One day lately, amid the sweltering heat, there came to our Home at Mont-Lawn thirty little tots whose ages varied

THE TENEMENT WAIFS.

Written for "The Christian Herald."

Oh, send them away from their want and despair,
Oh, let them enjoy God's free sunshine and air,
Oh, let the fresh breeze fan each feverish cheek,
Oh, help them, for oh, they are helpless and weak,
In their loathsome prison, oh, why let them stay,
From want and from wretchedness send them away.

Oh, send them away from the foul, stifling air,
To fields that are fragrant, to woods that are fair;
Oh, why let them perish when help is so nigh,
Oh, help them or, oh, they must suffer and die,
Oh, they are so helpless, oh, send them away,
In want and in wretchedness, why let them stay.

Oh, send them away from their sad cruel fate,
Oh, why let them suffer, oh, why let them wait;
Oh, send them away for they sickened and die,
Oh, help them, oh help them, as helpless they lie,
Oh, fly to their rescue, oh, do not delay,
From want and from wretchedness send them away.

DAVID W. HINE.

from the two-year-old toddler to the little maid of seven. They are all children from the poorest homes of the lower East Side; mere babies, most of them, the sons and daughters of mothers who go out to wash or scrub or sew by the day, and who are compelled to leave their little ones at the Catharine Mission Nursery. There they are put in cool cotton pinafores and kept safely till their mothers call for them at night. As the heat has been specially hard on the little ones, the good nurses were glad to take advantage of the kind invitation to send them to Mont-Lawn. Contributions in aid of the work at our Children's Home are acknowledged on page 587 of this issue.

Their's the Martyr's Crown.

Two Knights of the Cross Lay Down their Lives in the Master's Service—Escande and Minault the Victims of Religious Intolerance in Madagascar.

FRENCH Protestant society has been stirred to its very depths recently by the terrible news from Madagascar—the brutal and mysterious assassination on May 20th of the two well-known and distinguished evangelical missionaries, Benjamin Escande and Paul Minault, in the mountainous regions of Ankaratra, twenty miles south of Antananarivo. Aside from the personal loss to their large circle of friends, and to the Christian cause, there are circumstances connected with the sad event that place it beyond the category of ordinary tragedies of the kind.

I have before me some documents obtained from the French Missions Society which shed a curious light on the conditions prevailing in that far-off island. For the reader's general information let me say that in consequence of Jesuit intrigues and machinations and the resulting disturbances among the native population last fall, the French resident general, a Protestant named Laroche, was recalled by the government, and the whole country was placed under military rule, General Gallieni being appointed governor. Of this official, it must be averred, that although an Anglophobe, to the point of laying hands on the property of numerous British missions and of endeavoring in every way to thwart and molest the English as such, in matters of religion he has shown himself to be both fair and impartial. To maintain the principles of liberty of conscience was no easy task, as the reader will judge for himself, by the following extracts which I translate in condensed form from the letters received by the Missions Society shortly after the General's appointment and before he had had time to interpose his authority. The writer is Benjamin Escande, one of the victims of the late tragedy.

THE GUTTER AS A PLAYGROUND.
A SCENE FROM LIFE IN AN EAST-SIDE NEW YORK STREET.

I was called to Fenoarive the other day by certain events of serious import, (says he), to wit, the imprisonment of five Protestant boys, who were only released upon agreeing to become Catholics, also the Kabary (official declaration) of a French Lieutenant with a Jesuit father by his side, acting as interpreter to the effect that all the children of the district must be sent to the Catholic schools! . . . In many villages threats of death have been made against Protestants who refused to be converted, and at Ambodiatoty, the emancipated slaves have been menaced with a return to slavery in case they attended the Protestant services. Two native evangelists, admirable Christians, were thrown into jail on the false accusation of having expressed the hope that the English might return. At Antananarivo, things are in a bad state, owing to the violent hostility of Lieut. Col. X, who stands in with the local Jesuit father and helps him all he can. He openly proclaims that although liberty of conscience may exist for all, those who desire to please the French should embrace Catholicism! Recently he wrote a letter of congratulations to the inhabitants of a village who had followed this advice. This letter the Jesuit father read in public on market-day with a lieutenant standing by, as if to give official countenance to the proceeding.

REV. B. ESCANDE.

Here we have an extract from a letter written by the Norwegian pastor, Engh, from Betafo, in the province of Betsileo, which has been largely evangelized by the Norwegian missions.

We are passing through troublesome times, (he writes); messenger after messenger brings us the worst of tidings. I never entertained a very high opinion of the Jesuits, but I never thought them as bad and as violent as I see them to-day. The natives are positively terrorized by them and by threats of what will occur if they do not rally to the orders of Father Felix. One day he says publicly that if they do not join his church they will be shot down by the soldiers; another day he holds out threats of imprisonment in irons and of the confiscation of their goods. Hardly had M. Alby (the Government Agent) left than the followers of Father Felix began a tour of the villages, entered the houses and declared that they had been commissioned by the government to enter all the children upon their registers as Catholics . . .

Such was the situation in Madagascar only a few months ago. It has not bettered much since, in spite of Gen. Gallieni's laudable effort to put an end to this unheard of regime of religious intolerance. The growing exigencies of the situation made it an exceedingly imperative necessity for the French Missions Society to take up the waning cause of Protestantism, and the first step in this direction was the departure at the end of March for Madagascar of five missionaries from the home country, Messrs. Mondam, Ducommin, Delord, Meyer, and Minault. All these were tried men, most of them having seen service in other parts of Africa or elsewhere in the colonies. The missionary party arrived at Tamatave, the seaport of Madagascar, on April 15th, and reached Antananarivo thirteen days later.

The last news from them prior to the terrible tidings of their death is contained in a letter written by M. Escande to his cousin, M. Elisee Escande, a clergyman of the Reformed Church in Paris. It is dated May 11.

M. M. Minault and Escande whom General Gallieni has himself described in a personal dispatch to the Societe des Missions Evangeliques in Paris as "dying as soldiers, victims of their devotion and their zeal," were never destined to reach the end of their journey. The details of their assassination are very meagre as yet. The first dispatches stated that the murderers were *fahavalo*s, or rebels against the government, but it is well known that the Betsileo has been free of these depredatory bands for some time. The poor mutilated remains were recovered two days after the tragedy by a detachment of infantry guided to the spot by some of the native carriers who had fled at the commencement of the attack, which was undertaken in an ambush carefully prepared by them. There is little doubt in the minds of Protestants of France that Jesuitism is at least morally responsible for the terrible event. Paris, July 2. V. GRIBAYEDOFF.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

WORKING AND WAITING FOR CHRIST.

Sunday School Lesson for Aug. 8. 1. Thess. 4: 9-18; 5: 1, 2. Golden Text: John 14: 3.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE Apostle Paul preached a full Gospel. It was not only the pardon of sin, free justification by faith in the blood of Christ (Acts 13: 38, 39; Rom. 3: 24, 26), but also freedom from the dominion of sin (Rom. 6: 1-14), and from self. (1. Cor. 5: 15). He preached also, and practised healing for the body (Acts 14: 8, 10); the impotent man had faith to be healed when he heard Paul speak. And that he taught the expectation of the Lord's coming, and the need to be blameless before him at his coming, his two epistles to the Thessalonians, as well as many of his other writings, abundantly testify. The Thessalonians from the very first understood the true spirit of the Gospel of Christ: they "turned to God from idols to serve a living and a true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." (1. Thess. 1: 9, 10).

Paul, in writing to them, appeals to them as those who are looking for the Lord; he appeals to them to walk worthy of God who hath called them unto his kingdom and glory (1. Thess. 2: 12); he calls them his joy and crown of rejoicing . . . in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming, and prays that God may establish their hearts "unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints." (3: 13). This church was yet young; devoted indeed, whole hearted and consumed with zeal. But young churches are like young Christians, they need balance. While they "sounded out the Word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia but also in every place [their] faith to Godward was spread abroad," (1. Thess. 1: 8), yet they needed Paul's exhortation, "Study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands as we commanded you; that ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing." (1. Thess. 4: 11, 12).

How many young Christians who are full of zeal for souls fret against the precious, needful discipline of daily toil, working with their hands; and they think that since God blesses them to souls, they ought to be released from secular occupations which necessarily take up so much time and strength, that they may give all their time and strength to the evangelistic work, into which they put all their heart. They think they are important to the cause of God, and that the more they are freed from the drudgery of ordinary work, the better it will be for the cause of God. There never was a greater mistake. Paul the apostle, who certainly was not behind any of our modern evangelists in zeal or in spiritual power, "for the Gospel's sake," lest he should "hinder the Gospel of Christ," that he might "make the Gospel of Christ without charge" and "abuse not [his] power in the Gospel," (1. Cor. 9: 23, 12, 18), worked with his own hands for his daily bread.

It is also highly significant that our Lord himself, until he was thirty years of age, worked steadily at the carpenter's bench; and certainly the time was not lost, for he did always those things which pleased his Father (John 8: 29). It is just the very tests of ordinary daily life which afford continual proof of the reality of the life of Christ within us. If such tests were needed by our holy and beloved Lord, that it might be proved undeniably that in his human life the very divine life of God had been perfectly manifested, and the human will continuously laid down, how can the same school be dispensed with in us his followers? If he who was "without sin"

(Heb. 4: 15), and yet possessed of a human will (John 6: 38), must needs have such an exercise for thirty years before he was perfected (Luke 13: 32; Heb. 2: 10; 5: 9), who are we, if we think we need a less discipline than the Lord Jesus himself?

Another danger was threatening this young church. Intense in their expectation that the Lord might come any day they feared that those amongst them who died in Christ would be losers. Paul, in leading them to look for the coming of the Lord, had said nothing about death, because the Lord had left no message about it. He had said on the contrary, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself," (John 14: 3). Thus this church, intent on the expectation that he would come, were in a hopeless state of sorrow over their believing friends who had died. And the apostle writes them, "Sorrow not even as others who have no hope of our Lord's return; as surely as Jesus died and rose again, so surely will they who sleep in Jesus rise again. That which happens to the Head of the body must happen to his and be sober." If ever there was a time when this is needed it is just now, when so much strange fire is abroad in the churches. "Let us who are of the day be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for a helmet the hope of salvation" (his coming). He has appointed us to obtain this salvation; he "died for us that whether we wake or sleep we should live together with him," sharers of his life in time and in eternity.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

THE letter to the Thessalonians, from which the subject of the lesson is taken, is interesting as being the oldest Christian writing of which we have any record, with the possible exception of the message from the Jerusalem Council described in Acts 15. Paul had gone to Thessalonica—which under its modern name of Salonika, was frequently mentioned in the dispatches during the war between Greece and Turkey—direct from Philippi. Still suffering from the beating and rough usage he had received there, he no sooner entered Thessalonica than he began to preach. How long he stayed we do not know, but evidently some time beyond the three Sabbaths to which Luke refers. When he was driven away by persecution, he left behind him the nucleus of a church, one which, next to his beloved church at Philippi, held its place in his heart. He was anxious about the young members—God will bring them again when he comes.

A CHAMBER IN THE CATACOMBS AT ROME.

Do not sorrow for them, for "this we say unto you by the Word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall in no wise precede (R.V.) them that are fallen asleep." Paul writes, "But of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord (not the coming of the Lord to them that wait for him unto salvation, Heb. 9: 28), his day—which includes his coming for his own, the great tribulation and his millennial kingdom,—so cometh as a thief in the night." A thief comes when he is least expected; "When they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them and they shall not escape." When in the history of the world, was there ever such a time of saying, "Peace and safety" as just now?

Meanwhile let us take the encouragement which God gives us through the apostle: "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light and the children of the day; we are not of the night, nor of darkness." That which we know is coming and for which we are looking, cannot take us unawares; if our treasure is in heaven, that day can rob us of nothing. The day which brings destruction to the world brings deliverance to those who have lived as "pilgrims and strangers" (1. Pet. 2: 11) in the world, and whose citizenship is in heaven, our "redemption draweth nigh." (Luke 21: 28). But therefore let us not sleep as do others, let us be never off our guard; let us "watch converts, fearing they might give up their faith in the storm of persecution which raged about them. He tried to visit them again, but something prevented him. Finally, unable to bear suspense any longer, he sent Timothy to them and went on to Athens alone. Timothy visited them and then rejoined Paul, who by that time, had gone on to Corinth. The report that he gave the Apostle relieved his mind on some matters, but occasioned him anxiety on others. He therefore wrote them, praising and encouraging them for their fortitude and energy and giving them cautions about certain dangers which, as he perceived from Timothy's report, menaced the church. This is the letter, written about the year 50, which we know as the First Epistle to the Thessalonians.

One of the dangers against which he cautioned them was a misapplication of his own teaching. We gather from Luke's account that Paul had made the kingdom of Christ more prominent in his address than the Cross of Christ. The people heard him and became so much absorbed in the idea of Christ's return that they neglected their business, ceased to work and became a burden on their brethren. Paul deprecated such results from his teaching. He tells the people to go quietly on with their work, supporting themselves, as they had seen him do. The idea of monasticism was repulsive to this active, energetic man. The notion that a man must withdraw himself from secular affairs in order that he may live a life acceptable to God was in his opinion a mischievous blunder. Christ at his coming could not find them ready for him in any better way than in doing honest work. A second mistake which Paul sees it necessary to caution against, was the way in which they mourned for the dead. The Thessalonians grieved over their friends because they feared that in dying they would miss the glory of Christ's coming. They need not worry about that, Paul tells them. They will be raised before the living are formed. The dead in Christ have nothing; their immortality is as sure as that of those who are alive when Christ comes. As to the time of Christ's coming there is no need to write anything. Let us be precisely at the time when people are least concerned about it. But their impression his readers got from his words as one of the Lord's coming being very near, and they evidently thought it useful to begin any important work. Paul therefore wrote them a second time. The dead in both letters was clearly to turn minds from vain speculation and waiting, to practical work and purifying life. The same lesson needs to be taught now as has been proved repeatedly in the history of the church.

Concerning them which are asleep, phrase became the common method of describing the dead. It occurs frequently in the inscriptions over the resting of the dead in the catacombs, "He is in peace," "The sleeping-place of Elia." "The sleeping-chamber of Aurelia." Such inscriptions are found everywhere in those subterranean chambers of the One of the inscriptions bears a date more than twenty years after Paul's to the Thessalonians was written. The catacombs consist of chambers from ten to seventy-five feet underground, connected by long passages varying in height from six to twelve feet, and in width from four to six feet. In their rocky walls, as the walls of the chambers, niches are hewn out, one above another, in which the bodies of the dead were laid. Under the Roman Campagna there are forty such catacombs. In all it is estimated that the passages measure from eight to nine hundred miles, and afforded places for over seven million people. Many martyrs were secretly buried there and the inscriptions in their case noted the sufferings and dangers of the survivors.

Will God bring with him. These words turn our attention away from the actual death of the individual to the resurrection. If God is going to bring the dead in with him, it follows that they are not in the grave, otherwise they would be already. He will bring them to a glorious reunion. In the Life of Faraday there is an interesting incident mentioned as a symbol of the difference in the physical and spiritual life. It is a spectacle witnessed in the churchyard of Oberhofen, Switzerland. The friends of some one buried there had been too poor to get a gravestone, or even to affix a tablet to the wall; but they could not be content with their beloved dead should have no name over the grave. They had therefore written name and date and a loving testimonial on a piece of cardboard and fastened it to a piece of wood. But they knew that rain and sun would soon obliterate the record, so they fastened a little row of caterpillars to the wood. Inside the roof a caterpillar had taken a corner in which to go through its various stages. There it had burst its way through the body and had flown away a butterfly. The empty caterpillar skin had been left behind, but the butterfly was gone. Beneath the sod was the human shell, which the spirit had flown away. The one was a counterpart of the other.

To do your own business. A man calling one morning on one of his customers who was a miller, found him covered with dust and his hands so soiled that the miller would not shake hands with the visitor. The visitor apologized for his condition but, as the miller said, he did not know of his condition. "True," said the pastor, "I took it as a surprise, there is no need to apologize only hope my Master, when he comes, will find me in the night, will find me in the condition, going about my work. A similar spirit was the old Puritan minister of Stamford, Conn., who, when one of the legislators alarmed by sudden darkness which overspread the sky during one of the sittings of the legislature proposed that the house adjourn, seemed that the day of judgment was come. Davenport said that if as league thought, the judgment day had indeed come, he would like to be found in his place doing his duty and then moved that candles be brought.

FEEDING INDIA'S MILLIONS.

The "City of Everett" at Manila—Bishop Thoburn's Relief Committee at Work—The Viceroy's Ominous Report—The Salvation Army's Distribution.

NEWS has come of the safe arrival at Manila in the Philippine Islands, of the City of Everett, the steamer laden with the corn given by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers for the relief of starving India. On July 16, Rev. R. G. Hobbs sent a cable message to this office giving the

in a week. Our own Methodist missionaries have been organized for two months or more, and their part of the work can quickly be adjusted. There will be delay, however, in the case of others, owing to the wide distribution of the missionaries. I have only time this morning to send you a line, as the mail leaves in an hour, but will write more at length.

Yours sincerely,
J. M. THOBURN.

We are indebted to Rev. J. F. Holcomb Presbyterian Missionary at Jhansi, for a photograph which is reproduced on this page. Mr. Holcomb is seen sitting in front of the hut and the native preacher—a fine Christian character who accompanied him on his relief tours—is standing under the tree. He was rescued in a famine when he was a child, and was brought up in the Mission. The other natives in the picture are a group of Saharayas, the poorest of the poor, of whom there are about ten thousand in Mr. Holcomb's district. When it was known that he had relief to distribute, the famished crowd surrounded him "like a pack of hungry wolves." He adds, "On our last visit to Ranipur so rapacious was the crowd of hungry people that we almost despaired of being able to control them long enough to enable us to complete the distribution of aid."

Very effective work is being done by the Salvation Army in the relief of the famine sufferers. Miss Catherine Bannister, one of the officers of the Army, to whom a thousand dollars from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund was sent, sends us with a photograph of a group of sufferers, a letter stating that the relief works in the Poona and Satara districts, under her supervision, are now feeding from 1,800 to 2,000 starving persons weekly. There are in all ten relief stations, employing between 500 and for Iowa deserve special recognition. Hon. Hoyt Sherman, Chairman of the Commission, is a brother of Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of State. Major E. H. Conger, one of the members, is the newly-appointed Minister to Brazil, and Rev. L. A. Harvey, Mr. J. D. McGarrah and Mr. G. L. Godfrey are all well-known and influential in their respective circles. Mr. Godfrey is Secretary of the Commission. Chairman Sherman recently forwarded a report to the Governor, showing that the Commission, within a period of about four months, had received from all sources and forwarded to India through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, $5,415.72, and had, besides, shipped 9,318 bushels of grain west (for the California cargo). Right nobly has Iowa done her duty in behalf of famine-stricken India. In next week's issue we shall take pleasure in laying before our readers a more extensive outline of the Iowa report, which will be found of general interest.

A VETERAN FALLEN.

The Death of Rev. E. H. Stokes, D.D., the Famous Leader of the Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Association.

THE Methodist Episcopal Church has suffered a bereavement in the death of Dr. Stokes, of Ocean Grove, N. J., which will be mourned in many a home beyond the limits of the church. Dr. Stokes was known and respected by Christians of all creeds with whom he came in contact at the famous resort by the sea. He was the recognized host of that great gathering which assembles annually to gain physical and spiritual recuperation on the New Jersey shores. Of late years he had given all his time and energies to perfecting the advantages of this Mecca of Methodism and had enjoyed the gratification of seeing the realization of his great project, the completion of the vast Auditorium which involved an outlay of $70,000. That was the crowning triumph of more than a quarter of a century of able administration. He witnessed this year the arrival of the usual host of visitors and took part in the inauguration of the season. He was present at the Independence Day celebration, when his nephew, Senator Edward Stokes of Millville, delivered the annual oration, but at the close of that day, he was stricken with illness and was unable to leave his house afterwards. For the first few days of his sickness little alarm was felt, but before the close of the week it became evident that there was danger of collapse. On Sunday, July 11, petitions were offered at all the meetings for his recovery, but there was no improvement. He continued to learn the trade of book-binding, he attended the Sunday School connected with the Union Methodist Church. He was early converted under the preaching of Rev. Charles Pitman, and at once entered upon Christian work. He became a class leader subsequently in his native town, and in 1843 received a local preacher's license. He continued to work at his trade up to that year, but in April, at the suggestion of Presiding Elder Charles T. Ford, he bade farewell to business and entered the ranks of the ministry. At the next conference held at Trenton, he with several others, only two of whom survive him, were received on probation. His first charge was on the Medford Circuit, and he afterwards held important charges in other parts of New Jersey. He organized the Pitman Grove Camp Meeting Association; and in 1869, the Ocean Grove Association of which he was elected President and held the office until his death.

THE LATE REV. E. H. STOKES, D.D.

The funeral on July 19 was a most impressive spectacle. Fully ten thousand persons were present, and there were few dry eyes in the assemblage as Bishops Fitz-Gerald and Newman spoke of the character of the dead veteran. At the conclusion of the services the audience passed in single file by the casket to take a last look at the familiar features. The body lay in state until midnight, a guard of honor composed of members of the Camp Meeting Association surrounding it. The interment took place on July 20 at Haddonfield in Dr. Stokes' family plot.

Free to all Subscribers.

For twenty-five names with full post office addresses, carefully written on one side of the sheet, each name representing an adult Protestant Church member, we will send, free of all expense, a beautiful Lily of the Field, grown in Galilee, Palestine, gathered there last spring, and pressed and mounted by Rev. Harvey B. Greene, who personally superintended the work while in the Holy Land.

The names sent in under this offer must be new names, must not have been sent in last year, and must each represent a different family, no two living in the same house.

All the names must reach THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, before August 31.

On the face of the envelope the words "For the Million Edition" must be distinctly written on the lower left hand corner, and no other business of whatever nature must be referred to in communications which contain these lists of names, as they are handled in a separate Department.

The "Lily of the Field" will be promptly forwarded on receipt of the names, and special attention is directed to the fact that these names must represent Protestant Church members of different families, no two living in the same house. We prepay all expenses.

elme intelligence that the vessel had reached that port all well. So large a part of a long voyage had then been so successfully accomplished, that we may hope that by the time these lines are in the hands of our readers, the vessel will be safe at Cutta and the corn will speedily be in the hands of the missionaries for distribution.

How welcome this gift will be, we may judge from the ominous news cabled by the Viceroy of India on July 13. He reports that the monsoon on which the crop of harvest depended had died away on the 25, and that the weather throughout the country had then become fine, and that the country was enjoying a good supply of rain. Since then rain has begun falling again on the west coast and in Southern India, and Mysore. The Viceroy adds: "A fair amount of rain has fallen in the last three days in the Central Provinces, and in Bengal, and the North-West Provinces, but Bombay, Madras, and Madras are still without rain."

As the monsoon again advances the damage will not be very great, but the situation is serious where large areas have been sown. Elsewhere the work of sowing has been suspended, and many persons are returning to the relief work. There is a great scarcity of fodder in Bombay, Madras, Hyderabad, Berar, and parts of the Central Provinces, and prices are gradually rising. When we consider that the districts the Viceroy describes as being without rain contain fifty-four millions of people, it is easy to see how serious this report is. It is evidently not yet given up, but the situation may well excite the deepest anxiety.

We are glad to learn that thorough measures are being taken by the Inter-denominational Committee under the presidency of Bishop Thoburn for the systematic and careful distribution of the money contributed by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The following letter just received from the Bishop shows that no time has been lost in getting the committee organized and finding out the relative proportions of destitution in each field:

NAINI, TAL., June 22, 1897.
Dr. Dr. Klopsch:—I received your cablegram in due time, and cabled, saying I would gladly accept the duty of organizing a committee as you requested. I have already written to parties representing various missions and hope to have the work completed and 600 persons. Much apprehension is felt, as no grain can be harvested until September. She writes:

The famine, as you will doubtless be aware, is not so acute at this side, as it is in the C. P. and N. W. P., yet it is certain that without the timely help received, our people would many of them have died of want; and whole communities have been broken up, through wandering away in search of help. The coming two or three months will probably be a season of great strain, until the approaching harvest can be reaped.

Among those who have rendered signal service in the India Relief movement, the members of the India Relief Commission

WOMEN AND CHILDREN WAITING THE DAILY DISTRIBUTION OF FOOD.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

(AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES)

LOUIS KLOPSCHE, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadian, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald will not be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

Entered as Second-Class Matter, July 28, 1897.

God's Choice of Things Despised.

GOD takes his good things out of Nazareth. His best speakers are Galileans. His sons of thunder are fishermen. They draw their nets in the Sea of Galilee, and then are sent to Rome, to fish in the Tiber, to London, to fish in the Thames, to New York, to fish in the Hudson, to Washington, to fish in the Potomac. God takes unlearned and ignorant men. A few years they company with the great Teacher, and then men take knowledge of them. They have caught the art of arts: how to save souls!

Why is this? That no flesh may glory in his presence. God does not divide his glory with another, even the best of men. Not even with Jonathan Edwards or Thomas Chalmers, or Melancthon, or Calvin, or Saul of Tarsus. It is enough for man that God uses him. Simon the Sorcerer wanted to buy into God's kingdom; to have a material interest in the gift of the Holy Ghost. The Apostle pronounced him still in the bonds of iniquity. The man who would have God use him must walk humbly; must not be exalted above measure; must expect some thorn in the flesh to keep him in his place.

What's in a Name.

THE cruiser Marblehead lately received especial honors from the town, after which she was named; the little old-fashioned port, built upon the rocks, that make the ribs of New England. The name is worthily bestowed. For, when we had no nation and no navy, Marblehead was alive. The large mansion on Prospect street where Commodore Tucker used to live is still called by his name. It is said that when the express came with his commission rode up to his door the gallant seaman with ravened eyes and tarpanin on his head, was engaged in doing "chores" around the house. This was the greeting at the messenger: "Hello, fellow, can you tell me where the 'Honorable' Samuel Tucker lives?" "Honorable, honorable! The 'honorable' Tucker lives in Salem, I am the only Samuel Tucker here." The messenger delivered the commission to him. Commodore Tucker commanded the sloop of war Thorn and the frigate Rioson. It is said he took more prizes, fought more sea-battles and gained more victories, than almost any loyal hero of the period. This heroism of Commodore Tucker and Captain James Mugford Jr., and others makes it especially appropriate to attach the name Marblehead to this graceful cruiser, within a few years constructed by the government.

Value of Education.

THE speeches now made by the young men at commencements are far superior to those of our boyhood. The old humdrum about Greece and Rome has been exchanged for harangue about things of here and to-day. The sylphs and dryads and naiads and the gods have gone out of business. Longfellow turns out to be a better poet than Homer, and Bancroft a better historian than Herodotus, and we have fifty orators who can beat Demosthenes. The absurd halo has melted from the brow of the ancients, and the old philosophers could not keep up with a class in our Polytechnic or Packer. College education has been revolutionized and the mind of the student is not so stuffed with the heavy baggage of Latin and Greek that he has no room for practical every-day information. Look at the graduates of this year and last year and next year, and you will find vast improvement in physique. By regatta and baseball and gymnasium and military drill, a class of healthy men is launched for the voyage of life from the dry dock, instead of those crazy crafts that were loaded to the water's edge with physical infirmities enough to sink them before they get out as far as quarantine. In many of the institutions a great advancement has been made in the fact that male and female education go side by side, just as God intended it. He put the two sexes beside each other in Eden. He puts them beside each other in the family, and why not in the colleges? Besides, judging of old times by the fashion plates of other centuries, the granddaughters are far superior to the grandmothers, and the fuss which they used to make a hundred years ago over a very good woman shows us that feminine excellence, which is common now, was rare then. At the beginning of this century a woman was considered well educated if she could do a sum in rule of three. Algebras and geometries were to her inaccessible heights. Now look at the books in all departments of knowledge under the arm of the school-miss. This land will not be what it ought to be till woman has equal opportunity for thorough education with man.

The Marriage Supper of the Lamb.

NOT long ago in the heart of the highlands of the Hudson, we saw a most beautiful wedding ceremony. On the landing of an immense staircase in a splendid mansion, as at an altar, beneath a huge wedding-bell shaped out of roses, two young people who had been attached to each other since childhood, plighted their vows in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. A special train ran from New York up to the locality. A vast assembly of people, including a distinguished preacher, a singer who was as pure as she was distinguished, and a group of young men and women who had officiated as groomsmen and brides' maids, then repaired to a tent on the lawn to partake of refreshments. The bride's grandfather, a clergyman of eighty-seven years, had pronounced the young couple husband and wife, and the old-time Washington pastor of the bride's parents, the minister who had twenty-six years before united them in marriage, and who had assisted in the ceremony, were there. Down on the Hudson, with gala-day streamers, floated the beautiful yacht that was to bear away the bridal pair. It was all like a beautiful dream.

There were certain prerequisites to presence there. First, there was the invitation. Amid many thousands who might have been invited, only a few hundreds were selected. Old friends and tried friends, friends who had long been family friends, young friends who had grown up from childhood with the nuptial pair; the friends of that venerable grandfather, in whose experience was fulfilled the promise: "With long life will I satisfy thee and show thee my salvation." Then, there was the acceptance of the invitations. The abbreviation: R. S. V. P., was appended to all the invitations. For provision has to be made for all the guests. Then, there was the effort to come. That special train that pulled out of the Grand Central carried no one who had not accepted the invitation and taken his seat in the elegant Wagner.

The Marriage Supper of the Lamb; to this we are all invited. Still there is room. Have we accepted the invitation? Have we received that return-card—the witness of the Spirit—which signifies that we are regarded a guest? And when the King comes in, shall we be found having on the wedding-garment?

A Nation's Ebenezer.

THIS nation, thus far, has had help from God. It records its "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." He helped us when as yet we were no nation; when we stood December 22d, 1620, on the wintry shores of New England, half of our number to disappear within the next half of a year. We have just received back from England the log-book of the Mayflower's voyage. It belongs to us and to our children forever. All our progress from that date to this is the nation's log-book. It is well that the idea of the nation is becoming more and more emphatic. The story of our own history is what the nation needs. God is in this history's heroic manhood, heroic womanhood. We have had great crises. We have emerged from them in safety; yes, in triumph. George Washington was the culmination and product of our Revolutionary period.

America has given history a new conception of patriotism. The old Roman type was still selfish. Caesar was willing to become Emperor. As Shakespeare puts it in the mouth of Casca: "He put it by thrice, every time gentler than the other; and every putting-by my honest neighbors shouted." We had no such leaders in our Revolutionary times; least of all our Washington. If such a man as Aaron Burr was a possibility, it was only to make his infamy greater by the contrast. The American type of patriotism is pure. Our public men have always risen to the greatness of the occasion. In 1861 we did not know that we had such men as crowned the Colonial period, in all our borders. But the occasion brought them to the front. And, five years later, we saw Lincoln taking rank with Washington.

The present period is still a period of anxieties. But there are great and good men in the seats of power. Indeed, to put American responsibilities upon Americans makes them walk more circumspectly; makes them shape themselves symmetrically and after the great American type. Washington and Lincoln are to live forever as the American ideals. For this we can say as a nation:

Here we raise our Ebenezer,
Hither by thy help I'm come.

The Patriarch Khirmian, though persecuted and disgraced by Turkey, was beloved and trusted by the Armenians; the Patriarch Izmirlian, favored by the Porte, was almost universally regarded with distrust by Armenians. Izmirlian's former private secretary has lately been preaching in New York City, and those who knew his antecedent associations were not surprised that he should violently attack the missionaries and accuse them of responsibility for all of Armenia's troubles. Rev. Dr. Markarian's tirade will find no sympathetic echo here. Any Armenian, prelate or layman, who stands out as the apologist of that monster assassin, Abdul Hamid, and endeavors to cover up his crimes by attacking the missionaries, is false to the interests of his own nation and to humanity at large.

BRIEF NOTES.

A further wonderful discovery of papyrus announced, ranging from the first to the sixth century A.D., four thousand in all, which it was years to decipher.

A census of the Russian Empire, lately taken with official authority has just been completed. It states the entire population as 113, of whom 64,016,280 are males, and 49,000,000 females.

Reports received by the Immigration Bureau show that the number of immigrants arrived in this country during the eleven months ended May 3, 1897, was 210,271. This is a decrease compared with the same period last year, 105,038.

Another Social Settlement is to be opened in New York. It will be under the charge of a very Protestant Episcopal Church. A building on East Twenty-second Street has been purchased and will be remodeled for the purpose. It is expected to be ready for occupancy about November.

The United Brethren, representing a Russian body, has assumed charge, by arrangement with the London Missionary Society, of a mission in German East Africa as a mission center in an important field, there being no other Protestant mission nearer than Utengule and Kungu of Lake Nyassa and eighty miles away.

At the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Mission, recently held in Paris, the welcome announcement was made that the fifteen thousand dollars, which had so long been the committee, has been practically cleared through the generous help of friends in Britain, France, America and other countries.

Official reports show that the number of marriages in France decreased from 280,691 to 282,918 in 1895, the number of births from 3,811,773 to 3,811,773, while the deaths increased from 1,834,986. It is now proposed to offer assistance for the encouragement of marriage and the term of army service for married men.

The first summer assembly projected for Jewish people is now in session at Atlantic City, N. J. It began on July 23 and continues until August 8. A Jewish Chautauqua Society is in existence for three years, and in this summer assembly its aim is "the presentation to Jews of others of Jewish thought and Jewish teaching."

It is estimated that fully twenty-five hundred Epworth Leaguers attended the convention in Toronto. The report shows that the aggregate membership is now a million and a half. Among the speakers at the convention were Hon. A. S. Hardy, Attorney-General of Ontario, and Hon. J. H. Ely, Sing Sing, N. Y.

The report comes from Japan that a temple is being made there to follow the set by India in the Brahmo Samaj and to form a new religion which shall be a combination of elements from Christianity, Buddhism and Jainism. It is to omit the divinity of Christ, to venerate him as a Great Teacher, to discard the doctrine of the Trinity and the Trinity.

We are asked to remind our readers of the sixty-sixth annual camp meeting will be at Sing Sing, N. Y., on August 5, and will continue ten days. It is in charge of Rev. Thomas I. and Rev. A. C. Morehouse. Among the speakers who will take part are Bishop J. P. N. Bishop E. G. Andrews, and Mrs. Maggie V. All information may be obtained by addressing Mr. W. H. Ely, Sing Sing, N. Y.

Mr. H. Arzamanian arrived in New York last week from Armenia. He has been a teacher in Persia and Russia, and is well acquainted with five languages. He had a narrow escape from death in getting out of his native land, and his wife and two children. He has reached country in a needy condition, and would be glad to find some occupation in which his education could be of use, and whereby he could maintain himself and family.

The fourth biennial convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet in Toronto, Canada, Oct. 22 to 28. The arrangements for this meeting of the representatives of many lands are progressing rapidly. The interest and enthusiasm are deepening in all lands. Miss Slack, Secretary of the Union, has sent out her official call for the convention, and delegates' names are coming in from all parts of the globe.

The Japanese Christian Endeavor Convention met again at Kobe, where the first one was held. In five years the number of societies doubled and 20 out of the 60 sent delegates to report. Resolutions were adopted looking to more energetic extension of the movement and the holding of a special meeting in the autumn. A very pleasant gathering at the Kobe College for Girls closed the meetings of the convention.

The Chautauqua Assembly has received a thirty-two page pamphlet giving full and detailed information in regard to the course in the various schools, and a handsome picture in the form of the advanced number of "The Chautauqua Assembly Herald," containing a programme for the season and information in regard to the various clubs and classes opening during the summer. These will be sent upon application to the Secretary, Mr. W. A. Duncauqua, N. Y.

A glowing description of Zionism is given by Rabbi Rosenberg in printed by the New York Sun. Quoting Dr. Herzl, he says: "Jews who are willing to have their State to have it." He points out that no nation has been able to assimilate the Jew, though good citizens of every country where they live, and that there is no just or rational basis for their condition but that of restoration to Palestine, which, the promises of the Bible phatic on the subject.

Christian Workers have been holding Convention this week at Bell Island, Conn. William James, whose work at Elm Island we have described in former number of this journal, has erected a large tent in a shady spot, which three meetings were held each day. The first was Christian Endeavor Day, July 21; the second was Temperance Day, July 22; the third was Schools, Monday, July 20, was the closing and was devoted to Foreign Missions.

RUSSIA'S GUESTS.

VISITORS of illustrious rank are expected by the Czar in the near future, and rumor is busy with the difficulties he is grappling with in arranging for their entertainment. The King of Siam, who has been making the tour of Europe, is to St. Petersburg before returning to his own land. Although it is ostensibly a personal and friendly visit, the reason to believe that the king is to enlist the good offices of the Czar in the relations of France and Siam, is that the king keeps in touch with European affairs and is well aware that the Czar's influence is all-powerful with the French government. If it could be exerted to the advantage of France still further diminishing the influence of the king would be very desirable. It will be easy for the mighty monarch to deal with his Asiatic sovereign, but he has a more difficult task in receiving another guest of such rank as is being arranged. The French Parliament has voted a large sum of money to the President of the Republic to Russia in a manner which has excited his illustrious position. The susceptibilities of the French people will be hurt if the French Emperor is not received with the honors usually accorded to sovereigns of the first rank. It is expected that the Czar will appoint the most distinguished colonel of a crack regiment, and will select for his entertainment a magnificent scale. St. Petersburg and Moscow, according to rumor, are preparing an unprecedented festival and the reception is to be a most interesting lesson, to all who may concern, of the value of friendship which the Russian Empire to the Russian Czar. A third visitor whose arrival is anticipated is the Emperor of Germany. His arrival, as originally planned, would have coincided with that of the President, but has required some modification of diplomacy to prevent an embarrassing meeting. The Emperor himself is credited with desiring the meeting, in the hope of bringing about a closer relation between France and Russia, but the French Emperor would have resented it, and there is no prospect of a becoming interval between the visits. The Continental journey is an interesting object to the Emperor's visit also. It is alleged that the Emperor is anxious to arrange with the Czar a plan of mutual agreement for Russian policy in the Orient, and to pledge Germany's support to the Czar in the Egyptian question, in return for Russian support of German designs on the East. Whether or not the Emperor has such a scheme in mind may be doubted, but it is significant that the public should suspect these potentates of designs against each other. One might wish that their deliberations a word of counsel from a great and good king might be of service to them.

Therefore, O ye kings; be instructed and blessed are all they that put their trust in the Lord. (Ps. 122:10.)

Rays in the Custom House. The French government has been utilizing the newly discovered light as a device in the custom-house. It has long been suspected that articles which should have been smuggled into France were being smuggled out. Every package required to be labelled with a statement of its contents and a declaration as to their being duty-free. The government officials decided one day recently to make an experimental investigation with the Roentgen rays. Thirty packages, all declared to contain no dutiable articles, were put aside for examination. It took only fifteen minutes to examine them all, and twenty-seven of them were condemned. In some instances the package was marked "lingerie," but the under-clothing formed an unimportant part of the contents. Carefully wrapped inside were watches, or jewelry, or cigarettes, or matches, or gloves, or some other dutiable articles. Some of the articles were in packages said to contain only fruit, or cake, or books. Proceedings were ordered at once against the senders, as smuggling is a very serious offence in France. It is safe to predict that these smugglers will not try any more such tricks in France, now that they know what means have been adopted for their detection. Yet men are slow to learn the same lesson in dealing with God although they know that his all-seeing eye pierces the covering of sanctimonious observance with which they cover their sins. Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord and their works are in the dark and they say: Who seeth us? and who knoweth us? (Isa. 29:15.)

Diamond Making.

An explanation of the process of making artificial diamonds is given to the New York Herald by Prof. William Crookes, the inventor of the Crookes tube which is used in the production of Roentgen rays. The plan adopted is to take a small quantity of pure iron and pack it with pure charcoal in a carbon crucible. The crucible is then put in the body of an electric furnace. A powerful arc, absorbing a hundred horse-power, is formed close above it between carbon poles, causing the iron to melt and mingle with the charcoal. After a few minutes' heating at an inconceivably high temperature, the glowing crucible is plunged into cold water. In solidifying, the iron is subjected to enormous pressure, under stress of which the dissolved carbon separates in a transparent crystalline form. This is the diamond. The diamonds hitherto made by this process are microscopic in size, but their nature is precisely the same as the diamond of the mines. Prof. Crookes thinks that the process was similar in the case of the natural diamond. He says, in some far distant epoch, in some convulsion of nature, there must have been the heat and pressure and then the eruption which brought the jewels near to the surface. The professor appears to have discovered a process of nature in learning how diamonds can be made. The experience of some Christians seems to teach us that God's jewels are made in a similar way. In the intense fire of temptation and the crushing weight of sorrow and care, the soul is evolved which God will treasure.

They shall be mine saith the Lord in that day when I make up my jewels. (Mal. 3:17.)

The Submarine Boat.

A successful test was made July 11 of the Holland, the new submarine vessel. Commander Kimball of the Navy Department, came to Elizabeth, N. J., to witness the test. He and Inventor Holland and a few volunteers entered the turret, and the water-tight doors were closed. The sinking tanks were opened and the water was let in. The vessel gradually sank out of sight. She went down and rested evenly on the bottom. After a short stay the compressed air was released and the water which had sunk the boat was blown out through the wonderful valves which are the peculiar feature of the boat. The Holland rose gracefully to the surface as her inventor predicted, and proceeded on a short trip as if she had never been under water. The men who went down in her say that the machinery worked perfectly. A further test is to be made in a week or two, when the Holland will make a voyage under water. If was to come back for the others, but its crew were informed that there was no need to do so, as the remainder of the castaways preferred to wait for some other vessel. The captain of the Brightwell sent the boat back to give them another chance. But it was useless; the men refused to be saved. Being pressed for their reasons, they said they believed it would be certain death to sail with the crew of the John Carey whom they had rescued. They said that men who had been twice wrecked on the same voyage were Jonahs, and would never reach land, and would bring bad luck to any ship that took them on board. The notion was ridiculed, but the men were obstinate, and there was no alternative but to leave them on the reef and return to the ship. The event proved their folly. The doubly-shipped men reached port safely, while those who were afraid to sail with them had not been heard from when the mail left. There is sometimes the same prejudice against companions in the voyage of the Christian life; but it is not excited so often by ill-luck, as by self-righteousness or differences of doctrine, or social condition. Christ's warning to the Pharisees should never be forgotten:

Verily, I say unto you, that the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you. (Matt. 21:31.)

The Alaska Eldorado.

Intense excitement has been produced in the mining regions by the reports sent during the past few days from the Klondike Camp, on one of the tributaries of the Yukon river, in Alaska. The news that gold had been discovered in large quantities was published last December and miners from all sections made a rush to the district. It looks now as if all who went will make fortunes. The reports describe a ravine thirteen miles long and not over a thousand feet wide at its widest part which is rich with gold. The coarse gravel varies from fourteen to twenty-five feet in depth and every pan of it, according to the report, contains gold, the lower depths, those near bed-rock, being the richest. One report sent from St. Michael's Island, near the mouth of the Yukon, says that a vessel had arrived there bringing forty-five miners each of whom was bringing as the result of his work gold dust and nuggets, varying in value from five thousand to a hundred thousand dollars. There was over a million dollars in the party. Other vessels which wintered up the Yukon are coming down with passengers in similar circumstances. One has twenty-five miners on board who have half a million dollars in nuggets among them. The largest nugget yet found is one worth $257. Several have been found worth about two hundred dollars. About seventy-five miners had reached St. Michael's Island with their treasure when the mail left. It is estimated that fully five million dollars worth of gold has been taken out during the past season. The district which has been worked is near the sixty-fifth parallel of north latitude and has an Arctic climate. The miners say that the hardships of life there are terrific. The rush, however, is so great in spite of this warning, that there are doubts whether there will be provisions enough to sustain life. The voyage up the Yukon has to be made before September, as the river in its higher reaches is closed by the middle of that month. The journey by land is extremely difficult and full of danger. It is feared that the excitement produced by the news will lead to many wild ventures which will make this the most disastrous of gold crazes. Many are sure to go who will perish by the way, or die of starvation and hardship after they get there. When there is the prospect of getting rich, men are deaf to the warnings of people who know the difficulties and hardships involved, as they are deaf to other warnings on still higher authority.

But they that will be rich, shall lose all, and a snare and into many tools shall they fall, which drown men in perdition. (Matt. 13:12.)

A SCENE IN MOSCOW, RUSSIA'S ANCIENT CAPITAL.

the vessel bears that test as successfully as this, it will be an enemy to be dreaded by a hostile fleet, as its approach cannot be detected. In the Christian warfare his most dangerous foes are temptations of that kind, which come suddenly and unseen. He alone is safe against them who has divine protection.

Be not afraid of sudden fear neither of the desolation of the wicked when it cometh; for the Lord shall be thy confidence and shall keep thy foot from being taken. (Prov. 3:25.)

Would Not Sail with Jonahs.

A curious instance of superstitious belief in luck is reported from Australia. It appears that the John Carey, a trading brig with a crew of six men, was caught in a storm and sprang a leak. The men worked hard to save the ship, but were finally obliged to abandon her. Only one boat was left uninjured, and in this the six men rowed away. They were seen by the Ladybird, another trading vessel, and were taken on board. But the next day the weather grew foul again and the Ladybird was cast on a reef a total wreck. It was two days before a sail was seen. This proved to be the Brightwell, which also was engaged in trading. The signals of the castaways were seen, and a boat was sent to the reef to save them. It would not hold more than half the shipwrecked men, and those who got in were the crew of the John Carey. The boat

BIBLE COMFORT.

the Provision Made in God's Word for the Afflicted and Sorrowing who have Faith to Use it. (Isaiah 12: 1-6.)

There is no need so universal as the need of consolation. Even those who have the comforts of life in abundance, often need consolation. Into the rich man's home sorrow comes and his riches are inadequate to console him. Sorrow comes with every comfort that this world can give, he has the same need of consolation that the poor man has, and he gets it from the same Source. In the palace and the hut, in the home of the nobleman, the business-man, the working-man, the pauper, trouble of one kind or another makes its presence felt and the need of consolation is experienced. The loss of property, the loss of friends, the loss of reputation, the disappointments of life—by these and many other avenues, the iron enters the soul and the cry goes up for consolation. Does a man bear trouble? When he is in trouble, we know his character. He is crushed by it and becomes dejected. Some rush to pleasure or to distraction that they may forget it. Some turn to their aid a stoical philosophy, which accepts the event as one to which man is liable and which must be met with what equanimity can be attained. It is only the Christian that really bears, when trouble besets him. If he is fast to his faith, he has an invincible reserve of consolation. The Lord covers his life by the one promise which explains the purpose of the Christian's life. He knows that every event that befalls him is known to his Heavenly Father and that without his consent no evil can befall him. He knows, too, that discipline is the condition of sonship and when he is able to regard his trouble as discipline, its sting is removed. In the promise he has, that blessing which turns the trouble into a stepping-stone heavenward and he receives the new power that he derives from it. He feels the sorrow; God does not exempt him to be callous; but like an obedient, docile child, he trusts his Father and acquiesces in his will. There is no consolation like this faith. The Lord's encouragements to the exercise of faith are given in God's Word. The Word glows with promises, as the windows glow with the light of the sun. Whatever the trouble may be that befalls the child of God, it has been foreseen and an appropriate consolation has been provided. In every age and in every circumstance, men have turned to it for comfort and have found it. Its writers are that they might be enabled to add to the consolation. In personal and in affliction they learned the bitterness of sorrow and they knew whereof they wrote. The Lord himself was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief" and it was he who said: "Let not the heart be troubled; ye believe in God, ye also believe in me." Moses, Samuel, David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, all went through sorrow and their testimony to God is "Thou dost keep him in perfection whose mind is stayed on thee, because thou trusteth in thee." The New Testament writers were men of trouble, and they heard the Voice saying: "Peace is sufficient for thee," and they knew it was so. Out of the darkness of their lives, voices came to us, pointing us to the Source of Consolation and assuring us that there are no circumstances, nor even in death itself, in which it is not possible for the poor, they speak of riches which may be enjoyed; to the rich, they describe the refuge of the "strife of tongues;" to the sick, they promise access to the tree of life, and leaves are for the healing of the soul; to the sorrowing, they tell of the "God will wipe the tears from their eyes;" to the tempted, they speak of the "touching with the feeling of the Father;" to the bereaved, they tell of the "God who is the Father of the fatherless;" to the fallen asleep, they tell of the "God who will bring with him;" and to the weary, they hold forth him who said: "I will give you rest, and the life; he who is weary in me, though he were dead, shall be alive." It is no empty boast to say when he says: "Wherefore sorrowest thou with these words."

OUR SERVICE OF SONG

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

Let us Sing Again.

"O come, let us sing unto the Lord."—Ps. 95: 1.

LYMAN G. CUYLER.

RIAN A. DYKES

1. Let us sing a - gain the praise of the Sav - iour, How He
2. Let us praise Him for the words full of com - fort, That He
3. Let us praise Him for the soul - cheer - ing prom - ise, Of the died that we might know the Fa - ther's love; Let us tell to all the left for us re - cord - ed long a - go; He is near to ev - 'ry man - sion that our eyes shall yet be - hold; When we gath - er with the world His com - pas - sion, How He ev - er lives to plead for us a - bove. one that be - liev - eth, And His mer - cy to the faith - ful He will show.

blest, in His king - dom, Where the rich - es of His grace can ne'er be told.

REFRAIN.

Let us tell, Let us tell, the won - drous sto - ry, How He died up - on the tree; Un - to Him be all the praise, and the How He died

glo - ry; He hath suf - fered that from sin we might be free.
we might be free.

Copyright, 1896, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From the new book "SACRED SONGS No. 1." By per. of The Biglow & Main Co

WHEN THOU ART SAVED.

WHEN thou by grace hast been
From darkness won,
And purified and cleansed from sin
By God's own Son.
Tell the precious news to others;
Tell to all thy suffering brothers
What Christ hath done.
Spread the glad tidings 'round,
And make it known,
That Christ new life hath found,
The way hath shown.
Tell to souls that need salvation,
Of the grief and tribulation,
He bore alone.

Say it was all for them
He bled and died;
And that he rose to be
Their Friend and Guide.
Say the barriers have been broken,
And the pearly gates are open,
Are open wide.
So walk that thou might'st be
A source of light,
To those who cannot see
The wrong from right.
Let thy life be pure and holy;
Serve thy Master, Jesus, solely,
The Lord of Might.

FLORENCE L. GRAY.

SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Indications National, Political, and Social of the Approach of the End.

BY REV. G. H. PEMBER, M. A.

WHEN the blue-grey clouds begin to gather in the sky and move towards each other, though we may as yet have perceived neither flash nor sound, we know that a storm is impending, and that the quiet hills and valleys will soon be startled by the forked lightnings and by heavily pealing thunder. "Ye hypocrites," said our Lord to the Pharisees, "ye can discern the face of the sky and the earth; but how is it that ye do not discern this time?" He spoke thus of his first coming, the signs of which are not nearly so fully depicted in Scripture as those of his second.

What, then, will he say to us if we fail to discover the secret of God in the things which are taking place around us, when we have so wonderful a commentary whereby to explain them? Even the statesmen, philosophers, and thinkers of this world are expecting great changes in its social and political condition. Surely, then, it becomes us to search and see whether the ceaseless preparations which are everywhere apparent, the tendency of opinions in matters civil and religious, and the generally unsettled and frequently lawless state of Christendom, do not show that the last times of our age have come: that the world will shortly be confronted by her despised but rightful and all-powerful King; and, therefore, that his Church—the living and the dead alike—no longer may but must, be speedily summoned to meet him in the air.

Were we floating on a broad river which at no great distance was hurling itself in mighty cataract to a lower level, what should we infer when we found that we were being borne along more swiftly by the quickening stream, when we perceived an ever-increasing agitation in the waters around us, and began to hear mingling with their tumult the sound of a deeper roaring? Should we not at once understand that we are already in the rapids caused by the terrific fall?

And have we not exactly described the present condition of the stream of time? For both the prophets and the Lord himself foretold a mighty catastrophe which would usher in a new age; a season of perplexity and trouble immediately preceding the times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; a general disruption and disintegration of society, amid wars, tumults, and the most appalling calamities, to be followed by the glorious reign of the Prince of Peace.

And are not signs of approach to these predicted days of terror continually multiplying around us? Do not events, which were wont to float by in slow procession, now chase each other before our bewildered eyes with such rapidity that they pass away in months, or it may be even in weeks, instead of years? Have not the currents of public opinion ceased to originate merely in the schemes of a few princes and statesmen—and is not every country torn by antagonistic factions which drag the State, now in this direction, now in that? Nay, are there not also multitudes of private individuals, who have each his own nostrum for divers ills, ever agitating society by thrusting themselves into notice?

Doubtless one chief cause of all this dire confusion has been that very thing which the world regards as a cure for every evil—the spread of knowledge. Education of a certain kind has indeed become general; but, alas! not with the expected result, since morals seem at the same time to be degenerating in inverse ratio. For how common is the lack of truthfulness, and that not merely in commercial life, but in all ranks of society! And this evil does not only exist, but is recognized as a venial fault, if not an absolute necessity. The law, "Swear to thine own hurt and change not," has no popularity in the present age, and he who breaks it will find many defenders. The world has yet to learn that the solution of its difficulties is not in education.

(To be Concluded.)

"GOD'S PORCELAIN."

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

By EDITH FERGUSON BLACK.

Author of "A Princess in Calico," and other Stories.

(Continued from last week.)

DR. RANDOLPH came as he had promised, and with a fine instinct, charged her a dollar for the visit. He knew she would like it better so. His regular fee was ten. The next day he came again as a friend and great would have been the wonderment of his fashionable South Side patients had they known that their lionized Doctor made time every day, in spite of his rush of engagements, to visit an old wharf porter in a tenement near the river.

He was very patient with the childish old man, telling him bright stories, until 'Lizer Ann began to wonder whether the rich people really knew him as he was.

By degrees some comforts found their way into the tenement. She guessed the donor but she did not attempt to thank him. She prayed for him instead. He treated her with the same fine courtesy he would have shown the wife of the President. That was Dr. Randolph's way.

At last he told her she must hold herself prepared for the ending. "I can save him from pain," he said gently, "but I can do no more."

She thanked him brokenly. He had already done so much. When he had gone she fell on her knees beside her father in an abandonment of grief. He was all she had in the world, and he was dying!

Then came the end and darkness! When she grew a little stronger she went to see the undertaker. She must beg his patience. She could only hope to pay him by degrees. The man handed her a receipted bill.

"A gentleman paid it," he said, "the day of the funeral."

"God bless him!" she cried softly. After that Dr. Randolph's name was always linked with Muriel's in her prayers.

The days and weeks kept on their ceaseless march towards the sleeping centuries and 'Lizer Ann adjusted her new burden of living to her tired shoulders. She was very lonely. As far as acts of kindness went she was neighborly, beyond that she had nothing in common with the other occupants of the tenement.

One morning she heard Dr. Randolph's well-known step upon the stairs and hastened to the door. He looked worried and anxious.

"I have a bad case of smallpox," he said, "a lady. My best nurses are all engaged. Will you come?"

"I am not fit," she said, humbly, "I am so ignorant."

"Nurses are born not made," he answered briefly. "You can obey me and your touch is tender. She is very young," there was a strange huskiness in his voice. "Will you do this to please me? I do not want to force you against your will."

"Why, doctor, if you think I can; I will be proud to please you."

"I knew I could count on you," he said with a rare smile, "and so I brought this." He pointed to a bundle he had laid down as he entered the room. "It will be better fast they should think you are a professional. Can you be ready in an hour? Very well, I will call for you at twelve."

When she opened the bundle she found a nurse's outfit, complete in every detail. "Its just like him," she whispered, as she hurried her preparations; "he knew I had no clothes that were fit."

It did not seem strange to her that she should be sitting beside Dr. Randolph in his luxurious carriage. Her whole thought was one of gratitude for being permitted to serve him in his need. The carriage drew up before one of Chicago's palaces, and 'Lizer Ann ascended the broad stone steps. She noticed that a massive silver plate bore the name Waldorf, then she followed the doctor into the hall and up the low stairway with its carpeting of velvet pile. They were met at the door of the sick room by a young man whose haggard, handsome face told 'Lizer Ann it was his wife she had come to nurse. Where had she seen that face before?

"I have brought a nurse," said the doctor, introducing her.

Gerald Waldorf bowed and motioned a servant to show her to her room, then he and the doctor went into the sick chamber. She laid aside her cloak and bonnet and followed them. She did not know that she was treading on carpets brought at tremendous cost from the most famous looms of Europe nor that on every hand she was surrounded with the treasures of art; she only realized that she was there with the doctor, who had been her friend, to help him fight the enemy who laughs at social barriers and casts his dread shadow alike over hall and hut. There was a pathetic youthfulness about the figure on the handsome bed. As she came forward, the housekeeper, who had been sitting beside it, arose and left the room. She could not see the face, it was turned away from her and the room was dark. She listened intently to the doctor's directions. She would obey him to the letter. The young husband accompanied Dr. Randolph downstairs.

"Your nurse seems rather old," he ventured, "are you sure she is capable?"

"Perfectly. Otherwise I should not have brought her," said the doctor curtly. "I will not disguise from you, Waldorf," he added more gently, "that this is a dangerous case and likely to prove a tedious one. What we need is not so much skill and brains and beauty but a woman with a heart."

The patient moaned and turned her head upon the pillow. 'Lizer Ann gave a cry of dismay. It was the face of her dreams—her beautiful vision!

Could it be possible that this was the radiant creature she remembered, tossing to and fro in weary misery, racked with pain, scorched with fever, with the wild mutterings of delirium beginning to break from her lips! She looked about the room anxiously. Was there no clue—nothing to tell her she was mistaken—that this horrible thing could not be? She lifted the silver trifles upon the dressing table but nothing save bewildering monograms met her unpractised eye. She caught sight at last of an ivory covered prayer book and with trembling fingers turned to the fly leaf. Just the name written in a clear, bold hand—Muriel Hazelton!

The second stage of the illness had come and passed. The greatest experts in medical science that were accessible had been summoned by telegraph to a consultation, everything had been done that wealth and wisdom could do, but wealth and wisdom were alike dumb be-

G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT BUFFALO.

Half Rates via Pennsylvania Railroad.

For the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Buffalo, August 23, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell special tickets from all points on its system to Buffalo and return at rate of a single fare for the round trip. These tickets will be sold and will be good going on August 21 to 23, and good to return not earlier than August 24 nor later than August 31, 1907.

Have You Asthma or Hay Fever?

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma and Hay-fever in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, West Va., writes that it cured him of Asthma of thirty years' standing, and Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair in Hay-fever season, being unable to lie down night or day. The Kola Plant cured him at once. Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, editor of the Farmer's Magazine, was also cured when he could not lie down for fear of choking, being always worse in Hay-fever season. Others of our readers give similar testimony, proving it truly a wonderful remedy. If you suffer from Asthma or Hay-fever we advise you to send your address to the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, who to prove its power will send a Large Case by mail free to every reader of The Christian Herald, who needs it. All they ask in return is that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

for the mighty power which wove its mystic meshes about the patient's brain and held her spirit sleeping betwixt the earth and sky.

Gerald Waldorf stood by his wife's bedside the picture of abject misery. His face was worn and his eyes heavy for want of sleep. He looked like an old man. The Doctor put his hand upon his shoulder.

"This is killing you, my boy," he said kindly, "I insist upon your lying down. Come." He led him to a sofa in an adjoining room and made him comfortable, then he came back to the bed and looked long and mournfully at the unconscious sufferer. For a moment he relaxed his iron mask of reserve and the strong face worked pitifully. He never dreamed that the homely nurse sitting on the opposite side of the bed, with her hand over her tired eyes, had read his secret, and, with innate delicacy, would not look upon his grief.

She went over to him at last.

"Is she much worse, doctor?"

"She is dying!" he whispered hoarsely.

'Lizer Ann shrank back as if he had struck her, then stood beside him cold and still. At last she touched him gently on the arm.

"We both love her," she said simply, "let us pray," and Dr. Randolph, a member of the most fashionable church in the city, knelt humbly beside her as 'Lizer Ann, heart to heart with God, pleaded for Muriel's life.

"Take me instead, dear Lord," she cried softly. "I am old and worn out and lonely, and she is so young and her life is so full, and everybody loves her! Take me, dear Lord! She's a bit of thine own porcelain and I'm only an old, cracked piece of delft."

When Dr. Randolph rose to his feet there were tears in his deep-set eyes.

"God bless you!" he said, huskily.

"I leave her in your hands. I will be back as soon as possible."

'Lizer Ann spent the night upon her

(Concluded on next page.)

HAVE DONE WONDERS

Was Able to Do No Work—Liver in Bad Condition.

WOODHULL, N. Y. — "I was all run down in health and hardly able to do any work, except a few chores. My liver was in a bad condition and my head ached constantly. I have been taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and I am now entirely well. I have also taken Hood's Pills with benefit. These medicines have done wonders for me." H. J. MARLATT.

Hood's Pills the best family cathartic and liver stimulant. 25c.

This entire building, and two annexes, are devoted exclusively to the work of the

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

Accessible to musical events of every nature. The best masters in music, elocution and languages that money can command. George W. Chadwick, Musical Director. Prospectus free.

FRANK W. HALE, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

ELECTRICITY

Machine Design; Stationary, Locomotive and Marine Engineering; Mining, Mechanical and Architectural Drawing; Civil, Electrical, Railroad, and Shipbuilding; Hydraulic, Municipal, 31 COURSES and Bridge Engineering; Surveying and Mapping; Sheet Metal Pattern Making; Metal Prospecting; Bookkeeping, Shortland; English Branches. All who GUARANTEE SUCCESS. Fees Moderate, Advance or Installments. Circular Free; State subject you wish to study. International Correspondence Schools, Box 561, Scranton, Pa.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

WILLIAM BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS. 102 Fulton st., New York, sell all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Largest house in the world. Dealers supplied. 66-page illus. cat. free.

Royal makes the food pure, wholesome and delicate.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

FIVE HUNDRED PRESENTS
Value—$1,252.00
To be Given to Subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD GOSPEL NEWS.

Do You Want One of These Beautiful

See how many legitimate words you can find in the letters in the words "Union Gospel News." Each letter as desired, but not more than one word than it appears in "Union Gospel News." Proper nouns, foreign or obsolete words, prefixes, Scotch and provincial English, Anglo-Indian words are not allowed, and are spelled alike, but have different meanings. To illustrate the work: On, new, sun, new, gun, etc. You may use the words in any order. A few hours' work will give you a list. Try it.

Our Offer: For the largest number of words you will give One Elegant Piano for the next two largest lists we will give Two Organs—$200. For the next three largest lists we will give Three Splendid Bicycles—$100. For the next four largest lists we will give Four Sewing Machines—$100. For the next five largest lists we will give Five Typewriters—$100. For the next six largest lists we will give Six Stoves—$100. For the next seven largest lists we will give Seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next eight largest lists we will give Eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next nine largest lists we will give Nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next ten largest lists we will give Ten Stoves—$100. For the next eleven largest lists we will give Eleven Refrigerators—$100. For the next twelve largest lists we will give Twelve Music Cabinets—$100. For the next thirteen largest lists we will give Thirteen Sewing Machines—$100. For the next fourteen largest lists we will give Fourteen Stoves—$100. For the next fifteen largest lists we will give Fifteen Refrigerators—$100. For the next sixteen largest lists we will give Sixteen Music Cabinets—$100. For the next seventeen largest lists we will give Seventeen Sewing Machines—$100. For the next eighteen largest lists we will give Eighteen Stoves—$100. For the next nineteen largest lists we will give Nineteen Refrigerators—$100. For the next twenty largest lists we will give Twenty Music Cabinets—$100. For the next twenty-one largest lists we will give Twenty-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next twenty-two largest lists we will give Twenty-two Stoves—$100. For the next twenty-three largest lists we will give Twenty-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next twenty-four largest lists we will give Twenty-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next twenty-five largest lists we will give Twenty-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next twenty-six largest lists we will give Twenty-six Stoves—$100. For the next twenty-seven largest lists we will give Twenty-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next twenty-eight largest lists we will give Twenty-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next twenty-nine largest lists we will give Twenty-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next thirty largest lists we will give Thirty Stoves—$100. For the next thirty-one largest lists we will give Thirty-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next thirty-two largest lists we will give Thirty-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next thirty-three largest lists we will give Thirty-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next thirty-four largest lists we will give Thirty-four Stoves—$100. For the next thirty-five largest lists we will give Thirty-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next thirty-six largest lists we will give Thirty-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next thirty-seven largest lists we will give Thirty-seven Sewing Machines—$100. For the next thirty-eight largest lists we will give Thirty-eight Stoves—$100. For the next thirty-nine largest lists we will give Thirty-nine Refrigerators—$100. For the next forty largest lists we will give Forty Music Cabinets—$100. For the next forty-one largest lists we will give Forty-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next forty-two largest lists we will give Forty-two Stoves—$100. For the next forty-three largest lists we will give Forty-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next forty-four largest lists we will give Forty-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next forty-five largest lists we will give Forty-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next forty-six largest lists we will give Forty-six Stoves—$100. For the next forty-seven largest lists we will give Forty-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next forty-eight largest lists we will give Forty-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next forty-nine largest lists we will give Forty-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next fifty largest lists we will give Fifty Stoves—$100. For the next fifty-one largest lists we will give Fifty-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next fifty-two largest lists we will give Fifty-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next fifty-three largest lists we will give Fifty-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next fifty-four largest lists we will give Fifty-four Stoves—$100. For the next fifty-five largest lists we will give Fifty-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next fifty-six largest lists we will give Fifty-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next fifty-seven largest lists we will give Fifty-seven Sewing Machines—$100. For the next fifty-eight largest lists we will give Fifty-eight Stoves—$100. For the next fifty-nine largest lists we will give Fifty-nine Refrigerators—$100. For the next sixty largest lists we will give Sixty Music Cabinets—$100. For the next sixty-one largest lists we will give Sixty-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next sixty-two largest lists we will give Sixty-two Stoves—$100. For the next sixty-three largest lists we will give Sixty-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next sixty-four largest lists we will give Sixty-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next sixty-five largest lists we will give Sixty-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next sixty-six largest lists we will give Sixty-six Stoves—$100. For the next sixty-seven largest lists we will give Sixty-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next sixty-eight largest lists we will give Sixty-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next sixty-nine largest lists we will give Sixty-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next seventy largest lists we will give Seventy Stoves—$100. For the next seventy-one largest lists we will give Seventy-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next seventy-two largest lists we will give Seventy-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next seventy-three largest lists we will give Seventy-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next seventy-four largest lists we will give Seventy-four Stoves—$100. For the next seventy-five largest lists we will give Seventy-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next seventy-six largest lists we will give Seventy-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next seventy-seven largest lists we will give Seventy-seven Sewing Machines—$100. For the next seventy-eight largest lists we will give Seventy-eight Stoves—$100. For the next seventy-nine largest lists we will give Seventy-nine Refrigerators—$100. For the next eighty largest lists we will give Eighty Music Cabinets—$100. For the next eighty-one largest lists we will give Eighty-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next eighty-two largest lists we will give Eighty-two Stoves—$100. For the next eighty-three largest lists we will give Eighty-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next eighty-four largest lists we will give Eighty-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next eighty-five largest lists we will give Eighty-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next eighty-six largest lists we will give Eighty-six Stoves—$100. For the next eighty-seven largest lists we will give Eighty-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next eighty-eight largest lists we will give Eighty-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next eighty-nine largest lists we will give Eighty-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next ninety largest lists we will give Ninety Stoves—$100. For the next ninety-one largest lists we will give Ninety-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next ninety-two largest lists we will give Ninety-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next ninety-three largest lists we will give Ninety-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next ninety-four largest lists we will give Ninety-four Stoves—$100. For the next ninety-five largest lists we will give Ninety-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next ninety-six largest lists we will give Ninety-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next ninety-seven largest lists we will give Ninety-seven Sewing Machines—$100. For the next ninety-eight largest lists we will give Ninety-eight Stoves—$100. For the next ninety-nine largest lists we will give Ninety-nine Refrigerators—$100. For the next hundred largest lists we will give Hundred Music Cabinets—$100. For the next hundred-one largest lists we will give Hundred-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next hundred-two largest lists we will give Hundred-two Stoves—$100. For the next hundred-three largest lists we will give Hundred-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next hundred-four largest lists we will give Hundred-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next hundred-five largest lists we will give Hundred-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next hundred-six largest lists we will give Hundred-six Stoves—$100. For the next hundred-seven largest lists we will give Hundred-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next hundred-eight largest lists we will give Hundred-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next hundred-nine largest lists we will give Hundred-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred largest lists we will give One Hundred Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred-one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred-two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred-three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred-four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred-five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred-six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred-seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred-eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred-nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred eight largest lists we will give One Hundred-eight Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred nine largest lists we will give One Hundred-nine Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred ten largest lists we will give One Hundred Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred one largest lists we will give One Hundred-one Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred two largest lists we will give One Hundred-two Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred three largest lists we will give One Hundred-three Sewing Machines—$100. For the next one hundred four largest lists we will give One Hundred-four Stoves—$100. For the next one hundred five largest lists we will give One Hundred-five Refrigerators—$100. For the next one hundred six largest lists we will give One Hundred-six Music Cabinets—$100. For the next one hundred seven largest lists we will give One Hundred-seven Sewing Machines—

GOD'S PORCELAIN."

(Continued from preceding page.)

...watching the face which had no strangely dear, moistening the lips or stroking with gentle, reverent hands which lay upon her forehead. All night she was praying. The fever had gone, leaving a weakness which seemed to be life away.

...the lashes, which had lain like rings upon the pallid cheeks, lifted her eyes looked up at her with clear light and the sweet voice softly, "Have I been ill?"

...Ann's heart leaped within her but she was absolutely quiet as she said: "Yes, dear, but you're going to rest and then take a nice, long sleep." She supported her gently as she gave nourishment, arranged her pillows, smoothed her hair with the mesh comb born in all true nurses. Slowly the hand passed to and fro, sped altogether. Muriel had fallen deep, refreshing sleep.

...days that followed were full of joy. Ann. She never left her patient to snatch a little needed sleep, and made of iron. She would sit, soothing Muriel into a delicious sleep by her soft touch upon her forehead in a comfortable position, the agony in her own cramped, almost unbearable.

...never saw such devotion!" said she. He accompanied the doctor to alter one of his evening visits. The antithesis of one's idea of a nurse. If Muriel's own mother had she could not have done more!" "One of God's elect," said the doctor—she rarely touched upon things—"The soul is in a rugged state it is one of the whitest souls I

...in the spacious chamber Lizer Ann, speaking softly.

...ord has been so good—you'll be yourself away to him now?" she said wistfully.

...do you mean, Lizer Ann?" "You gave yourself to your husband, body and soul, to have him live and speak through you. There is no work in the world for you. No beautiful, people will listen." "Here only half as good as you. At!" Muriel laid her soft fingers on her coarse red hands. "You must," she said humbly.

...Ann," she said again after a moment. Waldorf declares you shall be us. He thinks, next to Doctor that we owe my life to you. I'll be satisfied to make this your ...a's eyes filled. "What do you are!" she cried. "Its the home, you know, its the bed!"

...out to her room in a silent ecstasy. Waldorf had insisted upon relieving her (at night watches.) She felt dizzy and sick, but she lay in a peacefulness, forgetting the pain. It was possible that her old, hard life, forever, that she should see every day, should have the joy of

...so much, dear Lord!" she cried. "I'll that thou shouldst bless me when, towards morning, she fell

...like with a raging headache and fever in her veins. She went at patient. Never had she waited carefully though she was patient. The horror of a great seemed to be settling down upon the first time she shunned Doctor's keen professional gaze. In the afternoon Muriel slept a good deal, sat watching her with hungry eyes and with a great pain surging

...time came for Mr. Waldorf to linger lovingly over her. She smiled up at her. "I'm not made of glass."

...de, you're a bit of the Lord's own. "You'll let him paint his own name on you where everyone can see?" "You are so beautiful, people will

...at your hands are!" said Muriel, only sobbed. "You are not well,

"Lizer Ann! You must take something. I will tell Gerald—"

"No, no," said Lizer Ann, quietly. "I will be better soon."

When all was finished she gave her a long yearning look, then she lifted one of the little hands, fresh from its bath of perfumed water, and kissed it humbly.

"The Lord keep you under his shadow," she said gently, and then she went away.

She staggered blindly on the way to her room, but there was no one in the corridor. When she reached it she fell on her knees—for the last time. It was one of the battle-grounds where God's saints win their laurels. The howling waves seemed to bear upon her soul, and through the roar of the tempest she heard the devil's mocking whisper, "Is this the best your God can do?"

She lifted her swollen, tear-stained face, over which the light of a hard won peace was breaking.

"Thou knowest best, dear Lord. I am thy child. Thy will, not mine, be done."

She crossed the room with uncertain steps to a writing desk, took a sheet of paper and wrote in a cramped, stiff hand.

"I have got the sickness. Don't try to find me. It will not take me long to die."

She directed it to Mr. Waldorf. Then she crept painfully down the broad stairs, opened the front door and let herself out into the night. She cast a lingering glance at the room where Muriel was sleeping, then turned and fled like a hunted creature through the silent streets.

Great was Gerald Waldorf's consternation when a servant brought him the folded paper from the deserted chamber. In spite of her injunction, he did all in his power to find her, but beyond her nurse's costume, he had no clue. Dr. Randolph had been called away on important business the night before. In vain his agent searched the registers of the hospitals and the nurse's homes—Lizer Ann was gone.

On Dr. Randolph's return to the city, he found the news awaiting him. He, too, began the search. When the next morning Gerald went to meet him, he saw he had been successful.

"You have found her?" he asked eagerly. The doctor bowed his head.

"She was right," he answered gravely. "It did not take her long to die."

Muriel Waldorf lay back among her cushions, awaking slowly from one of her frequent naps. She was still very weak.

"Oh, Gerald," she cried softly. "I have seen her!"

Her husband, full of a new reverence for the treasure which had been given back to him from such deadly peril, kissed her tenderly.

"Seen whom, my darling?"

"Our angel, you know—Lizer Ann. It seemed to me as I dreamed that the old world had passed away, and we were in such a wonderful place! Oh! I cannot describe it, it takes my breath away just to remember! Everything was bathed in such transcendent glory I could hardly look. Suddenly I heard a voice, oh, such a voice, saying, 'Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you.' After the voice, there came a hush and a silence, and then Lizer Ann—our own Lizer Ann—clothed in eternal youth and radiant with the beauty of her Lord, swept up through the hosts of shining ones and knelt at the foot of the throne."

THE END.

An Armenian Preacher's Exile.

Hambartsum Arzamanian is an Armenian teacher and preacher, a native of Elysabadopol, in the Russian Caucasus. With his wife and two little children, he was driven by religious persecution to leave his native home and seek an asylum in the west. He is a graduate of the American Presbyterian Mission School at Tabriz, Persia, and for thirteen years has been a licentiate of the Presbyterian Church. For several years he taught school in the mission at Tiflis. Mr. Arzamanian is twenty-eight years of age and is an earnest and willing worker. He is master of four languages—English, Persian, Armenian and Russian. He is now seeking an opening for service in this country and will be glad to hear from any one with that view. He can be addressed in care of this paper.

A Generous Ruler.

The late Rev. A. J. Gordon once related this beautiful incident: A Russian officer could not make his accounts come right: there was a heavy balance against him. In the rigid despotism of the empire he feared the consequences and the severe penalty if he could not make it good. Poring over the figures at his table one day, in his worry and despair, he began scribbling. He wrote on the paper before him: "Who will make up this deficit?" He fell asleep. The Czar passed; he saw the officer, and, curious, read the scrap of writing: he seized the pen and wrote underneath, "I, even I, Alexander sin? 'I, even I,' said Christ on the cross."

SHE FLED LIKE A HUNTED CREATURE.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY
Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN
Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS
Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK
Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR
Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION SOUTHERN SHIPMAN
Chicago.
COLLIER
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
St. Louis.
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO
Philadelphia.
MORLEY
Cleveland.
SALEM
Salem, Mass.
CORNELL
Buffalo.
KENTUCKY
Louisville.

WHAT has been your experience? That the "just-as-good," "sold-for-less-money" kinds are the most expensive? That the best, or standard, in all lines is the cheapest? The best in paints is Pure White Lead and Linseed Oil. (See list of the genuine brands.)

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free, also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

"Well bred, soon wed." Girls who use

SAPOLIO

Are quickly married.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER

Beautifies and restores Gray Hair to its original color and vitality; prevents baldness; cures itching and dandruff. A fine hair dressing.

R. P. HALL & CO., Props., Nashua, N. H.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Sewing Machine Economy

Send us $19.50, and we will ship you the New Crown Sewing Machine—a letter machine than you can buy from any agent for $20. You may keep it 30 days on trial. Then, if it isn't the best machine that money can make, ship it back at our expense, and we'll return your money. We don't count your $19.50 ours until you are satisfied. It is simply on deposit, subject to your order. The "New Crown" is cheap because sold by mail at factory prices—no 112 commissions to agents. If you live east of the Mississippi, we'll prepay the freight. Write for our booklet, "All About Sewing Machines."

FLORENCE MACHINE CO., 122 Main St., Florence, Mass.

PARSONS' GUARANTEED CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS

NO PAY TILL CURED. Send for Booklet. FREE!

G. A. PARSONS, 154 Commercial St., Boston, Mass.

FREE TO BALD HEADS.

We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp diseases. Address: Altshuler Medical Dispensary, Dept. N. A., Box 779, Cincinnati, O.

DR. JOHN'S EYE SALVE 25 cents.

A permanent cure for irritated and inflamed eyes. By mail. Address: CEROMA EYE SALVE CO., Pittsburg, Pa.

$18.00 a Week and expenses to several good parties to travel for our publications. No canvassing. Permanent position. Give references: R. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore.

CRAZY WORK 800 SILK REMNANTS, enough for a quilt (4 sq. yds. 50c). BARNES FACTORY, with Boss & patterns, 105, postpaid. Lemarie's Silk Mill, Little Ferry, N.J.

Home Talks with Mothers and Daughters.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

HOT WEATHER ETHICS.

HOT? Well, yes; we expect hot weather along by this time. We always have had more or less of it in summer, and though old people insist that the seasons are changing, they are quite unlikely in our day to change so much that we will see snow flying and ice forming in July in our latitude. I have experienced intensely cold weather in July and August myself, and very probably some of my readers have, but it was not at home: it was on the very top of Mount Washington, with a great fire roaring on the hearth, and the wind raving and howling like a hungry wolf outside, and as far as the eye could see, the great mountains tossed up in blue rounding waves, like the billows of the ocean.

But that was on Mount Washington! In our ordinary days, and our ordinary homes, about this season, the almanac tells us we may look for heated terms and humidity, and sultry nights and thunderstorms. And all over the land the fruit is growing ripe and sweet in the orchards, and the mower has cut down the fragrant grass, and the farmers have been busy in the broad meadows, and nature has been as energetic as a notable housewife in the fulfillment of her world-old, yet ever new, housekeeping for the generations who walk the earth.

The farmers' wives have reason to dread the summer, which often brings them larger families to toil for, hired people to cook for, hungry boarders to feed, and all sorts of added tasks. Often they have the minimum of help when they have the maximum of toil. They may well be worried and wearied when they must rise early and work late, and when seldom comes a respite till the summer is past.

But neither they, nor any of the rest of us, will make the time easier by scolding or fussing. Complaint furrows the brow, and seams the cheek, and puckers up the eyes, and purses the mouth, and harrows the soul, and makes you old while yet you are young. Do not suffer yourself, dear lady, to murmur if you can help it. The very effort to repress the fretful exclamation, to shut back the cross word, to look pleasant, will induce the beatific state of mind, when cheerfulness and courage come to the front. I know what I am talking about.

I know, no one knows better than I, what it is to feel that the day is asking too much, that strength cannot be equal to the demand. And I know that with a calm and resolute acceptance of the situation, a quiet going on with the work which is to be done, and an ignoring of discomfort, there comes to one the needed vigor, and the day goes by, and the night returns, and you lie down with a joyful sense of tasks accomplished and difficulties surmounted.

Nothing which comes into a woman's life from pie-crust to poetry is insignificant, and if it be taken in the right spirit, there is nothing which will not bring her occasion for thankfulness.

It is never best to get angry in warm weather. In a way, it is best not to get angry at all, although there is such a thing as indignation, which one ought to feel even, for instance, she sees cruelty to a child, or any animal. God forbid that any of us should ever be indifferent to harshness or violence shown to little children, to brutality exercised toward our dumb friends, the horse, the cat, the dog. But, as a rule, patience and not passion would best dominate our moods during the summer solstice.

We may also as well go to church and Sunday School, and attend to our usual church and congregational duties during hot weather with faithfulness and without shirking. It is a fallacy to suppose that staying at home and tanning yourself will make you cooler, and more comfortable than you will be if you attend church. There, the windows will be wide open, the pew will be restful, there will be quietness and content in the atmosphere, and the service will lead your thoughts to elevated themes. You will forget the weather. You will go home stronger in spirit and in body for having worshipped God. And the same will result from your attendance on prayer meeting or on your class. You will feel the heat much less, if you will put it aside as a mere adjunct not worthy your thought, and go on with what you ought to be doing. "Wist ye not," may each of us say, as did the Boy Jesus in the temple, "That I must be about my Father's business?" With that high thought, why should we care for such details as heat or chill, wet or dry? We have our work to do, and God will bless us in its doing.

Where one can manage it, change of scene, a journey, a new abode for awhile, a visit to dear relatives, a slipping of the cables that bind us to routine, is very desirable. But there are always those who must tarry by the stuff, and there are worse places than our own homes for hot weather. Keep the house dark, and after the early morning keep it closed till the sun goes down. Exclude dust and flies. Do not drink too freely of iced or cold well water when you are very warm, nor overeat when you are very tired. Try not to carry too heavy loads. Roll off the burdens of anxiety which you must carry, and leave them at the dear Lord's feet. Do not depend on fans so much as on a quiet mind. If you cannot go on long journeys take little trips near home. Try to enter more than you have lately done into the joy of childhood and the serenity of old age. Accept the beautiful bright summer as a divine gift, and as the roses open and the lilies pour their incense, and the whole world is glad and alive and thrilled with music and perfume, let your hearts lift up a song to the Giver of all good.

I want the daughters to look out for the mothers in these summer days. Do not let them lose the chance of an occasional outing. See that the summer merry makings, the picnics and the drives include the parents as well as the young people. Mothers are so self-forgetful that they sometimes make daughters self-indulgent.

And, mothers, dearly beloved and honored, do not cloud life's sunshine for the juniors by fretfulness or vain reprimands, or by yielding to moods of depression. For all of us, the motto should be, "Serve the present age," and "Be of good cheer."

Margaret E. Sangster.

Poles in America.

In a recent address by Dr. H. A. Schauffler (Congregationalist), Superintendent of Gospel work among the Slavic population, of Cleveland, O., the speaker made some interesting statements. He said: "The Poles are coming to this land by tens of thousands. I have the list of seventy-nine Polish colonies in fourteen

Free.—A Wonderful Shrub.—Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

New evidence shows that Alkavis, the new botanical product of the Kava Kava Shrub, is indeed a true specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disorders of the Kidneys and urinary organs. A remarkable case is that of Rev. A. C. Darling, of North Constantia, N. A., as told in the New York World of recent date. "He was cured by Alkavis, after, as he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was preparing to die. Similar testimony of extraordinary cures of Kidney and bladder diseases of long standing comes from many other sufferers, and 1200 hospital cures have been recorded in 30 days. Up to this time the Church Kidney Cure Co., No. 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of Alkavis, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

States of this Union. They are found in large numbers in many of our great cities. In Milwaukee, out of a population of 200,000, there are 20,000 Poles. The Detroit Congregational churches were the first to take up missionary work amongst the Polish people. This work has proved an undoubted success. How gladly some Poles receive the Gospel is illustrated in the case of a woman of whom Miss Ella Hobart, our Polish missionary in Cleveland, writes. Miss Hobart found her reading her Testament aloud with a little girl every day, and pointing out the specially fine places she had found in St. Paul's Epistles. The same woman had only fifteen cents in the house, and her husband had been out of work for several months. She insisted on spending seven cents of this for tracts, though assured that they would be loaned to her. She said, "No, they seem to speak to my heart better when they are mine." Another Polish woman grasped Miss Hobart, pulled her into the house and burst into tears, not being able to pay a priest three dollars for the confessional. She had, therefore, been driven away, and when asked what she would do if three dollars were loaned her, she replied that she would never go back. "If all he wants is money, he can never save me." From that time she has never been in a Catholic church, but reads her Testament earnestly and with great comfort to herself.

SALVATION AND HEALING.

TO-DAY I rejoice in a Saviour of love, Who showeth his mercy to me, Who bringeth his wonderful life from above, Salvation and healing so free. The Lord in compassion gave sight to the blind, He comforted all in distress; And still he is healing—he still will be kind—His suffering children to bless.

"He bore all our sickness," he "carried our grief," Our strength and our life he will be; He knows every sorrow to give us relief, Salvation and healing are free. Praise him who delivers the sinner from sin, And giveth the captive release, Who tells of a kingdom where all men may come in, The kingdom of health and of peace.

CHORUS.—Salvation and healing are free. Salvation and healing are free. God is ever the same, and his truth I proclaim, Salvation and healing are free. Vineland, N. J. —MRS. FRANK A. BRECK.

Poor Pilgarlic,

there is no need for you to contemplate a wig when you can enjoy the pleasure of sitting again under your own "thatch." You can begin to get your hair back as soon as you begin to use

Ayer's Hair Vigor

NEW LADIES GIRDLE.

LATEST STYLE. JUST O All white metal ribbon girdle or belt; continuous breakable metal 28 inches long with over 200 slots. Sterling silver plate; beautiful embossed buckle. Our price, with large catalogue post-paid, Only 20c. K. H. Ingersoll & Bro., 610 Cortlandt St., Dept. No. 6.

"Mizpah" Valve Nipple WILL NOT COLLAPSE and therefore prevent much trouble. The valve prevents a vacuum being collapsed them. The ribs insure collapsing when the child blows. The rim is such that they cannot pull off the bottle. Sample Free by Mail. WALTER F. WARE, 512 Arch St., 1 fl.

WALL PAINT largest wall paper in U. S. for samples From 2 1/2 cts. to 83 1/2 cts. Our prices 50 per cent. lower than others. KAYSER & ALLMAN, PH. 932-934 Market St. 418 Arch St. 8% Do you want your money to be safe? If so write for high testimonials. Robert E. St. & Co., Equitable Building, Bo.

Insist on the Genuine GOLD DUST

The best Washing Powder made. Best for all cleaning, does the work quickly and cheaply and thoroughly.

Largest package—greatest economy.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,

Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia.

The Standard of Excellence

The average woman cannot discriminate between sewing-machines, so far as mechanical construction is concerned; but she can wisely judge their work.

SINGER WORK IS ALWAYS GOOD WORK.

This is why Singer Machines maintain their supremacy all over the world, making the Singer trade-mark a reliable standard of highest excellence.

SINGER SEWING-MACHINES ARE MADE AND SOLD ONLY BY

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

OFFICES IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD.

OUR CHILDREN'S HOME

101 Lawn, Nyack-on-the-Hudson, N. Y.
(under the Auspices of The Christian Herald.)

Over 2,000 neglected "Slum children" a ten days' outing every summer. Over 200 beds, chapel, dining-hall, school-room, baths, 170 acres of grounds. Matron and caretakers and medical attendant. Religious services held.

3000 neglected children received, sheltered, fed, clothed, and (in many instances) clad at own last summer at an average cost of $3 per head, including transportation.

Beautiful Charity (which is now in the summer), costs annually between $1,000 and $3,000 for its support. For a ten days' mid-summer outing for three children. Contributions of clothing and boots and shoes for boys of 10 years and girls of six to twelve could be sent to the Matron at 101 Lawn, Nyack, N. Y. All contributions can be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, N. Y., and be duly acknowledged.

Following contributions have been received for our Children's Home:

- | | |
|----------|--|
| $921.73 | Minnie E. Schulte... 3.00 |
| 2.00 | Mrs J D Horn... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | Nyack... 1.00 |
| 5.00 | In memory of little Herman, Greenw... 5.00 |
| 3.00 | Friend, Elizabeth... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | W P Breneman... 3.00 |
| 2.00 | Wilma, Salem... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | One who loves child- dren, Adrian... 6.00 |
| 1.00 | Maria O Madison... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | Mrs W E Crum... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | Mrs E Quackenbush & her S S Class... 3.00 |
| 3.00 | L E Sturges... 1.00 |
| 4.00 | Morning Star Soc... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | Chesler... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | I H N, Brooklyn... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | T B Short, Jr... 2.50 |
| 1.00 | Mrs Ann Kerr... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | Kate R Trotter... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | Mrs AM Waterbury... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | In the Master's name, Bklyn... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | S A Sniff... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | Coram... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | C Wagon... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | ECY, Liberty... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | Mrs WMT, Bklyn... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | E W - Bklyn... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | Glad Gleaners, Bethany... 2.25 |
| 1.00 | DAJ, Stormville... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | SRB, Plainfield... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | Mrs Jas Wyner... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | F A Blish... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | Friend, Columbia... 2.00 |
| 1.00 | Cora... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | Friend, Easthampton... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | "Rob Roy," Orange City... 10.00 |
| 1.00 | M E Crittendon... 6.00 |
| 1.00 | "B," Norwood... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | Mrs H C Lutz... 2.00 |
| 1.00 | B F Schenectady... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | Raymond, Viva & Inez Davis... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | Miss H E Strong... 2.00 |
| 1.00 | Mrs EG, Phila... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | O J Stanley... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | King's Daughter, Pleasant Unit... 1.50 |
| 1.00 | Grace & Helen S, Elizabeth... 1.25 |
| 1.00 | CBH, New York... 2.50 |
| 1.00 | Mrs Helen D Mills... 6.00 |
| 1.00 | O S Mills... 6.00 |
| 1.00 | Bapt Y P-C E, Ilion... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | D B Winslow... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | Ella L Coe... 6.00 |
| 1.00 | A Morrison... 1.50 |
| 1.00 | N Y City... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | Amy A Steadman... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | Friend of children... 2.00 |
| 1.00 | Harry Kennedy... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | Sister in Christ... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | Marion B Bray... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | Miss A M Small... 10.00 |
| 1.00 | I H N, Warren... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | Mrs Jas Ecroyd... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | Susan D Brown... 10.00 |
| 1.00 | Miss George White... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | H A Simpson... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | E H Loomis... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | J L Prairie City... 9.00 |
| 1.00 | Mrs A E Hook... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | Mrs S M Hopkins... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | LWT, Framingham... 2.00 |
| 1.00 | I H N, Ithaca... 2.00 |
| 1.00 | In Jesus name, Ramsey... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | Friend of children, Westover... 1.00 |
| 1.00 | Ada L Watkins... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | N P Dickinson... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | W A Hines... 3.00 |
| 1.00 | Paterson... 10.00 |
| 1.00 | S J Allen... 5.00 |
| 1.00 | I H N, Schenectady... 10.00 |
| 1.00 | Mrs H G Scovell... 1.00 |

- | | |
|----------------------------|---|
| Mr & Mrs H F Clark... 2.00 | Florence F Smith... 2.00 |
| Friend, San Diego... 1.00 | Mrs A T Newth... 1.00 |
| Anon, S Branch Nat... 1.00 | Geo C Gibson... 10.00 |
| Home... 1.00 | Edna Finley... 3.00 |
| Ten Hope... 3.00 | A M B. Selma... 6.00 |
| Young Chris... 1.00 | Dora Miller... 1.00 |
| Friend, Stoughton... 1.00 | In the Master's Name, P D... 6.00 |
| Mrs C A Read... 6.00 | Union S S, Southford... 3.00 |
| Friends, Pasadena... 2.00 | E S Gordon... 3.00 |
| Amelia Holcomb... 1.00 | Class No 1 Pleasant Chap S S, Roanoke 270 |
| Ella M Pitcher... 3.00 | Total... $1530.21 |
| Pewaukee... 1.00 | |
| Howard Froelick... 1.00 | |

Contributions of Clothing, etc.
Mrs Carrie Seiple, clothing; Ladies Miss Soc. Refd Ch., clothing; Warren, clothing; Mrs Thos Mullica, clothing; Mrs Robt Cunningham, dried apples, pears and corn.

A MISSION TEACHER'S PERIL

In a letter from Mrs. Mary B. Kilbon, a missionary at Adams, Natal, South Africa, to Dr. Frank E. Caldwell, 151 Henry street, Brooklyn, a very exciting incident is related, which Dr. Caldwell has communicated for the benefit of our readers. Mrs. Kilbon tells of the remarkable adventure of a young Zulu named Elijah M. Hlanti (who has been educated under the care of Rev. C. W. Kilbon, at the expense of Dr. and Mrs. Caldwell. Mrs. Kilbon writes:

ELIJAH AND THE EIGHT-FOOT SNAKE.

"I send a photograph of Elijah holding a huge snake at full length. It is a black mamba, eight feet long, and was in the umbrella of one of our lady teachers one noon, when she picked it up to go from the school-house to Jubilee Hall. The umbrella was left standing in the hall of the schoolhouse at the beginning of school. She thought it rather heavy, but providentially did not trust her hand down to open it, before the head of a snake appeared, when she threw it from her and called two of the young men, who killed it. We feel that she had a narrow escape, as the bite of this snake is always fatal."

Writing further of the mission and its work, she adds:

"Each cottage has two tenements of two rooms each. Every man with a family is expected to build his own kitchen of bush timber. A glimpse of one shows at the right of the picture. The little chap looking on belongs to one of the students who has recently lost his wife. We have been greatly interested in the way in which he with the help of a young sister—a mere girl—looks after his children. I wonder if Mr. Kilbon has ever told you of the school here for native girls who have run away from their heathen homes, some seeking instruction and some to escape forced marriages. To me this seems one of the most needy objects in our work. The school numbers eighty-five, and all have thus far been accommodated in a house designed for a private family. Mrs. Ireland, who has charge of the school, feels that she cannot get on in such contracted quarters any longer. She wants three rooms, but feels that two she must have. More girls constantly come for admission, who cannot be received for want of room, and it is hard to send them away."

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE-ROLLERS NOTICE
NAME THUS
Stewart Hartshorn
THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN

If it's a matter of rough skin, redness or sunburn, use HEISKELL'S Soap. It whitens and softens the skin. If it's eczema, tetter or pimples use the ointment—HEISKELL'S Ointment. It will cure any disease of the skin.

Soap 25c., Ointment 50c. At druggists or by mail. JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., 531 Commerce St., Philada.

SPECTACLES at wholesale. Send for catalog. Agents wanted. COULTER OPTICAL CO., Chicago, Ill.

GAIL BORDEN EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK
HAS NO EQUAL AS AN INFANT FOOD.
"INFANT HEALTH" SENT FREE. N.Y. CONDENSED MILK CO. NEW YORK

An Exceptional Opportunity.

To Secure a Beautiful and Useful Book at a Bargain,
The Church at Home, By Bishop John H. Vincent, D.D., LL.D.

Is the title of a magnificent manual for family worship and home teaching, and a book that should be in every Christian home in the land, and those who are fortunate enough to secure a copy of this book will find it a delightful companion. It contains 480 pages,

210 ILLUSTRATIONS,
TWO BEAUTIFUL COLORED PICTURES, THE LORD'S PRAYER and THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

LESSON, HYMN and PRAYER FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, constituting a complete family worship for the whole year.

READINGS AND MEDITATIONS FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS: NEW YEAR'S DAY, GOOD FRIDAY, EASTER, WHIT SUNDAY, INDEPENDENCE DAY, THANKSGIVING DAY, CHRISTMAS DAY, AND DAYS OF AFFLICTION.

- | | |
|---|---|
| Memory Texts for Every Day in the Year, | Picture Lessons for Children, |
| The Church Steps, | Old and New Tunes, |
| Home Lessons, | Wisdom in Proverbs, |
| Special Collects, | Blank Pages for Records and Autographs. |
| Bible Biography, | |

ALTOGETHER IT IS THE MOST COMPLETE HELP FOR FAMILY WORSHIP PUBLISHED.

By the purchase of the entire stock from the original publishers, we are enabled to offer the subscribers of "The Christian Herald" ONLY a remarkable bargain, provided the stock is not exhausted when your order is received, as follows:

Cloth, Illuminated Cover, former price $3.00.	Special Price, $1.50
Half Morocco, " " 4.00.	" " 2.00
Full Morocco, " " 5.00.	" " 2.50

Remember this special price pays all express charges and delivers this magnificent book weighing 4 lbs. 7 ounces, size when closed 8 1-2 x 10 1-2 inches, absolutely free of expense.

If the stock is exhausted when your order is received, we will return the money at once, and as we have only sufficient copies to supply a small percentage of the subscribers of "The Christian Herald," we trust you will be fortunate enough to avail yourself of this exceptional offer.

Send money by money order or registered letter. Write name and address plainly, giving your nearest express office.

P. B. BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

DO YOU STAMMER
Write for our 146 page book, THE ORIGIN OF STAMMERING. A practical and scientific treatise on the Cause and Correction of Speech Defects by GEORGE ANDREW LEWIS, who stammered for more than 20 years. Sent FREE with full particulars regarding treatment. Answer at once, enclosing 6 cents to cover postage, and you will receive in addition the above beautiful Souvenir containing 25 illustrations and half-tone engravings interesting to every Stammerer. Address The Lewis School for Stammerers, No. 30 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

Wash bright colored articles, such as silk neckties, in a luke warm suds of Ivory Soap; rinse in warm water, squeeze gently, and dry without exposing to the sun; press with a warm iron.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINT.

Human Intellect

Has devised no better system for benefit of mankind than Life Insurance.

The Prudential

The PRUDENTIAL has the STRENGTH
of GIBRALTAR.

Represents the widest extension of the scheme for it insures the whole family, children, women and men. Ages 1 to 70. Amounts $15 to $50,000. Premiums payable yearly, half-yearly, quarterly, weekly.

Write for particulars,

The Prudential Insurance Company of America,

Home Office, Newark, N. J.

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President.

$25.00 and up.

We have the largest manufactory in the world from which we sell direct to the consumer at wholesale prices, thus saving the profits of the dealer and the commissions of the agents. No money required until instrument has been thoroughly tested in your own house. Shipped on 30 days' trial.

FREE

Sold on instalments. Easy payment. Send for catalogue at once. If you want to obtain the greatest bargain ever offered. Write your name and address plainly, and we will send by mail same day letter is received. Positively guarantee every Organ and Piano twenty-five years.

PIANO

$160.00 and up.

ADDRESS
BEETHOVEN
PIANO & ORGAN CO
P. O. Box 741
Washington, N. J.

Buggies, Phaetons, Surreys, Traps, Harness

Buy direct from factory at Wholesale Prices. 30 per cent saved. Guaranteed two years. Write for Illustrated Catalogue showing latest styles. Prices in plain figures. Testimonials from every state. Highest awards World's Fair and Atlanta Exposition. The largest and finest display at the Nashville Exposition. Write to day for free Catalogue.

Price $44.—Offices & Factories ALLIANCE CARRIAGE CO., 223 E. Court St., CINCINNATI, O.—Price $60.

A BUGGY, PHAETON or CARRIAGE

FREE

to any one who will do a little work for us. No money required. No expense for outfit. Some knowledge of carriages desirable but not absolutely necessary. Send 5 cents in stamps for postage on catalogue giving full details. PIERCESS CARRIAGE CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

"Music Made Easy."

Band Instruments, Clarinets, Trumpets, Drums, Fifes and all known instruments at lowest prices. Band catalogue, 50c. and sample parts of band music free. Specify Catalogue "B".

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Co.
126 E. Fourth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

NO DIRT LEFT

In clothes washed with the DIRTY BUT WASHING machine. It does all the work in one hour and no hard work done. That's the record. AGENTS WANTED. Exclusive sale. Write for terms.

Lake Erie Mfg. Co., 110 E. 13 St., Erie, Pa.

History and Description of the Tabernacle and Temple of the Children of Israel prepared on receipt of 2c. stamps.
TEMPLE BLOCK CO., Williamsport, Pa.

"Eli" Baling Presses

23 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power. Hay or Straw. 46 Inch Feed Opening. Bell "68". Power Leverage 64 to 1. STEEL. Largest line in the world. Send for Catalogue.

COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

BOYS AND GIRLS

Watches, Clocks, Ten Sets and Toilet Sets, with $5, $7 and $10 orders. Now is your chance to get orders for our TEAS, COFFEES, Etc. Send for new Premium and Price List.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 A 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y.

AGENTS

To sell our line of Elegant Cake Moulds and Flavoring Powders. Permanent and profitable work. Write for exclusive territory and terms at once.
T. H. Snyder & Co., 330 E. 3d St., Cincinnati, O.

FOOD FOR BABY.

If mother can't nourish it; if it is pale and thin, try

SOMATOSE.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

A TYPEWRITER'S CHARM.

"Oh! THAT Easy Touch!"

YOU SIMPLY TOUCH THE KEYS.
THE SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER CO., SYRACUSE, N. Y., U. S. A.
BRANCH OFFICES IN 29 PRINCIPAL CITIES IN UNITED STATES AND ENGLAND.

EASY TOUCH A BIG POINT.

SEND FOR NEW ART CATALOGUE.

It Is Perfectly Safe to eat tomatoes or other acidulous vegetables that are cooked in "AGATE NICKEL-STEEL WARE." This ware is double coated and contains no arsenic, antimony, lead or other poisonous ingredient. Every utensil made from it bears this trade-mark on the bottom—

It is the handsomest, best wearing, purest and strongest enamel ware made.

All high-class dealers sell it. Write for our free booklet, containing the guarantees of eminent chemists.

Lalanc & Grosjean Mfg. Co.
29 Cliff St., New York

PEARS' is the best soap for the complexion face and hands

Established over 100 years. 20 additional awards. Be sure you get the genuine.

A Cure For Rheumatism

DR. J. G. CONNER, IONIA, MICH., writes

Dear Sirs:—An old friend of mine handed me a couple of small vials of Tartarothine some time ago and I on myself, having suffered from rheumatism for several years. I assure you I was so pleased with its effects that I cured a full sized bottle, and since then I have been entirely free from rheumatism during the past year. I observed that it is not surpassed by other preparation as a PROMPT EFFICIENT diuretic; besides it is pleasant to administer. Please send me a few bottles for use among my patients afflicted with Rheumatism.

Pamphlet on the cure of Rheumatism by Tartarothine sent free by McKESSON & ROBBIN, 91 Fulton Street, NEW YORK
Sole Agents for
The Tartarothine Co.

PERPETUAL DATER

ALL your letters, bills and papers should be dated. This Dater will give the desired date INSTANTLY and without time, money and trouble. It is reliable and costs practically nothing. We present you our catalogue of specialties with a specimen Dater. Send this dater post-paid for $1.20 or 3 for 60c. $2.00 a dozen.

CONSECUTIVE NUMBERS

numbers from 1 to 100,000, same as 101 need both! AGENTS WANTED.

ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & SONS
Mail Order Bargain House
Dept. No. 61 60 Portland St. N. Y.

1897 High Grade Bicycles

for Men, Women and Boys. Complete lowest prices ever offered. $100 "High Grade" $35 "Lightning" $25 "Standard" $20 Bicycle $75 "Maywood" Simplest, Strongest Bicycle on Earth. Fully guaranteed. Shipped anywhere C.O.D. or by express. No money in advance. Buy direct from manufacturers, save agents and dealers profits. Illustrated catalogue free. Address (in full) Cash Buyers' Union, 162 W. VanBuren St., CHICAGO to close out. All makes, good as new, $5 to $12. NEW HIGH GRADE '96 Models, fully guaranteed, $16 to $24. '97 Models $20 to $30. Shipped anywhere on approval. Special Hearing Sale.

600 Second Hand Bicycles

EARN A BICYCLE

by helping advertise us. We will give one agent in each town FREE. Send sample sheet to introduce them. Write at once for our Special Offer.

D. C. READ CYCLE CO., WARREN, OHIO

BABY SEAT

Can be readily taken from cycle. Does not will rider. A for children of Combines light weight with safety. If your child do not have it, and we will press preparing of price $2.50. Geo. H. H. M. M. Manufacturer, Pa.

AGENTS' OUTFIT FREE.

Weekly sales pay big money. We make a high grade BICYCLE as low as $24.10. Fully guaranteed. Shipped anywhere on approval. Direct from our factory. ALPINE CYCLE CO., Dept. 20, Cincinnati, O.

500 Celebrated "Syracuse" Bicycles.

See in original catalogue. New stock well-known makes. Large stock well-known makes. Shipped on approval. Send for List.

T. Brown-Lewis Cycle Co., Chicago

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICE: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

COPYRIGHT 1897. BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

VOLUME 20.—NUMBER 31.

By De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 4, 1897.

PRICE FIVE CENTS.

ALASKA'S GOLDEN FIELDS.

Thousands flocking to the Frozen Eldorado of the Northwest—Untold Wealth in Sight—Perils and Privations to be Endured on the Journey and at the Mines.

NOT since the days of the great gold discoveries in California, now nearly half a century ago, has there been such excitement as that which now prevails in this country and Canada, in consequence of the astonishing developments in the Alaskan gold fields. For many weeks past, the gold fever has been extending throughout Washington, California, and Oregon, and bands of adventurous men have penetrated the little known section of Alaska, near the boundary line, in the search for gold. Up to June last, little was thought of Alaska's mines by the public, although encouraging reports had been received from the gold-seekers from time to time. It was not until July that the news began to come which set the pulses of a nation throbbing with the gold fever and attracted thousands of fortune-hunters to the new Eldorado. At the present moment, a frenzy seems to have seized a portion of the population, and the ex-us from the various States to the gold fields threatens to equal the great rush of 1849. Many of our readers, who have already become acquainted through the daily newspapers with the stories of the wonderful riches of the Alaskan fields, will be interested in knowing something concerning the region where these remarkable finds have been made. The present centre of excitement, Klondike, is about as far from San Francisco (reckoning the present methods of transportation), as the latter is from New York. It is reached by a journey of Juneau, the chief port of the northwest territory, the steaming across plains and rivers, and through two moun-

Beaver, Salmon, and other tributaries) changes its course to almost due north on reaching a natural gorge in the McMillan mountains, and again to northwest as it approaches the boundary line that marks the division of American and Canadian territory. Near this point are the Klondike mines, where the extraordinary gold finds have been recently made. Across the border, on American soil, is Circle City, where there are also rich diggings, and the gold fields stretch out on both sides of the line over an area as yet undetermined, but which expert miners say will extend hundreds of miles in every direction, with the boundary between Klondike and Circle City as the centre. Prospectors who have been working on the American side assert that the indications point to the presence of gold in as great abundance upon our own territory as on that of Canada, and by following the course of the Yukon as it passes through the great Alaskan mountain ranges, it will be found to be the richest mineral field the world has ever known. Up to the present time, however, the richest finds have been taken from the Canadian fields, and principally by American miners. Some of the stories of sudden wealth acquired in the mines read like romances. Only a few hundred miners in all have returned from the Yukon,

YOUNG NATIVES OF ALASKA.

but the fortunes they have brought back in gold dust and nuggets have dazzled the multitude and inflamed the popular imagination. One steamer brought to Seattle $1,500,000 in Alaskan gold; another is said to have carried between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000. Individual miners are reported as returning with fortunes ranging from $50,000 to $100,000, and many have smaller amounts down to $5,000. Hired labor in the gold fields costs $15 per day, and food and other necessities are very dear. The

GENERAL VIEW OF JUNEAU CITY.

INDIAN RIVER.
(Where rich finds were made.)

AN ALASKAN MINING PLANT.

STEAMING AMID ALASKAN ICE-FIELDS.

whole life of the men on the Yukon is one of hardship, peril and privation, all energies being concentrated on the work of digging as much gold as possible out of the ground, and getting rich quickly. Returning miners state that the first great "strike" in the Klondike field was made by George McCormack on Bonanza Creek on August 12, last year, and in one week seven claims were filed in that region. Forty Mile and Circle City, two other mining camps, soon heard the news, and a three-hundred mile stampede to the new mines was the result. Of the first two hundred claims staked on Bonanza and Eldorado Creeks, not one proved a blank, and Indian and Dominion Creeks nearby have proved almost equally rich. Single "pans" have yielded as high as $500, and nuggets, ranging from $15 to $230, have been found in greater abundance than in any other gold field in the world. One miner who returned to San Francisco displayed nearly $100,000 pages—the Chilkoot and the White—fifty miles apart. This route, except during the four months of the brief Alaskan summer, is exceedingly tedious, and in midwinter impassable owing to the deep snows. In the cold, the drifts frequently running from fifteen to eighteen feet deep, and the thermometer varying from thirty to sixty-five degrees below zero. There is also a water route (navigable eight months a year) up the Yukon river, which involves traveling a much longer distance. It is well known for upwards of twenty years that the valley of the Yukon, the most famous of the northern rivers, was rich in gold. Surveys made by Canadian and American officials have established this beyond peradfrom $15 to $230, have been found in greater abundance than in any other gold field in the world. One miner who returned to San Francisco displayed nearly $100,000

(Continued on page 591.)

THE ALASKAN GOLD EXCITEMENT—SCENES ON THE WAY TO THE NEW GOLD FIELDS.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Subscriber, Clarion, Ia. 1. Is it customary for the pastor of a church to vacate his pulpit for one or more Sundays, without furnishing a supply, and without the consent of his congregation, when he has already taken his yearly vacation? 2. Has he any right to expect his regular salary for the time he has thus taken? What should be the reduction, if any, for lost time? At the rate of salary paid, or what a supply could be obtained for?

1. It is quite unusual; yet there may be circumstances that would be accepted as a satisfactory explanation. Such a proceeding, without good and sufficient reason, would be inexcusable. 2. An equitable arrangement would be for him to pay the cost of the supply, but all such matters could no doubt be arranged between preacher and trustees.

F. R. Honeywell, Carwood, Kans. 1. How are we to know that the King James Bible is the Bible originally inspired of God? 2. How long were Adam and Eve in Paradise after their transgression?

1. No one contends that the King James Bible was originally inspired of God. The translators were as liable to err as other men of equal erudition. But their work can be judged and it is remarkable that it was done so well. Although the ablest scholars of modern times have examined the original with minute care they have found no vital error in the King James translation. They have been able to amend it in many places, but it was substantially accurate. The most uncompromising advocates of inspiration, however, do not claim inspiration for it, but for the original. 2. The book of Genesis does not say and there is no other book professing to give authoritative information on the subject. Does it signify how long it was?

Rev. Charles F. Richardson, Ogden, Utah, writes:

I was exceedingly interested in your articles on Mormonism (written by General Eaton), and so far as I have the facts, I wish to endorse every statement in them. I enclose a pamphlet which is causing a great deal of interest on the part of the Mormons. If R. A. L. will send address, I will be pleased to send additional information.

Mr. Richardson's pamphlet is entitled: "Christian Fellowship: Ten reasons why Christians cannot fellowship the Mormon Church." It is a notable addition to our Anti-Mormon literature.

Anxious Inquirer, West Grove. 1. When Christ said (Matt. 18: 6) that it was better for a man to have a millstone tied around his neck and be thrown into the sea than offend one of his little ones, did he refer to preachers? Is it so terrible to offend a preacher? I have heard the text so applied. 2. What is the unpardonable sin and where is it mentioned? 3. If a person commits a sin when his conscience tells him plainly that he is doing wrong, is that unpardonable?

1. The warning was as you will see by referring to the Revised Version against causing Christians to offend, not against offending them. It applies to persons who tempt young Christians and lead them to forsake Christ and give up their faith. Offending a preacher is not so heinous an offence as to call for such a warning. 2. The unpardonable sin is mentioned in Matt. 12: 31-32. It is generally believed to consist in ascribing to Satan the power which comes from the Holy Spirit. When Christ uttered the words he was indignant at the charge that he was in league with the devil. 3. No, that sin is not unpardonable. When a man sins, he generally knows that he is doing wrong, unless he is stupid or ignorant.

A. J. C. Lewis, Wash. I have been much distressed by the conversation of an infidel who makes statements I am not able to disprove. Please say if it is true that the Bible was given to us by Roman Catholics; that Christians do not do so much as models to help the fallen; that Christ approved of people hating their own parents?

You must not expect to be able to disprove all the statements made by an infidel. Nothing is easier than to make false statements which from the nature of the case cannot be susceptible of refutation. There is no need to be distressed about it. There are many things in every-day life that you know to be true, but which you cannot prove, nor even explain. Neither you nor your infidel friend understands what light is, nor could explain the mystery of electricity. You have the broad fact that wherever the Bible goes, it brings liberty and righteousness and a better condition of society. The more a man governs his life by the Bible, the better man he is as a citizen, a husband, and a father. When you get such invariable results from a book, you are justified in believing it to be good and true. And when you recollect the assaults that have been made upon the Bible, and remember that it survives and is more read and studied than ever, you are justified in believing in its divine origin. As to the questions you put: The Bible was written before there were any Roman Catholics, and our translation was made by Protestants. Your own observation must convince you that the work infidels are doing to save and raise the fallen is infinitesimal compared with what is being done by devoted Christians. The directory of missions, hospitals, and orphanages in any city would furnish proof. Christ never approved of children hating their parents. The words on which the misrepresentation is based are in Luke 14: 26. Christ was speaking to people who could not follow him and obey their parents at the same time. He warned flicted the penalties on law-breakers to speak of him as angry with them. He might, so far from being angry with them, be sorry for them. You must have known a father who suffered more than his son when he punished him. The father might wish he could pass over his son's fault, but yet feel that in justice he could not, and he punishes him in sorrow, not in anger. If there was any way of avoiding it he would be glad to avail himself of it. When the human race transgressed, God found a way. He "so loved the world that he gave his Son." Christ did not die to appease God's anger but to save the world. 2. That all men are sinners and that no one can stand before God in any other light. No man should take credit for not committing murder as if he has stolen or coveted, he is a law-breaker just as much as the murderer. He has broken one law and the murderer has broken another. Both are sinners and are in need of mercy.

Reader, Deemston, Pa. In the community in which I live the young folks have what they call "play-parties." These are always attended by respectable young folks and often largely by church members. Some persons (who are rather extreme in their views) condemn the parties, saying that the games played at them resemble dancing. Others whom I believe to be sincere Christians, attend and defend them. What do you advise me to do in the matter? I do not care much about the parties, but do not like to offend good friends who invite me to them by not going.

Young people need amusement, and provided the amusement selected is of the proper character, there should not be any unnecessarily hard restrictions imposed upon them. You have not stated specifically what the character of the amusement is, but the general attitude of the Christian church is one of opposition to all dancing, card-playing, gambling, and theatricals. On these there should be no compromise. We advise you to ceased to love his father and believe and had lost all regard for his home, asked your advice about renouncing his right and going forth among strangers? you not tell him he was foolish and condemn him to go to his father and condemn wrongdoing and remove the alienation? is our advice. And one thing more: you do not say so, we believe some is the root of the matter. Give that up: yourself in the way of forgiveness: practically showing repentance. This is a great deal better for you than quitting church.

Constant Reader, Brooklyn, N. Y. A man preaching in a tent here is warning us that we are committing sin by working on a Sunday, and says that we are breaking God's command. Is it possible that Christendom is offending God in this matter, as he says?

Pay no heed to such preachers. You are sure that God will not be offended by people honoring the day on which the redemption was completed by the resurrection of his Son. The ridiculous literalism would have us go back to the observance of the seventh day, on the plea of celebration on which God rested from his work, does not deserve consideration. Who believe that the world was made in seven days of twenty-four hours might to such a plea, but not intelligent men, it would be difficult to absolute which is the seventh day. The inhabitants of one of the Pacific islands were observed Saturday as the Lord's day, the impression that it was Sunday. I kept faithful tally of the days on their thither, but had failed to take account of difference of longitude, and were consequently a day out. The essential feature of the command is the setting apart of a seventh of our time for the Lord, and even Talmudical law, the strictest of all law, was absolved from all being on a journey, he lost the seventh day as the Sabbath, long as he kept one day in seven, the Rabbis said that he was blameless. The new dispensation has a new day of observance, it appropriately keeps a day of greater significance to Christ than the day which commemorates God's Sabbath rest.

A. B. C., Muscatine, Ia. 1st. Is anything in the Bible about signs or signs of planting of a tree? Any signs in regard to the moon to plant in?

Under the general designation "grass" and "green herb" tables are frequently referred to in the Bible. The word "grass" is used in many passages where it may be translated "herb" or "thing," and in many passages. Gen. 1:30; 9:3; Psalm 37:1; 119:26. There is reference to planting, but the sole reference to the moon's influence on vegetation is in Dent. 33:14.

A. H. B., Baldwin's Mills, Va. The editor kindly expresses his opinion of the effects of reading novels. One pastor from the pit has denounced the novels as the best novels, saying that they are unprepared young people by presenting life in an ugly and He especially condemns "Hur," and would not admit the excellence of such books as "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

To condemn all fiction or imagination because some of it is bad, is like the gift of imagination is God-given. When employed in a proper spirit and for the highest purposes, may be enjoyed by a painter, poet, sculptor, novelist, and with pure aims all can contribute to the happiness and betterment of the world. The condemnation you mention is altogether too sweeping and indiscriminate. We fear that such a critic would have found even Bunyan's famous allegory, Pilgrim's Progress, as a work of the imagination. While novel reading may, as you does, become a crying evil through idleness or the wretched selection of literature, there are many excellent fictions whose moral helpfulness and educational value cannot be denied.

In a recent issue we published a very interesting statistical and biographic for Bible Students. W. A. S. (a Faling, England) sends us this note, we give space with pleasure:

May I add a few more interesting facts in the article on page 486, June 16: 1. "reverend" occurs only once, in Psalm 138:1. There are no words over six syllables. 2. There are all the letters of the alphabet except John Bennett. We have read lately the great trade depression in South Africa might be a very unwise thing for you to step you contemplate without securing reliable information.—Subscriber, Japan. Yes. 2. The time is uncertain, but probably less than half a century.—W. H. S., Blank. She has no right to marry, to do so would commit bigamy.—W. O. W., Johnson. A suitable subject for discussion here. And it fully explained in the encyclopedia. Annie E. P., Boulder, Colo., and Mattie Ham, N. C. Your letters have been read with interest and sympathy, but the great volume of correspondence prevents personal answers.

QUEEN VICTORIA AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CHILDREN.

One of the most interesting incidents of the great London Jubilee was the greeting of the aged Queen by ten thousand Sunday school children on Constitution Hill. As Her Majesty's carriage drove past, the great army of children sang, and the cortege halted an instant to acknowledge the greeting. It was a scene worth preserving, and this was the moment chosen by the artist for the illustration, which we reproduce from the columns of the London Illustrated News.

them that natural affection and family ties would come in conflict with fidelity to him and that wherever they were opposed, his claims must be paramount. It was a strong expression justified by the circumstances of the time. It was necessary that the people should understand that his service required them to be prepared to sacrifice property, family, and even life itself, rather than be false to him.

W. T. Heistand, Delaware, O. Cards are the implements of the gambler, just as much as dice, roulette, and rouge-et-noir. No Christian should touch them for two very sufficient reasons: 1. They have been a step to ruin for countless thousands and their use has caused widespread sin and suffering. 2. Because of the example to others who may be weaker than ourselves. There are many excellent games, like chess, draughts, etc., purely games of skill, and which may be enjoyed without the evils attendant upon games of chance, to which category all card games belong.

Subscriber, Lakewood, Colo. 1. Do you believe that Christ's blood was shed to appease the anger of God against sinful humanity? 2. Please explain the meaning of James 2: 10, 11, where he says that whosoever offends in one point is guilty of all.

1. We do not agree with that way of defining the doctrine of the atonement. The word "anger" is capable of being misunderstood in this case. If the Governor of a people made a law which the people admitted to be just and right, and provided penalties for those who broke it, it would not be fair when he in-read a little book entitled, Church Entertainments, by Rev. B. Carradine; published by A. W. Hall, Syracuse, N. Y.

Mrs. Edith M. Kilbuck, a missionary and occasional correspondent at Bethel, in distant Alaska, writes us as follows:

Your favor of March of this year came to hand with our yearly mail, and the order for $10 to be used in our work. Our work is a very trying one, but it is interesting and to those who give themselves and all to the work it is a promising and desirable field. My husband and I are happy in the work. We have learned to love the people, speak their language, and the Lord has blessed the efforts of his servants on this river so abundantly that we can but wonder and praise his name for his great goodness and favor. Many are the faces that shine with God's love, and many hearts and voices are raised to God in prayer, where a few years ago all was black darkness, superstition, and sin. My heart is happy and hopeful and my trust is strong in him who has been my stay all my life long.

Reader, Eagle Mills, N. V. If a man is a backslider in heart, ought he not to discontinue attending church and going to sacrament? Would it be honest and right of him to sit at the Lord's table when he knows himself to have lost his faith? May he not serve Christ outside the church?

If he intends to serve Christ, his place is in the church where his services will be more effective than outside. To leave the church would be, in our opinion, to make a bad matter worse. As "a backslider in heart," he is in a miserable condition, but his interest and his duty are to seek forgiveness and restoration and to plead with Christ for an increase of faith. What would you say to a son of a kind and indulgent father who told you he had Alaska's Golden Fields.

(Continued from first Page)

in slinging yellow nuggets of various sizes, and so in gold dust on a table in his room at a hotel. Some had their wealth in boxes, others in sacks of stout cloth or canvas, and a few, who had used up all other available means, carried the yellow dust in double paper packages in their pockets. The mines from which these fabulous "finds" came are described as gaped together in a valley or ravine some fourteen miles in width and about seven miles in length, walled in by rocky cliffs, in many places 3,000 feet high. For his locality hundreds of great fortunes have already been dug, and the yield is unlimited. The work is all placer mining, and much of the gold has been run if they attempt to go there before next spring. Although the steamship companies have taken in large quantities of food, it is feared there will be much suffering at the mines next winter, and that many of those who have ventured there without due preparation and with insufficient means will succumb to direst want. No man, say the veterans, should venture there, unless he has "a ton of food and plenty of warm clothing." A temperature ranging from fifteen to sixty below zero is not to be successfully endured except by those who are well-fed and clad. Besides in winter, mining work is practically at a standstill, and there can be no prospecting, the creeks and gullies being filled with snow. With the opening of next spring, the influx of gold-seekers both by way of the Yukon the gold fields, nothing is told of the great army of the unfortunate and disappointed. For one who grasps the glittering prize, a hundred go unrewarded, their arduous labor and long exposure in a bitterly cold climate bringing nothing but disappointment. Riches are not for all who go to Alaska and while we would not dissuade any from going who are able financially and physically to stand the strain, we believe those who, lured by the glitter of gold, leave home and friends, good prospects and pleasant surroundings, are very likely to have many regrets. Wealth, honestly acquired and properly used, may be a potent agent for good, but it can be secured at too great a sacrifice.

SIGNS OF CIVILIZATION.

Our photographs of Alaska, in this issue, are peculiarly timely in view of the prevalent gold excitement. Juneau City and Sitka will doubtless both become traffic centres of considerable importance. An interesting view is that on Indian River, where some very rich "finds" have been recently reported. The Treadwell mine, on Douglass Island, is well known. Some of the other views afford glimpses of the characteristic Alaskan scenery—wild, rugged, mountainous. It is now twenty-one years since the first Alaskan mining camp was established at the mouth of the Stikine river, the next being located near Juneau in 1880. Other good mines, both quartz and placer, were found and worked on the Koyukuk river, at Anvik on the Yukon, on the Tanana, and Kuskokwim rivers and elsewhere, but those were insignificant in comparison with the magnificent yield of the newly-discovered mines in the interior of the country, which seems to be the richest and greatest auriferous basin on the globe.

The Czarina's Wish.

It is recorded in European journals that while the Russian imperial family was celebrating last Christmas, the Czar according to an old custom, desired the Czarina to express a wish that he might have the pleasure of gratifying it. She did so, and said she wished there might be more religious toleration in the empire. The Czar answered, smilingly, "That will come by and by." He did not forget his promise, but has issued an ukase cancelling that of his father, Alexander III., which ordered that every non-orthodox person in Russia who married an orthodox person, should sign a document declaring that he would baptize and educate his children in the orthodox faith. The ukase of Emperor Nicholas permits chil-and through the passes overland from Juneau will be so great that populous mining towns will soon spring up everywhere. Present transportation facilities too will be quickly improved and the journey will be made quickly. About $600 is required to defray the expense of transportation and equipment of one person to the Yukon mines, and this fact will necessarily prove a stumbling-block to thousands who are eager to go there. This includes the coming to Seattle, from Seattle to Juneau (725 miles), up Lynn canal (75 miles), and all other traveling expenses, including clothes, food, dogs, sled, tools (for boat-making), and general outfit. The distance from Juneau to the mines is 600 miles overland.

THE TREDWELL MINE, DOUGLAS ISLAND, ALASKA.

While we hear of the hundreds of miners who have reaped sudden riches in dren of mixed marriage to be educated in the religion of their parents, sons in that of their father, and daughters in that of their mother.

VEILED ANGELS.

UNNUMBERED blessings, rich and free, Have come to us, our God, from thee. Sweet tokens written with thy name, Bright angels from thy face they came. Some came with open faces bright, Aglow with heaven's own living light, And some were veiled, trod soft and slow, And spoke in voices grave and low.

Veiled angels, pardon! if with fears, We met you first, and many tears. We take you to our hearts no less; We know ye come to teach and bless. We know the love from which ye come; We trace you to our Father's home.

—E. R. CHARLES.

COREA COMING TO CHRIST.

Wonderful Growth of Mission Work—Forty New Mission Stations Opened and Many Conversions Reported.

REV. MALCOLM C. FENWICK, missionary at Wonsan, Corea, whose letters have appeared from time to time in these columns, writes us this most encouraging letter, describing the spread of the Gospel in the Hermit Kingdom:

WONSAN, COREA, May 24, 1897.

It will cheer your heart, I know, to learn something of the results of Dr. Hall's life-offering, so far as we can realize them at present. You will remember the persecution that took place in Pyeng Yang the second night after Dr. Hall, with his wife, child, and household goods moved into the house previously purchased, in May, 1894,—how all the believers previously gathered were arrested, beaten, and threatened with decapitation, if they did not recant and deny Jesus,—how nobly Kim Chang Siky and Han Sak Chin, confessed the Christ,—how Kim was stoned all the way home after being released, falling exhausted into Dr. Hall's house bleeding of the brand-marks of Jesus,—how, after the battle, he was the only person, native or foreign, to minister to the wounded and dying, and how nobly he considered not himself. How Dr. Hall went into the West two weeks later with our beloved Moffett and saintly McKenzie, to minister to the suffering and dying. How gladly the natives welcomed the missionaries whom a short time before they threatened to kill. How Dr. Hall contracted fever on the battlefield and died. This much of the endurance of hardships of these good soldiers of Jesus Christ you have heard. It remains for me to tell you some of the results of the surrendered lives and preaching of the cross of Jesus.

News comes across country of thirty preaching stations opened in the surrounding villages, each assembly contributing its quota of sincere believers. Two weeks later another dispatch announces the opening of ten more stations. Thus the seed of the kingdom sown in the lives of Dr. Hall, Rev. McKenzie, and Mr. Han is yielding a goodly harvest. Of its genuineness character I do not propose to testify, but let others speak. It, however, has been my privilege to know something of the workers.

Dr. Hall's noble life is before us unsullied by unpleasant memories of any kind, beckoning us on. Mr. McKenzie's name still lives in the hearts of Coreans, and the church he gathered is still reported faithful. His refusal to accept offer after offer of salary, selling his library to procure passage money to the people he realized God would have him witness to, and steadfast perseverance to the end to lean only on God and encourage others to do likewise, are fresh in the memory of many, but perhaps the best proof we have of the germinating power of this "seed of the kingdom," is the tender affection the people for whom he labored and died continue to cherish for him. Of the trio who founded this great work in Pyeng Yang, only one now remains.

Corea's condition, Corea's sore need, Corea's opened door has come before you time and again in these columns. Not only does the province I have been writing of require many more workers, but in this province doors are open on every hand, and no one to enter them. We have only one missionary living outside of the port for any time, and he is besieged night and day with enquirers. Others would hail the privilege of going as a great joy, but are tied here. The province to the south has only one missionary up to the present advice, and he only studying the language. The province south of that has three men missionaries and two lady workers, the largest and most densely populated province in the country still less, and two others still more meagerly supplied.

The missionaries are now received all over Corea with marked hospitality and given a careful hearing. I believe God has been leading and preparing the writer for the past seven years to enter upon a much larger campaign than is possible single-handed. The time has now come to act. Accumulated knowledge of the country and people, and the "tricks of the natives," as Corey used to say, enables me to state publicly that God has been pleased to place me in a position to build a comfortable reception home, large enough to accommodate eight workers for $500. Out-buildings and fences for $200. Seven years careful study and practice also enables me to state that a missionary can live comfortably and healthily in Corea for $300 per annum. The passage and outfit of each missionary would be about $400. I have done all I can single-handed to reduce the cost of living to enable the church to multiply workers here with the talents committed to her charge. I earnestly crave for you the great blessing of entering this open door. Let this be your prayer: "I ost thou want me in Corea, or is it thy will that I should send another, or engage in a ministry of prayer?" The Korean Itinerant Mission, Box 342, Toronto, Canada, will receive applications for workers. Pray for Corea, work for Corea and for the whole world—for the workers engaged and those whom God will send. MALCOLM C. FENWICK.

A CART-ROPE INIQUITY.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., } Woe unto them that sin as it were on the Text: Isaiah 5: 18, - - - - } with a cart-rope.

HERE are some iniquities that only nibble at the heart. After a lifetime of their work, the man still stands upright, respected, and honored. These vermin have not strength enough to gnaw through a man's character. But there are other transgressions that lift themselves up to gigantic proportions, and seize hold of a man and bind him with thongs forever. There are some iniquities that have such great emphasis of evil that he who commits them may be said to sin as with a cart-rope. I suppose you know how they make a great rope. The stuff out of which it is fashioned is nothing but tow which you pull apart without any exertion of your fingers. This is spun into threads, any of which you could easily snap, but a great many of these threads are interwound—then you have a rope strong enough to bind an ox, or hold a ship in a tempest. I speak to you of the sin of gambling. A cart-rope in strength is that sin, and yet I wish more especially to draw your attention to the small threads of influence out of which that mighty iniquity is twisted. This crime is on the advance, so that it is well not only that fathers, and brothers, and sons, be interested in such a discussion, but that wives, and mothers, and sisters, and daughters look out lest their present home be sacrificed, or their intended home be blasted.

No man, no woman, can stand aloof from such a subject as this and say: "It has no practical bearing upon my life;" for there may be in a short time in your history an experience in which you will find that the discussion involved three worlds—earth, heaven, hell. There are gambling establishments by the thousands. There are about five thousand five hundred professional gamblers. Out of all the gambling establishments, how many of them do you suppose profess to be honest? Ten. These ten professing to be honest because they are merely the ante-chamber to those that are acknowledged fraudulent. There are first-class establishments. You step a little way out of Broadway, New York. You go up the marble stairs. You ring the bell. The liveried servant introduces you. The walls are lavender tinted. The mantels are of Vermont marble. The pictures are "Jephthah's Daughter," and Dore's "Dante's and Virgil's Frozen Region of Hell," a most appropriate selection, this last, for the place. There is the roulette table, the finest, costliest, most exquisite piece of furniture in the United States. There is the banqueting room where, free of charge to the guests, you may find the plate, and viands, and wines, and cigars, sumptuous beyond parallel. Then you come to the second-class gambling establishment. To it you are introduced by a card through some "roper in." Having entered, you must either gamble or fight. Sanded cards, dice loaded with quicksilver, poor drinks mixed with more poor drinks, will soon help you to get rid of all your money to a tune in short metre with staccato passages. You wanted to see. You saw. The low villains of that place watch you as you come in. Does not the panther, squat in the grass, know a calf when he sees it? Wrangle not for your rights in that place, or your body will be thrown bloody into the street, or dead into the river.

You go along a little further and find the policy establishment. In that place you bet on numbers. Betting on two numbers is called a "saddle;" betting on three numbers is called a "gig;" betting on four numbers is called a "horse;" and there are thousands of our young men leaping into that "saddle," and mounting that "gig," and behind that "horse" riding to perdition. There is always one kind of sign on the door—"Exchange;" a most appropriate title for the door, for there, in that room, a man exchanges health, peace, and heaven for loss of health, loss of home, loss of family, loss of immortal soul. Exchange sure enough and infinite enough.

Now you acknowledge that is a cart-rope of evil, but you want to know what are the small threads out of which it is made. There is, in many, a disposition to hazard. They feel a delight in walking near a precipice because of the sense of danger. There are people who go upon Jungfrau, not for the largeness of the prospect, but for the feeling that they have of thinking, "What would happen if I should fall off?" There are persons who have their blood filled and accelerated by skating very near an air-hole. There are men who find a positive delight in driving within two inches of the edge of a bridge. It is this disposition to hazard that finds development in gaming practices. Here are five hundred dollars. I may stake them. If I stake them I may lose them; but I may win five thousand dollars. Whichever way it turns, I have the excitement. Shuffle the cards. Lost! Heart thumps. Head dizzy. At it again—just to gratify this desire for hazard.

Then there are others who go into this sin through sheer desire for gain. It is especially so with professional gamblers. They always keep cool. They never drink enough to unbalance their judgment. They do not see the dice so much as they see the dollar beyond the dice, and for that they watch as the spider in the web, looking as if dead until the fly passes. Thousands of young men in the hope of gain go into these practices. They say: "Well, my salary is not enough to allow this luxury. I don't get enough from my store, office, or shop. I ought to have finer apartments. I ought to have better wines. I ought to have more richly flavored cigars. I ought to be able to entertain my friends more expensively. I won't stand this any longer. I can with one brilliant stroke make a fortune. Now, here goes, principle or no principle, heaven or hell. Who cares?" When a young man makes up his mind to live beyond his income, Satan has bought him out and out, and it is only a question of time when the goods are to be delivered. The thing is done. You may plant in the way all the batteries of truth and righteousness, that man is bound to go on.

This sin works very insidiously. Other sins sound the drum, and flaunt the flag, and gather their recruits with wild huzzas, but this marches its procession of pale victims in dead of night, in silence, and when they drop into the grave there is not so much sound as the click of a dice. Oh, how many have gone down under it. Look at those men who were once highly prospered. Now their forehead is licked by a tongue of flame that will never go out. In their souls are plunged the beaks which will never be lifted. Swing open the door of that man's heart and you see a coil of adders wriggling their indescribable horror until you turn away and hide your face and ask God to help you to forget it.

The most of this evil is unadvertised. The community does not hear of it. Men defrauded in gaming establishments are not fools enough to tell of it. Once in awhile, however, there is an exposure, as when in Boston the police swooped upon a gaming establishment and found in it the representatives of all classes of citizens, from the first merchants on State street to the low Ann street gambler; as when Bullock, the cashier of the Central Railroad of Georgia was found to have stolen one hundred and three thousand dollars for the purpose of carrying on gaming practices; as when a young man in one of the savings' banks of Brooklyn, many years ago, was found to have stolen forty thousand dollars to carry on gaming practices; as when a man connected with a Wall street insurance company was found to have stolen one hundred and eighty thousand dollars to carry on his gaming practices. But that is exceptional.

Generally the money leaks silently from the merchant's till into the gamster's wallet. I believe that one of the main pipes leading to this sewer of iniquity is the excitement of business life. Men go into the excitement of stock gambling, and from that they plunge into the gambling-houses, as, when men are intoxicated, they go into a liquor saloon to get more drink. The agitation that is witnessed in the stock market when the chair announces the word "North-western," or "Fort Wayne," or "Rock Island," or "New York Central," and the rat! tat! tat! of the auctioneer's hammer, and the excitement of making "corners," and getting up "pools," and "carrying stock," and a "break" from eighty to seventy, and the excitement of rushing around in curb-stone brokerage, and the sudden cries of "Buyer three!" "Buyer ten!" "Take 'em!" "How many?" and the making or losing of ten thousand dollars by one operation, unfits a man to go home, and so he goes up the flight of stairs, amid business offices, to the darkly curtained, wooden-shuttered room, gaily furnished inside, and takes his place at the roulette or the faro table. But I cannot tell all the process by which men get into this evil. A man went to New York. He was a Western merchant. He went into a gaming-house on Park Place. Before morning he had lost all his money save one dollar, and he moved around about with that dollar in his hand, and after awhile, caught still more powerfully under the infernal infatuation, he came up and put down the dollar and cried out until they heard him through the saloon: "One thousand miles from home, and my last dollar on the gaming table."

Many years ago for sermonic purposes and in company with the Chief of Police of New York I visited one of the most brilliant gambling houses in that city. It was night and as we came up in front all seemed dark. The blinds were down; the door was guarded; but after a whispering of the officer with the guard at the door, we were admitted into the hall, and thence into the parlors, around one table finding eight or ten men in mid-life, well-dressed—all the work going on in silence, save the noise of the rattling "chips" on the gaming-table in one parlor, and the revolving ball of the roulette table in the other parlor. Some of these men, we were told, had served terms in prison; some were ship-wrecked bankers and brokers and money-dealers, and some were going their first rounds of vice—but all intent upon the table, as large or small fortunes moved up and down before them. Oh! there was something awfully solemn in the silence—the intense gaze, the suppressed emotions of the players. No one looked up. They all had money in the rapids. Some of these men went by private key, some went in by careful introduction, some were taken in by the patrons of the establishment. The officer of the law told me: "None get in here except by police mandate, or by some letter of a patron." While we were there a young man came in, put his money down on the roulette-table, and lost; put more money down on the roulette-table, and lost; put more money down on the roulette-table, and lost; then feeling in his pockets for more money, finding none, in severe silence he turned his back upon the scene and passed out. While we stood there men lost their property and lost their souls. Oh, merciless place! Not once in all the history of that gaming-house has there been one word of sympathy uttered for the losers at the game. Sir Horace Walpole said that a man dropped dead near one of the clubs of London; his body was carried into the club-house, and the members of the club began immediately to bet as to whether he were dead or alive, and when it was proposed to test the matter by bleeding him, it was only hindered by the suggestion that it would be unfair to some of the players! In these gaming-houses of our cities, men have their property wrung away from them, and then they go out, some of them to drown their grief in drink, some to ply the counterfeiters, and so restore their fortunes, some to the suicide's revolver, but all down, and that work proceeds day and night by night. "That cart-rope," says some young man, "has never wound around my soul." But have some threads of that cart-rope been twisted?

I arraign before God the gift enterprises of our cities, which have a tendency to make this a nation of gamblers. Ever you get, young man, in such a case, without giving a proper equivalent, is a robbery of your own soul and robbery of the community. Yet, I am appalled to see men who have been in other enterprises go into gift enterprises where the chief attraction is not the prizes distributed among the audience; or to sell books where the attraction is not the book, but the price that goes with the book. Some of these gift enterprises are carried on in the name of charity; and some of you remember at the close of our Civil War many gift enterprises were on foot to proceed to go to the orphans and widows of the soldiers and sailors. What did the men who had charge of these enterprises care for the orphans and widows? Why, they would have wanted them to freeze to death upon their benches. I have no faith in a charity which, for the sake of relieving present suffering, opens a gaping jaw that has swallowed much of the virtue and good principle of the community. Young men, have nothing to do with these things. They only open your appetite for games of chance, one of two things; be honest or die.

I have accomplished my object in you on the look-out. It is a great deal easier to fall than it is to get up. The trouble is that when men beg to be astray from the path of duty, they say, "There's no use of my trying to get back. I've sacrificed my respectability; can't return;" and they go on until they are utterly destroyed. I tell you, friends, that God this moment, by His Spirit, can change your entire nature, that you will be a different man in a minute. Your great want—what is it? Money? Higher social position? No. I will tell you the great want of a man, if he has not already obtained it, is the grace of God. Are there any who have fallen victims to the sin that has been reprehending? You are in a sin. You rush against the wall of this sin and try to get out, and you fail; you turn around and dash against that wall until there is blood on the ground, blood on your soul. You will never get out in this way. There is only one way of getting out. There is a key that will unlock that prison-house. It is the house of David. It is the Lord Christ wears at his girdle. If you will allow him to put that key to the lock, the bolt will shoot back, and the door will swing open, and you will be a free man in Christ Jesus.

Oh, unhappy prodigal, what business this is for you, feeding swine when your father stands in the foreground straining his eyesight to catch a glimpse of your return; and the closer you get, the more you realize that you are all strung, and the feet free, and you are converted gamblers in heaven. The light of eternity flashed upon the baize of their billiard-saloon. Into the arms of God's forgiveness they washed their sin. They quit trying for riches. They tried for heaven and won. There stretches a hand from heaven toward the head of the worst offender. It is a hand, not clenched as if to smother, outspread as if to drop a benediction. Other seas have a shore and a fathom, but the sea of God's love—eternity has no plummet to strike the bottom, and immensity no iron-bound sea confine it. Its tides are lifted by the heart of infinite compassion. It is the hosannas of the redeemed. The argosies that sail on it drop anchor amid the thundering salvo of eternal glory. But alas for that man who has come down to the final game of life and lost his immortal soul on the ace, while the God keep the tally-board; and the kings and queens, and knaves, and aces are "shuffled" and "cut," and the game is ended, hovering and impending to discover that he has lost it, the face of eternal darkness clutching down its wallet all the blood-stained wages.

OUR FUND STILL HELPING INDIA.

Another Fifty Thousand Dollars Sent in Response to Bishop Thoburn's Earnest Appeal—Julian Hawthorne's Graphic Story of Misery.

A CABLE message received July 24 from Bishop Thoburn contains the welcome intelligence that rain is falling generally throughout India, exception in limited sections in the west and south, and that consequently the harvest prospects are considered good. To this, however, the Bishop adds the warning that the famine must necessarily continue until the seed now being sown can be harvested. The extent of this need must be enormous, as the Bishop reports that the money already sent has been distributed in fifteen missions and fifty thousand dollars more are needed at once. This sum was promptly cabled by the proprietors of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and the devoted missionaries are now fully armed for their fight with the enemy.

T. S. JOHNSON, OF JABBALPUR.

Ever thankful they are for the welcome aid thus rendered them, they send abundant proof. The Examiner, a Baptist journal, published last week a letter received from Mrs. Newcomb, the wife of the Baptist missionary at Curnam, to whom two remittances of $500 each have been sent from our fund, in which she describes the bitter suffering around the station, especially among the Christians, and speaks gratefully of the great boon it was to them when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD remittance arrived. The Examiner, commenting on this and other reports, says: "There may be a difference of opinion as to the action required of American Christians toward these famine sufferers of India; but there is no doubt that there is great distress in many districts, and the accounts, given by Pandita Enabai and others who have visited these stricken people, are heart-rending. We may throw the responsibility on the English government and refer these starving ones to the Foreign Relief Works, but these are proven to be in some cases inadequate, we rejoice with the missionaries in their timely aid from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund. There can be no difference of opinion concerning the need of the world for the Bread of Life, nor is it doubtful that the Church of Christ is the centre of relief for this famine which ever confronts us."

Finally the difference of opinion of which our contemporary speaks has not manifested itself among the readers of this journal, who, with one accord have given generously in the name of Christ and in his spirit to feed this afflicted people. Everyone who has given, however small the sum, must rejoice that he aided in this noble work as he reads the pitiful stories of suffering which continue to pour in. One of the most thrilling is contributed to the Cosmopolitan Magazine, by Mr. Julian Hawthorne, who has recently returned from India and who describes scenes, not heard at second hand, but seen with his own eyes. Mr. Hawthorne was the guest during a part of his visit of Rev. T. S. Johnson, Methodist missionary at Jabbalpur, who is one of our missionary distributors and whose portrait appears on this page. Mr. Johnson has been nearly forty years in India and is the Presiding Elder of the Central Provinces.

Mr. Hawthorne writes: "Mr. Johnson drove me to the relief camp and poor-house where there were scores of figures upon which I could scarcely endure to look. The fat of their bodies had first been consumed, then the flesh, leaving only gristle and sinew. Finally (what I should not have supposed possible) these also were attacked; there are left the shrunken veins, the nerves, which now but imperfectly transmit the impulses from the brain, which is itself anæmic and scarcely human; the wasted internal organs, and the skin, which is shriveled, cold, and dry to the touch. The abdomen, especially in children, is often largely distended, and tight as a drum, as if overloaded with food; and I have heard persons, looking at photographs of such, remark that these, at any rate, must have had a hearty meal. But it is not food, but the lack of it, which causes this distention. A child who reaches this condition hardly ever survives. The contrast between this abnormal rotundity and the emaciation of the limbs, chest and back, thalmia, which is among the consequences of starvation . . . Well, this is starvation. "I thought of my own children when they were this age. Hindoos love their children, perhaps as much as we do. Hunger and hopelessness have brought them to the state where they will eat the food that might keep their children alive, and when that is gone, abandon them. We can comprehend what this means of suffering only by supposing ourselves doing the same thing.

"The overseer told me that the number of persons on relief would be largely increased when the present rabi harvest was over. There had, it appears, been a small crop in this region, and all who were able to do so had gone to help harvest it.

"As we stood there talking, outside the neat little bamboo-and-matting huts which serve as offices for the overseer and his assistants, the sun set, and the multitude, parti-colored, ragged, naked, was drifting away over the dark plain, interweaving, streaming, murmuring and chattering. Some of them built little fires among the rocks to cook the grain. It was a strange scene—this homeless, gaunt, doomed throng, departing over the desolate wilderness in the gathering dusk. Many of them who lay down to sleep to-night would never arise again. I went home with the good missionary, who had invited me to spend the night at his bungalow; and when, before we went to bed, he knelt down and asked God to bless the poor heathen, I silently joined in the prayer with all my heart."

THE SAYINGS OF CHRIST.

The Newly Discovered Papyrus Leaf Containing Eight Alleged Sayings of Christ Written in the Third Century.

THE mail brings the fuller account of the discovery, already cabled, of the precious leaf containing the "Sayings of Christ," of which a translation appeared in this journal on July 21. We are now enabled to give our readers an exact was among a large quantity of other papyri, all of ancient date, most of them from sixteen to seventeen hundred years old. This is proved by the style of the writing, the shape of the letters, and the kind of contractions used, fashions not in vogue after the year 300.

The page was apparently torn from a book, as there is a folio number on it. It is written on both sides and is frayed at the bottom, showing that it contained originally one or more lines that are lost to us. It is evident, too, that the preceding page of the book contained more of the "sayings," as the first saying on the page we have is clearly a continuation and incomplete. In all there are forty-three lines on the two sides of the leaf, each line containing about four words. In some places the writing is obscure, and in some it is entirely obliterated. Two of the eight sayings it has been impossible to decipher, though on one of them the single Greek word for "beggary" remains, which indicates that it is a saying new to us, as there is no utterance of Christ in the Gospels containing that word. Of the remaining six, two are similar to passages in the Gospel of Luke, and one which is given in Matthew and nowhere else.

Interest, of course, concentrates on the three new sayings. The first of these reads:

"Jesus saith, Except ye fast to the world, ye shall in no wise find the kingdom of God; and except ye keep the Sabbath, ye shall not see the Father."

This, if genuine, is possibly one of the expressions Christ used like those in Matt. 5: 21-44 to show the spiritual meaning of the commandments. The fasting of the Christian was to be from all worldliness, and the Sabbath to be observed was the Sabbath of faith described in Heb. 3: 1-11. Another of the new sayings is the third, which is a summing up of Christ's experience with mankind. It reads:

"Jesus saith, I stood in the midst of the world, and in the flesh was I seen of them, and I found all men drunken, and none found I athirst among them; and my soul grieved over the sons of men because they are blind in their heart."

The unusual use of the past tense in this saying suggests the thought that it may be an extract from one of the apocryphal works, which purported to give a report of conversations held by Jesus with his disciples after his resurrection.

The third of the new sayings, which is the fifth on the leaf, is imperfect, several words being undecipherable. It reads:

"Jesus saith, Wherever there are . . . and there is one . . . alone, I am with him. Raise the stone, and there thou shalt find me. Cleave the wood, and there am I."

At first sight this saying looks like the work of a believer in pantheism, who wished to have some confirmation in reputed words of Christ. It has, however, been suggested by Prof. B. W. Bacon, in an article in the Independent, that we must look to Abraham building the altar of unhewn stone and cleaving the wood for the offering of Isaac (Gen. 22: 9), as the clue to the meaning of the saying.

Many interesting questions are raised by this important document. That it was written by a believer in Christ is probable, but on what principle of selection he made his collection of sayings and whether he knew of the existence of any of the Gospels that have come down to us is uncertain. Possibly a further search may bring to light other papyri which will furnish a clue to the character and associations of the writer, and so we may learn the motive which guided him in the selection of these sayings. Until then, ancient as they unquestionably are, their authenticity must be regarded as doubtful. At present there can be no test of them but that of agreement with the Gospels.

THE NEW "SAYINGS OF CHRIST."

(Photographs of the Two Papyrus Pages Recently Found in Africa by Grenfell and Hunt.)

is grotesque and horrible. I can compare these little creatures to nothing so well as to beetles: their legs and arms are like the legs of insects, and their movements slow. "As for the faces of these children, nothing childlike remains of them. The dark skin is stretched on a fleshless skull; the lips are mere skin, and shrink back from the teeth; the eyes glimmer dimly in hollow sockets, unless, as is often the case, they have been eaten away by the ophreproduction of the photograph of both sides of the leaf as furnished by the discoverers, Bernard P. Grenfell, M.A., and Arthur S. Hunt, M.A. In the story they publish of their discovery, they say that while exploring, under the auspices of the Egyptian Exploration Fund, on the site of the ancient African city Oxyrhynchus, which stood on the edge of the Libyan desert, about 120 miles south of Cairo, they found the leaf in a rubbish heap. It of the Gospels that have come down to us is uncertain. Possibly a further search may bring to light other papyri which will furnish a clue to the character and associations of the writer, and so we may learn the motive which guided him in the selection of these sayings. Until then, ancient as they unquestionably are, their authenticity must be regarded as doubtful. At present there can be no test of them but that of agreement with the Gospels.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

ABSTAINING FOR THE SAKE OF OTHERS.

Sunday School Lesson for Aug. 15. 1. Cor. 8: 1-13. Golden Text: Rom. 14: 7.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

OUR human nature fulfils "the desires of the flesh and of the mind" (Eph. 2: 3). The lust of the flesh is to please ourselves and to seek our own life. This is, Paul tells us, "according to the course of this world" [or age]; not only so, but also "according to the prince of the power of the air; the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience" (Eph. 2: 1, 2). The Divine nature, which was manifested by the indwelling of God in the human body of Christ, was the exact contrary; Christ pleased not himself (Rom. 15: 3); he did always those things which pleased his Father (John 8: 29). Far from fulfilling the desires of his flesh and of his mind, he sought not his own will, but the will of him that sent him (John 5: 30). The cross which he accepted voluntarily, and where he laid down his own life for every man, was but the crowning act and consummation of to his own will, which he had practised from the moment that he came into the world (Heb. 10: 5). By his wondrous life on earth, our beloved Lord proved that it was possible while in a human body, and subject to all the conditions of our human life, to live a life which is superhuman, a life of God in man. "He died for all, that they which live should live henceforth, not unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again" (II. Cor. 5: 15). If the Holy Spirit reveals to us this wondrous possibility, and he will always reveal it to those who are teachable, and who will to do the will of God (John 7: 17), the whole tenor of the life will be changed. In such a life, abstinence and all other such questions remain open questions no more. It becomes impossible to weigh in the old scales; "What would I like?" is a question of the buried past. "What would Jesus like?" and "What would serve him and my fellow creatures?" become the absorbing themes of a Christ-filled life.

A LIFE OF CRUCIFIXION

The Apostle Paul was writing the Corinthians regarding things sacrificed to idols. Should Christian men and women, who were bought by the blood of Christ, and filled with the Spirit of God, eat things sacrificed to idols, when by so doing others might be stumbled and think that thereby they were countenancing idolatry? Some had evidently argued: "An idol is nothing; I know there is but one God, and I eat this food, looking upon it as I do upon other food; it can do me no harm." Paul's answer was: "We know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, but love edifieth (or buildeth up). If any man thinketh that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know." These are great principles; and they touch all our life. Knowledge which does not bring forth love has nothing solid in it, it only inflates, and every inflated thing must collapse sometime. Supposing in a heathen country, a Christian can sit down at a heathen feast, perfectly untouched himself by all the idolatry around him but, by his example, strengthening hundreds of heathens in their miserable superstition, is he guiltless? He dishonors God by his knowledge and ruins his fellow creatures. Paul says: "To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we for him (man in R. V., unto him), and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him (R. V., through him). How be it there is not in every man that knowledge: for some with conscience of the idol unto this hour eat it as a thing offered unto an idol, and their conscience being weak is defiled . . . For if any man see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols; and through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish for whom Christ died?"

Now let us apply this principle to the drink question, which in many countries cannot but be a burning question. And we might add the questions of smoking, light literature, indulgence in amusements, and any other things in which men in this age fulfil the desires of the flesh and of the mind. We take the drink question as a sample of the others, on account of the gigantic proportions to which it has extended. You are, you say, a Christian man. If so you are a Christ man, a living temple of God, you are "a new creature in Christ Jesus." You see all around you men, women, and children ruined soul and body by the drink because they have fulfilled the desires of the flesh and of the mind, until they have lost all control over themselves and have become slaves to the lusts they have fulfilled, and you say: "Well it is no temptation to me, there is no law against it. I drink moderately. I think it does me good, the doctors prescribe it, and so I think I have a right to take stimulant." And the poor slave who is tempted, who has no power in himself to resist that temptation, is emboldened by your example to take that which brings him under an awful power of the devil. Satan suggests to him: "Can you be wrong to follow the example of such a good Christian man?" And so he hurries his victim to hopeless perdition, making use of you as his abettor in the murder of a soul! Christian brother, are you guiltless? Would Christ in your circumstances have done this? You may never have thought of the weight of your influence upon others, but "none of us liveth to himself."

We are bound up with the lives of others voluntarily or involuntarily. Many eyes are watching us, our lives tell more than we know on others. But in the measure that Christ's life slays and supercedes ours, life from heaven flows through us to others, and in the measure that our own self-life gains the upper hand, death and corruption flow through us to others.

Oh, the responsibility of being a follower of Christ! But, oh, the unspeakable privilege! God seeks to find expression through our human lives, and to breathe out his wondrous life of love and self-surrender through us upon a world which is enslaved. If he has our whole heart, it will be life to us to live, not unto ourselves, but unto him. But just in the measure in which our self-life takes the precedence, God cannot find expression through us; self finds expression, and we become ministers of death. We are "for him," or unto him (I. Cor. 8: 6). Made in his image, with the glorious possibility of being forever one with him as the Father and the Son are one, shall we, for the fulfilling of the lusts of the flesh, in so miserable a thing as eating and drinking, forfeit such an inheritance, and injure our fellow creatures?

Our rights, our personal freedom are the poor arguments urged by many against denying ourselves in these unnecessary and baneful things. True Christian freedom is explained by the Apostle Paul to be the liberty to serve. "Brethren, ye have been called into liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another" (Gal. 5: 13). The Apostle Paul was free from all men, yet he made himself servant unto all, that he might gain the more. (I. Cor. 9: 19.) All things were lawful to him, but all things were not expedient. (I. Cor. 13). But Paul did not consider himself or his rights, but Christ and his cause in a lost world for which he died. Is the following of Christ one thing for Paul in the first century and quite another for us in the nineteenth? It is a grave responsibility which the apostle lays on those who, without any consideration of others, eat meat in an idol's temple, "Through thy knowledge shall thy weak brother perish for whom Christ died," and he adds, "When ye so sin against the brethren and wound their weak consciences ye sin against Christ."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

CHRISTIAN ministers and teachers are often asked whether it is wrong to go to the theatre, to play cards, to buy ice-cream on Sunday, and about other practices, and to explain why it is wrong to do these things, if it is wrong. The Apostle Paul appears to have had similar questions addressed to him by his converts at Corinth. One question particularly perplexed them, and though it does not trouble us in this day, it is of special interest to us, because in deciding it, Paul laid down a principle which applies to the questions of our lives. It appears that when a man brought a beast to one of the idol-temples in Corinth and offered it as a sacrifice, only a part of the animal was consumed on the altar. The other part belonged to the temple and the priests. Some of this part was used in the temple feasts, but most of it was sold to the butchers, who put it in their stock and retailed it in the markets. A dispute appears to have arisen in the church about the consequences of eating such meat. Some regarded it as a deadly sin, and they were supported in their contention by the action of the great council at Jerusalem, described in Acts 15. That council, while agreeing to receive Gentile converts without circumcision, and declaring that they need not be subject to the Jewish ceremonial law, had expressly required of them that they abstain from eating meat that had been offered in sacrifice to idols. Others, who had more sense and no great respect for the Christians at Jerusalem, who had not been able to shake off the ceremonies of the old religion, appear to have contended that as an idol was nothing, the whole ceremony of sacrifice to it was a meaningless performance and need not be regarded at all. The meat was just as good as if it had never been used in sacrifice and no harm could come of eating it. The question was submitted to Paul for his final decision. There was one element in the case that weighed with him, which they had overlooked. This was brotherly love. Paul recognized that there were people in the Church who believed it was a sin to eat the meat and they were evidently sincere in the belief. The position of these people must be taken into account. If they ate the meat while their conscience condemned them, they might go farther and do other things which their conscience condemned and so a general laxity might ensue. No man can violate the dictates of his conscience without impairing the strength of his character. He feels that if he has done wrong in one matter he will not make his guilt much worse by doing wrong in other matters. Now lest such a result should ensue, Paul advises them to respect the prejudices of these weak brethren. The meat matter is of small account, but the fall of a brother would be a very serious thing. Therefore speaking for himself, he says if meat use his brother to sin, he would eat no meat while the world stood. The gratification he might enjoy was of no account when his brother's welfare was involved. His principle is the logical basis of Christian Temperance. There are some men who cannot drink a glass of wine without becoming another and getting tipsy. The safety lies in not touching it at all. If they alone abstained, it would be a concession of weakness very painful to a respecting man. There would be a stain on him of which he would be ashamed. But acting on Paul's principle, the Christian man who is in no danger of getting tipsy says: "I will abstain, too; it encourages my weak brother to take the same course. I will share the odium with him if there is any, and do all I can to help him." It is a noble thing to do, Christian, and it is a duty.

BAS RELIEF IN THE TEMPLE OF DELPHI.

Shall the weak brother perish? A man is affected by others and others in his turn. When one falls, he drags down others and the sin spreads. Society is like the party that climb the Alps. A rope is tied around the waist of the guide, and from him to the waist of a traveler, and from him to the waist of another member of the party, and so on until all are tied by the rope. So if one climber slips and falls, he is held and saved from rolling down to crevasse. An American writer describes an ascent, says that a Western man was third in the file of a party ascending Matterhorn. As they were going, he saw the guide slip, and in a moment he was descending the slippery path between the guide and the Western man was a Frenchman, who was a knife to cut the rope and bound him to the guide. Instantly the Western man struck the knife from his hand with his alpen rod and digging his heels into the ice, braced himself for the strain until the guide could regain his feet, and saved his life. That is the principle of Christian temperance. In view of the thousands drifting to destruction there are some who cut loose from them. Let them go; but the Christian course is to stand firm and hold the weak brother by the force of consistent abstinence.

This liberty of yours come a stumbling block A worthy Baptist deacon, the father of four bright boys, was the only Christian man in his town who opposed the temperance movement. This was twenty years ago, and temperance then was so strong as it is now. "I remember," says a friend of the family, sitting at the deacon's table and hearing his talk, "he had just signed the pledge and the boys had disapproved of it. 'Why do you make yourself a slave?' he asked. 'You are your hands by the pledge and surrender your liberty in a manner unbecoming an intelligent man. The manly course is to do as I am doing:—drink moderately. I would not bind myself so that I could never drink if I wanted to.' I kept the pledge, however, and the deacon let his moderate drinking and, I suppose, the day of his death, he was never tempted. But the boys! Their stories were sad ones. They heard their father talk about manliness and, of course, none of them wanted to be a slave, as the deacon called pledged abstainers. But none of them had the father's strength of character. One of them is washing dishes in a cheap restaurant, a drunkard who is intoxicated whenever he has enough money to buy the liquor. A second was thrown from his horse and killed after a drunken debauch. The third is serving a term in the State's prison for manslaughter committed under the influence of drink. The fourth alone escaped by signing the pledge. He was arrested for being drunk and was persuaded to sign the pledge. His worse evil should come upon him. He was saved, and is leading a responsible life. The deacon's protest against his liberty was to my personal knowledge the stone over which three sons stumbled to ruin."

What Iowa Did for India.

LAST week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD contained a brief reference to the report of the Iowa Indian Relief Commission, recently presented to Willie was washed up and dressed in clothes that were not "broken," so that the others hardly knew him as the "little ragged boy." His poor mother who came from Germany only a year ago and is trying to make a home for her children in the basement of a tenement house, was most grateful for what had been done for him.

Another photograph is that of Rachel K—the “little mother” of a poverty stricken home in lower New York. Rachel who is the oldest of six children, was overjoyed when she found she could have her little brothers and sisters at Mont-Lawn for an outing and the others were no less delighted. They are now back in their home again, having with them the pleasant memories of the golden days they spent at the Children’s Home. The third photograph—a bevy of seven little tots—shows a typical eastside tenement group, but far brighter and happier than before they came to Mont-Lawn. They are Lena (the eldest, a girl of 12), Sophie, Rachel, Esther, Louis, Willie and Maggie.

Many of our little guests, after a stay at the Home, show a strong disinclination to go back to the hot and sickly city. They have learned to love the hills and woods, and above all the freedom they enjoy so much. They do not want to go home and resume the old dull, monotonous tenement life that is so deplorably unattractive. Of course, this resistance has to be gently overcome, and at last they depart to make room, amid tears and smiles, for new arrivals. Some of the letters the children write from the Home to their parents and friends are very touching. One

Geo Rank	2 40	Corry	5 00
A B Meyers	3 00	Mrs R S Gay.....	1 00
Mrs Mary Platt	4 00	Total.....	$1,796.61

Contributions of Clothing, etc.

Ladies Aid Society, Jamestown; A E Atherton; Miss Hullskamper; In as much Circle of K D. 2d Reformed Church, Hackensack.

A New Religious Sect in Persia.

Within the last two or three years a new religious sect of Moslems has arisen in Persia, known as "Babees." Rev. J. G. Wishard, an American missionary, writes concerning them:

"The thing, however, which impressed me most here was the large number of Babees who came to discuss 'The New Faith,' as they call their religion. In Resht and in other places I found these people in great number, and I am told that even in the sacred city of Mashad, under the very shadow of the great shrine, are not less than 4,000 Babees. It is certainly reasonable to suppose that the rapid growth of the sect in Persia will have a direct influence of some sort upon the propagation of the Gospel. Will it retard or advance the Lord's work? The opinion is held by many of our friends that anything that will cause a disintegration of the orthodox faith, or in other words, that will break the power of Islam, must advance us toward religious liberty. Its tenets seem to be broad enough to admit into its fold almost any one who is ready to revolt against the power of the high ecclesiastics of Islam. This is well illustrated by the fact that no Jew would be permitted to enter a coffee house kept by a true Moslem, yet here in Teheran, it is well-known that the Babee Jews frequent the coffee houses of Babee Moslems. This, by the way, is doubtless one of the causes of the recent persecution of the Jews here in Teheran."

little tot of seven (Josie McC.), writes to her mother:

I hope you are feeling well. Emma and I are well. I get better food than I ever get home. Emma and I have good times. We all feel happy. Saturday we went picking raspberries. I picked over sixty and ate about ten. We did not get sick on the boat. I hope I can get leave off of Miss Collins to stay till the country is going to close. I hope I can be the last one, or next to the last one, who comes home.

A little lad (Willie K.), writes bluntly:
DEAR FATHER: I like it very much at the swings and in the lawn and all over the holl contry.

Willie's spelling may not be perfect, but his heart is in the right place.

Clothing and shoes are greatly needed for the boys—and garments and footwear

The following contributions have been received for our Children's Home:

Prev. Aik.	$1,530.21	Mrs H M Eddy.....	3 00
Wm Woodside.....	2 50	King's Dam Circle.....
W D Craig.....	3 00	Amagansett.....	6 00
Setauket.....		In His Name, E.....
Mrs L C Holden.....	5 00	Orange.....	3 00
A E Brown.....	5 00	Myra E Cornforth.....	3 00
Mrs J J Murray.....	9 00	Mrs P L Burrows.....	1 00
Friend to the cause,		Subr. Adairville.....	3 00
Brandon.....	3 00	, Louisville.....	3 00
Friends of little ones		Mrs H H Hill.....	5 00
.....		E M Hill Gre.....	1 00
..... Allentown.....	6 00	Children's Friend
Lawrence G Spencer;		Soc, N Y.....	3 00
One of His children,		Miss C Weiler.....	3 00
Empire.....	1 00	Ruby Giffin.....	75
Master's Helpers circle		Ryan T Edward.....	1 00
K D D, Newark.....	18 00	Saved by Thomas
K, Pawtucket.....	1 00	& Walter.....	3 00
Kate S and Mrs Al-		Friend, Soudan.....	3 00
fred.....	5 00	2 Passes, Long
One who loves little		S Methuen.....	3 00
child N W Charlton;		Friend, Bridgeport.....	3 00
C P, Sandusky.....	3 00	In Memory of Mild-
Ansel Vincent.....	3 00	red, Somerville.....	6 00

Gov. Drake of that State. The report, which is signed by Hon. Hoyt Sherman, Chairman, and Messrs. G. L. Godfrey and J. D. McGarraugh, members of the Commission, sets forth in detail the work that has been accomplished for India. We make these extracts:

With the aid of members of the legislature, we secured the addresses of over one hundred persons resident in sixty different counties who would co-operate with us in collecting donations of both money and corn and forward to proper destinations. Very unfortunately for the cause, as well as for ourselves, we discovered very soon that the quality of the corn grown last season was much of it poor, and in order to prepare it for a long and trying sea voyage through the tropics and in the hold of vessels without possible ventilation, and even for shipment on cars, we had to pass it all through a dryer. The only machine of the kind available was located at St. Joseph, Mo., and every pound of corn donated in Iowa for the relief of famine-stricken India, no matter from what point in the State it was received, had to be transported to that point for the necessary preparation for a sea voyage.

Every railway in the State proffered the use of their roads for a free haul of all grain donated. The railways of Iowa have responded freely and promptly to all calls for free haul made upon them, and their generosity and liberality enabled the people of the State to contribute in such large amounts to this worthy cause.

After referring to the obstacles the Commission encountered in securing transportation on the Santa Fe and the Pacific roads, and to the fact that after forwarding 9,575 bushels West, the balance of the corn on track and in elevator had to be sold, the report continues:

In making that sale, the Commission had to agree with purchaser to accept Chicago weights and inspection. The delay caused was very aggravating, though drafts were made against the sale and shipment at three different dates, amounting in all to $34,36.52 in favor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Dr. Louis Klopsch, proprietor), and all the balance realized from that sale (and from commissions) will be sent to the same party for transmission to India. The balance of the sum due from the Chicago firm being $321.92, subject to adjustment and correction of errors in weights and prices for grain below grade in quality.

The attached list shows whole number of cars received from all points in the State with donations of grain, 79, containing in pounds 2,650,310.

"Several sums of money, small in amount, are due from parties to whom corn was sold, but it was thought that it would be better to close up accounts, and forward all money on hand so that it might reach the famine sufferers as soon as possible, leaving for a future date the collection and remittance of the small sums still due. Carrying out this plan, news came to all Dr. Kiopsch, CHRISTIAN F. TRALD, New York City; DR. JAMES H. BAKER, Buffalo, N.Y.; and

Draft remittance from Bartlett, Frazier & Co., Chicago	$488.08
Draft remittance from Harroun Bros., St. Joe	415.44
Draft Col. G. L. Godfrey, Treas. of Com	1075.68

Total remittance now.....	$1979.20
To this add remittance made during last month to Dr. Klopsch.....	3436.52

Making a total cash remittance from Iowa for the relief of starving India $5415.72

This cash contribution is in addition to the grain forwarded directly to San Francisco, and sent from that city in a steamer (The City of Everett), chartered by the general government.

Nearly every dollar expended is for drying and preparing grain for shipment, the other expenses for postage, stationery, and printing being merely nominal, and not one dollar of it for clerical or other personal work.

Hon. Hoyt Sherman, Chairman of the Iowa Commission, is a brother of Hon. John Sherman, present Secretary of State. Major E. Conger, another member of the Commission, is the newly appointed United States Minister to Brazil. Altogether, Iowa, through its great-hearted people, has done a noble work for India and one that deserves the widest recognition.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

LOUIS KLOPP, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage

EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canada, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by early renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot list your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald will not be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-office at New York, as Second-class Matter

Policing the Bicycle.

THE bicycle has brought with it new conditions. It gives the mischievous man new facilities for working mischief. That mischief can be traced and punished only by policing the machine; only by a knowledge who owns a machine and what he does with it. In this country, there is little protection against the careless or irresponsible bicyclist. He can do a deed of mischief, commit a felony, even take the life of another, intentionally or by accident, and there is very little remedy or relief. We knew a lady, visiting in Washington city within the last two years, who was run over and left insensible upon the streets. The accident was fatal. The author never was discovered. We commend to our legislators some such police regulations as, according to an American correspondent of the New York Evening Post, prevail in Munich:

Every bicycle in Munich has to carry two metal numbers, one fastened to the handle bar and the other behind the saddle. These numbers are issued by the police authorities, and cost five marks ($1.25). They enable the police to identify and fine a rider who breaks a rule. If the rider runs over and kills any one, any person witnessing the act can take his number, go to the police office, and find out who he is, thus permitting the friends to begin suit for damages. Every one desiring to ride a bicycle must have a license, of course, and he has to pass an examination before it is given him. The numbers must be plainly in sight; no bundle on the machine is allowed to obscure them. The police instantly arrest a man who disregards any of these requirements. There are more than 15,000 licenses in Munich, and the utmost care as regards the safety of others must be used if they are to be saved from being forfeited.

Horatius Bonar.

IT is a suggestive fact that some of the most useful hymnologists have not been among the greater poets. And yet there is no worthier ambition for a poet, than to be permitted to voice the praises of Christian people. They are the people who will live forever.

I have come to the conclusion that, perhaps, the most conscientious of all English hymn writers is James Montgomery. And yet, probably, he would not be ranked by anybody as a great poet, the man who wrote, "Songs of Praise the Angels Sang," "Angels from the Realms of Glory," "Go to Dark Gethsemane," "Stand up and Bless the Lord," "Forever with the Lord," and some half hundred others of the best hymns now used by the Christian Church. Among all the great poems of Tennyson, you will scarcely find more than two or three that are suitable to sing in sacred worship; not more than one or two of Wordsworth; not one of Browning, only a single one of Mrs. Browning. And yet, as we have said, the enduring literature must certainly be Christian; Christian literature must have a large share in the life of the new heavens and the new earth.

Horatius Bonar, also, was content to devote the productions of his muse to the uses of the sons and daughters of God Almighty. He thought in verse, he felt in verse, he prayed in verse, Christian verse. Perhaps he was not so great a poet even as James Montgomery, but he has given the Christian Church: "I was a Wandering Sheep," "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say," "Calm me, O God, and Keep me Calm," "Go, Labor on, Spend and be Spent." Horatius Bonar's daughter, Mrs. Dods, has recently published an article on the habits of her honored father in hymn-writing. The article appeared in The Sunday Magazine, has been copied by Littell's Living Age of July 10th, and will be eagerly read by all his friends in this country, as well as England.

Woman in Hebrew Literature.

THE Bible is unlike all other literature in its exaltation of woman. The usual treatment of woman even in the best of literature, uninspired, is depreciatory. As compared with man, she is the subject of various slurs and innuendoes. Even Shakespeare, who gives us two Portias, one from romance and the other from history, who gives us Desdemona and Miranda and a hundred other beautiful women, has given us Katharine in the "Taming of the Shrew," just as he gives us Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice," as though the first were in a sense typical of woman, as the last of the Jew. He has made them both very unattractive.

Queen Elizabeth herself was not an ideal woman like the good Queen Victoria. And the difference between the two queens is largely the result of Christianity. Queen Victoria has changed the ideal of the queen in literature. As the ideal hero is now George Washington, so the ideal woman on the throne is a woman true to all her religious and domestic duties; a reverent and affectionate wife, a mother careful of the ways of her household, as well as a sovereign meeting all the obligations of empire. If we read the annals of history and story, we say of her, "Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all."

Occupation as a Protection in Grief.

IN her Journal of life among the highlands of Scotland, Queen Victoria remarks upon the frequency of calamities during the season of recreation. She had just heard of the death of the Prince Imperial of France, and she thus expresses herself: "To think of that dear young man, the apple of his mother's eye, born and nurtured in the purple, dying thus is too fearful, too awful!" And then she writes: "Always at Balmoral, in May or June, dreadful news, or news of deaths of royal persons comes, obliging the State parties to be put off." It is implied here that calamity fixes upon the season of recreation to do its special work. The truth is that absence from scenes of active labor makes affliction more severe, because we have no relief from it, through preoccupation of mind. Death has all seasons for his own; has not much respect for State parties or royal personages. It is, doubtless, a blessing, when afflictions are sent to us at a time when we cannot realize their full force; when we are so occupied as to be protected against them.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

AN ENGAGEMENT FOR LIFE.

"NOT weary in well-doing." What a hard charge this would be, if it were not for the promise which lightens its conditions! For in what war do the soldiers never grow weary? never faint? never become discouraged? And there are peculiar discouragements in the Christian warfare. We have to fight enemies so cunning, so powerful, so numerous, so malicious that we may well tremble and exclaim, "I shall one day surely perish." Ah, but how many do we count Christ our Captain for? And the legions of angels? And the immortal God who has promised never to forsake us?

Still the service is long and strict, and our engagement is for life. We can have no furloughs, we can have no truce; and after every action our dead must bury their dead. Sword, helmet and shield have been given us, but we have no armor for our backs and no scabbard for our sword. If for a moment we should look behind us the enemy is ready to take advantage and wound us, so that we may fall; so night and day, in sickness and health, in joy or sorrow we must "watch." Is such a warfare possible? Yes, through Christ strengthening us; and "We shall reap if we faint not."

It is not only for our own sakes we must not weary in well-doing; there are many watching us, and our influence is contagious. The world is watching, not for something to admire, but for something to blame. We cannot give occasion to the enemies of the Lord to mock, we must let our constancy under adverse circumstances, "put to silence the ignorance of foolish men."

The children of the King are watching us; and some of them are very "little ones." Some also are weak, and woe to those who lay a stumbling-block in their path. The punishment for a soul-murder we know not, but the pitiful Christ said it would have been good for such an one never to have been born. Even if the children are poor and ignorant, we are told not to "offend against the generation of the upright," for who has made us to differ? We must make allowance for the unreasonableness of the ignorant, and still more for the fretfulness of such as are suffering the stings of poverty, or the pangs of bodily suffering.

Angels also are watching us. We are a spectacle unto them as well as unto men. A great cloud of these witnesses is watching us. And suppose there should be some of these angelic observers compelled to testify against us at the Day of Judgment! For they do watch us, though we see them not. Therefore, let us not compel them to become our accusers.

Above all these considerations there is another infinitely awful and solemn. "Thou God seest me." With that eye ever upon us, with that presence besetting us behind and before, dare we to say that his warfare is a weariness; his poor a burden too heavy to be borne; his word of none effect, his promises of reward either doubtful or worthless?

Christ might well have been wearied. Indeed, he did perhaps know something of this despondency of spirit, for he was touched with a feeling of all our infirmities. "How long shall I bear with you?" "Could you not watch with me one hour?" are questions having all the languor of heart-weariness in them. But though want of sympathy depressed, it did not restrain him, for it was not gratitude or appreciation of the present which enabled and strengthened endurance; it was "the joy set before him."

And God is so patient with us. He never wearies of our cry for help. Every day of our life he renews our mercies. No upbraidings accompany his forgiveness. No stipulations clog the free bounty of his gifts. Cannot we emulate such divine generosity in our dealings with those we seek to benefit? Say they abuse our kindness; have we not often done likewise? How much of the money which God gives us is wasted on the follies of fashion or the gratification of extravagant tastes? Say they do not improve the opportunities offered them. Are we so guiltless in this matter as to be able to cast a stone? Are all our hours improved? All our advantages accepted? Alas! there are many of us who think ourselves good Christians, who on sincere reflection would not tremble to say, "Forgive me my trespasses as I forgive," or even because "I forgive them who trespass against me."

Without faith, the most absolute faith in the promises of God, there is no work in this world so heartlessly discouraging as Christian work. The seed is cast, and the heavens seem as brass above it. But went not the sowers forth with prayer? Then it is not in vain. Tears shall soften dull, cold eyes; there shall be light on darkened brows; from mocking lips shall come smiles of peace and prayerful sighs. The sower may not see the grain growing, but the summer of his life shall come. He shall keep "harvest home" in the place where sower and reaper shall rejoice together. So, then, be not weary in well-doing; we shall reap if we faint not!

Amelia E. Poir

BRIEF NOTES.

The number of missionaries of the Missionary Society is now 723, an increase of the number at this time last year. Of this are men and 252 women.

At the beginning of the century the population of New York was only one-fifth of the population. Now it is translated into a world which make it accessible to nine-tenths of the world's inhabitants.

A communication to the New York City says that the sum of $6,500 has been raised by subscription among the men of Chicago and Northwestern railway toward a building which will probably cost $35,000.

There is an odd love letter in the Museum—a proposal of marriage for the an Egyptian princess, made 300 years ago in the form of an inscribed brick, and the oldest, but the most substantial love existence.

Of the eight preachers at Westminster during July, five were American: Episcopal bishops, namely, Potter, of New York; Walker, of New York; Thompson, of Mississippi; Whipple, of Minnesota; and Sey, of Springfield, Ill.

Mrs. Saunders of Melbourne, the mother of the two lady missionaries who were killed in China, two years ago has offered to the Church Missionary Society as a memorial gift a large number of Bibles, and the fact that they were called to lay down their lives for Christ has not changed her determination.

Cheering news of Christian progress from Korea. Bishop Joyce of the M. E. reports that "all Korea is open to receive the Gospel." Villages and larger communities are now open to missionaries and other Christian workers in the divine truth. We shall have seven new men."

Christian Endeavor Societies in several States are taking a decided stand against the celebration of the Lord's Day. The Advocate reports that the State Christian Endeavor Convention at New York City, last week, was presided over by a large majority vote to listen to who had taken a Sunday train to meet his position with the Convention.

It is interesting to learn that among $23,031 contributed to take advantage of Rockefeller's offer and deliver the Baptist Boards of their burden of debt were subscriptions from foreign missionaries themselves. They gave $2,293. When men are giving themselves to cause their gifts of money are doubly honorable.

A manual of Baptist Home Missions just prepared by Rev. H. L. Morehouse states the force of missionaries and teachers maintained by the society for 1897 was 1,064. These represented seventeen nationalities, and educational work they control twenty-nine for the colored people, four for the Indians, two for the Mexicans.

A clergyman in Indiana administered the Lord's Supper to the members of his choir recently. He had sat silent when he gave out the first hymn, the service, being offended at some fanciful song. The congregation sang it alone. The clergyman changed the second hymn, substituting one originally chosen. "Let those refuse to never knew our God."

The conversion of a Buddhist in Japan is reported in a Boston journal. The priest had been bitterly hostile to the missionaries deriding them and their work. He led him to read the New Testament. He himself unreservedly to Christ and is now living as a weaver, having renounced his priesthood with its emoluments.

Mr. Wishard is authority for the statement that Young Men's Christian Association has been formed in twenty-five colleges in England. Christian conferences have been held at which delegates have been present from one hundred colleges to study the methods of evangelizing in England and America. More than a hundred young men have become Christians at these conferences.

The Northfield Training School for Women has just completed its seventh year. Its object is to train young women for home-mission work as pastors' helpers, evangelists, etc. Besides Bible-study, which is the principal feature of the course, instruction is given in music, singing, domestic science, cooking, making and nursing, thus giving the pupils training which will fit them to become welcome in the homes of the poor. Inquiries as to terms, etc., may be addressed to Miss Alice B. Northfield, Mass.

Ominous news comes from China of missionary disturbances. The old liabao, the missionaries with child-stealing and other crimes, are again being circulated in the country. At Yu Chen the premises of the missionaries conducted by the Brethren was attacked and utterly destroyed. The missionaries were to the hills but were pursued. By the aid of converts they eventually got away but they were slightly hurt. The names of the missionaries are not given in the dispatch at the riot.

Ocean Grove Summer School of Theology holds its third annual session August 3-10. E. Price, the Dean, has arranged a brilliant series of lectures. Prof. J. C. McCurdy, of the University of Toronto, will lecture on the Old Testament. Dr. George C. Purves, of Princeton, on the New Testament. Dr. Charles J. Little, of the General Institute, on Historical Theology. Dr. North Rice, of Wesleyan, on Physical Theology. Dr. George H. Morris, of Boston University, on Pastoral Theology; and many other preachers have promised to deliver addresses. Particulars may be obtained by addressing Dr. E. Price, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

THE RACE FOR THE POLE.

Polar exploration is again arousing public interest, but this time in a new form. The long-talked-of balloon voyage of Prof. Andree, the Swedish front, has at last been attempted. On the professor with two companions made an ascent in his balloon from Spitzbergen. The wind carried the balloon in the direction of the Pole, and when out of sight it was moving apparently at a rate of twenty-two miles an hour. It was known that the professor had a number of carrier pigeons with him, and that when a few days after he set out, the pigeons were found bearing in upon their wings to the effect that the professor had been passed, it was thought that had achieved success. His friends, however, declare that the pigeons are a trick and were not the pigeons Andree took with him. News of the explorer is expected and it may come either from Siberia or Alaska. He would have traveled about seven hundred miles to reach the Pole, and a still longer distance on the other side before reaching any place from which he could send news. The venture is full of danger, but it has many elements favorable to success. One of them is, that as there is no night in the summer of the Arctic regions, there is no opportunity for uninterrupted observation. The air-currents, too, are much less variable in the far north. The meteorological conditions which have prevailed since his departure, are said by his friends to encourage the hope that the balloon will carry his balloon directly to the Pole, but they do not expect to hear from him for several weeks yet. News might come at any time, if the plans were realized. Andree's companions were Dr. Strindberg and Herr Erikell. They took with them provisions sufficient for four months, besides instruments, and a boat to be used in the event of the balloon descending to the sea. The balloon would not be at the mercy of the wind, as it was equipped with an adjustable sail, which could give the explorers the power of directing its course at an angle to the direction of the wind. It was estimated that the balloon could be kept afloat for thirty days, and that with a favorable wind more than six days would be required to reach the Pole. The explorers believe that they have foreseen every difficulty that could arise and have provided for it. Just before starting, they telegraphed to the King of Sweden, who had taken a deep interest in the enterprise, and this was taken to Tromsø in preparation for transmission to Stockholm by the vessel which had carried the explorers and their air-ship to Spitzbergen. They are in excellent spirits at the start, and were confident of success. The region they hoped to cross is utterly unknown to man. Formerly it was believed to be open sea, but of late, scientists have formed the opinion that it is covered with great hummocks of ice, and utterly desolate. The attempt to explore it began two hundred and ninety years ago, and has cost many lives. From the time when Henry Hudson set sail in 1607 "to find the North Pole," but could not get beyond Spitzbergen, to the present, the solution of the problem has been the dream of explorers. After the ineffectual attempts at the beginning of the seventeenth century, no efforts to penetrate the mystery, of any importance, were made until 1773, and little actual progress was accomplished until 1875, when Captain Nares reached a point about five hundred miles from the Pole. In 1882 Lockwood, of the Greely expedition, crawled about eleven miles nearer. But last year Nansen distanced all previous explorers by penetrating to within two hundred and fifty miles of the goal. Several expeditions are now preparing to start, and among them that of Peary has good prospects of success. If Andree has succeeded in surveying the region from his balloon, he will be able, even if he has not reached the Pole, to give information which will help some other explorer to reach it. At present the explorers do not know what difficulties lie between them and the goal of their ambition, but if Andree can tell them, they may be able to prepare for them and overcome them. They will heed his story and will not act toward it as men too often act toward Him who can show them the way to heaven:

PROF. S. A. ANDREE.

Thus saith the Lord thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel: I am the Lord thy God which teacheth thee to profit, which teacheth thee by the way that thou shouldest go. (Isa. 43: 17.)

A Remarkable Memory.

Two opinions about the memory of a shoe maker in California were expressed recently by two of his friends, and each of them quoted a fact in proof. One of them said that the shoemaker had never been known to make a memorandum of the measurements of a foot. He would take the measure and make a pair of shoes that fitted perfectly, and still more remarkable, if the customer wrote him after an interval of years, ordering a pair of shoes, he could make them exactly, without measuring the foot again and without any memoranda to guide him. There was no question as to the fact, for the test had been made repeatedly and the shoemaker never failed by a hair's-breadth. The other friend, however, told a story of the shoemaker which showed that his memory, so good as to his trade, was unreliable in other matters. He said that he had met him on one occasion at the railroad depot at Dixon, Cal. and seeing that he was bewildered, asked him where he was going. "That is what I cannot recollect," said the shoemaker. "I know I have to go somewhere but I cannot remember where." He took out of his pocket a number of letters and read them over to see if he could find any clue, but none of them called for him to make a journey. He was just returning home to inquire where he was going when he came across a paper in his pocket which refreshed his memory. It was a subpoena, and in order to obey it he was obliged to order a carriage as the train had left which would have taken him to the town where the trial in which he was a witness was to take place. There can be no question as to the wonderful power of his memory, but he did not use it in all matters. The possession of a faculty is not always a guarantee that it will be exercised when it ought to be. Christ reproached the people of his day, not for being without perception, but for neglecting to use it in matters of infinite moment.

When it is evening ye say it will be fair weather; for the sky is red; and in the morning it will be foul weather; for the sky is red and lowering. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times? (Matt. 16: 2.)

Spiritual Telepathy.

Several remarkable instances of inexplicable impressions are given by Dr. John Watson (Ian Maclaren) in an article in the Independent. He describes one case in which in spite of a letter received in the morning from a sick friend announcing the abatement of his illness, he was so impressed with the imminence of his death that he traveled that night from Liverpool to Glasgow to have a parting interview with him. His impression proved correct; his friend had suffered a relapse and was dying. In another case, Dr. Watson while passing through a city street seemed called to go down a side street in which lived a family belonging to his church. There was no reason for him to call on the family, and as he approached the house he revolved in his mind an excuse for the visit. But the family had left the house and the new occupant could not tell him the numacter have occurred in his experience, and he says that he does not remember one in which he was misled. Psychologists explain such monitions on telepathic principles, but there is Scriptural ground for a different explanation:

Thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left. (Isa. 30: 21.)

Scaling the Enchanted Mesa.

Many romantic myths have been disproved by the daring feat of Prof. Libbey of Princeton in climbing the enchanted Mesa of New Mexico. The Mesa is a huge rock rising abruptly from the desert to a height of seven hundred feet. So perpendicular are its sides that no one until now has ever been able to scale them. All kinds of legends were told about the enchanted mountain. One was that the flat summit sixteen acres in extent was once the abode of the ancestors of the Acomas. It was said that they grew so numerous that it was necessary to cultivate land at the base of the mountain to support the tribe. The young men descended every day by a natural stairway consisting of a detached pillar like an obelisk which in some natural convulsion had fallen against the great rock. But one day while the young men were toiling in the fields below and only the old people and the children were in the home on the top of the rocky fastness, a great storm came up and washed away the sand from the base of the slanting pillar and it fell. The young men were never able to ascend to their homes and they built themselves houses in the valley and became the tribe now known as the Acomas. Nothing, it was said, was ever learned of the old people, the women and children on the Mesa. Gradually the faces that looked wistfully down from the summit grew fewer and at last none were seen any more and the Mesa was sacred to the dead. Even people who did not credit this wild story, believed that traces of ancient Aztec civilization would be found on the summit of the rock by any daring explorer who succeeded in climbing it and there were legends of vast treasures of gold accumulated there by the ancient people. There was, therefore great curiosity about the results of Prof. Libbey's adventure. His first attempt was made with gigantic kites but this failed. Then a brass cannon, borrowed from a life-saving station, was used and eventually a conical shot to which a rope was attached was shot over the Mesa. A steel rope fifteen hundred feet long was then drawn over with a pulley attached. A roughly constructed chair of boards was made and drawn up by means of the pulley block. A rock the weight of a man was sent up first to test the strength of the chair and the ropes and pulley. That being satisfactory, Professor Libbey was drawn up and reached the top safely. The remainder of the party followed and spent the day in exploring the great plateau. No remains of a village could be found and there was no relic to show that any human beings had ever lived there. Monuments of rock were seen resembling those raised by Indians ages ago, but it was uncertain whether they were not natural formations. There was no treasure, no archeological remains. The labor and expense and danger were fruitless. The stories which had been told of the Mesa were all fables. There are sceptics who tell us that a similar disappointment is in store for those who look for heaven at the end of their lives, but the Christian has no cause for apprehension. He can trust Him who said:

MAP OF THE POLAR REGIONS.

Showing the Farthest Points North Reached by Various Explorers.

"Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." (John 14: 1, 2.)

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

THE HOMES OF ASSAM.

A Country Known to Few, but with Many Attractions for the Traveler.

NE of the least known of the provinces of British India is Assam, which embraces the upper valley of the Brahmaputra river for a length of over 500 miles from the point where it enters the north-eastern frontier. On the north are the sub-Himalayan mountain ranges, on the east the forests and mountains that separate the Indian Empire from northern Burmah, and on the south and west are still other mountain chains. It has a total population of about 4,500,000 souls. In former times, the Assamese were Buddhists, but some two hundred years ago they adopted the Brahmanist system, with its divinities, its caste, and its idolatry. Christian missions have made some progress among them, and there are now probably two or three thousand Christians in the country. The climate is temperate, and were it not for the fever-breeding marshes, might be healthy; as it is, the valleys are fatal to Europeans or Americans. The fertile soil (much of which is peculiarly adapted to tea-culture) supports a large agricultural population, and valuable crops of rice, cotton, mustard, &c., are raised.

The lives of the people, almost without exception, are very simple; their natural wants are easily supplied and their little holdings of land produce for their families all the necessities for the average household. Our photograph on this page presents a scene that recalls those pioneer days in our own land, when the housewife and her help dressed, spun, and wove the flax with their own deft fingers, and fashioned it into garments for the household and into bed-sheets and table-linen. For many, many generations the brown-skinned housewives of Assam have been doing the same thing, with never a thought of any better implements than the rude spinning-wheel and the heavy, lumbering loom, with its weary shuttle forever passing from hand to hand. There is little doubt that the Assamese loom is older by many centuries than the looms of Europe, and that it probably came originally either from India or China.

Indolent and good-natured, the Assam peasants would, on the whole, be prosperous, were it not for the curse of opium, which has infected the country. They are lighter in complexion than the Bengali, and their black hair, flat faces, and high cheek-bones, carry a suggestion of Chinese physiognomy. Many of the younger women are strikingly handsome, but, as in other parts of the East, feminine beauty in Assam is short-lived, especially among the lower class. In their domestic relations they are gentle and affectionate, and it is pleasant to witness the universal respect paid to the aged, who are kindly cared for by their relatives and never allowed to become a burden on the community.

The Children and the Leaves.

When the leaves begin to fall, playthings are literally showered on those children whose eyes and hearts true sympathy has opened, writes Katherine Beebe. It is a commonly pathetic sight in autumn days to see a little child gathering the bright leaves with a wistful what-can-I-do-without-expression, only to throw them away. If he brings them into the house, they are often unnoticed and uncared for, and the most he can expect is to have them put into a glass of water and forgotten. Kindergarten children bring leaves to their teachers by the bushel, and the wise use made of them in the child-garden can also be made of them at home. The names can be learned; guessing games can be played with them; they can be traced, drawn, and painted; beautiful borders and patterns can be laid with them; tea-tables can be decorated with them; wreaths and festoons can transform the child into an autumn picture for his father; they can also be pressed, varnished, and waxed. In our kindergarten the waxed leaves of last October decorate our tables during the rest of the year for birthday or other parties. Baskets of acorns will be gladly gathered if they can be used, and in many a city kindergarten they would be treasures indeed. The double acorn cups can be strung by slipping the string between the two cups. These productions give much pleasure to the children who have to find the double acorns to string them, as well as to the baby-brother, sister or neighbor to whom they can be presented.

Family Prayer Not Declining.

It has been the custom of irreligious people lately to assert that family worship is declining. A discussion of the subject recently led to a test, nineteen representative men being interrogated on the question; and the result has been to show that while in the busy money-making cities family prayer is more or less neglected, there is yet a great multitude of conscientious right-living and right-thinking people, who begin and end the day with God. On this subject the Christian World says:

AN ASSAMESE HOUSEWIFE AT HER LOOM.

Common worship, to be real and helpful, requires a common consent, and this is, too often absent in the family circles of to-day. The householder is often driven to ask himself whether he is justified in imposing in this way his own ideas on people who do not want them. That Christian people, whether heads or members of households, should do their best to permeate their circle with a Christian atmosphere is as obvious now as it ever was. What is not so obvious as of old is the method of doing it. Those in responsible positions should see to it that the religious expression of the family life should be very bright and helpful, and that the endeavor to secure the influence, in the home, of the law and mind of Christ, be without arbitrariness, or interference with the rights of the individual.

A Midsummer Hailstorm.

One of our readers, Miss Lida Macferan, of Topeka, Kan., sends us a most interesting photograph, which we reproduce on this page. She writes that the photograph was taken during the hailstorm of June 24 last. These hailstones, she adds, "are some picked up in our yard, and taken by time exposure as it was 6.30 P.M., when the storm was over. The bowl in the picture is over eighty years old. The average size of the hailstones was from eight to ten inches in circumference." We doubt whether much larger hailstones have fallen anywhere, during the present summer, at least. Exposure outdoors, during the fall of such missiles (each as big as a fair-sized orange), might result in serious injury to man or beast.

During recent thunderstorms in the Eastern states, hailstones as large as hickory nuts fell at Flemington, N. J.; and at High Bridge, in the same state, windows were broken and trees stripped of their leaves by hail. Nowhere, however, did the size of the hailstones equal that of those shown in the photograph. In New York City, also, during a recent thunderstorm, hail fell for several minutes, flattening themselves against window-

MIDSUMMER HAILSTONES (8 TO 10 IN. IN CIRCUMFERENCE) PHOTOGRAPHED AFTER A STORM AT TOPEKA, KAN., JUNE 24.

ALD—in responding to Mr. Hoar's recent appeal in behalf of the feathered songsters of that State. But, in enthusiasm over the birds, we should overlook the claims of our dumb creatures upon our sympathy and protection. Letters have already been sent to this subject, and we give space below one just received from Mr. W. T. Wisner, of Boston, N. Y., who writes:

So much might be said in behalf of our dumb friends there is such urgent need of reform in the care and treatment of these creatures, many of whom seem so absolutely indistinguishable to us, that one hardly knows where to begin. Man is cruel, in many ways, upon animals; the animals depend upon man for food, drink and shelter. How faithfully the noble creatures fulfil the tasks required of them. But are not their value and services often required without treatment, cruel blows, insufficient food and proper care? How small a number of horses we see, have the chance of being properly cared for, and how many show signs of neglect when they are justly and kindly and thoughtful care. The cruel check-rein, and the lashing whip could be replaced by much more gentle treatment. The horse is well fed and cared for, he will not need the whip. It is important that children should be taught to be kind to animals. The boy who is so kindly to his horse is not far from being kind to all animals, and if the horse is badly treated, a few kind words from his master he has learned to trust. Many times prevent a serious accident. It is a serious matter to allow a child to torment a dog or a cat, for the creature soon grows to be the creature of the child. If we would have our children panes and sky-lights and amusing pedestrians, but the hailstones were small compared with the Kansas product.

THE OLD HOMESTEAD.

WHEN summer days are long and warm, I steer my course so true, To where the mist-wreathed hills and lakes seem ever dim and blue. For there, amid trees and blooming flowers, and rich and fruitful lands, The quaint, old house where I was born, a quiet homestead, stands. I tread a well-worn path once more, where heath low mounds so green, Lie "Father," "Mother,"—so it reads—and "George, aged just nineteen." The rest of us throughout the world, are scattered far and wide, But in this quiet, lowly place, they're resting side by side. I count full many a well-loved name that I have known of yore, Of those who long have "fought the fight," but who have gone before. And when my time on earth is done and I am called to go, Just lay me in this dear old spot, with those I used to know. —ELIZA CARR.

noble, useful men and women, we must it that they are early taught kindness to all God's creatures. Surely, there is true nobility of character without these special elements, gentleness, love, kindness, tender mercies are over all his world "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Royal Little Worshipers.

Queen Victoria regarded the religious instruction of her children as a sacred duty to be delegated to no one else. Of the Princess Royal she wrote in a memorandum: "I am quite clear not only that she should have great reverence for God and religion, but that she should have a feeling of devotion and love for her heavenly Father encourages her children to have for him, and not fear and trembling; and that the thought of death and an after life should be represented in an alarming and fearful view, and that she should be able to know, as yet, no difference of creed, nor think she can pray only on her own terms, or that those who do not kneel are fervent and devout in their prayers."

TUMBLING-BLOCKS.

Inducement to Spiritual Development and to Development of Others which May be Avoided.

Spiritual development was evidently in Christ's opinion the supreme object of being. In the passage associated with the topic (Matt. 18 : 1-14) and elsewhere in his discourses, he presents this as it must be self-evident. To him, position, wealth, social distinction, unimportant matters, in coming with entrance into the kingdom of God. Whether he spoke to Nicodemus, the national aristocracy, to the Pharisees, the nation's teachers, the young ruler, the poor fisherman, the publican, or the woman of Samaria, he placed this fact at the head of the list: there is one thing and one alone of human effort, and that is the inward of the human soul. To the soul regenerated and turned away from animalism of its environment, to the man set to longing for the heavenly, as he puts it, "hungering righteousness," is the supreme object of his life. He considers that there is no high to pay for this. If a man has some habit or connection as his right hand, or his right eye, which hinders his progress, Christ would have him sacrifice it, that his soul might be free. The dearest thing in life is ruthlessly cast off if it is a hindrance to the spiritual. As a racer divests himself of his garments, or a captain flings his freight overboard in a storm to lighten his ship, so a man should give up any attachment, which retards his advance to the divine life. The more reluctant to make the sacrifice, the more sure it is to make it. The possession of a habit, or the connection may be strong in itself, but if it proves a hindrance, it should be given up. The most object in life is the development of the soul, and to promote it Christ would have us sacrifice every hindrance. He would have us so free for the welfare of others that we will make sacrifices to promote it. So it is the responsibility of hindering and causing him to fall, that it is worse than having a stone tied around his neck and being in the sea. The imagery is startling. For searching self-examination, the blessings which may have been received, having been proved to be no hindrance, may have to be cast-off if they are a hindrance to others. We are our brother's keeper in this. We are to recognize our brother's difficulties, and take care that we do not add to his. It is this principle which touches the life in its sorest point. The hindrances to progress now are different from those in Christ's time, but they are for the same treatment. The modern civilization must be met by the same self-abnegation. It is not sufficient to prove to our own satisfaction that we are not worse for the drinking of wine, or a visit to the theatre, or a game of billiards. If our brother is interested with any one of these and is being led to earth by them, he may find it difficult to emancipate himself made free by seeing us indulge in them, and our conduct may be a stumbling-block to him. The boy going from his country to the temptations of the city is in danger. He may lose his soul in the city. What can we do for him? He has seen us drinking intoxicating liquor, or sitting down to a game of billiards, or recollection of the fact and the knowledge that no harm has come to us, may cross his mind when is away from home and is assailed by temptation. We may be the cause of his entering the city, which he would otherwise avoid, when he may lose his soul. Just at the moment when his fate hangs in the balance, when, if we knew his situation, we could plead with him to resist temptation, and wrestle in prayer for him, our example, may unknown to us, be the stumbling-block which works his ruin. These stumbling-blocks are serious matters, and the fact that we may lay them in our way in our brother's way should be a vigilant in our conduct:

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

My Hiding Place.

"Thou art my hiding place."—Ps. 32 : 7.

R. HUTCHINSON.

IRA D. SANKEY.

1. Thou art, O Lord, my Hid - ing Place; My soul be - neath Thy care
2. Thou art, O Lord, my Hid - ing Place From storm and temp - est wild;
3. Thou art, O Lord, my Hid - ing Place From strong temp - ta - tion's pow'r;
4. Thou art, O Lord, my Hid - ing Place My life is hid with Thee;

May fold its wings in per - fect peace, And fear no dan - ger there.
For naught can harm the hum - blest one Whom Thou hast made Thy child.
For Thou hast pro - mised by Thy grace To keep me hour by hour.
Lord, Thou art mine, and I am Thine, Tho' all e - ter - ni - ty.

CHORUS.

My Hid - ing Place, my Hid - ing place, When storm - y bil - lows roll;

My Rock, my Hope, my sure De - fence, The An - chor of my soul.

Copyright, 1896, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From the new book "SACRED SONGS NO. 1." By per. of The Biglow & Main Co.

JESUS, PRECIOUS LAMB OF GOD.

JESUS precious Lamb of God,
Let me feel thy presence near;
Storms and conflicts rage around,
Thou alone, canst bless and cheer.
Thou dost all my sorrows know,
Thou canst comfort and sustain,
In thy faithful Word, I trust;
Every earthly hope is vain.
Saviour, bid these storms subside,
Winds and waves thy voice obeyed;
Let me hear thy soothing words,
"It is I, be not afraid."
Let me feel thy promised peace
Falling on this troubled heart;
Scatter all my doubts and fears,
Stronger faith to me impart.
Jesus, precious, dearest Friend,
All my hopes are placed on thee;
Weak and worthless in myself,
Thou my all in all must be.
Sheltered 'neath thy sprinkled blood,
There my soul can safely rest;
Precious Saviour, Love Divine!
Be thou my abiding Guest.
Thou, though storms may bark assail,
And the tempests loudly roar;
With my Saviour guiding me,
I shall reach the shining shore.
Sin and sorrow left behind,
Tears forever wiped away,
Face to face with him I love,
Through a bright and endless day.

Stöyner, Ont.

MRS. W. J. KENNEDY.

TO THEE I CRY.

FATHER, let me cling to thee,
Little strength have I;
I am on a troubled sea,
Thou canst pacify.
Hear, O God, my earnest plea,
Heavenly Father, shelter me;
I can cry to none but thee;
Harken to my cry.
Leave me not in my distress,
Father, faithful Friend;
Come with all thy tenderness,
Thy poor child defend.
Often I am comfortless,
Sinking in my weariness,
Come my Father, then, and bless;
To my needs attend.
O, how lonely were my soul,
If thou part from me,
Worlds of wealth could not console
Or requite for thee.
If of wealth I had the whole—
Kingdoms were in my control;
I would spurn the wretched dole,
Thy dear child to be.
Father, just to thee I cling;
All to thee consign,
Sheltered underneath thy wing,
Safely I recline.
Thou my soul wilt safely bring,
To the land of endless spring,
There unceasing I may sing,
Of my Lord divine.

Noank, Conn.

—W. C. MARTIN.

SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Indications National, Political, and Social of the Approach of the End.

BY REV. G. H. PEMBER, M. A.

(Continued from last week.)

ESIDES the signs already mentioned, of the existing conditions of society, which show how closely our age corresponds to the description Christ and the prophets gave of the last times, there are others no less significant.

The growing impatience and irritability of men, arising from the abuse of stimulants and narcotics, and the painful pressure and excitement of modern life, are beginning to manifest themselves in deeds of recklessness and violence, such as may be found in the records of any newspaper; while lawlessness and crime of every description are increasing, and often assume shapes difficult to detect or punish.

And over all sin and misery the giant forms of still more terrible woes are projecting their advancing shadows. Europe is armed to an extent hitherto unknown, and has been converted into a vast camp through the jealousy of the great Powers, which are simply waiting for an opportunity of carrying out their aggressive schemes.

Yet again, the rapid spread of socialistic principles among all the nations of Christendom, and the numerous secret leagues organized for their propagation, are giving statesmen grave cause to apprehend a revolutionary outburst which may shatter the whole framework of society.

Nor are physical commotions wanting to complete the resemblance. The last few years have been unusually prolific in violent storms and inundations destructive to life and property. Earthquakes are frequent, and the shocks, though at present comparatively slight, seem by their ubiquity to betoken a widespread disturbance in the bowels of the earth, which may culminate in some appalling catastrophe. Famines, too, have occurred in divers places; in India, in Persia, in China, in Morocco, and in several other countries, while various kinds of sickness and disease seem more than usually prevalent.

Now all these things—and many others which might be mentioned, do indeed forebode disasters and widespread distress, but not necessarily the last tribulation, the final death throes of the world. For earth has had her times of convulsion, suffering and change, in former days. God's sore plagues—war, famine, pestilence, and the beasts of the earth, have often desolated her lands in past years, and yet the end has not followed. Nay, were we to feel the solid ground trembling beneath us and behold the mountains lift up and cast into the sea, even such a sight would not in itself prove that the great day of the Lord had come.

Men have often forgotten this, and, when appealing to Scripture, have too frequently drawn their inferences from an exaggeration of one or more detached texts, instead of carefully considering all that the prophets have spoken. Hence there have been many false alarms and panics.

A remarkable instance occurred at the close of the sixth century. At that time men had become so accustomed to the domination of Rome that they believed her power could only perish with the world itself. And so, when they saw her apparently in the pangs of dissolution, with her lands wasted by war, famine, and disease, to such a degree that many once populous places had become pestilential, they imagined that the world also had run its course, and that the last dread judgment was near at hand.

Our duty, then, is to take heed that we be not carried away by vain excitements, of which there are too many in our day; but we must be still more careful to avoid the opposite extreme. It is better to be troubled by many false alarms than to be once taken by surprise. The inhabitants of earth must awake some morning to find that the day of the Lord is present: and as a snare will it come upon all those who have not understood the warnings of revelation. It is, then, our duty to pray for wisdom that we may understand, and for the power of the Holy Spirit that we may watch. Nor could words be stronger than our Lord's injunction: "Take ye heed," he said, "watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is."

A DOUBLE OPPORTUNITY.

A STORY FROM LIFE.

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

By ANNIE L. HANNAH.

CHAPTER I.

WITH a long-drawn breath, and a motion of his shoulders as though throwing off some heavy burden, David Ransom paused and looked about him.

Free! Free at last to go where he would—but where was that to be?

There was nothing unusual about David's story, on the contrary it was pitifully commonplace. The old, old tale of sudden temptation under cruel pressure, followed by the fall which ended in those two bitter years of prison life. But now that his sentence was served out, what next? That was the question which flashed into the man's mind, as, leaving the highway, he turned off into a side road and flung himself at the foot of a great tree which dropped its gold and crimson leaves about him. It had presented itself to him repeatedly during those last weeks of his prison life, but he had always thrust it from him. Now, however, the time had come when it could be ignored no longer, when it must be faced and answered.

Had his mother been alive it is possible that he might have had faith to go to her, but she had died, "fortunately," he told himself bitterly, before his disgrace. He felt that he richly deserved all his punishment, and more than all that had come to him; and it was through no effort on his part that his sentence was greatly commuted. He would not have offered his blameless past as a reason why this should be; but his lawyer made much of it, and the judge, saw through the stony reserve which deceived others, and in pronouncing the sentence said some words for which the prisoner, though to outward appearance unmoved, blessed him in his heart.

In prison he worked with almost fierce energy at whatever was given him to do; welcoming the most severe and arduous toil, as though bodily pain and exertion might in some degree atone for the guilt of his soul.

And so the days and weeks passed away, the last day of his incarceration came and went, and David Ransom was a free man once more.

Free! He could have laughed aloud at the paradox. Free! with his hands tied! weighted down and compassed about with those two years of prison life? Who would employ a man whose last "character" was to be obtained from his jailer?

He had no right to be bitter, this man, this "common thief," as he called himself, acknowledging, as he did, that he had sinned with his eyes opened; but he was bitter nevertheless, and utterly hopeless as he looked forward into the future. He was no worse, he knew, than hundreds of men who daily infringe the spirit of the law, the letter of which he had broken; who richly deserved, but had escaped his punishment, thereby remaining blameless in the eyes which looked with disgust upon him. Among those was that man through whom he had fallen, and who still walked among his fellow men with his head held high, looking into honest eyes with bold, unflinching gaze. David might have exposed his duplicity had he been one to whom the punishment of the wicked brought satisfaction; but the man was husband and father to an innocent, lovely young wife and happy, laughing children, and he passed his opportunity by with a sort of proud satisfaction.

But what was there left for him? He had fallen once, and his whole life was to be ruined by what he knew himself to have been but a momentary madness. By nature he was honorable and upright to a degree, and had he but the opportunity, he would prove it.

But who would accept his view of the matter? Who would believe that a man who had spent two years, justly, in jail was to be trusted?

With a smothered cry he sprang to his feet and went striding up and down beneath the glowing trees, his strong, white teeth gnawing fiercely at his under lip; but presently he stopped suddenly as though struck by some idea, and thrusting his hand into the breast-pocket of his coat, brought forth paper and pencil. They had been returned to him, with his clothes, that morning, and that the edges of the paper were stained and darkened rather helped than hindered his purpose. Tearing off a blank sheet from a letter he seated himself again and deliberately proceeded to the composition of a recommendation. He had always written a good hand, and having done not a little clerical work in the jail, found no difficulty in that respect. He informed "whom it might concern" that David Ransom was a man of strict integrity; one who might be trusted in any family to an unlimited extent. As to his working capacity the reader was advised to let that speak for itself.

HE FLUNG HIMSELF AT FULL LENGTH BENEATH THE HEDGE.

To this he signed a name invented for the occasion, and dated it from a not well-known town in California, some six months previous. That accomplished, he rose, picked up his bundle, and with a grim smile upon his handsome lips, continued his journey. With every intention to deceive he had amused himself by keeping strictly within what he knew would be the truth were he to be accepted on his credentials. If he were not—his face took on a dark expression. After waiting an hour, he took a train going into the heart of the country, and after riding fifty miles or more, left the cars and struck out in a direction in which, the station-master informed him in response to his apparently careless question, there was not another line for twenty miles. He stopped and bought some food at a small shop, and having refreshed himself with this, walked on, mile after mile, through groves and over meadows, by dancing brook and glimmering lake, through smiling valley and up and down the sweet slopes of gentle hills till finally, just before sunset, he found himself utterly spent and exhausted by his unaccustomed exercise. Then, and not till then, did he pause and look about him for some place in which to spend the night. He had passed through more than one small hamlet, by many and many a farm, but had refused to stop till he could go no further. But now that he was forced to acknowledge the limit of his endurance reached, he was glad to discover, on leaving a lovely woodland road, through which for half an hour he had been walking, that he was almost upon a fine old farmhouse surrounded by its barns and outhouses.

Here was just the place for him to pass that night, and many another night, if his plan proved successful. He had been brought up on his grandfather's farm and was quite competent to fill any position which he might be fortunate enough to secure. It was not his intention to present himself to the farmer at once. He felt jaded and depressed. After dark he might be able to secure a bed in some hospitable haymow; and in the morning, when rested and refreshed he would feel more ready to face what might be before him.

Leaving the road he entered a meadow skirted by a tangled thicket of blackberry and sumac bushes, and thus sheltered passed on till nearly opposite the farm. A man was busy about one of the great barns. Anxious to escape observation, David flung himself at full length beneath the hedge, and after eating what remained of his lunch, he lay gazing straight up, scarce moving till the stars began to twinkle "in the meadows of the sky."

Lights shone through the farmhouse windows, and now a lantern flashed about the barn like a will-o'-the-wisp. An hour, two, three passed by and the lights were out. Chilled to the bone by the keen night air, and damp with dew, he rose stiffly to his feet and half walked, half stumbled across the road and up to the barn door.

It was deliciously warm within from the stored up rays of the noonday sun; and the sweet breath of the hay came to greet him.

With little difficulty he found the ladder leading to the loft, and in another moment had mounted it, and presently had made for himself a snug and cozy nest in the sweet-scented, springy hay.

Down into its fragrant depths David curled himself, drew the hay up about his shoulders, and straightway fell asleep.

(Concluded next week.)

100 Doses in a Bottle

Is peculiar to and true only of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and is proof of its superior strength and economy. There is more curative power in a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla than in any other. This fact, with its unequalled record of cures, proves the best medicine for all blood diseases is

Hood's Sarsaparilla

The One True Blood Purifier. All druggists, $1.

Hood's Pills cure Liver ills; easy to take, easy to operate. 25c.

A lamp does not burn very well, and eats its head off in chimneys, unless you use the chimney made for it.

Index tells.

Write Macbeth Pittsburgh Pa

A Summer Necessity
Makes the food more appetizing and digestible.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

A Cure For Rheumatism.

DR. J. G. CONNER, IONIA, MICH. writes

Dear Sirs:—An old friend handed me a couple of small vials of Tartarothine some time ago and on myself, having suffered from Rheumatism for several years. I was so pleased with its effects that I cured a full sized bottle, and since that I have been entirely free from Rheumatism during the past year. I observed that it is not surpassed by other preparation as a PR. EFFICIENT diuretic; besides it is easy to administer. Please send me a bottles for use among my patients with Rheumatism.

Pamphlet on the cure of Rheumatism by Tartarothine sent free by

McKESSON & ROBINS

91 Fulton Street, NEW YORK

Sole Agents for

The Tartarothine Co.

LINE
REVERSIBLE
COLLARS and CUFFS

ARE NOT TO BE WASHED.
Made of fine cloth in all styles. When soiled, reverse, wear again, they last ten collars or five pairs of cuffs for the price of one. They look and fit better than any other.

ASK THE DEALERS FOR THEM. If not found at the stores send six cents for sample collar and cuffs, naming style. A trial invariably results in continued use.

Reversible Collar Co., 79 Franklin St., New York.

DAVE, CHUBB, ANGELO, CAMPBELL, HARRIS

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite till you investigate. More artistic and enduring. Less expensive. Prices to suit all. Work delivered and installed. Write for designs and information. We will investigate.

NO MOSS GROWING. NO CRACKING. THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CLEANING.

70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD OF CHURCH FURNISHINGS
OPERA AND ASSEMBLY CHAIRS
SCHOOL FURNITURE COMPANY
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Most Durable and Decorative. Suitable for all buildings. Numerous references. Send for circular.

H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., New York

Home Talks with Mothers and Daughters.
BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

The Stranger Within the Gates

WHEN one goes away from home to pay even a friendly visit, there are certain obligations which belong to her as a guest. She is bound, for instance, to be courteous and amiable, to listen and deaf to anything unpleasant which may occur in the family who are entertaining her, to be as entertaining as possible in every way to add to the pleasure of those under whose roof she is for a time. All well-bred people understand that no guest who is in the household will be indifferent to the rules of the household. If people have certain duties for breakfast and dinner, she will observe these, even if these are quite different from the hours she keeps at home. She will never be late in fulfilling an engagement, she will be interested in the interests of her hostess, and when these come to call on her, or when they give her polite attentions, she will manifest pleasure and will be as agreeable as possible to everyone whom she meets. She will try to keep her room in order, and she may not find it necessary to be the hostess of any cares, she will not add to the burden of care which belongs to the keeping of every household. If her hostess has no domestic duties, it will be quite in order for the guest to stay a day, a week, or a month, to take up her own room, and in any little spare way to assist the mistress in whatever she may be doing. She will not always keep herself to the family; the ideal guest has respect for herself. She has her own engagements, her letters to write, her books to read, her walks to take, her occupations which enable her at times to withdraw from the family and leave it to its privacy and its own concerns. A mother once told her daughter who was going away for the first visit that, "I cannot tell you how to be except that of course you will be as delicate and thoughtful away from home as you have been trained to be in your mother's house; but every family has its times to be by itself, so be sure that you are not always in evidence. Sometimes go away by yourself, so that you feel that you must always be a part of the family."

The situation is really not very different when a person becomes an inmate, either for business reasons or as a boarder, in a family than one's own. If a person accepts a position as private secretary, governess or companion or as an invalid, she has of course certain defined duties, and has hours which are presumably her own, in which she may do what she pleases and carry on her own affairs. In the hours which are for the family which belong to her employment, of course conscientiously fulfill her obligation. Even then as a member of the household she will always try to act as a daughter might, or a well-bred woman might, not putting herself obtrusively forward nor hanging in the background, and then there is anything which she should do in which she may make herself useful and agreeable. People who sometimes act as if the whole household were for them, the fact being that the household is really their own is the worst of which they pay; and no amount of money paid gives one the right to be a burden to the comfort of others, or to be in any way unladylike. The household has fallen in to disfavor of late years, but it is a good old word to which I think it has its place. A woman who is not a lady is uniformly courteous, thoughtful and considerate of others. No one going this summer away from home expects to board in a private cottage, or in a summer cottage, or in a place where one can afford to forget her ladyhood and be a part of the household. In this world we are all bound up in one another. No one of us, on account of more

A RELIABLE MAIL-ORDER HOUSE.

O'NEILL'S

6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, New York.

A Great... Skirt Bargain for $4.98

THESE Skirts are made of English Sicilian, Rich Lustre, Heavy Weave, Tailor Made, Lapped Seams, lined with Percale and interlined with Canvas; Bound with Velvetene, full width, correct shape. ACTUALLY WORTH 8.00, SPECIAL 4.98

And there are over a thousand other bargains equally as good in our profusely illustrated Fall and Winter Fashion Catalogue, 128 pages, 8 1/2 x 10 inches. SEND FOR IT. FREE UPON REQUEST.

REMEMBER—We deliver free All Purchases (except Bicycles) to any point within 100 miles of our store. Beyond a hundred miles, expressage to be paid by customer upon receipt of package.

H. O'NEILL & CO.,

6th AVENUE, 20th TO 21st STREET, NEW YORK.

STAMPED Shawknit ON THE TOE

Are the half-hose one should buy if one wants the best—the best-fitting, the best-looking, the best-wearing.

SHAW STOCKING CO., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by Leading Dealers Everywhere. Descriptive Price-List to any Applicant.

THE LADIES' DELIGHT.

THE "HOLDFAST"

ALUMINUM HAIRPIN.

Patented July 25, 1893

Consolidated Safety Pin Co., Box 10, Bloomfield, N. J.

Also Makers of STEWART'S DUPLEX SAFETY PIN.

DR. JOHN'S EYE SALVE 25 cents.

Address CEROMA EYE SALVE CO., Pittsburg, Pa.

History and Description of the Tabernacle and Temple of the Children of Israel pre-paid on receipt of 3 2c. stamps.

TEMPLE BLOCK CO., Williamsport, Pa.

SACRED SONGS No. 1.

No other New book equal to it. $25 per 100; 30 cts. each, if by mail. THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., 78 E. Ninth St., New York

Lakeside Building, Chicago.

$18.00 a Week and expenses to several good parties to travel for our publications. No canvassing. Permanent position. Give references R. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore.

NEW DRESS SET, 10c.

A new and beautiful design set including pair of tail end rigid link cuff buttons, 3 studs, 1 collar button and new patent belt retainer. In 14 K Roman gold or sterling silver. Extra heavy plate. Worth 50c. in any store. To give you an inkling of our 1,000 Bargains we send complete set and large catalogue postpaid ONLY 10 CTS. 3 for 25c. Ingersoll & Bros., Dept. 61 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

OPIUM and WHISKEY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars FREE. B. M. Woolley, M. D., Box 487, Atlanta, Ga

HEROIC PERSONALITIES

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

The Deaconesses' Sheet Fund.

HERE are many kinds of heroism. The most common kind, and the sort that is most easily appreciated, is the dashing, aggressive onslaught on the enemy. Some picturesque undertaking like Sheridan's ride from Winchester; a scene which lends itself easily to the canvas of the painter, the tongue of the orator, or the pen of the poet. Then there is another sort that we life, flocking for sympathy and wisdom, I seem to see in her cultivated, sympathetic helpfulness, the shining keys hanging at the girdle that are able to unlock many a doorway that seems forbidding, and lead trembling feet through in safety to the brighter life beyond.

Mrs. Hull was at a Home Missionary meeting not long ago, and she heard a little talk given by one of the nurse-deaconesses concerning a poor sick woman whom she was nursing. The woman was very worthy but extremely poor, not even having sheets for the bed. The deaconess went on to relate how often it was the case in the homes of the very poor, that the luxury of clean sheets was unknown, even in cases of severe illness. The statement of the deaconess was a revelation to Mrs. Hull. She had known, of course, that the very poor must suffer many privations, but it had not occurred to her that here and there through the city were many poor sufferers who in times of hot fever and painful restlessness, never knew the soothing comfort that comes from drawing cool spotless sheets over the fevered body. As the good woman listened to the story of the deaconess, she remembered that at that very moment there were some splendid sheets lying in her trunk, souvenirs from her own happy housekeeping days now gone by, and she felt ashamed that they should be folded away in camphor, while God's poor children suffered for need of them.

She immediately went home and took the sheets out and sent them at once to the Deaconess' Home. Then she put a box on her writing-desk, and marked it "The Deaconess' Sheet Fund," and the money that can be spared goes into it, and her friends add to it as they can, and every time enough is gathered to buy a pair of sheets, they are purchased and hemmed and go on their way of loving ministrations. God bless the Sheet Fund, and multiply the people who shall live in the same heroic cheerfulness to attack the lesser demons that afflict poor humanity!

MRS. ANNA E. HULL.

can all easily understand. It is the heroism of self-sacrifice.

Then there is the quieter, but none the less sublime heroism of the saint in the bondage of affliction. One with a soul large, and strong, and full of divine longing for the performance of noble deeds, and splendid achievement, that is shut in like Joseph in the Egyptian dungeon, or Paul in Nero's prison in Rome, or some fragile woman chained to her sick-bed through weary months of lingering illness.

There is a heroism of another kind from any of those I have mentioned. It is the heroic spirit exhibiting itself in little things, that may help to sweeten human existence.

I have just discovered a woman illustrating this remarkably helpful sort of heroism.

Mrs. Anna E. Hull is the large-souled and genial-natured Secretary of the Young Woman's Christian Association, in the city of Cleveland. She is one of those strong warm natures which seem to gather as they go through youth and middle age rich sheaves of experience and wisdom, which it is their joyous ability to impart to the young who find in them friend and leader. I remember in one of Phillips Brooks great sermons, he says that every experience of trial and grief we pass through in life, and come out, by the strength of God victorious, we are given the key to that trial, and are ever after able to unlock it, and show the way through to others. When I see a woman like Mrs. Hull, about whom I see young girls who are away from home and mother and the guarding associations of home

Woman's Writes

Believe in Woman's Writes? Of course we do. Who could help it when women write such convincing words as these:

"For seven years I suffered with scrofula. I had a good physician. Every means of cure was tried in vain. At last I was told to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which entirely cured me after using seven bottles."

—MRS. JOHN A. GENTLE, Fort Fairfield, Me., Jan. 26, 1896.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla
..cures..

AGENTS Send 20 cents for sample of "Perfect Blue Skin Goods." Catalog of new Household Goods, and sample free of our new specialty. Grand sale! RICHARDSON MFG. CO., 6th St., Bath, N. Y.

DARNING MACHINE FREE.

Wishing to introduce our 16-page illustrated semi-monthly, FARM AND HOME, into every home where it is not at present taken, we will send it from now until January 1, 1898, for only 25 cents, in silver or stamps, and to every one subscribing immediately, we will send The Imperial Darning Machine, free and postpaid. The accompanying illustration gives but a faint idea of one of the most useful inventions of modern times. With this little machine you can make large darns in two minutes, against twenty in the old way, whilst by it the darn is woven right into the cloth, leaving no lumps, thicknesses, or blotches, the new part being entirely uniform and leaving an artistically finished appearance, with all sides exactly alike.

MENDS ANYTHING.—It not only mends stockings and underwear, but table cloths, curtains, and all fine goods equally as well, and is so simple that a child can use it. Remember this is no toy, but a well-made, correct and scientifically adjusted machine.

This is a special limited offer, good only for 30 days. Subscribe now, and the machine, put up in neat box, with all instructions, will be sent you by return mail. Address, mentioning this paper, FARM AND HOME, Springfield, Mass., or Chicago, Ill.

$300 Given Away

OUR NEW AND IMPROVED WORD SPELLING CONTEST.

We request that you carefully read all details below given of our new and improved word-spelling contest. The word now announced is Geographical. It contains twelve letters. Our offer is to give $300 in cash prizes, and an extra prize of a very choice book to persons who make smaller lists of words from "Geographical." This is the manner of compiling them: Heal, peal, leap, ape, grape, par, harp, clog, and so on; use these seven words and as many more as you can think of, but you cannot use a letter twice in the same word except G or A, and we will permit you to use these letters twice because they are repeated in "Geographical." After studying out all the words you can, write them neatly on paper, putting them alphabetically. For example, place all words that begin with A together, and so on, in order to facilitate the examining by our committee. No names of persons (such as Ralph), or names of places (such as Georgia), or other proper nouns, will be admissible, neither will we count abbreviations, prefixes, suffixes, obsolete or foreign words. No words will be allowed unless they are printed in the dictionary section of "Woman's World Dictionary and Reliable Guide." We therefore advise you to send for this new book at once, so that you can compile your list of words successfully. In previous contests the prizes have been awarded to persons having access to all dictionaries, encyclopedias, directories and books of reference in large cities and colleges. In this contest, as the "Woman's World Dictionary and Reliable Guide" will be the guide and basis of comparison for all lists, this contest will give every one an equal chance, whether living in country or city. It makes the contest a simple one.

Prizes to be Paid.

For the most complete list of words sent us in accordance with our rules, we will pay $100 in gold. For the second largest list we will pay $50 in gold. For the next five largest lists we will pay each $10 in gold. Next twenty largest lists, $5 each. For every list sent us we will give a new edition of the famous and popular story entitled "The Scarlet Letter," by Nathaniel Hawthorne, one of the most celebrated and fascinating books in American literature, neatly printed in good clear type, prettily bound and unabridged. This book, in cloth-bound form, has been sold at $1.25, but you get the full story free, postpaid, when we receive your list. We shall also award other high prizes; each same and of equal high valuation, to contestants who use our Dictionary, the only condition being that the recipient of a gift shall become a regular subscriber to Woman's World and Jenness Miller Monthly. Contest Ends Oct. 19, 1897.

This "Geographical" word-spelling contest will be closed Oct. 19, and your list must positively reach us not later than that date. This affords you ample opportunity to send now and secure the "Woman's World Dictionary and Reliable Guide," and compile your list of words according thereto. We agree that every person who buys our Dictionary and compiles a list carefully shall receive a prize of good value in addition to the opportunity of earning one of the valuable cash prizes on conditions in above paragraph.

Read Every Word of This

All lists of words entered in this contest will be examined according to the rules in the Dictionary Department of

"WOMAN'S WORLD DICTIONARY AND RELIABLE GUIDE"

A mint of information. This dictionary excels, in completeness and compactness of value, any book of the kind ever published. It includes over 50,000 words which are fully pronounced; it is a dictionary compiled up to this month with new words added. It includes a Practical Gazetteer of the World, giving most important information about every country, the globe, with populations, names of rivers, cities, areas, etc. It shows the values of foreign money, old coins, etc. It gives rules for spelling, also relations that every one should learn. This compilation contains the essential rules of etiquette in six books, teaching the rules of good society in public, in the parlor, dining-room, when courting, etc. Golden Rule helps. All about punctuation. Guide for making notes, due bills, etc., legally. How to use letters on business, love or social attachments. Definitions of foreign phrases. Elementary rules; how to conduct a correspondence on many subjects, what to say at weddings, presentations, school exercises, etc. A Perpetual Calendar, enables you to tell any day of the month for the last 200 years or for the next 100 years to come. The "Woman's World Dictionary and Reliable Guide" is handsomely bound in cloth, lettered in gold, in clear type on extra quality paper, is in every respect a most important and valuable reference library. We will send it by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of your list in silver or stamps. Address: MAN'S WORLD PUB. CO., 22-N. William street, New York City.

Closing Information.

After you have carefully compiled your list of words, send it to us, with 50 cents to pay for three months' subscription to our charming, handsomely-printed, profusely-illustrated magazine, Woman's World and Jenness Miller Monthly, soon as your list and subscription are received, the prize of the story, "The Scarlet Letter," in book form, will be sent you. When the committee finally closes the lists, directly after Oct. 19, $300 in cash prizes will be for the contestants, and, as above guaranteed, we will also give prizes of high value to contestants who have used our Dictionary in addition to the opportunity to win valuable cash prizes for largest lists. To avoid any mistakes, we shall send a copy of each Dictionary, which, when attached to your list, will insure it to be given in accordance with the excellence of your list.

In conclusion, we assure you that we are perfectly trustworthy. We have over $10,000 in prizes of cash, etc., a year. We refer to any merchant or banker as to our reliability. If you have not seen the Dictionary, ask him or her to investigate. We wish to also state, for assurance, that we always return to any dissatisfied person. Address:

WOMAN'S WORLD PUB. CO.

22-24 North William St., (Dept. C. H.), New York City.

N.B.—We occupy an entire floor in the German Herald Building, at above address. Our establishment is in the busiest part of N. Y. City, near the entrance of the great Brooklyn Bridge.

GOD CAUSES HELPED.

The following sums have been contributed by the readers of this journal to the various worthy causes mentioned below:

A Good Cause.	For the Mayesville Institute.
W. C. Smith... $105.51	Prev. ack'd.....$53.00
W. C. Smith... 100.00	J. H. N. Centerville... 2.00
W. C. Smith... 3.00	J. Eddy... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 1.00	RAJ. Summit... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 1.00	Friend, Roselle... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 30.00	W. H. & Ch. Toy... 2.00
W. C. Smith... $126.01	Mrs. C. L. Walker... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 1.00	S. E. S. Springfield... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 1.00	Mr. & Mrs. J. W. Godbold... 2.00
W. C. Smith... 32.50	Total.....$65.00
W. C. Smith... 1.50	Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop.
W. C. Smith... 6.00	Prev. ack'd.....$1.50
W. C. Smith... 1.00	Mrs. Sarah D. Dwyer... 5.00
W. C. Smith... $41.00	Total.....$6.50
W. C. Smith... 38.50	For Blind Mary.
W. C. Smith... 1.00	Prev. ack'd.....$5.00
W. C. Smith... $39.50	Mrs. R. D. Brown... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 1.00	Total.....$6.00
W. C. Smith... $154.75	New York Rescue Band
W. C. Smith... 50.00	Prev. ack'd.....$7.00
W. C. Smith... 350.00	Mr. & Mrs. Jos. Winter... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 4.00	Total.....$8.00
W. C. Smith... 1.00	St. Andrew's One Cent Coffee Stands.
W. C. Smith... 1.00	Mrs. E. Morley..... 475
W. C. Smith... 1.00	Florence Mission.
W. C. Smith... 1.00	Rusho Pollock... 50
W. C. Smith... 1.00	Sick Widows
W. C. Smith... $168.55	Mrs. R. D. Brown... 5.00
W. C. Smith... 2.00	Elim Home at Belle Island.
W. C. Smith... 2.00	Lucy K. Bulkley... 25.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Work among the Life-Savers.
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Friend, Nashua... 3.50
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Mississippi Flood Sufferers.
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Prev. ack'd.....$129.50
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Sam'l Smith... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Pathetic.
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Mrs. C. M. Gilchrist... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Believer in Prayer.
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Kent.
W. C. Smith... 5.00	R. B. Sutphen... 5.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Mary E. Huling... 5.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Mrs. Susan Pitts... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Parkland Ladies... 5.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Bettie G. Crockett... 10.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Mrs. D. B. Miller... 3.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Invalid... 10
W. C. Smith... 5.00	K. L. Roy... 2.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Watchful Circle
W. C. Smith... 5.00	K. D. Foxboro... 4.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Through Overt
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Brownsey... 2.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Jr. C. E. of Greenhill
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Pres. Ch... 85
W. C. Smith... 5.00	G. W. Wittehafer... 2.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	A. C. Coolidge... 2.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	S. C. Stevens... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Ladies Aid Soc.
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Bremen... 5.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	X. Y. Z. Leacock... 5.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	C. W. & A. O. Tull... 1.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	L. F. Phillips... 2.50
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Y. P. S. C. Wash'tn... 10
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Mrs. F. H. Perkins... 1.50
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Chas. H. Cole... 2.50
W. C. Smith... 5.00	I. H. N. Tarrytown... 5.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Mrs. C. M. Lyon... 2.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Friend, Jacksonville... 2.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Rev. G. L. Everest... 2.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Y. P. S. C. Inverness... 2.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Through Mrs. D. L.
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Grady... 1.50
W. C. Smith... 5.00	John Boothby... 5.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Imogene Hebb... 5.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Mrs. E. F. Alexander... 5.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	L. B. M. Warsaw... 5.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Dietrich Comedy & Cornet Co... 7.00
W. C. Smith... 5.00	Total.....$227.55

The Earth's Population.

WHAT will undoubtedly be the greatest census that has ever been taken since the beginning of history, was recently set on by the International Statistical Institute. It is proposed to take a census of all the inhabitants of the globe, and the results to be published on Jan. 1, 1901. The purpose is to include as far as possible every human being upon the earth on that day in 1900. Census-takers and explorers will be sent to the most distant lands and every available facility will be employed to make the work a success. It is with its vast population and its

G. R. ENCAMPMENT BUFFALO.

It takes via Pennsylvania Railroad. The National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at Buffalo, August 23, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell special tickets on its system to Buffalo and return for a single fare for the round trip. These tickets will be sold and will be good going on August 23, and good to return not earlier than August 27, nor later than August 31, 1897.

If you're not feeling well do not experiment with unknown and untried blood medicine. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the standard. It is the one true blood purifier. Hood's Cures.

Tartar and Asiatic dependencies: China with her teeming millions; Africa, Afghanistan, Persia, Asiatic Turkey, the Arctic will be included in the enumeration. A European statistician, says:

"For many years past the common estimate of the number of the world's inhabitants has been 1,500,000,000—i. e., about thirty inhabitants to every square mile of land on the globe. If all these inhabitants could be arranged in a row, standing shoulder touching shoulder, there are enough of them to completely encircle the earth at the equator, where it is about 25,000 miles around, no less than 22 3/4 times! twenty-two complete circles of human beings, shoulder to shoulder, and three quarters of another such circle, standing round the globe where its girth is greatest—that is the spectacle that would be presented. But it is probable that the inhabitants of the earth are much more numerous than the estimate given above shows. One of the latest estimates made in Germany assigns no less than 1,700,000,000 as the population of the earth. That would add three complete circles to our imaginary rows of human beings ringing the globe. Taking 400,000,000 as the population of China (and that estimate may be much too small) there would be six globe encircling rings of Chinamen alone. There are unquestionably more Mongolians on the planet than there are members of any other race of mankind. Only by intellectual superiority do Europe and America hold the lead on the globe."

A Dilemma And the Way Out.

There are thousands of Hay-Fever and Asthma sufferers who cannot resort to a change of climate during their annual attacks, either because of the expense or because duties at home will not permit their absence. They have to stay and suffer.

There are many, also, who are year by year finding that places heretofore exempt are becoming less and less so, and they must move on to find new locations where they can escape the Hay-Fever fiend.

Now this is all wrong. When doctors tell you that Hay-Fever cannot be cured, they simply mean that they cannot cure you.

What is it that makes one man have Hay-Fever or Asthma and another escape entirely right by his side, exposed to the same pollen, same dust, same influences?

The dust is not the cause; the pollen is not the cause; nasal growths are not the cause.

The disease is in the blood and nervous system; and it is the constitutional pre-disposition that gives power to the dust or pollen or other exciting influences, to awaken the disease and make one man suffer while another goes free.

Our constitutional treatment for Asthma and Hay-Fever is addressed to this pre-disposition, and by changing the constitution, eradicates the cause and cures to stay cured, taking out of a man that which makes him different from the man who has no disease, and giving a robust body strong and healthful.

That these statements are correct, and that our treatment does just what we say, is testified to by thousands who have tried it and know whereof they speak. A few of the grateful words of former sufferers appear herewith. You can have the names and addresses of more than two thousand more if you wish them.

You cannot afford to neglect investigating this matter fully. Write to us for further information. Address is a dangerous disease, though generally considered of little significance, owing to the fact that comparatively few people understand its true cause or consequences. Thousands of people who are suffering from epilepsy, apoplexy, insanity, paralysis, weak minds, heart trouble, etc., have not the remotest idea that their disease is attributable to repeated or prolonged attacks of headache. The cause of headache is a derangement of the nerve centres of the brain, which in turn affect other portions of the body and develop serious and fatal diseases. Thus it will readily be understood why it is a most dangerous disease.

DR. HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

Head-ache

Dr. Miles' Nervine Restores Health.

Mr. John J. Kirk, of Elkhart, Ind., writes: "I was a great sufferer from repeated attacks of headache that often obliged me to take to bed. Dr. Miles' Nervine entirely cured me."

First bottle guaranteed to benefit. Book free DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind.

$18 a Week Easy. You work right around home. A broad new thing. No trouble to make $18 a week easy. Write to us quick, you will be surprised at how easy it can be done. Send us your address any way. It will be for your interest to investigate. Write today. You can positively make $18 a week easy. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box A-F, Detroit, Mich.

FREE TO BALD HEADS. We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp diseases. Address, Altenheim Medical Dispensary, Dept. N. A., Box 779, Cincinnati, O.

"I have not had Asthma since taking your treatment for six weeks in 1893, nor have I had any symptoms of it. You can put in your name for me. I am a well man." T. L. RANDOLPH, Cameron, Texas. April 23, 1897.

"I am glad to add my testimony to the hundreds of others, as to the benefit derived from your treatment last season. It is the only relief for Hay-Fever that I have found in thirty years. My general health is much better and have had no trouble with colds the past winter." MRS. H. L. PHELPS, Springfield, Ill.

"I take this opportunity of making known the fact that your treatment last fall for Hay-Fever certainly did wonders for me. I am glad to lend you my name in your work for suffering humanity. I have suffered from hayfever with Hay-Fever Asthma until I found you last year. In former years the disease rendered me unfit for work or sleep. After beginning your treatment I had no Asthma at all and I felt much improved in every respect. I am now fifty years old." A. M. CLOUD, Springdale, Tenn.

"Having suffered acutely from Hay-Fever for twenty years, and finding relief only in Europe or the mountains, it needed only a few days' trial of your treatment to find perfect relief. I took the medicines six weeks last season and their effect upon my system was constantly beneficial in every way. I sleep, eat and work as well as ever, my complexion is clearer than for years, and during the past winter, although the weather has been very trying, I have been absolutely free from any colds or coughs." RALPH EMERSON, 131 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

"In reply to yours of the 19th, will say that I cheerfully endorse and recommend your treatment for Hay-Fever. Having been a sufferer for eighteen years with an annual attack lasting from six to eight weeks, and after trying all remedies to which my attention was directed, I commenced using your treatment three years ago. The first year I was greatly helped by the treatment; the next season the attack was not so violent, and last season was so slight as to cause me very little annoyance. I believe that the treatment this year will effect a permanent cure." J. W. BREWSTER, U.S. Commissioner for the Circuit Court, District of Colo. Cripple Creek, Colo., March 31, '97.

"I did not send you a report of my condition because I felt so well that I discontinued the use of the medicines. I scarcely know how to thank you for the good results your medicines produced in making the dreaded Hay-Fever and Asthma bearable to me. Every year during the Fever season, I have had to leave the city at great expense and inconvenience to myself and then suffered from the Asthma on my return. I tried every remedy suggested by friends, had operations performed upon my throat and nose, but to no purpose. Since I started to take your medicines, I have been absolutely free from Asthma and remained quietly at home happy and grateful. If you desire, you may publish this in order that your medicines may do for other sufferers what they have done for me." Respectfully yours, REV. M. MESSING, 285 N. Delaware St., Oct. 9th, 1896. Indianapolis, Ind.

DIREFUL RHEUMATISM

Cured by a New Remedy.

15,000 Trial Packages FREE

To the Readers of this Paper.

For Rheumatism

that foe of mankind, I have a simple remedy which has proven its wonderful curative power in thousands of apparently hopeless cases, in fact, so pronounced have been the cures, that multitudes of former sufferers consider it nature's antidote for rheumatism. Many a bedridden person, also some, who walked on crutches regained their health through this marvelous cure and in order that every similarly afflicted reader or their friends may learn about it, I will gladly mail them a Trial Package with directions for use and information Free, even if more than 15,000 should apply. Distressing cases of rheumatism from 20 to 40 years standing yielded to the benign influence of this remedy of which I mention a few: In Pittsburg, Ind., it cured a druggist whose rheumatism dated back as far as the civil war. In Kenterville, Idaho, it cured a man who was bedridden for 15 years. In Fountain City, Wis., it cured a man who suffered for 33 years notwithstanding employing 7 physicians. In Seguin, Texas, it cured a man who was afflicted for 41 years. In Amsterdam, N. Y., it cured a lady (Mrs. P. Persohn) who nearly became insane from pain. Mrs. John D. Engel, 1316 Patterson Ave., Baltimore, Md., was cured after suffering for 9 years, of which she spent 2 years on crutches. Mrs. M. Uebe in Windom, Minn., writes: I am 62 years old and was cured after suffering for 22 years. The original letters of above cures, besides thousands of others can be seen at my office. No one should despair but write for a Free Trial Package and other information. Address:

JOHN A. SMITH,
No. 188 Summerfield Church Bldg.
MILWAUKEE, WIS.

A RARE CHANCE.

The opportunity is offered for making money rapidly and with little effort.

BROWN'S PATENT PICTURE HOOK

can be fixed to the wall without searching for beams, can be transferred from place to place without defacing the plaster; exceedingly ornamental; superior to any picture nail. Guaranteed to bear 100 pounds weight. Send 10 cents for sample; 50 cents per dozen.

H. G. TAYLOR,
171 St. Nicholas Ave., New York

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 PURE

There are only a few brands of manufactured articles that are kept by all grocers, Ivory Soap is one of these.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINTI.

Burglars won't bother a street or house that is well lighted. The STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN CO.'s Tubular Globe Street Lamp is equal to gas. Cannot blow out. Can be set to burn from 4 to 16 hours, and gives 4 hours' light for a cent.

Buy it of your dealer. He has it, or can get it. Send for catalogue, prices and detailed description. Please mention this paper. STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN COMPANY, Syracuse, N. Y.

A Luxury

in writing is to suit pencil to paper. The Dixon pencils are made hard for rough paper, soft for a smooth surface, medium for general use—always smooth—never brittle.

DIXON'S

American Graphite

Pencils

If your dealer does not keep them send 16 cents for pencils worth double the money.

Jos. Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City, N. J.

SPENCERIAN PENS

WRITE WELL WEAR LONG
ONCE TRIED ALWAYS USED

Samples sent on receipt of return postage—2 cents.

NEW LADIES GIRDLE, 20c.

LATEST STYLE. JUST OUT.

All white metal ribbon girdle or belt; continuous piece of unbreakable metal 28 inches long with over 300 slots for ribbon. Sterling silver plate, beautiful embossed buckle; complete with best silk ribbon; adjustable to any size; store price 50c. Our price, with large catalogue post-paid, daily 25c. 2 for $50. B. H. Taggart & Bro., 65 Cortlandt St., Dept. 50, N. Y.

BOYS AND GIRLS

Watches, Clocks, Ten Sets and Toilet Sets, with $5, $7 and $10 orders. Now is your chance to get orders for our TEAS, COFFEES, Etc. Send for new Free Circular and Price List.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y. P. O. Box 250.

500 Celebrated "Syracuse" Bicycles. New in original crates. Surplus stock must be sold at once. Large stock well-known makes. $10 to $50. Shipped on approval. Send for List. T. Brown-Lewis Cycle Co. Chicago.

"Good wives grow fair in the light of their works," especially if they use

You Risk Nothing

by giving our brush a trial. If you do not find it to be as represented after six months' use, bring it back and we will refund the money.

What can be fairer?

Dr. Scott's Electric Hair Brush

IS WARRANTED TO CURE

Nervous Headache in 5 minutes! Bilious Headache in 5 minutes! Neuralgia in 5 minutes! Dandruff and diseases of the scalp! Prevents falling hair and baldness! Makes the hair grow long and glossy!

Prices: No. 1 Hair Brush, $1. No. 2 Hair Brush, $1.50. No. 3 Hair Brush, $2. No. 4 Hair Brush, $2.50. No. 5 Hair Brush, $3.

Quality the same in all; the price differs only according to size and power.

For Sale at Druggists and Dry Goods Stores.

Ask for Dr. Scott's; take no other; or we will send on approval, postpaid, on receipt of price and ten cents for postage, and if you are not well satisfied with your bargain, write us and we will return the money.

"The Doctor's Story," a valuable book giving information concerning all our goods, sent on request. Quick sales. Liberal pay. Agents Wanted. Satisfaction guaranteed.

GEO. A. SCOTT,

Room 7, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

"Sanitas"

Disinfecting Fluid destroys the microbes of

Scarlet Fever	in 2 1/2 minutes,
Typhoid Fever	5 1/2 "
Diphtheria	4 1/2 "
Consumption	5 "
Asiatic Cholera	6 "

Tests made by Dr. A. B. Griffiths, F.R.S., F.C.S.

"How to Disinfect," an illustrated book giving practical instruction for disinfection in everyday life and during cases of infectious illness, sent free.

The American & Continental "Sanitas" Co. Ltd.

636 to 642 West 55th St., New York City.

Bale Your Hay

A reliable HAND HAY PRESS,

Cheap, Simple and very Strong. THREE SIZES.

Manufactured only by

HOBSON & CO., No. 4 Stone St., New York.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power.

Hay or Straw 46 Inch Feed Opening Bell

Power Leverage 64 to 1 STEEL

Largest line in the world. Send for Catalog.

COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

600 Second BICYCLES

to close out. All makes, 6000

AS NEW, $5 to $15. NEW, HIGH GRADE '90 Models, fully guaranteed, $16 to $24.

'91 Models $20 to $30. Shipped anywhere on approval

Special Clearing Sale.

EARN A BICYCLE by helping advertise us. We will give one agent to each town FREE

Use of sample wheel to introduce them.

Write at once for our Special Offer.

D. F. READ CYCLE CO., WARREN AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

8% Absolutely Safe Municipal Security. Bought largely by best Banks and Trust Companies

Write for details. ROBERT E. STRAHORN

& CO., Equitable Building, Boston, Mass.

An Exceptional Opportunity

To Secure a Beautiful and Useful Book at a Bargain

THE CHURCH AT HOME

By...

Bishop John H. Vincent,
D. D., LL.D.,

Is the title of a magnificent manual for family worship and home teaching, and a book that should be in every Christian home in the land, and those who are fortunate enough to secure a copy of this book will find a delightful companion. It contains 480 pages,

210 ILLUSTRATIONS,

TWO BEAUTIFUL COLORED PICTURES, THE LORD'S PRAYER and THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

LESSON, HYMN and PRAYER FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, constituting a complete family worship for the whole year.

READINGS and MEDITATIONS FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS: NEW YEAR'S DAY, GOOD FRIDAY, EASTER, WHIT SUNDAY, INDEPENDENCE DAY, THANKSGIVING DAY, CHRISTMAS DAY, AND DAYS OF AFFLICTION.

Memory Texts for Every Day in the Year,
The Church Steps,
Home Lessons,
Special Collects,
Bible Biography.

Picture Lessons for Children,
Old and New Tunes,
Wisdom in Proverbs,
Blank Pages for Letters and Autographs.

ALTOGETHER IT IS THE COMPLETE HELP FOR THE WORK OF THE PULPIT.

By the purchase of the entire stock from the original publishers, we are enabled to offer the subscribers of "The Christian Herald" ONLY a remarkable bargain, provided stock is not exhausted when your order is received, as follows:

Cloth, Illuminated Cover, former price $3.00.	Special Price $1.50
Half Morocco, " " 4.00.	" " 2.00
Full Morocco, " " 5.00.	" " 2.00

Remember this special price pays all express charges and delivers this magnificent book weighing 4 lbs. in size when closed 8 1-2 x 10 1-2 inches, absolutely free of expense.

If the stock is exhausted when your order is received, we will refund the money at once, and as we have only sufficient copies to supply a small percentage of the subscribers of "The Christian Herald," we trust you will be fortunate enough to avail yourself of this exceptional offer.

Send money by money order or registered letter. Write me at address plainly, giving your nearest express office.

P. B. BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

SAPOLIO

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

NEW YORK: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

COPYRIGHT 1897, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

VOLUME 20.—NUMBER 32.

De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 11, 1897.

PRICE FIVE CENTS

HOSPITALITY IN THE ORIENT.

Stranger is Welcomed in Arab and Syrian Homes—The Dinner Table and its Surroundings—An Arab Meal.

HOSPITALITY is one of the leading traits of Oriental character. With the Arabs, it is a part of their religion, and whether the host be Bedouin or city-dweller, the duty is equally incumbent upon him to extend to his guest the best his home affords, and to give him also complete protection while under his roof. In multitudes of Arab homes in the cities of Arabia Proper, as well as among the Syrian Arabs, who have adopted the Jewish mode of life, the generous rules of hospitality that prevailed in patriarchal times are still observant of Jerusalem, the needy stranger usually finds a welcome, and a seat at the household table.

Everywhere in Egypt and Palestine, small, low, flat tables, of the same general character as that shown in our illustration, are in common use. In some parts of the Holy Land, the peasants—Arab, Syrian and Hebrew alike—use a flat, circular leather bag (through which a cord has been run), and at meal-time this bag is spread on the ground with a small wooden stool placed in the centre, to receive the principal dish, the other dishes being laid on the bag. In many homes, however, the bag is dispensed with and a table with platters to hold the chopped meat is used been baked on a hearth of heated stones), and rolling or twisting it with his fingers, dips it into the principal dish, a portion of which is conveyed to the mouth. When the tough, thin cake becomes soft, it is eaten with the rice or stewed meat, or whatever the dish may be. Everything is eaten with the fingers. Water is served at table from baked clay jars or pitchers of the same unvarying pattern so common in the east. After the meal, the crumbs and bits of refuse are thrown to the dogs or fowls, and the table set in a corner for future use.

There are many points of resemblance between the tables of the ancient Hebrews and those in use among the Arabs to-day. A feature of both was a piece of skin or leather spread upon the ground upon which the table was set. In Palestine at the present day the custom is to use a polygonal stool, called the kursi, about gently near. In homes of a better class, a servant stands behind the diners to pass the water pitcher and wait upon any guest who may be present.

From the Persians, Greeks and Romans, the richest people of the East adopted many luxurious practices, among them the custom of reclining at meals. "Dinner-beds" were among the luxuries of King Ahasuerus' palace at Shushan, and special tables were placed in front of the couches or divans for the convenience of the guests.

Wherever any allusion appears in either the Old or New Testament to "sitting at meat," it is probable that the custom of reclining is implied. Among the poorer people, however, the old method of sitting around a common table is everywhere prevalent. In ancient Egypt, low chairs or stools were employed, on which the diners sat with the right knee raised

AN ARAB FAMILY OF CAIRO AT THE AFTERNOON MEAL.

ed. The stranger must be welcomed, to drink coffee, or even water, or to talk and eat salt together, establishes a sacred bond of amity. It is not therefore, that even in the humblest of Arab dwellings in Cairo, Damasinstead. Around this the entire family sit down in a circle, all squatting either on mats or upon the ground, each member having previously washed his hands with the most scrupulous care. Each diner takes a cake of thin dough (which has 14 inches high, surmounted by a tray—the seniyeh—made either of basket-work or metal and upon this the food is placed, the whole table being known as the sufrah. Under the tray on a mat, lies the bread and the water pitcher is conven-to form a support for the hand. One or two guests generally sat at a table, though sometimes—as on the occasion of a high feast or banquet—the tables were often of sufficient size to accommodate a considerable number of persons.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

C. A. C., Pepperell, Mass. "Go and preach the Gospel to every creature." Is the word creature limited to the human family, or does it include animals, horses, cattle, cats and dogs? Is there any moment or place where we may not "preach the Gospel?"

It means strictly the human race, in every clime, color and condition. This is the construction the leading biblical scholars place upon the passages Mark 16: 15 and Col. 1: 23. In a still wider sense, however, we can construe it as meaning also that we should illustrate the Gospel of Christian love and kindness in our dealings with all created things. The life of the true Christian should be a daily and hourly exemplification of the Gospel.

S. D. E., Rockwood, Tenn. When, where, and why did the custom originate to bury the dead with their feet toward the east?

The earliest Christian churches faced eastward, and, even later, when this was not so general, the sacramental table was so placed that the worshipers facing it had their faces turned to the east. Baptism was also performed with the face toward the east and it became a recognized custom, in burials, to place the feet toward the east. In some countries, the last-mentioned usage still prevails. There are many and various reasons assigned by the early writers for this turning toward the east. Tertullian says that since people must worship toward some quarter of the heavens, they chose that which led them to Christ by symbolical representation. Furthermore, the east was considered the most honored part of the creation, the source of light and brightness, the scene of Christ's birth, of his ministry and his ascension, as it will be the scene of his second coming. The dead were accordingly so buried, that on rising at the resurrection, they might immediately face the scene of Christ's glory.

Reader, Gregory, Mich. 1. Was the name James of the New Testament originally Jacob and changed by translators to James to please King James? I heard a preacher say so. 2. If a wife voluntarily leaves her husband, asks the court for a divorce, gets her decree granted without contest by husband (by which I understand she puts away her husband Mark 10: 12), does the husband commit adultery if he marries any other woman?

1. The Hebrew name Jacob is the equivalent of James in English, and in the Old Testament translation (being direct from the Hebrew), the name was retained, while in the New Testament (being from the Greek and Latin), it was changed to James. 2. The state of things you recite would imply collusion, consequently the marriage of either party so divorced would be illegal.

H. G. C., Pa. 1. Are we to understand from John 20: 23 that Jesus gave his disciples the power to forgive sins? 2. Has the Roman Catholic Church or any other church the right to exercise this power?

1. That is the only inference that can be drawn from the passage. It followed immediately on the strange incident of Christ breathing on his disciples and saying, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." It was as if they were then qualified to exercise the power. 2. The utmost any Church can do, is to tell a man who is truly penitent, that his sins are forgiven. But they can learn for himself from the Word of God. The assurance of the Church does not make it any surer, but it may satisfy one who is not sufficiently taught to know it for himself.

J. Van, B. B. N. B. 1. If the first chapters of Genesis are correct, how does the sun come out in the evening and set in the morning? 2. What is the origin of the sun? 3. What is the origin of the moon? 4. What is the origin of the stars?

1. The creation of the sun and moon are the Jewish account of the origin of the world. The days of Genesis must be understood as long periods, and not ordinary days of twenty-four hours. Geology and astronomy are in full accord with the account of the origin of the world. 2. The sun is a ball of fire, and its light is the result of its own combustion. 3. The moon is a ball of rock, and its light is the result of its own reflection of the sun's light. 4. The stars are distant suns, and their light is the result of their own combustion.

most intelligent monkey is enormous and can be accounted for only by the intervention of God. Bear in mind that the Bible was not written to teach science.

L. T. P. Do you not restrict divine power when you speak of the persons divinely healed being sufferers from functional, not organic disease?

No, we do not restrict divine power. We have no doubt of God's being able to heal organic disease. We believe, however, that some of the cures attributed to Divine Healing, are really effected by other means. We can understand that if a man has all the organs of his body in a healthy condition, but some of them not performing their functions, he may be cured by a mental process. If he believes thoroughly and sincerely that God will cure him in answer to prayer, his faith may save him. It may give him an impulse which will start the sluggish organs into activity. A sudden fright will sometimes do the same thing. This is not divine healing, but it is faith healing, and it explains the cure of many of the people who think that God has healed them. There are other cases, however, which cannot be explained in that way.

L. S. Lowell, Mass. Who are the Mennonites who sent so much money to India?

It would be impossible, in a brief paragraph

A GROUP OF NATIVE CHILDREN IN ALASKA.

Neither these youngsters nor their Indian parents are at all disturbed by the "gold fever" that is now attracting thousands of fortune-seekers to that arctic section of our territory. It has been remarked by prospectors that even a mountain of gold would not move the imperturbable natives. The Indians say of certain locations: "There much gold," or others, "more gold" and (philosophically) of still others, "Too much gold?" These natives have not yet learned to worship gold as too many of the white men do.

to give a fair account of them, but it may satisfy you to state a few facts. Simon Menno, from whom they take their name, was a Protestant minister in Friesland about 1535. After quitting the Roman Catholic Church he traveled through Holland and Germany, encouraging the persecuted anabaptists. He finally settled at Oldeslohe, in Holstein, where he died. His followers have many points of harmony with the Society of Friends, such as their opposition to war and their objection to take an oath in giving evidence. They administer baptism by pouring, and to adults only. Their fundamental doctrine is that Christ's kingdom is a visible church or community, into which only holy and just persons are admitted, and which is, or ought to be, exempt from civil control. They exercise rigorous discipline over their own members, and are remarkable for the Godly simplicity of their lives and the purity of their conduct.

"A King's Daughter," writes as follows:

We are in the thick of having. I have a hearty crew of haymakers for which to prepare meals and luncheons. To-day, the heat of sun and cook stove seemed almost unbearable as I cooked and dished the dinner. At noon, the men came in, hot and fatigued, and bled to their places about the long table. When the last dish of food was ready and placed for them, I was free at last, while the girl waited on them, to seek a cool place and rest. I threw myself in the open doorway of the front hall, going to meet a fresh breeze blowing off from the river, but heat and grass blade stood motionless, within in the scorching heat.

Some one had dropped the day's mail on the hall floor, and reaching for the nearest paper it proved to be THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of issue July 21. I forgot to mention the work, my weariness, in studying that picture of Sultan Abdul Hamid. It is not the face of a good, kind man. Greed, cruelty, deceit and passion lurk in every feature. I thought of all the woe and desolation this ruler has caused, defying not only the Powers of all Europe and America, but that of God.

I thought of our missionaries enduring far greater heat than we in our New England homes are suffering these heated summer days; enduring privation, exile, abuse and martyrdom that precious souls in that far-away, sin-cursed country may be brought to Christ.

Nothing, absolutely nothing is impossible with God. Then let us all earnestly and persistently pray that the Holy Spirit may fall on Sultan Abdul Hamid with such mighty power that his wicked heart shall be changed, and right and peace reign in his kingdom.

A. L. Lorraine, N. Y. What is the form of idolatrous worship in India, Burmah, and China? Do they practice cruelty in their service, or sacrifice human beings?

In India, idolatry assumes a multitude of forms, including ancestor worship, worship of various images of wood and stone, also rocks and trees, etc., to which sacrificial offerings are made. There are thousands of so-called deities, and every tribe has different objects of adoration. The Karens of Burmah worship the spirit guardians of the living, and believe that not only human beings but plants, implements, etc., have their appropriate La, or spirit. They offer sacrifices to the unseen spirits. The Chinese have a vast variety of idols, of wood, stone, and metal. They have tablets to ancestors, to the sun, moon and stars, and altars to gods of the planets, the earth and the elements, and sacrifices of grain, fruits and animals. Human sacrifices have ceased in India and Burmah, and do not now prevail in China.

H. W. M., Blue Ridge Springs, Va. How far is a Christian young man responsible for his influence on his companions? When he is careful to refrain from every wrong action, from participating in worldly pleasures, from joining in conversation of an immoral character, and from other things, in which any one might find cause of offense in him, does his responsibility cease there? Or does God require him to exert a positive influence for good?

A true Christian is a soldier and he must be

PALESTINE SOUVENIR FREE!

Fifteen Thousand Beautiful Lilies of the Field, Grown in Galilee; to be Distributed among The Christian Herald Readers.

IN our issue of July 28 we offered to send, free of charge, a very fine specimen LILY OF THE FIELD to any person sending us the name and full post-office address of Twenty-five adult Protestant members.

Each representing a different household. No two living in the same house.

We now give notice that this offer is to be withdrawn sooner than was contemplated, as the demand is greater than our expectation.

The LILY OF THE FIELD is frequently referred to in the Bible as the most familiar reference being found in Matt. 6: 28, 29: "Consider the lilies, how they grow: they toil not, neither do they spin: as yet I say unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like these."

The LILY OF THE FIELD reaches its perfection in Galilee and was there that Harvey B. Grier, famous skilled botanist, with careful care gathered the perfect specimen which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD now offers. He caused them to be dried and pressed, and conveyed to New York, and now they have been handsomely mounted by him for use, each mount bearing a perfect flower, the actual blossom from the land of our Saviour.

This is an exceptional offer and reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should fail to take advantage of it.

Care must be taken by our friends to send names kindly undertook to supply a number of new names, that they do not duplicate of these names this year, such course would involve us in great expense and much needless confusion.

Let all the names be fresh names and sure to have the full Post Office address of each one. Write LEGIBLY on the outside of the paper, and be sure to write on lower left hand corner of the envelope words—"For the Million Edition."

No other business of whatever nature be referred to in the communication. It must contain these names, as they are held a distinct and separate department.

This is the last call and unless promptly heeded you will still be too late.

R. S. G., Danville, Va. 1. They are ours to give here. 2. We believe not. Medical Record, New York.—E. M. reason in the world why they should be provided the entertainment is a proper one you describe. Subscribers, Portsmouth: question is one which can only be answered by omniscience.—Charles S., New King. 1. There is no information on the subject than that contained in the Bible. 2. "U. S." stamped on government bonds by other articles were humorously said by to stand for "Uncle Sam."—D. W. C. You should inquire of the local authorities Rachel Davis, Philadelphia. Write to dent, Trade Schools, Cooper Union, New York. Subscribers, Atlantic. 1. Send to care Biglow & Main, Ninth St., New York give information on all three points in your letter.—Ida Davies, Steuben V. has been repeatedly answered in THE Christian Herald, Corleville, Va. It is a without a difference and cannot be regarded as, other than a "social call."

A BABIES' PARADISE.

G. E. Talmage Writes of a Visit to "The Creche," where many Puny Lives have been Saved—A Boon for Working Mothers.

R. ANNIE S. DANIELS, Medical Director of the New York Infirmary for Women and Children, a great specialist in children's diseases, and who has done so much for the women of New York City as well, is now in Europe on a long-expected vacation. She says of the place described below: "I know of many mothers whose lives have been saved by the use of the hospitalities of the Creche. This was enough to warrant inquiry, and so the writer crossed the East River by ferry at One Hundred and Twenty-ninth street and the Hudson River at Fort Lee, N. J. About 1300 feet south of the ferry house he found a beautiful place with an attractive lawn, and a cool breeze from the Hudson blowing over the mothers and children who were waiting a little respite from the stifling heat of the city. One mother said, 'I should stay here all the time.'"

"I said, 'This is a place where mothers and children can find relief from the oppressive heat of the city, and those who prefer to pay their own expenses will find a welcome at the Creche, and that God's air is free, if God's children can only get where it blows.'"

TINY CHARGES. The site is so near New York City. Miss Fidelia Warner, who has been in charge for a number of seasons, and is now doing what she can to keep the cottage attractive and the children happy. She is also a nurse, and so able to give hints to mothers in the care of their children. In the years of its existence the Creche has had a single accident, which is remarkable. The "Mason Cottage" on the grounds is the property of Mrs. Josiah Mason Fiske. It is a celebrated flour merchant. It is a Swiss chalet, the first floor of which is about which the ivy is beginning to cling, and the second of wood, overhanging the stone, and with a shady portico at the front. The interior is finished in wood, the dainty blue curtains and hangings and the furniture are permits an almost family atmosphere around the open fire-place. The kitchen is large enough to supply the needs of the children who bring their own food, but may have it warmed, and also milk and simple food at nominal prices. Upstairs the rooms are airy, and a bath-tub for the babies, another for the mothers, and four cribs which have been donated by all necessary linen by the Ladies' Bible Class of the Episcopal Church, the Sunday School and Parsonage of the Presbyterian Church, a member of the Roman Catholic Hall of Englewood, N. J. The babies are not being used very much, as the weather permits the hammocks to be swung, but they provide for rainy and doubtful days, or for children who cannot sleep in a breeze. This character is provided for a particular class of children, who have been omitted in all other fresh-air camps, in fact it was started by the fact that they could not protect themselves from summer emergencies. There are many summer homes, there are excursions to the sea shore, there is our Children's Home in Nyack, but there is nothing for those mothers who must work every day, or for those children who are too young to go alone, or for babies who are sick and who must have a change of air once or die—and the last excursion has sailed, or there is no money to pay the fare to one of the near resorts. The Edgewater Creche fills this niche, and 48,757 mothers and infants have been already refreshed by its means. We might tell many touching stories of tenement-house babies whose lives have been saved by this charity—fathers out of work, mothers with only an hour or two to spare, and children saved by the timely breeze over the water.

The Creche was started in June 1886, after a conference of workers from St. George's Church, Grace Church, the New York City Mission Society, the New York Working Girls' Vacation Society, the Tribune Fresh Air Fund, the St. John's Guild, the New York Infirmary for Women and Children, and the Children's Aid Society. It began humbly with a cottage and a tent on Bedloe's Island on the parade ground under the Statue of Liberty. In those days, and even now, "one dollar gives ten children a chance for life," as the early appeals were worded. A letter was written to M. Bartholdi, the designer of the statue, and he kindly replied, giving his consent that the Creche should be named after him. It has borne that name through all its vicissitudes, until at last it has a settled home with a new name to describe its present location at Edge-an Insane Asylum. This proved too much and the Creche moved out. Yet during their first four years the attendance was 9,300 in all. The Creche next found refuge on Randall's Island, remaining there a number of years and constantly growing in popularity. In 1894, 4,366 mothers and infants took advantage of it; in 1895, 11,767, making about 200 every day. In the latter year the Sultan of Turkey was one of the subscribers, sending $50 towards its funds. The city institutions were growing the meanwhile, and in 1896 no place could be found where the Creche might pitch its moving tent, so the work was temporarily abandoned, and all efforts were applied to securing a permanent home. A site was selected, a lot purchased and a cottage erected, and now the tent is folded up and a thing of the past. The mothers are already finding their way to the new quarters and are delighted with its privileges. The cable cars on the East side and the Boulevard cars on the West side make Fort Lee Ferry easily and cheaply accessible, and the tickets which are supplied through the various churches mediate relief from the oppressive heat of the city, and those who prefer to pay their own expenses will find a welcome at the Creche, and that God's air is free, if God's children can only get where it blows.

THE MASON COTTAGE AND ITS SURROUNDINGS.

G. E. TALMAGE.

Believing Prayer.

George Muller's whole life has been a remarkable illustration of the power of believing prayer. In relating some of his spiritual experiences recently he wrote this interesting experience: "When it pleased God sixty-two years since to lay the orphan work on my heart, I asked God for money for helpers, for a suitable house, and even for guidance as to furnishing. In all these matters he helped me, until at last in answer to prayer everything was ready for the reception of orphans. I then fixed a time to be in the vestry to receive applications for their admission. I sat there half an hour, an hour, an hour and a half, two hours, and not even a single applicant appeared.

"On my way home I said to myself, 'You have sinned. You have asked for money, for caretakers, for a house, for help to furnish, but you have not asked for orphans.' I locked the door of my room, and, casting myself down, confessed that I had sinned in not attending to this command of God, and that I deserved to be confounded in the whole business. I examined my heart, as I had done many times before, as to whether I really sought the glory of God in this matter, until in honesty of heart I could say, 'I do seek not my own honor; if thou couldst be more glorified by putting me to shame in bringing the whole to naught, I am content.' After I had been on my face for a long time I rose up, assured that God would yet send the orphans for which I had now asked.

"Next morning the first application

SWINGING IN "HAMMOCK ROW."

water. A letter from one of the subscribers to the funds is quite interesting and deserves to be read:

My mother informed me that when I was an infant I was struck with summer sickness and that the doctor said that my life depended on my being immediately taken out of the city, and that my father took her and me to Bedloe's Island, where I immediately recovered. This is the same spot as that upon which the Bartholdi Creche was established and for the same purpose. I suppose that at that time it was a military post, as it is at present, and that my father was allowed to take me there because he was a major of artillery. And this occurred in 1805.

After two seasons the United States sent a battalion of soldiers to Bedloe's Island and the Creche was driven out. Ward's Island was then in charge of the Commissioners of Immigration, and they kindly gave their consent to the placing of the tent on Ward's Island, until after two years they became United States officials, and the ground was leased to the city for and charities and hospitals cover the ferryage and admit to the privileges of the cottage and grounds. The work is entirely supported by subscription through Chas. D. Kellogg, Secretary and Treasurer, at 105 East 22nd street, New York, and the Board of Trustees practically represents the original societies that started the movement eleven years ago.

None of our readers need be in doubt after this as to what to do when they hear of mothers and children who need imme-came. Before a month had passed, forty-two were received, and since then over 12,000 more. By the grace of God, I learnt the lesson which I have never forgotten these sixty-two years, and I have been acting accordingly always since."

A MERRY GATHERING ON THE GROUNDS.

FRANCE'S BUSIEST CITIZEN.

Life at the Public and Social Life of President Felix Faure—One Day's Presidential Routine — The Multifarious Duties of a Conscientious Executive.

(From Our Special Correspondent.)

HIS being the saison morte in the French Capital, the Parisians are congratulating themselves on having at least one interesting subject to occupy their minds. That subject, as the reader guesses, is the forthcoming trip of President Faure to Russia. Ah, what a quantity they are spilling in the discussion of the event! The papers are pouring into its minutest details and are stirring the momentous question, already on the occasion of the visit, whether the Chief Magistrate is justified in exchanging his clawsuit of black for a gorgeous gold-uniform. Even the manner of hiding the extraordinary credit of the President for the expenses of the journey, furnishing the journals with details of opportunities, and thus we learn that of this sum will be placed to his credit in the St. Petersburg bank, while the in the shape of bright gold pieces, from the mint, will accompany him in a black leather bag.

President Faure, being therefore one of the moment in the sense of the word, the will not feel averse to a few facts regarding a life and regime in that House of the French Republic, known as the Elysee. Those who might be inclined to think that with his hundred thousand dollars salary, and the free use of his four of the oldest and most sumptuous palaces in Paris, he passes his time in idleness, will be surprised to find that, possibly without exception, he is the busiest Frenchman alive. As a friend has just written in a recent article: "The moment he awakens in the morning until the time he goes to bed, he is a well-earned repose. President Faure does not waste a minute of his time."

He busily observes at least one part of Benjamin Franklin's famous precept. He is busy, winter and summer, in the past five his valet raps at the door of the little bedroom at the corner of the Rue Ste. l'Honore and the Rue de l'Evsee. Half an hour M. Faure appears in his study, in riding costume, prepared for his matutine walk through the Bois de Boulogne. Nothing short of a severe illness would interfere with his habit, for the President is an ardent horseman and a first-class swimmer. At the same time, he has few rivals, and his native place, they tell of a trial when a young man, to swim the mouth of the Seine, six miles in length, and how he succeeded without once seeking rest in the small boat accompanied him across.

The President's bed-chamber is simplicity itself. An iron bedstead with highly polished brass knobs and four corners, a couple of rockers and a sofa chair, and that is all, unless you include the pictures on the wall of the President and Mademoiselle Faure, and a baby's portrait, the child of the President's married life. In accordance with the etiquette of the Elysee mansion, the Chief of State is accompanied from the start by an adjutant who awaits him at the bed-room. He is escorted by the guard on duty, both on horseback and on foot, and driven rapidly to the Arc de Triomphe, and from there to the Elysee. The President's favorite chestnut, and presently M. Faure with his adjutant on his left and a groom in the middle, can be seen cantering around the Bois de Boulogne, and Suresnes, even as far as Bagatelle, where they obtain a passing glimpse of the cavalry and artillery detachments that usually exercise at that hour. After this, they return to their starting point, and re-entering the brougham the President makes for home to attend to the numerous duties that await him.

It is a busy time the first citizen of the republic has between nine o'clock and twelve, especially Tuesdays and Saturdays, which are Cabinet days. The first hour is devoted to the mail, both the private and official correspondence. This occurs in a work-room directly overlooking a mass of handsome rose trees in the garden. One of its doors opens on the room of the general secretary, General Tournier; another on the office of M. Le Gall, chief of the President's bureau, both of whom personally submit the matters of business in hand, including documents for signature and official communications from the various ministries. Shortly before ten on the days in question, the President leaves his office and passes into a large apartment ornamented with enormous mirrors tions who desire the President's presence at public ceremonies. On Wednesdays his morning ride is curtailed to some extent because at nine o'clock he must attire himself in a Prince Albert coat and start with his secretary and bureau chief in an open carriage on a tour of inspection of the city barracks, hospitals, and charitable institutions. This inspection is a three hours' task of itself. Upon his return, he finds lunch ready for him, and he may consider himself lucky if the table is decked with but three covers, one for himself, the others for his wife and daughter. Frequently considerations of State impose the presence of utter strangers at this family meal.

The private dining-room is as unpretentious in its furnishings as the President's bed chamber, and the table appointments are such as might be found in the house of any bourgeois family. The Faures are solid, substantial middle-class French people. They care little for luxury, but everything in their private apartments speaks for a love of comfort. Both mother and daughter are simple in their tastes as in their attire, and society has little attractions for them. Unless guests be present, the dinner consists of but four courses, soup, fish, meat with a salad, and dessert. Three quarters of an hour is the extreme limit of time the President allows step, and lined up along the sides. A company of musicians have taken up a position under the veranda, and the corridors and vestibules are rapidly filling up with military men and attaches in brilliant uniforms bespangled with crosses and decorations. By-and-by the cuirassiers are seen approaching from the Avenue de Marigny with the visitor's carriages, which enter the yard amid a general presentation of arms and a dipping of the colors. The reception takes place in the great hall already alluded to, and terminates with a collation.

At the conclusion of these functions the President usually finds time to take a spin with his wife and Mademoiselle Lucie in the Parc Monceau or down the Champs Elysees, but he must be back by five o'clock to attend to the signing of the various official documents and occasionally to interview visitors who have a claim on his attention. His happiest moment is the dinner hour for then, for the time he has ceased to be the official slave. For a brief period he is simple Monsieur Faure once more, or as he likes to hear himself called "Grandpapa" Faure: for one of the joys of his life is the little child of Madame Berge a boy of seven years. Madame Berge and her husband very frequently attend these family dinners and they would never think of leaving the youngster behind. He is the "Baby McKee" of the household, cute and entertaining and of a very lovable disposition. It is related of him that when his favorite goat was found dead in its stable, killed by an English mastiff, he refused to use the little carriage again in which the animal had escorted him around the Champs Elysees. He did not wish to be reminded of his pet's sad fate. The carriage was therefore given to a good woman who drives children about and it can now be seen daily with the proud inscription: "A gift from Monsieur le President de la Republique."

President Faure is not a man of extraordinary intellectual power, much less a genius, but he possesses that which far greater men than he have lacked — a well-balanced mind, plenty of common sense and deliberation and last but not least, a high sense of duty and of the heavy responsibilities that weigh upon him. In short, he is above all a "safe" man in one of the most trying and delicate situations it is possible for mortal to be placed in.

Paris, July 26. V. GRIBAYEDOFF.

A SIMPLE REPUBLICAN RULER—M. FAURE, PRESIDENT OF FRANCE. BUSY IN HIS OFFICE.

and decorative panels. It is the Ministerial Council Room, and at its long table in the centre covered with green baize cloth, most of the members of the Cabinet take their accustomed places as soon as the Chief appears. He indulges in a few minutes preliminary chat with one or two of their number, and then drops into a seat at one end, having the President of the Council directly opposite him. Thereupon the seance begins.

The Cabinet Council is one of the most important of the presidential functions, often demanding exceptional tact and patience, especially in times of crisis, which are not infrequent in France. M. Faure's natural urbanity and finesse have stood him in good stead on many of these occasions, when a show of impatience or feeling would have led to serious consequences. He is said to compare favorably in this respect with his predecessors, even with the veteran Grevy, a past-master at handling recalcitrant ministries.

Mondays and Thursdays are devoted to audiences. Between ten and twelve there appear in the great audience chamber, a gorgeous apartment hung with heavy red draperies, tapestries, paintings of historical scenes and candelabra, a whole procession of high officials, superior officers, men of note in the political, artistic and literary world, as well as delegahimself to remain at the family table—for he cannot eschew his cup of black coffee, before resuming the cares of State once more. This brief period of relaxation over, he must once more return to his dressing room and don his full-dress suit, with the grand sash of the Legion of Honor.

At the approach of two o'clock P. M., he descends into the Audience Chamber to hold his official receptions, at which the guests are often personages of the highest rank, ambassadors, special envoys, even foreign potentates. These receptions are grand affairs in their way, accompanied by no little military display, especially if the visitor be a member of some royal family or a king himself. On these occasions Montjarret has all he can do to prepare the great carriages of State, which are sent out to convey the distinguished guest and his suite to the official home of the French President. Blue-coated coachmen, and outriders with powdered wigs and white stockings, a squadron of cuirassiers resplendent in steel breast-plates and brass helmets, form the setting to the picture, and almost recall the luxurious regime of the Empire. In the meanwhile a lively scene is being enacted in the courtyard. A battalion of infantry in full-dress uniform, headed by a Colonel, has arrived at double-quick some of the cocoanut trees were marked "X." On inquiring why they were so marked, the native Christian answered: "Because every 'X' tree is devoted to the Lord." He also noticed that his wife, as she cooked the noonday meal, threw a handful of rice into the pot for each member of the family, and then two handfuls into another pot standing near. The traveler asked why the two handfuls were put into the other pot: the wife replied, "That is the Lord's rice pot, and I remember him when cooking each meal."

The Lord's Share.

A traveler in Ceylon, accompanying a missionary on his pastoral visits, noticed as they walked through the garden that Serving Day and Night.

A foreign missionary recently told of a woman who, on a school teacher's salary of one thousand dollars, lived on one-half, and with the other half supported a substitute in China. She then felt that "she was really two persons, and had carried out her lifelong, devoted desire to be a foreign missionary."

She received a letter nearly every week from her substitute, prayed for her by name every day, and realized the truth of what a friend of hers had said, namely: "This teacher serves the Lord twenty-four hours a day, and thus practically lives the life of the angels, who serve him day and night; for at the antipodes her substitute is working while she sleeps."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

CHRISTIAN LOVE.

Sunday School Lesson for Aug. 22. 1. Cor. 13: 1-13. Golden Text: 1. Cor. 13: 13.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

CHRISTIAN love is not sentimentality. Sentiment is too often mere self-indulgence. The love of God in Christ is intensely real, solid and practical. As it is divine, no elements of corruption are in it, and nothing can turn it to hatred. God can afford to love those who hate him, he can afford to love those who do not understand him. "God is love." In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world that we might live through him (1. John 4: 9). Thus we see that human love which delights in that which pleases and gratifies it, but which turns to hatred when it is disappointed, is quite another thing from divine love. The love of God can only be ours as Christ himself dwells within us, and lives out his life of love in us.

The apostle Paul in 1. Cor. 12 had taught the wondrous lesson of the Body of Christ, "which is the Church," (Col. 1: 24), and he had spoken of the gifts of the Spirit to the Church, and exhorted, "Covet earnestly the best gifts." But he adds a most significant word, "Yet show I unto you a more excellent way," (1. Cor. 12: 31); this is the way of love. And he proceeds to make some very startling statements. The most powerful preaching, even with "the tongues of men and of angels" is mere sounding brass and tinkling cymbal, if love, after God's own pattern, and God's own nature, is not the life of our life. The gift of prophecy and the most profound understanding, even of spiritual things, reaching to all mysteries and all knowledge, and even that wondrous faith which links us to God, possessed in a degree which could "remove mountains," by a man like Paul if without divine love, leaves him with the humbling confession: "I am nothing."

And if, added to all this, such a man even as Paul should deprive himself of everything he possessed to feed the poor, and in addition, should suffer martyrdom by fire with the greatest devotion and heroism, and yet not have divine love, he says, "It profiteth me nothing." Paul saw and understood the utter failure of the human. He knew there could exist the most wonderful eloquence, which was nevertheless inspired by human zeal and energy, and that the man thus gifted might fail utterly in manifesting the true spirit of Christ under some vexatious test.

It is easier to be a martyr for one hour, even though it be to be burned at the stake, than it is to suffer long days, weeks, months, years, with those who live with us, and whose dispositions are a continual test to us: contradictory persons, who persist in always misunderstanding, taking things the wrong way, and compromising us with other people. Our Lord endured the contradiction of sinners against him (Heb. 12: 3), and he was always the Lamb "which openeth not his mouth" (Isa. 53: 7), he suffered long and was kind, he was not easily provoked. Human nature cannot bear a strain of this kind, it is only as Christ is in us that we can bring forth such fruit.

Human nature can to a great deal of philanthropic work, and can manifest the greatest devotion, but it gets credit for it, and so long as it is the self-satisfaction which takes credit to itself, but only Christ in us can so quietly and unobtrusively bear a life of self-sacrifice without the smallest self-satisfaction, or the smallest credit from others; just doing that which pleases God, who sees in secret. How much the Lord Jesus must have suffered himself to be misunderstood when he had heard of the sickness of the Lazarus whom he loved, and of the sorrow of Martha and Mary, and yet, by the will of his Father, and out of the truest love to them, tarried yet two days where he was, until Lazarus had died, and the sisters had mourned for him four long days! How many, in whom God is not dwelling, would for their own reputation's sake, have acted differently! It seemed so unfeeling: it might do the faith of the sisters so much harm, etc., etc. But Jesus was filled with that love which seeketh not her own. He knew that divine faith and divine love can stand any test, and out of that love he followed his Father's will in letting them suffer, that they might learn to understand the resurrection.

Human love is open to envy: it keenly feels how it is treated; divine love is utterly independent of how it is treated, for it seeketh not its own, and therefore cannot envy and cannot feel wronged; it is only self in us, and not Christ, which can feel hurt. Human love is self-conscious and thus it can vaunt itself, be puffed up, and behave itself unseemly. But divine love can boast only in the Lord; it sees all things in relation to him, whereas human love sees all things in relation to itself.

Human love can be suspicious, but divine love is unsuspicious; it does not without good reason suspect evil in others and therefore "believeth all things." We are apt to judge others by ourselves: there are always some very dark corners in the lives of those who are habitually suspicious. But divine love "hopeth all things"—yes, sometimes against hope. It is difficult for divine love in us to give up hope for a fallen brother or sister; it remembers the unspeakable love of God to us. It "rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth," even at a cost to itself. God is truth, and Christ in us makes us transparent, so that we must get at the truth about ourselves however humbling it may be, and we must rejoice when the truth comes out about others that God may be free to bless them.

Divine love "beareth all things," "endureth all things." How many there are who say, I can bear anything when I know it comes from God, but how can I bear injustice from men when I know I am in the right, and it does harm to the person who injures me to let him think he succeeds in his ill-doing. "I say unto you that ye resist not evil" (Matt. 5: 39), is the Lord's decision. Divine love sees the hand of God in permitting everything that happens, and knows that "to them that love God all things work together for good" (Rom. 8: 28, 29), to them that are called according to God's great purpose to conform us to the image of his Son (Rom. 8: 28, 29), it looks "not at the things which are seen and temporal, i. e., the way in which the matter touches him personally, but at the things unseen and eternal, the end which God has in view. By this means it becomes perfectly easy to bear any wrong.

Love never faileth: the elements of eternity are in divine love: it is "strong as death" (Cant. 8: 6), stronger than death, for he who is love has burst the bonds of death. Everything gives way before divine love. Prophecies, tongues, knowledge, are only temporary gifts imparted to man for a purpose and for a time; but love is no creature, no gift of God, love is God himself and therefore cannot fail. What a question of questions is it for us whether or not this divine love is ours; whether or not Christ dwells in our hearts by faith, whether or not we are laying down our own life so that the life of Christ may expand and supersede entirely our own human nature and character. As we die to our own self-life, in obedience to God's Word, and by the power of the Spirit of God, divine love takes possession,

All the gifts of God are partial. We know in part and we prophecy in part. We ourselves are only a part, and a small one, of the body of Christ, finite indeed! But divine life is one perfect life in all the members, and it lifts us into the infinite. "When that which is perfect is come that which is in part shall be done away." Paul adds, speaking personally, "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man I put away childish things." As a devout Jew under the law Paul was much greater in his own eyes than now, but he sees that true manhood is to have Christ formed in us.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

WHEN Paul said, at the close of the chapter preceding the lesson, that he was about to show his readers a more excellent way than the attainments he had been describing, he proved his inspired insight. He saw that the very essence of Christian character was love. Faith and eloquence, and the power to work miracles, and even the fortitude of martyrdom were not compared with this divine quality. It is the one indispensable element of Christian life. Paul compares it with everything that is admirable in Christian character and pronounces it superior to them all. More than that, a man is nothing without it, though he have all the other gifts. It is not the passion for one individual, to which the word is often applied, but the loving nature. This is the keystone of the arch, the essential thing on which all else depends. There was need to insist upon it, for men are slow to learn the fact and, even to this day, it is not perceived as it ought to be. The fact that our translators rendered the word "charity" in our Authorized Version shows that they had missed Paul's meaning. Charity is but a part of love, and, as Paul is careful to point out, it may be exercised without love. We know that it is so, for the giving man is often cold and heartless, seeking only glory to himself, and caring nothing for the person to whom he gives. The eloquent man may be hypocritical, the learned man may be unsympathetic, the man of strong faith may care nothing for his fellows, and the martyr may suffer out of pride and obstinacy; but the man who loves has reached the highest attainment possible to humanity, for he has become like God, for God is love. The peculiarity of Christianity is that it lays less stress on doing, than on being. It goes to the root of character, assured that if the man becomes good he will do good. It supersedes all law, for he who loves God will serve him, and he who loves his fellow man will not injure any one. To a child desiring to live a good life, and useful, this is the thing to be mended. It is the key to all the blessings accessible to a human being. If comes a loving soul he will be gentle, humble, kind, generous, unassuming, courteous, and we know person having those characteristic loved. In the home, in the works of the town, one such person is a blessing. His influence blesses all whom it reaches. If every one who becomes a Christian were to strive after the possession of this character, the church would become the centre of "sweetness and light" that the world needs. The ideal of the new Arnold depicts as the ideal of the church. How is such a character attained? It seems impossible to love, and we have the idea that it is a gift. But it is not always so. A bitter, censorious, haughty, unloving man is responsible for his own condition. He indulges it, gives it expression, and it grows, as all other things do. The converse is true. The loving character may be developed. John tells us we love because Christ loved us, and there is no better way of acquiring the love than to think much of him, of his acts and words; of his kind and gentle words, his friendliness, his readiness to help those in trouble, his sympathy for the sorrowing and the fallen. To be all that he has done for us, and to try to be like him. To be as he is, in our small circle such as

"WITH THE TONGUES OF MEN AND OF ANGELS."

That is the best ambition we may acquire the loving character. Hopeth all things. One sense in which we use the word charity, is included in Paul's conception of love. Where a person's character is defective, we speak of the lenient and view as the charitable one. Our duty to take this view, think as kindly as possible of others. No sacrifice of truth need be involved. There are good as well as evil in all characters. We were only as quick to see the good. History tells us of a painter being required to paint a portrait of Alexander the Great, who was not painted him without a scar which disfigured his head, but painted him with his head resting on his hand, his fingers of which covered his eyes, but painted him with his blind side turned away from the spectator. A man with a defective character, as Paul recommends, describing the character of another, would veil over his faults. When great Duke of Marlborough was his opponent, Lord Bolingbroke eulogized him. When he charged him with being in the wrong, he replied, "Marlborough is so great a man that I can find his failings." Charity never faileth. Eliot, the Apostle of the Indians, said, "I close of his life when all his power had failed and even his strength were almost gone: 'I thank God that though my understanding and my memory is defective and my strength is weak, my charity holds out. It grows rather than fails.' Missionaries all men of love. It is remarkable after they have given their labor in heathen land and have come home, they continue to pray for the people of the land in which they have labored and suffered. Their love for them never faileth. Livingstone died on his knees, and there cannot be any to the subject of his prayer.

Charity suffereth long. One who was redeemed from drink and other evil far on in life, said: "I wore out the patience of every one, but my mother-in-law after another cast me out. I was a worker after another tried me. Our clergyman said I was less case. At last the only one who was kind and encouraged me to be a worker was my mother. She had suffered my ill-conduct more than anyone else would not let me go. Why? It was because she loved me more than anyone else did."

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE.

LITTLE BABIES MADE HAPPY.

Little Tenement Pilgrims to Mont-Lawn Enjoy the Golden August Days.

ONE has said that happiness is a birthright of every child. If this be true, then how many thousands of children there are who are cheated out of their own! There is no sadder sight in the world than that of the lean, hungry, wretched faces of the children of the very tenement children of the east-New York, who live in wretched misery during the intense heat of summer months. Many of them are fatherless and motherless, and too often found with scarcely enough vitality for existence—sickening with the confinement and foul air of the meanest of a great, overcrowded city. The Christian Herald rejoices with its readers that it is able to respond to the prayers that go up from those little hearts, and bring them away from the slums to the green fields and woods of Mont-Lawn, for a short time at any rate, and forget their misery and revel in the fresh air and bright sunshine.

At a picture they make—those wee ones of ours! At the first clang of the bell two hundred children troop from their dormitories. It does one's blood to see their smiles, as they look the good times they are going to spend day long and for ten long days more. As they fall into line, each in the sunlight, one recalls the words of Tennyson:

"The little heads, running over with curls,
The flowers, and be their sun."

The sound of the second bell, the boys stand aside, that the girls may pass through the line and go first into the kitchen where the meals are served. As the maids march by, every boyish voice cries off, and they greet each other with a pleasant "Good morning."

Sometimes wonders where these poor youngsters manage to put all that small mountains of bread and disappear and oceans of milk are consumed before one has time to think of it. Recently, there came to Mont-Lawn two little lads who, when they went to school, ate so much that the teachers were afraid they would be ill. They devoured the food like famished wolves. One day the matron received a letter from a mother that they had almost nothing to eat two days before they came!

Every morning and afternoon when the sun is fine, the children are taken for a drive in the big stage. They take the greatest interest in everything they see along the road, from a hen with her chickens to the grand old country-houses in the midst of smooth lawns and stately trees. All sorts of questions and answers are heard.

Among our guests at the Children's Home lately were a batch of "pink babies," so-called because each wore a pink pinafore. Thirty of these little tots came to the Home from the Catherine Mission Nursery one hot night in July, and it seemed as though they had never been in the world before, and they were simply enraptured with delight when they drove up the steamer Christenah along the Hudson. After they had arrived at Mont-Lawn and had eaten supper, they were hardly induced to go to bed. The "pink babies" were here, there, everywhere, rolling down the banks, jumping across the lawn, swinging, jumping as though they intended to do good use of that one evening, lest they would wake up in the morning and find their visit to the country a dream of a reality.

When they were presently collected, the teachers found that one child was missing. There was a general search, and by-and-by, Sam, a cunning, bright-eyed fellow, of four, was found in a ditch, pressing the way, busily employed digging up earthworms and laying them side by side in a row, though, much to his surprise they would not stay straight when placed, but persisted in getting themselves into the queerest shapes. He was saying, "Oh poor little thing, you aint got anyone to pay wit."

When the time to go home grew near, one little maid said, "Oh, teacher, please let me stay until the country closes." She evidently had the idea that with the coming of winter, the earth opened and swallowed the country.

There has been no sickness of any kind among the children, and those weak ones who came to Mont-Lawn in poor health have been greatly benefited. These outings are the means of saving many a tender little life, and they bring joy and happiness to all.

Contributions in aid of our Children's Home work will be promptly acknowledged in these columns. The following sums have been received:

Mrs E M Yow	50	B B B. Lebanon ...	1 00
Mrs Nettie C Bell ..	50	Grace Boyse	1 00
C E Wilmarth	3 00	Mrs Mary Leckie ..	3 00

A GROUP OF THE "PINK BABIES" AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOME.

These dear little tots are all from the Catherine Mission Nursery on the East Side of New York. They are children of poor mothers who leave them daily at the Mission, while they go to work for a livelihood. The cotton pinafores are supplied by the Nursery.

Prev. Ack.	$1,796.61	Mrs J F Staples	3 00
Mrs E S B Cleaver ..	3 00	J Henry Shepherd ..	3 00
Cent'l Bap ch.		M L Briggs	1 00
Springfield	3 00	Mrs A M Brown	1 00
A sub. Lewiston ..	3 00	Mrs S A Cochran ..	3 00
A friend, Weymouth	6 00	Mrs Eliza Hawes ..	3 00
Lydia Frost	3 00	Mrs Annie Hare	3 50
Mrs Levi Andrews ..	1 00	Mrs Alice Strike	1 50
Western, Eureka ..	1 00	Mrs J B Olds	1 00
Mrs J A Benedict ..	6 00	Mrs H D Baldwin ..	6 00
Donald Patterson ..	1 00	Bessie H Gray	25
Elizabeth V Harrah ..	3 00	N H Dailey	50
In mem of a loved one, Barton	2 00	L H M. N Y City ..	3 00
Alice M Politt	3 00	Clara E Vannauker ..	3 00
Mr & Mrs R D Sheppard	2 00	Mrs E M O
Luisa Adlam	50	Hattiesburg	3 00
A friend, Milroy ..	2 50	A friend, Newwood ..	6 00
Rv&Mrs H W Curtis ..	2 50	Mrs M J Clapp	3 00
Mrs C A Chapman ..	3 50	For the Master's sake, Fort Worth ..	1 00
Irene Bowman	1 00	M. N Y City	10 00
F Loesch son & dau. ..	3 00	Maquoketa	1 00
S F M. Heiserville ..	10 00	Mrs A C Anderson ..	1 00
X. Terrell	50	Ios D Mitchell	3 00
Thank offering ..		F Lancaster	3 00
Santa Cruz	3 00	Maria Patrick	3 00
Sis. Southern	6 00	J M Greeley	6 00
Friend, N. Lansing ..	10 00	I C A. St Joseph ..	3 00
A L B. Fishkill-on-Hudson	1 00	Mrs H J Tost	3 00
		Total	$1,967.86

A Monster Bicycle.

France claims the credit of devising the greatest bicycle the world has yet heard of. A bicycle for 2,000 riders is to be built for the Paris Exposition of 1900. It is said that the machine will be higher than the tallest building, and will, in fact, be a great building itself.

It has two large entrances, one at the bottom of each of its wheels, cut through the tires. Winding stairways lead from the doors up the front and back of each wheel, through the front and rear standards, to the backbone of the machine. Thence spiral steps ascend to the handle-bar and saddle. The stairs are lighted throughout by numerous windows of quaint design, through which great variety of views can be obtained as the sight-seer mounts to the top of the structure. As he is constantly turning in his ascent the outlook changes with every step, and he enjoys a magnificent natural panorama. Particularly fine will be the prospect from the windows of the handle-bar. On the saddle is a broad platform, around which runs a strong steel rail. Here, while the warm weather lasts, open air banquets will be held for the entertainment of eminent visitors. The backbone of the big wheel will contain a really marvelous apartment. This will be a grand saloon, scarcely as many spans in width as it is yards in length. It will be a marvelous structure and will attract many visitors.

Siam's Sickly Climate.

Siamese royalty, on its tour around the world, will have an excellent opportunity of contrasting the climatic conditions of other lands with those at home. Beautiful as Siamese scenery is, it is marred

THE FIRST BABY.

Written for "The Christian Herald."

SWEETEST baby ever born,
Camest thou one winter morn;
Camest right from the skies above,
Weighted with a wealth of love.
Waited all the way along
By the holy angels' song.

Ne'er can I forget the day
When, like to a heavenly ray,
Of the blessed sunlight bright!
Camest thou, all dressed in white,
With thy golden little head
Nestling in the trundle bed.

Still I see thy eyes of blue,
Hear thy gentle little "Coo."
Happy days' my baby sweet,
When we both, with willing feet,
Every wish of thine fulfilled,
Every baby sorrow stilled.

O! thy mother's love for thee,
As she rocked thee on her knee,
Clasped thee to her gentle breast,
Soothed thee oft to sleep and rest.
How the memory of it still Makes my heart-strings sweetly thrill!

Precious baby, gentle "dove,"
Filling both our hearts with love;
As roll on the precious years,
Will our eyes o'erflow with tears?
Or our fondest hopes come true?
Shall we live again in you?

Brooklyn, 1897.

—J. AUSTIN SHAW.

Princess and Pauper.

ONE of the many incidents of Queen Victoria's early life that have been made public apropos of the recent jubilee is the following, the truth of which is vouched for by Mr. A. T. Story, who has personal knowledge of the circumstances: When Victoria was a little maid of seven or thereabouts, her heart was set on a certain doll which she had seen in a shop window. She had to wait, however, until she could save the price (six shillings), out of her pocket money. At last the day came, and the coveted doll was paid for and received. With the precious treasure upon her arm, she bade the shopkeeper good-afternoon, and was about to step from the door, when a poor, miserable-looking man met her eye. He seemed as though he were going to speak to her, but though his lips moved, no sound came from them. He stood aside to let her pass, a mute appeal in his sunken cheeks and quivering chin. "Did you wish to speak to me?" asked the little maid, staying her steps. Encouraged by her voice, the man said, "I am very hungry. I would not ask for help if I were not ready to sink with hunger." "I am so sorry. I have no money or else—" His lips trembled forth a humble "Thank you, lady;" then he went on his way. "Stay!" murmured the little owner of the new doll. There was a quiver in her childish voice and a moisture in her eyes. "Wait a minute, please." She stepped back into the shop, approached the woman behind the counter, and said: "Oh, please, do you mind taking the doll back and keeping it for me a few days longer?" "Certainly I will," replied the shopkeeper: "and you wish me to return you the money?" "Yes, if you please." This was done, and the little maid, hurrying out of the shop, placed the money in the hands of the starving man. He was like one thunderstruck. In a low earnest tone, though loud enough to reach her ear, he said, "If the Almighty made you a queen it would not be more than your goodness deserves!" Then he hobbled away to satisfy his hunger.

Five Generations Meet Together.

In a private home in the village of Totterville, Staten Island, a remarkable family reunion took place lately. The occasion was the ninetieth birthday of Mrs. William Smith, and at the gathering in her honor no less than five generations were represented. At the head of the table sat the venerable dame, now 88 years a widow. She poured the tea and recited some verses in response to many congratulations. She received many beautiful presents, among them being a beautiful blue Delit vase. She has seven children living, twenty-six grandchildren, twenty-seven great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild.

I do not work my soul to save,
That work my Lord has done;
But I will work as any slave,
For love of God's dear Son.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

LOUIS KLOPFER, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash. Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canada, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price. Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald will not be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-office at New York, as Second-class Matter

Midsummer Coolness.

EVERYBODY talks of our phenomenally cool midsummer—the thermometers down to fifty and a lightly clad population shivering at the unseasonable temperature. But nature usually equalizes these matters, and as we have already this season had fiercely hot days, we will doubtless shortly have others equally warm. Plenty of hot weather for everybody: for the farmer to make his crops grow, and for the hundred other occupations that depend for success or failure upon the thermometer behaving itself in a respectable and orderly manner. There are days when, as far as possible, people have kept within doors, or walked on the shady side of the street. But even in such days, we can have but a faint idea of what the people suffer crossing a desert or in a tropical clime. The head fairs, the tongue swells, and deathly sickness comes upon the whole body when long exposed to the summer sun. A whole caravan press on through the hot sands. "Oh!" say the camel-drivers, "for water and shade!" At last they see an elevation against the sky. They revive at the sight and push on. That which they saw proves to be a great rock, and camels and drivers lie down under the long shadows.

A tree, when in full leafage, drops a great deal of refreshment; but in a little while the sun strikes through, and you keep shifting your position, until, after awhile, the sun is set at such a point that you have no shade at all. But go in the heart of some great rock, such as you see in Yosemite or the Alps, and there is constant shadow. So our Divine Rock, once covering us, always covers us.

It is our misfortune that we mistake God's shadow for the night. If a man come and stand between you and the sun, his shadow falls upon you. So God sometimes comes and stands between us and worldly successes, and his shadow falls upon us, and we wrongly think that it is night.

As a father in his garden stoops down to kiss a child, the shadow of his body falls upon it; and so many of the dark misfortunes of our life are not God going away from us, but our heavenly Father stooping down to give us the kiss of his infinite and everlasting love.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL CONTEST.

The Prizes all Duly Sent to the Successful Competitors—Art Bibles that will be Treasured and Handed Down as Heirlooms.

WHEN THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, several months ago, published the Sunday School record of a little Western boy, it was not anticipated that it would result in a competition, na-such splendid records of faithful attendance as have nowhere been equaled.

On this page is a photographic representation of the first prize for male scholars, awarded to Mr. Samuel Winter-

FIRST PRIZE awarded to
Mr. Samuel Winterton
Whose Fully Authenticated Record of 1732 Consecutive Attendances Stands Unequaled.
With the Cordial Appreciation and Heartly Christian Salutation of Miss Klopfer
New York, 1897.
Proprietor
The Christian Herald.
Numbers VI: 24-25-26.

FAC-SIMILE OF INSCRIPTION ON FLY-LEAF OF FIRST PRIZE.

tional in character, and which would attract attention in Sunday Schools throughout the entire Union. Yet this was precisely what did take place, and the wonderful records of Sunday School attendance that were sent to this journal and published in its columns, were a pleasant revelation to all interested in Sabbath School work. For the purpose tion, of the First Baptist Sunday School, Keyport, N. J., whose unsurpassed record of thirty-three years and sixteen weeks, or 1732 consecutive attendances is fully vouched for. The first prize for female scholars was won by Mrs. Emma Corbet, of Biddle Memorial Mission Sunday School, Carlisle, Pa., with the magnificent record of twenty-four years, or 1248 con-

THE ART BIBLE—FIRST PRIZE IN OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL CONTEST.
ACTUAL SIZE, OPEN FLAPS, 11 3/4 INCHES BY 17 1/2 INCHES.

of encouraging the competitors, a series of handsome and valuable prizes was offered by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to the successful contestants. Several weeks ago, the competition closed, the awards were made, and now we take pleasure in announcing that all the prizes have been forwarded to the winners in this unique contest. There were four Grand Prizes, viz.: a first and second prize for male scholars, and a first and second prize for female scholars. Besides these, there were awarded 287 Roll of Honor Prizes to pupils having a record of not less than 260 consecutive attendances. All these prizes are now in the hands of their legitimate owners, who have won them by secutive attendances, vouched for by Mr. George Bridges, Superintendent. These fortunate competitors have each received a magnificent Art Bible, elegantly bound in genuine seal, lined with kid, with thumb index, and containing nearly one thousand superb illustrations. It is conceded by experts to be the finest Art Bible ever issued, and one of the richest and most perfect specimens of book-making yet produced. Such a Bible will outlast whole libraries, and can be handed down as a precious heirloom to children's children. The inscription on the flyleaf of Mr. Winterton's prize is reproduced above. Similar inscriptions appear on all four of the Grand Prizes.

The second prize to male pupil awarded to Mr. George H. Glas, Central Church Sunday School, Fitcher, N. Y., whose splendid record of years, or 1560 consecutive attendances, vouched for by Mr. John H. Elliot, independent. The second prize for scholars was won by Miss Martha of Grace U. B. School, West F. Pa., with a fine record of two years and four weeks, or 1148 consecutive attendances, duly attested. These prize winners have each received a large Art Bible, in size, fineness of printing and illustration, similar to the first two Grand Prizes, bound in divinity circuit, Palestine, lined with grained leather, edged under gold, and appropriately inscribed altogether a superb Bible, which was a pleasure to the possessor.

The Roll of Honor was a long one, was published in full in a recent issue. To these scholars were sent 28 illustrated New Testaments, beautifully bound in divinity circuit.

Throughout the contest, the most admirable spirit was everywhere shown. It was a friendly rivalry that has resulted in giving a very perceptible stimulus to Sunday School work even in the most distant parts of the Union.

BRIEF NOTES.

A call for a Convention has been issued by the four Colored Presbyteries of the Eastern Presbyterian Church. The object is to organize a Colored Presbyterian Church. An appeal is made for contributions to aid in the organization.

Rev. Dr. S. L. Baldwin, the veteran missionary to China, lately on furlough, has returned to his field. Dr. Baldwin will write an interesting series of letters concerning the social life of the Chinese for publication in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during the coming fall and winter months.

A Prophetic Conference is being held this week at Toccoa, Ga., under the auspices of the Southern Presbyterian Church. Rev. C. Nisbet, of Toccoa, is chairman of the Conference of Arrangements. The call issued is to all interested in the subject, to meet to study the Word of God on the Second Coming of Christ, to pray for the enlightenment by the Holy Spirit.

The Statistics of the Presbyterian Church, just issued by Dr. W. H. Roberts, show an increase during the year of churches to 75, which is 58 added during the year. The number of communicants has increased from 943,715 to 1,000,000. The additions on confession of faith have been 57,011. There are 7,129 ministers, which is an increase of 1,000 over last year. Contributions for all purposes aggregated $13,298,067, of which $2,000,000 was for Foreign Missions.

News of the wreck of the Methodist Mission steamer, Meda, has reached Vancouver. The brief message says that the steamer was on board a large number of religious people from Fiji, struck on the north-east coast of New Guinea and went to pieces. None of the board have been heard from, and it is feared that they were either drowned or lost on some desert island.

The International Anti-Alcohol Congress holds its biennial meeting this week in Brussels, the capital of Belgium. It embraces representatives of the German, English and Slavic races. The representative this year is Mrs. Mary Hunt of Boston, Mass., the author of the plan for scientific temperance education in public schools. A very cordial reception has been given to Mrs. Hunt by the President and Secretary of the Congress.

Mr. W. M. F. Round, Secretary of the Prison Association of New York, announces that a Prison Exhibition and Conference will be held at the Assembly Rooms, 135 East Fifteenth St., New York, October 7-9. The Exhibition will show models of prisons, relics of historical prisons and crimes, portraits of prisoners, articles made by former prisoners, etc. Several eminent speakers will take part in the Conference.

Interesting lectures on Japan are being delivered in New York cities by Mr. Richard H. Poynter. He is now on a visit to this country. Poynter comes from Elstow, in Poynter's town, and is Superintendent of the Bunyan Sunday School in Plymouth Church and the Baptist Church and the Methodist Church and other churches in New York and Brooklyn. He has not resigned, has no intention of resigning, and is not planning to visit to hear about "the dreamer" from one who knows the subject, may address Mr. Poynter at 362 Tompkins Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

A report was published by the New York Herald on July 24 that an accident had occurred at Middletown, Ct., where Dr. Talmage was touring. It was stated that the platform beneath the weight of the crowd, and the image was seriously injured. A telephonic communication with the authorities at Middletown, however, has shown that the same evening promptly relieve the anxiety by this report. It appears that although the form did give way, no one was hurt. Talmage continued his lecture, and which needs contradiction is one, widely known that Dr. Talmage has resigned his charge at Middletown, D. C. Dr. Talmage authorizes the statement that there is no truth whatsoever in the report. He has not resigned, has no intention of resigning, and is not planning to visit to hear about "the dreamer" from one who knows the subject, may address Mr. Poynter at 362 Tompkins Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

RELICS FROM EGYPT.

DIGGING on the banks of the Nile, at a place called Deshasheh, about fifty miles south of Cairo. Professor Flinders Petrie has made an extremely interesting discovery. He found a cluster of tombs belonging to the fifth dynasty Egyptian kings and were evidently constructed to serve as burial places for most of the deceased. The peculiarity of the tombs was, however, the most striking feature of the discovery. It was found that the mummies were usually found in Egyptian tombs. There were rude boxes containing the bodies. It is evident that at that place a different mode of disposing of the dead was in vogue which was adopted later. Prof. Petrie found that the bodies were cut up and fresh entirely removed. The bones were dried and wrapped carefully in and placed in the boxes, on which were inscribed the name of the deceased. The statements made by Herodotus, and other authorities Prof. Petrie confirmed the belief that cannibalism may have been practised as a religious rite, in Egypt. The tombs contained also the bodies of the dead which show that at a very early date, long before the period assigned to the time of Abraham, Egypt was already a well-known art. The tombs had attained considerable interest. Their work is interesting as showing how men looked in Egypt five thousand years ago. One of the tombs contained the bones of Nenkheftka a Prince and royal priest and those of his wife and their son who died in his infancy. There was a wood statue of the deceased, and another a group of him and his wife. Why so much care and expense should have been expended upon the dead when they were intended to be buried with the dead, was a mystery to the explorers, but it has been discovered that the ancient Egyptians had a belief which explains it. They thought that every man being consisted of several important parts which were separated at death. One of these was the soul, which went on a long pilgrimage; another was the intelligence or mind, which was scattered in space; and a third, which was called the "Ka," the vital principle, which remained in the tomb with the remains until the various parts after the interval of thousands of years came together again. The statues were prepared as a habitation for the Ka and, in order that it might feel at home in them, the statues were taken to make them exactly like the deceased, even the defects and deformities being carefully copied. One instance the statue was that of a dwarf, exactly corresponding to the mummy by which it stood. It is remarkable that in so remote an age they possessed the doctrine enunciated centuries afterward by the Apostle Paul, that death is a dissolution and not an annihilation of being, and had tried to supply the need which he declared God could provide for.

For now that if our earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building of God, not made with hands eternal in the heavens. (2 Cor. 5:1)

Strife Bequest. The eccentric wish of a German American woman was carried out in Hoboken, New Jersey a few days ago. She was the Secretary of the Independent Frauen Verein, a benevolent order, composed exclusively of women holding its meetings in a hall in Hoboken. She was one of the most popular members of the order and was seldom absent from the meetings which were enlivened by her gaiety and good humor. When she was attacked by the illness which ultimately proved fatal she had a presentiment of death and sent for her nephew to prepare her will. After disposing of the bulk of her property she made several small bequests one of which was a sum of money to the Frauen Verein to be expended in an entertainment in her memory. A week after her death there was to be a supper and a dance and a keg of beer was to be drunk. She sent for the president of the order and the owner of the hall in which the meetings were held and informed them of her bequest and made them promise that her wish should be carried out. After her death they kept their promise. About twenty-five of the members attended on the day appointed. A keg of beer and a supper were provided and after the eulogium on the deceased secretary had been pronounced, there was a dance as she had wished. The members tried to enjoy themselves, but the depression was general and there were few dry eyes in the room that night. The members felt that they had lost a friend and they had no heart for feasting and merry-making. There is no real comfort in bereavement, but in the faith that looks forward to reunion in Christ. All creabright flash and he fell prostrate and helpless to the ground. He gave one convulsive struggle and then lay still. When the policeman on duty on the block reached him he was quite dead. A black line ran from his hand up his arm and down his back showing the path the electricity had taken through his body. The measure he adopted for his protection from the storm proved the means of his death. It is so sometimes in the storms of life. Many a man in trouble has resorted to means of deliverance which have proved a curse to him. It was the reproach of the Jews uttered by the prophet:

Woe unto him that go down to Egypt for help (Isaiah 31:1.)

Indian Justice.

In the course of some reminiscences of life among the Indians, published by a New York journal last week, an incident is related of ingenious retributive justice. The writer, a New Hampshire man, says that in his youth he saw a great deal of the Penobscot Indians, near his father's homestead. Among them was an Indian of acknowledged bravery and highly respected by his tribe. But he was liable to go on a prolonged spree and when maddened by drink would commit outrages of which he would be ashamed when he became sober. During one of these outbreaks he came home in an ugly humor. His squaw foolishly reproached him and in a paroxysm of rage he attacked the results of their dissipation and iniquity. Young men might learn from them the lesson to which they pay no heed when the Bible declares it, that punishment of punishment must not be taken for immunity.

Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil. (Eccles 8:11.)

Stopping a Runaway.

Among the reminiscences of a railroad man recently published, is a strange story of escape from a collision. It was on the road between Harrisburg and Canandaigua, N. Y. The engineer was taking three carloads of passengers to Sunbury one dark night, and was making regular schedule time when he was startled by the conductor coming to him with the news that the headlight of a locomotive could be seen from the rear of the train. It was coming at a furious rate and seemed likely to overtake them. The engineer went to the rear to look and concluded from the fact of no lights appearing behind the pursuer, that it must be a runaway engine. The conductor bade the engineer put on all the steam the engine could carry, and in a few minutes the train was whizzing along at a rate that terrified the passengers. But still the pursuing locomotive's light crept closer. At last a bright idea struck the engineer. He knew by experience how a little grease dropped on the track would retard speed. Calling the conductor he told him to search for some kind of grease. Fortunately two cans of lard oil were found and these were poured on the tracks from the platform of the rear passenger coach. The device worked perfectly. The headlight of the pursuing locomotive grew dim in the distance. As soon as it was safe to do so, the train was stopped and backed up to solve the mystery. Then a strange sight was seen. There stood one of the finest engines on the road puffing and snorting, its wheels whizzing around, but making no progress. The oil on the tracks had completely baffled its destructive power. The effect of throwing oil on the troubled waters has passed into a proverb, and it would seem that there are times when good may result from throwing it on the tracks. Many of the collisions which disturb the Church of Christ and hinder its work might be avoided by the same tactics. An angry opponent is often foiled by kindness and suavity.

A soft answer turneth away wrath. (Prov. 15:1.)

The Yellow Fever Microbe.

News comes from Montevideo, the chief city of Uruguay, of a discovery which should have very important results. Dr. Sanarelli, a disciple of M. Pasteur, who has been in the city for several months studying the yellow fever, reports that he has discovered the microbe which causes the disease. Ever since Pasteur's discovery of the remedy for hydrophobia the hope has been entertained that a similar means of curing yellow fever, cholera and other plagues might be found. It was believed that the same principles of treatment would cure them if the microbe which produced them could be found and identified. Dr. Sanarelli has attended many cases of yellow fever in Brazil and Uruguay since he completed his studies in the Pasteur Institute in Paris and crossed the Atlantic to practice on this side. He has diligently sought the microbe, and at last has found it. He says that it is found in certain parts of the stomach of the victim, where it propagates with incredible velocity and soon kills the sufferer. Under the microscope it is seen to be similar in shape to the bacilli that produce diphtheria and tetanus. Dr. Sanarelli succeeded in isolating a number of specimens and propagating them artificially. With these he inoculated animals, which in a few hours developed yellow fever symptoms and died. Having discovered the microbe, he is now studying it to find the surest method of destroying it, and believes that in a short time he will have in his hands an infallible remedy for the dread scourge. If he succeeds, the people of the districts in which the disease does its fatal work will account him a benefactor and will use his remedy. They will not act as people do who suffer through sin, which is fatal to both soul and body.

The heart of this people is waxed gross, and their eyes they have closed, lest haply they should perceive with their eyes... and I should heal them. (Acts. 28:27.)

OBJECTS 5500 YEARS OLD, RECENTLY FOUND IN A TOMB AT DESHASHEH, EGYPT.

1. Statue of Nenkheftka.
2. Portrait of Nenkheftka, a Prince and royal priest.
3. Group of Nenkheftka and his wife Nefersem.
4. Skull of Nenkheftka, son of Nenkheftka.
5. Bowl with pottery stand for food offerings in tomb.
6. and 7. Necklaces, amulets, etc.
8. Scribe's palette.
9. Baskets of palm fibre for carrying earth.
10. Mallet and chisel of wood, used for excavating graves.

ture comforts fail then, as all have proved who have tested the old reasoning:

If the dead rise not, let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die. (1 Cor. 15: 32.)

Death in the Storm.

A remarkable fatality occurred in a New Jersey town during the storm of July 29. A young man had occasion to leave his home to go to his work on the other side of the town and could not wait for the heavy downpour of rain to abate. He carried one of the modern style of umbrellas which have a steel rod running through the handle. This he held down closely over his head so as to protect his shoulders from the rain. He could see the pavement, but his umbrella prevented his seeing ahead of him. But there were few persons on the streets, so he was not likely to come in collision with any one and he was familiar with his road. There was one danger in his path, however, that he knew nothing of. The wind had blown down a telephone wire and it had fallen across an electric light wire and the loose end was dangling within two feet of the pavement. As the young man hurried along, his umbrella tip just touched the swaying wire. Instantly there was a her and did her injuries so terrible, that both her feet had to be amputated. He was brought before the council of the tribe and the general opinion was that he should be put to death; but one of the elder chiefs interposed: "No shoot him now," he said, "let him live as long as squaw live; he carry her when she want walk; when squaw die, then we shoot." The old chief's advice was taken and punishment was postponed. The Indian was given to understand that so long as his wife lived he would not be punished, but he must treat her kindly and carry her whenever she had occasion to travel. So the man had to carry the squaw from place to place as the tribe moved. He hated the duty and hated the obloquy that it brought upon him, but he dare not ill-use her, much less kill her, because he knew that his own life depended on hers. He knew that when she died the tribe would kill him. Such retribution is not possible among white men, but the principle is often seen in operation. There are old and middle-aged men to be seen everywhere whose lives for years have been burdened with the consequences of the sins of their youth. God did not punish them at the time, but suffered them to live on to bear

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST.

How it May Control the Life and Conduct and May Transform the Character.

Two kinds of persons are contrasted in the chapter associated with the topic (Rom. 8:1-18)—those who walk after the flesh and those who walk after the spirit. So diverse are the two lives, in their effects in this world and their consequences beyond the grave, that it might be supposed there would be no difficulty in recognizing each life—that it would be possible to tell at a glance the one from the other. It is possible in many cases. There are some lives so gross and sensual, so sordid and debased, that they declare their character to all around. There are others so unselfish and elevated that they are evidently a walk in the spirit. But with the great majority of people in a Christian land and in the churches, there is an overlapping of motives and principles of conduct that renders it difficult to decide whether they are walking after the flesh or after the spirit. They live so near the frontier of the two kingdoms that we do not know to which they belong. Doubts on the subject may disturb even the persons themselves. The self-indulgent Christian, conscious of high aspirations, yet conscious, too, of faults and failings, has often reason to ask himself the question of the topic: "Have I the spirit of Christ?" It is a most important question, for as the Apostle says, if ye live after the flesh ye must die. It is not a question of past experience, of baptism or of church-membership, nor even of repentance and faith, but one of life and conduct. The spirit of Christ is to show itself in our actions and words. And it will show, if we let it have liberty. The motive force of our lives will assuredly control their trend unless it be repressed. The reason that so many people live near the frontier is that they check the impulses of the spirit of Christ within them. Such a question as this may arise: Shall I go to a place of amusement, or shall I spend an hour at the bedside of a sick friend? The flesh clamors for gratification, while the impulse of the spirit is to the performance of the duty. If I yield to the flesh its power over my life is strengthened; if I obey the impulse of the spirit I gain in spiritual power. Every man's life is a battle-ground between these elements and there is no peace for him until he yields the mastery to one or the other. He may either turn to the animal or rise to the spiritual. His own interests, his own advantage may be the object of his life, or he may be dominated by the spirit of Christ which leads him to forget himself and try to give pleasure to others. The choice rests with himself but he must remember that if he has not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. The man who lives to the flesh is like a man who, having a piece of leasehold property which must revert in a few years to its original owner, spends all he has in beautifying and adorning it and at the end of the term finds himself penniless and without a home. When the body is laid in the grave after a life in which its gratification has been the chief business, the soul goes out unprepared and without vitality. It is then a threat of arbitrary punishment, but a statement of cause and effect that makes him say, if ye live after the flesh ye must die. For the answer to the question of the topic we must look to our lives. Which power holds supreme control? To which do we habitually yield? We cannot change our own hearts, but we can yield our lives so habitually to the flesh or to the spirit that we are changed into Christ's image and reflect his character. This is to have Christ's spirit, and to be a son of the life which will go on through eternity. It is a life painful to the flesh, but full of joys that the world cannot give. For its full fruition we must wait until we awake in his likeness and enter into his presence.

OUR RELIEF WORK IN INDIA.

Missionaries Busy Distributing "The Christian Herald" Relief Fund among the Starving Men, Women and Children of India.

A CABLE message received from Singapore in the Malay Archipelago, sent by Rev. R. G. Hobbs, announces the arrival at that port of the Famine relief steamer City of Everett "all well." We are glad to see that the food thus sent by Christian people in America to feed the starving people will be heartily welcomed. In a letter to the Indian Witness, Rev. Henry J. Bruce, the American Board's missionary at Satara writes gratefully of the coming supply. He adds: "The poorest of the natives could easily pound, (or grind) it up and boil it into 'mush,' which would be a palatable and a life-saving boon to multitudes. I am very thankful that apparently, some American corn is coming to Bombay, and I have already sent in my request for a first instalment of fifty bags of it for Satara."

The latest official reports of the famine are not encouraging. The Viceroy in his monthly statement to the English Governsome time past have been serving voluntarily as relief distributors in connection with our Famine Fund. Rev. J. O. Denning and wife are missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Narsinghpur, in the famine centre, where, so Mr. Denning writes, there is great distress. The people are even selling their children for food. In his neighborhood there are 14,000 working on relief works and about 3,000 are being fed in the "poor sheds."

The mission at Narsinghpur is doing its full share towards alleviating the distress, and the missionaries report a marked spiritual result among the natives that is very encouraging. At latest accounts, Mr. Denning had from 300 to 350 persons dependent upon him. The able-bodied men were earning their food by work, but the children and the aged and infirm were being fed gratuitously. Many people were begging him to give them work, and their number was increasing daily.

REV. MR. DENNING AND WIFE.
Volunteer Distributors, Narsinghpur, India.

THE PORT OF SINGAPORE, IN THE MALAY STRAITS.

Singapore, the port at which our India Famine Relief steamship, City of Everett, last touched on her way to India, is the most important of the Straits Settlements, and lies on the southern shore of an island twenty-seven miles long and about fourteen in breadth. Our photograph shows the sort of fleet that always occupies the harbor, trading in nutmeg, cotton, rubber, pepper, coffee, fruit, indigo, and other products. It is a bright, picturesque, prosperous, and progressive place. Although so near the equator, the climate is exceedingly salubrious. The name (originally Sinhapura), signifies "Lion City."

ment says that the number now on the relief works is 3,803,068 which is an increase of 524,068 since the preceding report. He adds that there had been "a partial failure of the west coast monsoon, which has rendered the situation again serious in certain districts." Our own information is of the same tenor. Last week a cable message came to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, from Rev. J. E. Clough, the Baptist Missionary at Ongole, to whom five hundred dollars was sent from our fund some time ago. Mr. Clough asks that more money may be cabled to him and, as he uses the cable himself, it is evident that his need is serious and urgent. This appeal, following the other cabled request from Mr. Newcomb, another Baptist missionary in India, mentioned in a previous issue, is very significant. The fact that Baptist missionaries are clamoring for help shows how false a prophet was the Boston writer, who a short time ago boldly declared that: "There is no famine or any likelihood of famine on the fields of the Baptist Missionary Union."

On this page we publish the portraits of two of the faithful missionaries who for

From Rev. E. M. Gordon, minister of the Church of the Disciples at the Central Provinces there also an urgent appeal for help. Mr. Gordon says he needs a thousand dollars immediately and we have cabled to Thoburn's committee by which the CHRISTIAN HERALD fund is distributed, a recommendation to supply Gordon's need. That it is very may be perceived from the fact that $500 cabled to him in June has been expended. Mr. Gordon's ghastly proof of the awful destitution of his district, in the following from his diary for one week:

I give below one week's record of starvation under my own observation.

June 19, Saturday. Recently for succession one person has died from starvation, under my personal observation, concluded to record each case in my diary. Today a man died by the river-side and a girl who came to our orphanage.

June 20, Sunday. This afternoon a found dead by the road-side in Donpar.

June 21, Monday. Bhuri, the girl of who was in the hospital succumbed to starvation. She died this morning at prolapsus of the bowel and dysentery. trees also a man was found dead.

June 22, Tuesday. Under the tree girl of four years died, she was being fed starvation had done its work.

June 23, Wednesday. No deaths to neighborhood to my knowledge.

June 24, Thursday. Antus' father much emaciated, he was being fed by late. In the evening, quite a young man was dead under the trees.

June 27, Sunday. This morning, I heard was that a man who was receiving aid from us, had died. In the afternoon others were found dead under the trees.

June 28, Monday. One died this morning from starvation.

This is a week's record of immediate neighborhood, but you some idea of the fear all around us.

Another point I must mention. We are thirty miles from railway, so that the distance of necessity increase till November when importation will begin. In the meantime, prospects of from suffering are very de-

The same devoted missionary, writing to the Herald of Calcutta, says I state the fact that people are dying from starvation in the district. In the poor-house are 1,600 inmates, and very less scores of people are waiting to the mission for receiving aid in one way or the other. From the people who are wanderers in acute distress, it would be a newcomer that no more being done, and yet I know the government is doing its power. There is no room for private relief gratifying to think that the relief of such suffering readers of this journal done so much. The Herald publish this week shows sections have responded to appeal. Following a number of contributions we cannot be classified under

In this issue we give a further list of acknowledgments of contributions classified according to States. Below is a summary of the totals of the various lists:

NEW ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Alabama	$ 103 10	Nevada	$15 00
Arizona	59 19	N. Hampshire	214 50
Arkansas	44 05	New Jersey	1574 70
California	405 82	New Mexico	23 00
Colorado	227 77	New York	2,210 03
Connecticut	314 31	N. Carolina	202 71
Delaware	22 25	N. Dakota	134 45
D.C. Columbia	25 70	Ohio	2,088 55
Florida	98 00	Oklahoma Ter.	1 15
Georgia	252 07	Oregon	111 09
Idaho	22 80	Pennsylvania	2,763 09
Illinois	4,538 19	Rhode Island	50 50
Indiana	771 40	S. Carolina	157 03
Indian Ter.	13 00	S. Dakota	121 00
Iowa	2,144 10	Tennessee	100 00
Kansas	709 32	Texas	105 74
Kentucky	507 46	Utah	8 00
Louisiana	28 00	Vermont	281 45
Maine	418 31	Virginia	381 00
Maryland	202 25	Washington	132 73
Massachusetts	807 07	W. Virginia	130 31
Michigan	710 11	Wisconsin	028 15
Minnesota	302 00	Wyoming	3 45
Mississippi	145 22	Canada	402 23
Missouri	435 07	Foreign	91 65
Montana	36 00	Mexico	51 00
Nebraska	1,201 91	Miscellaneous	192 70

Total New Acknowledgments $27,880 14

Previously acknowledged $153,184 28

Total to August 1 $181,070 42

Rlnir, Mrs.	1 00	Willis, Mrs.	1 00
Blanding, Mrs. G.	25	Wells, B. J. W.	1 00
Boyd, Mrs. A. O.	58	Miss C. B. No.	1 00
Boyd, Mrs. M. W.	1 00	C. P. C. child	1 00
Brower, Agnes	25	ton	1 00
Carter, Elizabeth	2 90	Miss E. A. R.	1 00
Chaffee, Addie	5	"J. Waters	1 00
Chaffee, Mr. & Mrs. J. J.	1 00	M. S. Castlet	1 00
Chaffee, Maggie	5	R. P. O. Bath	1 00
Chaffee, Waldo	5	Chapley	1 00
Cink, Miss E. H.	1 00	W. Fair	1 00
Cleveland, Mr. Mito	1 00	Woodley	1 00
Box in store	51	Friend	1 00
Clifford, Maud E.	1 00	Friend, Glen	1 00
Couklin, Mrs. S.	2 00	Friend, North	1 00
Cook, Minnie E.	25	Friends, Ora	1 00
Davis, David	50	I. H. N.	1 00
Field, Mr.	10	I. H. N.	1 00
Fitz, Irina	55	Reader	1 00
Fleshman, Alvin	10	Symptizer	1 00
Fleshman, B. A.	50	Symptizer	1 00
Fleshman, Carl	25	C. E. S. Santa	1 00
Fleshman, Elsie	10	Y. P. S. C.	1 00
Fleshman, Lylo	25	Tremont	1 00
Goff, Ray	10	An Ep League	1 00
Gribb, E. C.	10	Dunneburg	1 00
Locksmith, Cath'.	30	ton S. S.	1 00
Hoskins, Mrs. J.	1 00	Everett S. S.	1 00
Hupp, O. P.	1 00	dule Bapt	1 00
Jones, Mrs. W. E.	1 00	Anonymous	1 00
MacDonald, F.	1 00	Anonymous	1 00
Maine, Mrs. H.	3 00	Friend in the	1 00
Majors, Mr. & Mrs.	35	Friend in the	1 00
Marine, Nedie	25	Friend in the	1 00
Pinn, Julia Agnes	1 00	The Master	1 00
Porter, Oliver	1 25	For the starv	1 00
Rolmet, Nettie	1 32	For starv	1 00
Schroder's, Mite Box	1 00	Unnamed	1 00
in store	31	Gladstone H.	1 00
Stanley, Lydia	1 35	A. Helpe	1 00
Sullivan, Mrs. J. S. el	1 00	Poor old M.	1 00
Tramm, Miss Ella	2 00	From a friend	1 00
Walker, Frank	25	Nurse, Bran	1 00
Wells, Earle A.	1 00	From one w	1 00
Wells, James M.	15	pathy is	1 00
Wendling, Elsie	1 00	means are	1 00
Wendling, Willie	1 00	His child	1 00
White, W. P. & Miss	1 00	Poor old M.	1 00
Ella McClellan, col	1 00	Mite Box 19	1 00
ected by	10 00	Mite Box 33	1 00

Contributions.

NEW YORK CONTINUED

No Name, Tupper Lake
Yours, etc Salem
One who is striving to follow Jesus.....

A Lady in Reid Ch.
Canajoharie.....

Widow's Mite, Stony Brook.....

Three Golden Rulers,
Saranac Lake.....

Grandma, Grandson & Granddaughter, Stapleton.....

Little Hall Children, Fieldhome.....

Mite Box 726 Shortsville
Mite Box 727, Shortsville
Mite Box 730, Shortsville
Mite Box 731, Shortsville
A Mite for India, Sharon Spring.....

Little Mites from Little Hands, Lowville.....

In Memoriam of Mary Worcester.....

From Two Young Girls
Holey.....

M E S. S. Covington.....

S S Class of Marcy Av
Bapt Ch, Brooklyn.....

Class No 13 of Congl Ch, Ellington.....

Class No 9, Presb S S, Hempstead.....

Silver Stream S S, Newburgh.....

Two Boys of Park Ave
Chapel, Brooklyn.....

No Gage Union S S, No
Gage.....

Bapt S S, Camden.....

S S, Cameron Mills.....

Class No 2, Congl S S, Hamilton.....

Dutch Refd S S, Fishkill.....

Presb S S, Fredonia.....

Happy Hour S S, Overlook.....

S S Ch, Eastport.....

Bible School, Church of Christ, Troy.....

Townsend Baptist S S, Townsend.....

Class No 5 of First Pres
Ch S S, Washington-ville.....

Washington Square S S,
Hempstead.....

S S of Overlook.....

ong Ch, Danby.....

Presb Ch, Lansing-
burgh.....

Reformed Church, Warwick.....

Free Methodist Church,
Port Clinton.....

Presby Church,
Bergen.....

Members of Presby Ch, Bath.....

B Y P U Bapt Church,
Greece.....

Children of Alford Dist
School, Homer.....

Presb Ch, Shortsville.....

St George's Church,
N Y City.....

Methodist Ch, Bergen.....

M E Church, Napoli.....

M E Ch, Union Springs.....

M E Church, Charm Falls.....

Mite Box 1920.....

Mite Box 1923.....

Mite Box 1924.....

Mite Box 1925.....

Mite Box 1927.....

Mite Box 1928.....

Mite Box 1930.....

Mite Box 1932.....

Mite Box 1936.....

Mite Box 1937.....

Mite Box 1938.....

Mite Box 1940.....

Mite Box 1943.....

Mite Box 3133.....

Mite Box 3345.....

Mite Box 3346.....

Mite Box 3348.....

Mite Box 3349.....

Mite Box 3351.....

Mite Box 3347 Troy.....

Members of Pres Ch,
Hamilton.....

Reform Ch, Nassau.....

Presbyterian Ch, Mecklenburg.....

Congregational Church,
Gaines.....

Three Churches of Middleburg.....

M P Church, Eastport.....

1st Presbyterian Ch of Tadadilla.....

Children's Day Collection, Presbyterian Ch, Hillport.....

SS Collection, Children's Day, Presbyterian Ch, Millerton.....

Presbyterian Ch, Mecklenburg.....

Grace Baptist Church,
Brooklyn.....

Congl Church, Java.....

W F M Soc of Royal n
Chr Ch, Orangeport.....

M E Church, Sanitaria Springs.....

M E Ch, Bloomfieldburg
1st Pres Ch, Sande-
Cash, Binghamton.....

Cash, Binghamton.....

Cash, Troy.....

Cash, Troy.....

Citizens of York
Citizens of York

For Total of this Stat
See Page 614.

Psalm 112: 9.

in the name of the Master 1
Reader, Hughsonville 1
A Reader, Troy 5
A Subscriber who loves
Jesus, Palmyra 1
A Sympathizer, Hughsonville 1
Symp'z'r, Woodhaven 1
Sympathizers, Hopkinton and South Col. 1
Y P S C E, Birtchton 3
Local Union of C. E.
Poughkeepsie 1
Central Bapt Jr C Soc,
Brooklyn 1
Y P S C E, Orangeport 1
Seneca C E Soc Seneca 5
Y P S C E, Minetto 4
Elk Creek Union Y P S
C E, Delhi 5
Y P S C E of Grace
Chapel, Jamestown 3
Y P S C E of 1st Pres
Ch, Nyack 1
C E Soc Nant Pres Ch,
Steuben 6
Y P S C E of 2d Bapt
Ch, Rochester 1
Y P S C E Deem's Mem
Chapel, West New Brighton 11
Y P S C E of Mad Ave
Pres Ch, Albany 3
C E Vincent Pres Ch, Cape
C Vincent 1
Y P S C E of Bapt Ch,
Sandy Creek 6
J S C E, Clarence Centre 7
Y P S C E, Union Sq.
N Y City 1
J S C E, 1st Bapt Ch,
Woodside 1

"OUT AND OUT."

By Pastor Thomas Spurgeon.

A MINISTER of the Gospel who is privileged to have a band of praying men about him (Alas! for the one who hasn't), was not a little astonished to hear one of them present a most original petition just before the pastor entered the pulpit. He was asking the Lord to fill his servant with faith and fire, and added, "O Lord, we beseech thee, neutralize all his powers of body and spirit!" Everybody said, "Amen!" for it was evident that the good brother meant utilize. There are some who in God's service seem to do their best to neutralize their powers. Earnestness consists in setting them at the disposal of our Good Master," and ourselves employing them to the full.

No one can afford to do without zeal in any of the walks of life, for competition grows keener every day, and those who work for God should not be behind-hand in this matter. It is useless to think of laboring half-heartedly for Christ. They who do so are the greatest hinderers. Hurrying along the crowded sidewalk to catch a train they who most impede you are not the passengers who are going in a contrary direction (you can generally dodge them), but the loiterers who are moving the same way at a snail's pace. Oh that the slow-coaches in our churches would at least stand aside, and let us get on. How apt we all are to get into grooves, and to run in ruts. Our service is all too often perfunctory and mechanical. The choir that was singing a Te Deum (not Jackson's, as it usually did), was suddenly surprised to find the organ voiceless, and when the blower was remonstrated with, he exclaimed indignantly, "Think I don't know how many puffs goes to a Te Deum!" With such fatal formality is much Christian work attempted. The government stroke takes the place of tireless activity.

Equally reprehensible is the slovenly style of service. True earnestness does the work well even if it does it quickly. The King's business requires haste, but it requires taste as well. Dexterity and sincerity are quite compatible with celerity. A willing mind and a burning heart will guide the cunning hand.

When Beau Brummel was asked how he managed to arrange his ties so exquisitely, he answered, "Because I give my mind to it." The pity was that his devotion had not a worthier cause. Some Christians have earned to themselves a good degree, so that they can truly place the letters O. O. after their names, and everybody knows that in their case they stand for Out and Out. But the same letters remind me of one who declared that he had been a Christian for three years off and on. What does O. O. mean in your case, dear reader—Out and Out or Off and On?

Off and on Christians remind me of the intermittent geysers that spring in certain warm corners of the earth. I visited one of these a few years back. I was accompanied by an old man as guide who, as it seemed to me, tried to "take in" some of the "greenhorns" from the country. Coming to one of the geysers the old rascal said, "Listen to my incantation and you will see the Lord's water spring up almost at once." As I was enough, it did so. He murmured an incantation wizard-like, and up shot the scolding water. But he knew that this particular geyser played its pranks regularly every few minutes, so he brought his party to the spot just before the performance was due. It was an intermittent geyser and the time for its activity was fully come. But oh how soon it was over! Presently he conducted us to one that was ever boiling. I confess I preferred the geyser that was always at it, and that is what I want to be as to my devotion to Jesus my Lord. There are some folks who come to the boiling point at a convention or during a revival, and then die down again. By and by there is another excitement, and up they go again, ever so high, but it doesn't last. This off and on earnestness is not worthy of the name. Oh! to be able to say with David, "My heart is inditing a good matter." The word he employed means "boiled," or "bubbled up"—like a geyser. So may our hearts ever be.

Moreover, that geyser is most to be admired which leaps warm and strong in the coldest latitudes. The Icelandic geyser is a better emblem of Christian earnestness than is that of my old friends in New Zealand, or of yours in the Yellowstone Park.

Oh, to be warm when all is cold around! Oh, to be earnest amid unconcern, and zealous when others are indifferent! Alas! we too often grow like our neighbors, and even the geyser becomes first lukewarm, then cold, and even frozen. Would to God a frigid Christian was as rare and impossible a thing as a frozen geyser. As certain also of your own ministers have said: The favorite psalm for the modern Christian is the twenty-third and especially the verse which says, "He maketh me to lie down." Of paddlers and dabbles we have enough. The service of God is as "waters to swim in." The world and the Church need men and women who will plunge headlong into the work. Take a header, man, take a header! God wants broken hearts 'tis true, but he demands all the pieces. I once asked some of Moody's students for a corner in their prayerful sympathy. Whereupon their dear leader said: "No, no, we won't give him a corner; let him come right in." I bespeak this whole-hearted welcome for my Master and his blessed service. We are almost too careful not to pass the bounds of propriety. Rules which prevent us from being earnest are better broken.

I am much of the mind of the good brother whom I heard pray, "Lord, make us courageous, and make us outrageous, too." Some will reckon this an outrageous petition, but I know the friend's meaning and am at one with it. Some of us don't see eye to eye with the Salvation Army in all its methods and tactics, but we would rather help the most outré of them than join the Stagnation Army, whose Fabian policy and want of "go" are gratifying to none but the devil.

We sadly need more enthusiasm. We have scarcely enough for ourselves, so we are seldom able to "enthuse" others. A visitor from your own great land lately told me that having returned from a visit to England, he was accosted by a man who said: "You have seen Spurgeon and taken him by the hand, then let me grasp yours;" and so saying he gave him such a grip as he is not likely to forget. Now, this man had never seen my father, yet he loved him. Moreover, he was not himself a Christian, yet he had caught something of the enthusiasm that was kindled at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. I rejoice to know that this interview and interest led to a ripening acquaintance and affection, and that ere long the admirer of C. H. Spurgeon became a lover of his Lord. Oh, that we might learn the art of thus

A RELIABLE BUILDER

Present Perfect Condition and What Brought it About.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—"My daughter, who is just entering womanhood, was feeling very poorly and I gave her three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It made new blood for her, gave her a good appetite and built up her health. She is now in excellent health and we attribute it to the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla." Mrs. JENNIE PFALGROF, 424 Warren Street.

Hood's Pills cure all Liver Ills. Easy to operate. 25 cents.

affecting even those whom we have never seen! In order to do this, we must be ourselves enthusiastic in no mean measure.

It is recorded of "The Master of Blantyre," who by the way was very fond of boating and yachting, that when he came to die, he said to the friends and retainers gathered round his bed, "Pull together lads, when I am gone;" and the closing words of the dying saint were, "Full steam ahead!" These are the orders that we also have received. In Christian work there must be accord and unanimity. There must be fire, fervor, and force as well. We need not fear shipwreck, for Christ is with us. "Full steam ahead!"

The Bowery Mission's Good Work.

The last twelve months have been marked by most gratifying spiritual progress at the Bowery Mission. From April 1, 1896 to March 31, 1897, the results, briefly stated by Superintendent Wyburn, were as follows:

Gospel Meetings held.....	437
Aggregate Attendance.....	80,230
Professed Conversions.....	5,437
Men and Boys sheltered in Lodging House.....	40,943
Meals served in Restaurant.....	628,673
Patients treated in Free Dispensary.....	2,300
Employment found for.....	1,200
Kindergarten Attendance, (three months).....	770
Attendance at Mrs. Bird's Women's Meetings.....	2,300
Professed Conversions at same.....	250
Free Meals.....	59,850

The work of the Mission, as most of our readers already know, is among the male waifs and strays of the great metropolis—the "lost men and boys," those who through adversity or wicked living have become stranded and homeless. It is the oldest Mission in the country and its converts can be found in every land under the sun. The Superintendent states that men's clothing is greatly needed to supply the wants of many who come to the Mission almost in rags. Gifts of clothing should be addressed to 105 Bowery, New York.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC New York.
BRADLEY New York.
BROOKLYN New York.
JEWETT New York.
ULSTER New York.
UNION Chicago.
SOUTHERN Chicago.
SHIPMAN Chicago.
COLLIER St. Louis.
MISSOURI St. Louis.
RED SEAL St. Louis.
SOUTHERN St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MOZLEY Cleveland.
SAL Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

SURVEYING AND MAPPING

Coal & Metal Mining; Prospecting; Electricity; Machine Design; Stationary, Locomotive and Marine Engineering; Architecture; Plumbing; Railroad, Hydraulic and Bridge Engineering; Sheet Metal Pattern Cutting; Mechanical and Architectural Drawing; Book-keeping; Shorthand; English Branches. All who study GUARANTEED SUCCESS. Fees Moderate, Advance or Installments. Circular Free; State subject you wish to study. International Correspondence Schools, Box 801 Scranton, Pa.

WALL PAPER Write to the largest wall paper house in U. S. for samples—mailed free. From 25¢ etc. to $35 a roll—8 yards. Our prices 50 per cent. lower than others. KAYSER & ALLMAN, PHILADELPHIA. 922-934 Market St. 418 Arch Street.

N. Y. University Sixty-third year opens Oct. 1st, 1897. DAY CLASSES (LL. B. after two years). EVENING CLASSES (LL. B. after three years). Tuition $10. GRADUATE CLASSES—Twelve courses. Five obtain LL. M. For circulars address L. J. Tompkins, Registrar, Washington Square, New York City.

DAVIS MILITARY SCHOOL. Winston, North Carolina. Prepares for any College or University, or gives complete business college course. No boy prepared by us ever failed to pass examination for West Point and Annapolis. Fine climate. Low rates. Write for Catalogue.

FRANKLIN COLLEGE New Athens, O. 73d Year. Send out U. S. Senators, Governors, and 340 Ministers. Total cost $140 a year; 8 courses, course for D.D., Ph.D., etc.; catalog free, with plan to our funds. W. A. WILLIAMS, D.D., Pres.

A Summer Necessity. Makes the food more appetizing and digestible.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

No ambitious girl need go abroad for study in music—not even "to be finished." The

New England CONSERVATOR OF MUSIC

offers advantages in the study of music, musical composition, and instruction, that are not surpassed in any musical center of the old world.

GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Musical Director. Send for our catalogue to FRANK W. HALE, Gen'l Mgr., Boston, Mass.

YOU will find that painting properly done with White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil is a good investment—more than the cost will be added to their tractiveness and value of your property. Make sure that brand is right. (See list of brands which are genuine.) Avoid the "just-as-good," "sold-for-less money" sorts.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tins, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlets containing valuable information and card showing samples of colors also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite until you investigate. More artistic and enduring; less expensive to install. Work delivered by Write for designs and information. No more growing. No cleaning. THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO. 70-80 Howard Avenue, Brooklyn.

A coarse, rough soap quickly and easily be made and white with HEISKELL'S Soap. 25c. a cake at druggists or by mail. HEISKELL'S Pills, by their action on the stomach and bowels, make the eyes bright, sweet, and skin healthy. 25 cents. or by mail.

JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., 531 Commercial. THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING CHURCH BELLS PUREST BELL METAL (COOPER) Send for Price and Catalogue. McKENNA BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE.

BLMYER'S CHURCH BELLS. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. (Cincinnati).

SACRED SONGS No. No other New book equal to it. $25.00 each, if by mail. THE BIGHLOW & CO. Lakeside Building, Chicago. To E. Niles.

A DOUBLE OPPORTUNITY.

A STORY FROM LIFE.

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

By ANNIE L. HANNAH.

(Continued from last week.)

CHAPTER II.

DAVID RANSOM opened his eyes with a start and looked bewilderedly about him the next morning. A long ray of sunlight was streaming through the dusty little window at his side, falling upon the piled up hay and the opposite wall of the loft.

Where was he? Surely these were not his prison walls! For a moment he lay where he was, utterly at a loss; but the realization of his position flashed in upon him and he sprang to his feet. He had slept far longer than he intended, as he knew from the position of the sun, and going to the ladder he peered anxiously down into the barn below. There was no sound of any one stirring, and descending cautiously he found to his infinite relief that there was no one there. It was the work of but a moment to open the door and step into the lane, where, just beyond, the wide old farmhouse lay basking in the rays of the morning sun. He put his hand into the pocket of his coat and finding the paper quite safe, turned and went up the flagged walk tapping at the rear door.

A sweet-faced woman of past middle age opened it.

"Well," she said, pleasantly, "what can I do for you this morning?"

David took off his hat. "I would like to see the owner of this farm, if you please."

"I am the owner; I am Miss Rachel May; and where do you come from so early in the morning?"

David never could explain the impulse which prompted him to reply, albeit defiantly: "I came from your barn; I have been sleeping there all night."

If he had expected to see any change in the friendly expression of the face into which he looked, he was agreeably disappointed.

"I am very sorry that was necessary," she said, "but since it was, I hope that you were comfortable."

Not to be found fault with for trespassing was more than David had hoped or expected. He had called himself a fool for thus running the risk of spoiling his chances of employment by such an acknowledgment the moment that the words left his lips. But to be asked if stolen quarters had met with his approbation proved too much for his well-developed sense of the ludicrous, and he laughed outright; a ringing, boyish laugh, such as had not been heard from him for two long years.

"What's the matter?" asked the woman in surprise, by no means expecting this strange young man to laugh himself quickly. David reined in his laughter and slept very well, and he would be glad if she would allow him to work for her for his lodging.

There was something about this woman which touched and warmed him, but he was too eager, and perhaps hardened, to be really impressed.

"Wow, I don't know," Miss Rachel was saying, "I suppose that you could find something for you to do, but I don't know; but first you must let me give you some breakfast for I suppose you are sitting for breakfast, that you have none?"

No," David replied, "I don't have a square meal here— and the realizing suddenly what he was, he paused in some confusion.

"There, now. I thought that he was going to tell me!" exclaimed the little woman to herself. "He isn't a common tramp, that's easy to see, and when he isn't laughing, he looks dreadfully sad or discouraged or something. But never mind: there's no need of my knowing; the Lord will show me how to help him if that's what he sent him to me for. Well, you sit right down here while I get you some breakfast," she said brightly, "and we'll talk about the work afterward. There comes Sam now. I'll ask him what there is for you to do."

"HOW GLAD I AM YOU SHOWED ME THIS PAPER," SHE SAID.

David glanced up quickly at the man who came slouching across the meadow toward the house, and recognized him as the person he had seen about the barn the night before. He returned the scrutiny with interest, and with a brief "morning," accompanied by a stiff nod of his head, he entered the house followed by Miss Rachel, who turned back to say to David: "I'll call you when the things are set on."

"It seems real sort of mean to make him work out a meal which isn't going to cost me a cent," concluded Miss Rachel, after giving Sam a hasty account in reply to his question regarding David: "but folks do say it isn't right to give even food to an able-bodied man that can work for it. You can find something to set him at, can't you, Sam?"

New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc. — Free to all Readers.

All readers will be glad to know that the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, has proved an assured cure for all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disordered action of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is a wonderful discovery, with a record of 1200 hospital cures in 30 days. It acts directly upon the blood and kidneys, and is a true specific, just as quinine is in malaria. Rev. W. B. Moore, D.D., of Washington, testifies in the New York Christian Witness that Alkavis completely cured him of Kidney and bladder disease of many years' standing. Many ladies also testify to its curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. So let the Chloric Kidney Cure Company, No. 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative powers.

"There ain't no lack of something to set him at, Miss Rachel," he replied. "There's enough to be done, the land knows! But don't you think it's a little mite risky? What kin you expect of a man what sleeps in your haymow without so much as 'by your leave?'"

"I guess I'll risk that," she responded cheerfully.

"All right. It's for you to say; I thought I'd just mention it. I'm agreeable to all help what comes my way, for my farm and yours is just a bit too much to manage comfortable," he added.

"Then I'm glad he came along," said Rachel heartily.

"I'm free to confess I've been put to it since Dan'l was took, and the work has got the upper hand of me; but that ain't sayin' 's this feller'll mount to anything, Miss Rachel."

"Well, well, give him the trial, Sam; he can but fail, as you and I have failed more than once."

"I like that!" exclaimed Sam with a grin, as he took himself off.

David ate the bountiful breakfast to which Miss Rachel presently called him, in utter silence, and when he had finished and risen from the table, thanking her with a glance which she did not understand, she said: "If you will go out to the barn now, Sam will tell you what you can do to help him, as you feel that you would like to work a little for me. But do not make it too long," she added kindly.

Again David gave her that glance, but she had turned away to replenish her stove and did not catch it.

"That man's got a lot of go in him. Miss Rachel," said Sam, coming into the kitchen an hour or so later. "I'llow I never see a better worker. He never offered to stop, neither, till I asked him if he didn't think he'd 'bout worked out that meal of victuals, and then he said he'd rather be working than not. So I thought I'd come in and see how you felt 'bout having me keep him on a spell longer."

"It's too bad for you to have all my work on your hands, Sam, and I hope that we shall find some one before long. But of course keep him as long as he can help you."

And so David stayed on, working till dinner time, and still Sam found work for him to do which promised to keep him busy till after dark.

(Concluded on next page.)

Babies Thrive On It.

Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk

LITTLE BOOK "INFANT HEALTH" SENT FREE
Should be in Every House

N.Y. CONDENSED MILK CO.
NEW YORK.

The Berkshire Hill Sanatorium,

An Institution for the Scientific Treatment of Cancer

Tumors, and all forms of Malignant Growth

WITHOUT THE USE OF THE KNIFE

We have never failed to effect a permanent cure where we have had a reasonable opportunity.

Books and circulars giving description of the System, Treatment, Terms, and References

DRS. W. E. BROWN & SON, North Adams, Mass.

Woman's Best Friend

Dirt Works Enemy

Largest package—greatest economy. Made only by
THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,
Chicago. St. Louis. New York. Boston. Philadelphia.

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE BODY QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW

MODENE

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.

Discovered by Accident.—In Courcouron, on incomplete mixture spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE, pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. I assure, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few days, and you will see the difference. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever obtained such wonderful results. NOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it; permanent growth such as the beard or hair on the neck or face, require two or more applications. Roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and injury of unpleasant feeling while applied or ever afterward. MODENE is as follows:—

Recommended by all who have tested its merits.—Used by people of refinement who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a precious which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, and its future growth is an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as soft to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should destroy its growth. MODENE sent by mail in safety mailing cases, postage sealed from observation on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by mail address written on envelope, and it is guaranteed to be as soft to the skin. (ALWAYS MENTION YOUR COUNTY AND YOUR STATE.) Cut this advertisement from any paper and send it to the following address:—

MODENE MANUFACTURING CO., CINCINNATI
Manufacturers of the Highest Grade Hair Remover
You can register your letter at any Post-office to insure it WANTED.
We offer $1,000 FOR FAILURE OF THE SLIGHTEST INJURY, OR EVEN A HOTTE OF ANY

DUBLE OPPORTUNITY.

(continued from preceding page.)

Rachel May was not deeply versed in the ways of the world, but she knew how to feel certain that there must be a mystery surrounding this man who had been sent into her barn, and had yet shown so great a capacity for good work, and an inclination to keep busy. So, as David Ransom rose from the table after supper, she turned to him gently: "Of course you must not choose unless you choose, but have you decided to sleep to-night?"

"Instantly, with his arms folded against his breast, he looked down upon her for a word; then he began to smile wily and deliberately.

"All this had not happened, I had stolen into your barn again. But now—" And he shook his

"I shall not sleep in the barn; there is a room upstairs, and you are quite used to that," she said quickly. "Addam may find more work for you to-morrow if you care for it?"

"Where he bent upon her that long, inquiring glance. "How—how are you?" he asked slowly. "How do you think I may not burn your barn and your horses? How do you dare ask me so?"

"I don't know," she replied smiling at his glance. "Somehow, I am sure. You do not look like a man who would steal," she added brightly.

"His face grew ghastly. "How—how are you?" he began hoarsely. "suppose some one should tell you that I had been in prison for it?"

"I should be very sorry to hear it. But I think that any one will ever tell me of you," smiling.

"He opened his lips to speak again, then he himself and putting his hand into his pocket drew from it the paper which he had prepared the day before and he read to her without a word.

"He opened and read it, then looked up at her with a pleased expression.

"I am glad I am that you showed this to me," she exclaimed. "It proves to me what I was beginning to hope: you are the very man for whom I have been looking. We have already received your friend's advice and let your friend say for itself: and if you will stay and try for a week, I hope by the time we shall like one another that we will not wish to part. You have done all the work of a farm. Sam would you like to try?" And she took her hand to him.

"He saw a man dying of thirst thrusting out his hand, and he had the cup of life held out to him! That is what Ransom felt he was doing when, with his hands behind him he said: "Wait and hear what I have to say this morning I fully intended giving this paper to read and asking you to employ me on the strength of what you had treated me as you have been so heavenly kind to me. I am up, for I could not lie to you, and I thought that I might go away and tell you what I am. But now I have trusted me: have offered to sleep beneath your roof—you must listen, then, and be thankful I do not take your hand—your clean hand—in mine. That paper I wrote myself: yesterday I came out of my room here I have been for two years stealing! stealing another man's "His clasped hands gripped one another tightly till the nails cut through the flesh. He hoped that she would reply? He hoped, all unconsciously, that she would judge him as the world judged him, that his heart went down, down, down, never continued silence? Perhaps, he was sure of but one thing: that the cloud which had surrounded him had never been so black: the dark was so appallingly dark as when, without lifting his head, he moved from where he stood and moved toward the door where his hat and walking stick lay upon a peg. How long it seemed he thought vaguely, as one would think of things under the pressure of great calamity, since first he had been there. Hours! Why, it must be days, weeks ago, so familiar had he become with the great room, passing in and out of it, as he had done constantly during the day. Well, he should never see it again, or its gentle mistress who had made that day to him one never to be forgotten.

He lifted his arm to take down the hat, but as he did so felt a light touch upon his shoulder, and turning with a start found her standing at his side, her hand still held out to him, her eyes brimming with tears.

"It was brave and true of you to tell me, and I am so sorry for your trouble. You have done wrong, terribly wrong! I would not have you feel that less than you do; but I am sure that you are sorry—perhaps have always been sorry for it. It may be that because of—of the consequences of the wrong which you did, you will not find it easy to make a fresh start. Stay here with me, my poor boy, and let me help you make it."

"You—you do not despise me? You are not afraid of me yet?" He was breathlessly waiting her reply.

"Despise you? Afraid of you? Does God despise you? And what right have I to judge you? How do I know that, in your place, I should not have yielded to the temptation? No, no, it is not for me to take God's place! and he is so much more merciful and tender than I could be!"

The lifted arm had fallen to his side, and she took the hand between her own, pressing it warmly. Only for an instant, however, for he almost snatched it from her, and turning abruptly toiled his arms against the wall, his face buried upon them.

"God bless you! God forever bless you!" he whispered. "You have made me believe in Him! You have made me repent my act as I never repented before!"

And then for a few moments there was silence in the great fire-lit room: a silence broken presently by that most piteous of sounds—the sound of a strong man weeping. But he lifted up his head by-and-by, and standing erect looked down upon her. "I came in here this morning," he began. "A hardened man, bitter, discouraged, desperate, hating myself and God. I hate myself still, but a God who could have made you must be full of mercy! May he have mercy upon me a sinner!" And again he bowed his head, but this time in meekness and penitence of heart.

"Amen!" said Miss Rachel fervently. Then taking his hand again, and looking up into the eyes still wet with recent tears: "I am glad that you told me. I think that I can help you more because I know. But no one else shall ever hear unless you yourself tell it as you have told it to me."

He seized her hand then, almost crushing it in his grasp.

And so to David Ransom came the opportunity which he had craved; as he had promised, so as the days and weeks passed by, did he prove himself worthy of the trust placed in him. He proved it as I say, yet not in the proud self-reliant spirit in which that promise had been made; not in his own power or strength, but humbly, prayerfully, "and in the fear of God."

And so to Miss Rachel came her opportunity. An opportunity bravely accepted, nobly used.

For "he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

THE END.

The Bane
of Beauty.

Beauty's bane is the fading or falling of the hair. Luxuriant tresses are far more to the matron than to the maid whose casket of charms is yet unruffled by time. Beautiful women will be glad to be reminded that falling or fading hair is unknown to those who use

Ayer's Hair Vigor.

An Exceptional Opportunity.

To Secure a Beautiful and Useful Book at a Bargain,

THE CHURCH AT HOME

By...
Bishop John H. Vincent,
D. D., LL.D.,

Is the title of a magnificent manual for family worship and home teaching, and a book that should be in every Christian home in the land, and those who are fortunate enough to secure a copy of this book will find it a delightful companion. It contains 480 pages,

210 ILLUSTRATIONS,

TWO BEAUTIFUL COLORED PICTURES, THE LORD'S PRAYER and THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

LESSON, HYMN and PRAYER FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, constituting a complete family worship for the whole year.

READINGS AND MEDITATIONS FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS: NEW YEAR'S DAY, GOOD FRIDAY, EASTER, WHIT SUNDAY, INDEPENDENCE DAY, THANKSGIVING DAY, CHRISTMAS DAY, AND DAYS OF AFFLICTION.

Memory Texts for Every Day in the Year,
The Church Steps,
Home Lessons,
Special Collects,
Bible Biography.

Picture Lessons for Children,
Old and New Tunes,
Wisdom in Proverbs,
Blank Pages for Records
and Autographs.

ALTOGETHER IT IS THE MOST COMPLETE HELP FOR FAMILY
WORSHIP
PUBLISHED.

By the purchase of the entire stock from the original publishers, we are enabled to offer the subscribers of "The Christian Herald" ONLY a remarkable bargain, provided the stock is not exhausted when your order is received, as follows:

Cloth, Illuminated Cover, former price $3.00. Special Price, $1.50

ONLY CLOTH BINDING LEFT
ALL OTHER STYLES SOLD OUT.

Remember this special price pays all express charges and delivers this magnificent book weighing 4 lbs. 7 ounces, size when closed 8 1-2 x 10 1-2 inches, absolutely free of expense.

If the stock is exhausted when your order is received, we will return the money at once, and as we have only sufficient copies to supply a small percentage of the subscribers of "The Christian Herald," we trust you will be fortunate enough to avail yourself of this exceptional offer.

Send money by money order or registered letter. Write name and address plainly, giving your nearest express office.

P. B. BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINT'L

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President.

In a world where "Cleanliness is next to Godliness" no praise is too great for

SAPOLIO

PACE MAKERS PIN.

A beautiful miniature bicycle, complete in every part; 1 1/2 in. long. Frame of sterling silver, and wheels of gold plate, which revolve like lightning as the wind blows against them. For caps or bouquets; lady or gent. An example of our $6000 bargains we will sell most paid without charge for only 10c. 10c. For $200, 75c. 10c. 10c.

R. H. Ingersoll & Son, 62 Cortland St., Dept. A, 61 N. Y.

A TYPEWRITER'S CHANCE

"Oh! THAT Easy Touch"

* YOU SIMPLY TOUCH THE KEY

THE SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER

SYRACUSE N. Y., U. S. A.

BRANCH OFFICES IN 25 PRINCIPAL CITIES IN ENGLAND AND IRELAND.

EASY TOUCH A BIG POINT

SEND FOR NEW ART CATALOG

 $10 to $35. High Grade F Largest stock. All ma models. SATISFACTION GU
TEED. Write today for lists of
T. BROWN LEWIS Cycle Co., C

8% MUNICIPAL WARRANTS.
Safe! short-time paper, earning 8%
Write for details. Robt. E. Strahan
Equitable Building, Boston, Mass.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICE: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

COPYRIGHT 1897, BY LOUIS A. DORSEY.

VOLUME 20.—NUMBER 33.

Rev. J. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 18, 1897.

PRICE FIVE CENTS.

OUR RELIEF SHIP SAFE IN PORT.

Arrival of the "City of Everett" at Calcutta—Letters from Missionaries—Thousands of Lives Saved by the Famine Relief Fund.

As we go to press, the following telegram is received:

Calcutta, Aug. 10.
The "City of Everett" arrived safe and sound with good cargo. Met by Mr. Thoburn. Arrangements for distribution of cargo more acceptable than expected. HOBBS."

It will be welcome news to our readers here, especially to those whose gifts have freighted the gallant steamer with this magnificent gift to starving people. It is extremely gratifying to learn that Dr. Hobbs has found, as we expected, that the corn will be welcome to

The need has evidently been appalling and it still continues. Until the harvest is reaped from the seed which is now being sown in the provinces that have been blessed with rain, the pressure will be severe. The appeals to the missionaries are most urgent, and it would have been heart-breaking to listen to them if they had been unable to respond. It must be very gratifying to our readers to know that through their gifts these servants of Christ have been able to feed the hungry, and to show the people who know not Christ that Christianity is a religion of love and com-the Christian faith. Thus our Lord's name has been honored, and He who sees all things has been pleased as he has witnessed his people denying themselves that they may feed the hungry in his name.

The photograph we publish on this page was sent to us by the Rev. R. A. Hume, D.D., one of the American Board's Missionaries at Ahmednagar. It shows the people whom he has been enabled to support with the funds contributed by our readers. As will be noticed, the greater part of them are women and children, those who suffer most in such a calamity as that now desolating the afflicted land. In the rear of the group are a few men some of them aged, whose hoary locks call for consideration in such a time as this. Dr. Hume has personally superincalamity that confronts us! The fears I had when I wrote you the 19th of March last we are now realizing. To help us still further, your second noble, splendid, timely gift of $500 has come, and we are devoutly grateful for it. So many of the people say you have kept us alive, yes, dear sir, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. How shall I begin to portray the increasing distress on every hand! My hands and pen drop unable to present the scene.

The heavens are brass, the earth—and I am speaking of our Sirur region only now—scorched, the rains hold off from us, the cattle are dying all along the roads, and the fields which this time of year should be green, but are dark with drought. The people are flocking to us from all sides, almost wild with hunger. Mrs.

FAMINE-STRICKEN APPLICANTS FOR RELIEF AT THE AMERICAN MISSION, AT AHMEDNAGAR, INDIA.

people and that there will be no loss in sending it to the famine-stricken districts.

No words of ours could express so vividly the attitude of the starving people of India at the gifts of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, as do the letters we received last week from the missionaries.

passion. The English missionaries have received from their own land the means to alleviate the distress, and it is well that American missionaries have also been enabled to share in the good work. The natives must see now that the help which comes to them in their hour of need, is not the product of national feeling, but the outflowing of the love and sympathy of tended the work of relief and has taken care that the money has been made to go as far as possible. Following are some of the letters received from the missionaries:

SIRUR, India, July 5, 1895.

To the Editor of The Christian Herald,
New York City, N. Y., U. S. A.

DEAR AND HONORED SIR.—How shall I begin to speak in view of the increased

Winsor and myself constantly say to each other, what shall we do? They come and offer their children, putting their hands on their stomachs, saying with plaintive tone and beseeching eye, "in mercy give us something to fill our stomachs, we are dying."

O how glad we are for the second $500;
(Continued on page 625.)

OUR MAIL-BAG

is a reliable firm.—F. E. K., Reado
Your question is not quite clear.—P
My Clarenceville, Me. We hope to do so, bu ally pressure of other matter crowds it ou
M. R., Minco, Ind. Ter. Not yet, but m
—Mrs. Charles Berwick, Detroit. It ably be produced in book form, but no time.—W. H. M., Wellsville, Pa. Voi the whole subject fully treated in any cyclopedia.—Lelia J. W., Reeve, N. letter has been forwarded.—Investig bury, Can. We have not the data ne answer.—Reader, Crittenden, N. Y. persevere in your missionary purpose by using tact and gentleness, however, es dealing with such cases as you describ
B., Woneowoc, Wis. It stands for cha
D. H., Colorock. You must consult a —Subscriber, Ont., Can. It would se work of necessity.

IN A PALESTINE ORPHANAGE.

A Visit to Missionary Schueller's Famous Institute in Jerusalem—Hundreds of Poor Syrian Children Trained to Useful Christian Lives.

THE SYRIAN ORPHANAGE IN JERUSALEM.

AN esteemed correspondent in Palestine, Mr. F. Vester, Sr., sends us the following interesting and encouraging letter, describing a phase of Christian work in the Holy City, with the accompanying photographs. Mr. Vester has dwelt many years in Jerusalem, and is highly esteemed by the citizens of all nationalities alike. He writes as follows:

"The Syrian Orphanage for Boys at Jerusalem is the largest establishment of its kind in the Holy Land, and I am sure a history of the institution and its work will greatly interest your readers. The aim of the institution is to give a home to orphans of Palestine and Syria. It was founded in 1860 by Missionary Theodore L. Schueller, after the terrible massacre of Christians in Damascus. Mr. Schueller at the time traveled through the country and gathered the poorest orphans into his orphanage, which was then very small, consisting of only one large room and several small cottages. The founder had to labor under great difficulties; but with the help of God, he has since been enabled to make his orphanage the largest establishment of its kind in the country, and to add the number of inmates is 240, with ample accommodation for all.

"Besides Arabic and German, the orphans are taught a trade, which enables them after leaving the institution, to gain their living by honest work. The various trades are taught by European masters, and in connection with this ranch of the orphan there is also a school for the blind, of whom there are a great many in this country. The chief aim of the orphanage, however, is to teach the inmates the principles of true Christianity and to bring them up in the fear of God. A good number of former pupils are now working in various parts of the Holy Land as native missionaries.

"Over 1,500 boys have found a home in this institution since its foundation, and all of them are full of thankfulness and gratitude for the advantages gained by their sojourn in the Orphanage. The godly founder of the Orphanage, Missionary L. Schueller, died last year aged seventy-five, and his position as director is now filled by his son, the Rev. Th. Schueller.

"During the last few months, a new impetus was given to the good work by the Armenian question, and already ninety Armenian orphans have found a home here, and sixty more are expected to arrive shortly; but as the premises are too small to accommodate such a large addition, new quarters are being erected for the Armenian boys in the institution's Farming Colony at 'Bir Salem,' near Ramleh. The work of the institution has, up to the present time, been carried on by the aid of Christian friends all over Europe, and it is hoped that these friends will continue to give their aid. God, who has obviously held his protecting hand over the Orphanage, will not fail to sustain it further and will surely move many hearts to give a helping hand to the promotion of this work."

Jerusalem, July 6, 1897. F. VESTER, SR.

MODERN IDOLATRY.

Idols Commonly Worshipped in Christian Lands and their Power Over the Lives of the Worshipers.

At first sight it would seem that of all the commandments, the one least likely to be broken in these days is, "Thou shalt have none other gods before me." The tendency of the times is to get rid of God altogether, and not to multiply objects of worship. But when we consider what worship practically means, we have reason to doubt whether this commandment is generally kept. We do not worship graven images, it is true; but have we not suffered some thing to usurp God's throne? It might be well honestly and faithfully to find out what occupies the supreme place in our lives. Is there anything that we desire above all else? Anything to which we habitually sacrifice other desires? Is there anything that holds so high a place, that to receive it, we neglect family ties, or religious duties, or the claims of friendship, or health, or relaxation? Is there any pursuit, any

The answer to these questions may give the clue to the idol, if there is one, in our lives. The story of Abraham and Isaac is continually being reproduced. God had no desire for the sacrifice of the lad. It was sufficient when the patriarch was willing to give him up at God's command. The father showed that even his love for his son was subordinate to his loyalty to God. We are not required to make such sacrifices; we are required only to keep such a law of subordination. The demand is not unreasonable. A father expects the same consideration from his child. If an indulgent father gives his son a bicycle, and the son becomes so infatuated with it that he will not go to school and will not come home at night at the hour his father appoints, and is continually being led into disobedience by his delight in his wheel, what is likely to happen? Will not the wise father take it from him? If the boy used it in moderation and continued to be obedient to his father, there would be no trouble, and the father would be glad that his son's pleasures were increased; but when the wheel becomes a source of alienation, then it must be removed. So it is in our own lives. We suffer the blessings God gives us to come between him and us. A lover, a wife, a child, money, fame, pleasure—any of these may become idols. When God sees "inordinate affection" creeping thus into the life of his child, he may leave him to the consequences of his folly or he may take away the idol, to save his child from being lost. The mischief is not in the things themselves, but in the love which makes them rivals of God.

Stundist Persecution.

Notwithstanding the Czar's promise to the Czarina, that greater religious liberty would be granted throughout his empire, there has thus far been no perceptible change. Russian persecution of Stundist Christians is being continued with unabated vigor. The Czar having recalled none of the draconic measures issued against these Russian Protestants during the last reign. Some Russian papers publish private testimonies of eye witnesses to the cruelties perpetrated upon the unfortunate Protestants.

One writer, a lady, says: "The village authorities take particular delight in passing sentence of flogging on the 'heretics.' A moujik of the village Komisarovka, by name Potap Goli, looked emaciated to the extreme, tortured, indeed, almost to death. This man had been flogged numerous times. On one occasion they watched his return and stopped him coming from a secret meeting of his brethren. It was an awful frost, and first of all they took off his boots and led him barefooted over the frozen mole-hills forcing him to count how many such hills there were over the vast field. This lasted wholly two hours. The legs of the victim finally got quite numb, and he fell to the ground unable to move any further. Bleeding from several wounds, he was then dragged into a cottage, where a fiendish torture was applied to him. This consisted of a big sheet of paper rolled up like a cigarette, one end of which they put into his nostrils, igniting the other end. This remedy proved effective. The flame caught the moustache of the victim, and he began to move and groan, to the great amusement of the barbarians around him. This is not an exceptional case. In the official reports of the Government Procureurs at numerous trials, it was stated again and again that the Stundists were 'beaten with poles and iron pitchforks, were dragged out from their houses by their hair, their clothes torn, their mouths filled with mud, have been thrown and drowned in deep pools of water, have been forced and sunk in the earth up to their necks,' that 'women were stripped of their clothes, and, in that state, were beaten with cudgels, hayforks, and iron bars.'

"Thousands of Lives Saved."

(Continued from first Page)

but with the utmost care and economy it is vanishing immediately. Please, dear Dr. Klopsch, do see these plain figures: The population of this region, in which my wife and myself are the only missionaries, numbers 150,000. Thousands of these must die. They are flocking to our house daily, I may say hourly, and our hearts are sad and heavy at the sights that present themselves by these really starving people. It seems to me the least we can possibly do is to make an attempt to save 1,000 whom government aid does not reach. One thousand people out of the tens of thousands need 500 sheers of grain per day; this for a month of thirty days is 15,000 sheers or quarts, i. e., a pint for a person. This, at the present rate will cost $1,000 a month.

These poorest of the poor here in this Sirur district, where they have only myself and wife to look to, must be cared for or die. Let me, in your name, raise a banner—"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Grain." It will be an object-lesson to the thousands who are flocking to us. We are using your money in the way you have so well suggested, and are purchasing grain and giving it out by measure to the families in distress.

Yours sincerely, R. WINSOR.

RAHURI, WESTERN INDIA,

July 8th, 1897.

To the Editor of the CHRISTIAN HERALD:

DEAR SIR: These last weeks I have been so busy trying to relieve some of the terrible suffering in this district, that I have not had time to write you of the work in detail. The daily sights here are almost too harrowing to write about, and it would be impossible for any pen to really describe the distress as it exists today. Going on the streets we see people in all stages of emaciation, some without hope, sitting by the roadside, or in the streets picking up grain that has been spilled kernel by kernel. Some are seen picking off the leaves of the Tamarind tree or the bitter fruit and seeds of several kinds of trees which in ordinary times are never touched by the very poorest of the poor. A woman with four children came to our house last week for relief, as hundreds of others are doing daily. She was of high caste, and had found nothing for herself and children to eat for four days, except the leaves and seeds of some tree. They all had a peculiar wolfish starved look. We fed them all, and the mother gave us one little girl to put in our school.

As to the distribution of money you have sent us, as long as the government relief works were open, we used our funds to supplement in cases of sickness, feebleness or great need among children, the small pittance earned at the works. For the last two months the distress has been so terribly increased that it was simply a matter of saving life by our giving. All able-bodied persons have been sent to the only relief works now open in this district. All that government would take on we have sent to the poorhouse. Our cases of greatest suffering have come from the Hill people, who live a few miles to the west of us. They are respectable people, very simple in their habits, who have been driven from their homes by extreme hunger. Yesterday a family of three generations, whose ages ranged from ten days to sixty years, came to our door. They were all in the last stages of emaciation, and so stupefied by suffering as to hardly believe their eyes, when we gave them food. These people are very nearly naked, but their distress for food is so great, that we pay no attention to their lack of garments.

From early morning till late at night the driveway to our gate is crowded, the aged who after all their years of hardship and scarcity are now dying of actual starvation, mothers with helpless little children pinched with hunger, other children with neither mothers nor fathers, their ceaseless crying is even now going on as I write.

Every dollar that we receive for Famine Relief is regarded as a most sacred trust, and is used to do the utmost good possible. Thousands of lives have already been saved by The Christian Herald Fund, and the need is now greater than ever before, and will continue to increase until the rains come and a crop can be ripened. Believe me, yours sincerely, W. O. BALLANTINE.

ORPHANS IN CAMP ON A TRIP TO THE JORDAN IN 1897.

SLAUGHTER OF MEN.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Prov. 7: 22, - - - As an ox to the slaughter.

HERE is nothing in the voice or manner of the butcher to indicate to the ox that there is death ahead. The ox thinks he is going on to a rich pasture-field of clover where all day long he will revel in the herbaceous luxuriance; but after awhile the men and the boys close in upon him with sticks and stones and shouting, and drive him through bars and into a doorway, where he is fastened, and with well-aimed stroke the axe fells him; and so the anticipation of the redolent pasture-field is completely disappointed. So many a young man has been driven on by temptation to what he thought would be paradisaical enjoyment; but after awhile influences with darker hue and swarthier arm close in upon him, and he finds that instead of making an excursion into a garden, he has been driven "as an ox to the slaughter."

We are apt to blame young men for being destroyed when we ought to blame the influences that destroy them. Society slaughters a great many young men by the behest, "You must keep up appearances; whatever be your salary. If you haven't the money, borrow. But there are two kinds of borrowed money: Money borrowed for the purpose of starting, or keeping up legitimate enterprise and expense, and money borrowed to get that which you can do without. The first is right, the other is wrong. If young men knew the despotism of being in debt, more of them would keep out of it. What did debt do for Lord Bacon, with a mind towering above the centuries? It induced him to take bribes and convict himself as a criminal before all ages. What did debt do for Walter Scott? Broken-hearted at Abbotsford, kept him writing until his hand gave out in paralysis to keep the sheriff away from his pictures and statuary. Better for him if he had minded the maxim which he had chiselled over the fireplace at Abbotsford. "Waste not, want not."

The trouble is, my friends, that people do not understand the ethics of going in debt, and that if you purchase goods with no expectation of paying for them, or go into debts which you cannot meet, you steal just so much money. If I go into a grocer's store and I buy sugars and coffees and meats with no capacity to pay for them, and no intention of paying for them, I am more dishonest than if I go into the store, and when the grocer's face is turned the other way I fill my pockets with the articles of merchandise and carry off a ham! In the one case I take the merchant's time, and I take the time of his messenger to transfer the goods to my house, while in the other case I take none of the time of the merchant, and I wait upon myself, and I transfer the goods without any trouble to him! In other words, a sneak thief is not so bad as a man who contracts debts he never expects to pay.

Yet, in all our cities there are families who move every May-day to get into proximity to other grocers and meat shops and apothecaries. They owe everybody within half a mile of where they now live, and next May they will move into a distant part of the city, finding a new lot of victims. Meanwhile, you, the honest family in the new house, are bothered day by day by the knocking at the door of disappointed bakers, and butchers, and dry goods dealers, and newspaper carriers, and you are asked where your predecessor is. You do not know. It was arranged you should not know. Meanwhile, your predecessor has gone to some distant part of the city, and the people who have anything to sell have sent their wagons and stopped there to solicit the "valuable" custom of the new neighbor, and he, the new neighbor, with great complacency and an air of affluence, orders the finest steaks and the highest priced sugars, and the best of the canned fruits, and perhaps all the newspapers. And the debts will keep on accumulating until he gets his goods on the 30th of next April in the furniture cart.

No wonder that so many of our merchants fail in business. They are swindled into bankruptcy by these wandering Arabs, these nomads of city life. They cheat the grocer out of the green apples which make them sick, the physician who attends them during their distress, and the undertaker who fits them out for departure from the neighborhood where they owe everybody when they pay the debt of nature, the only debt they ever do pay.

Now our young men are coming up in this depraved state of commercial ethics, and I am solicitous about them. I want to warn them against being slaughtered on the sharp edges of debt. You want many things you have not, my young friends. You shall have them if you have patience and honesty and industry. Certain lines of conduct always lead out to certain successes. There is a law which controls even those things that seem haphazard. I have been told by those who have observed, that it is possible to calculate just how many letters will be sent to the Dead Letter office every year through misdirection; that it is possible to calculate just how many letters will be detained for lack of postage stamps through the forgetfulness of the senders, and that it is possible to tell just how many people will fall in the streets by slipping on an orange peel. In other words there are no accidents. The most insignificant event you ever heard of is the link between two eternities—the eternity of the past and the eternity of the future. Head the right way, young man, and you will come out at the right goal.

Bring me a young man and tell me what his physical health is, and what his mental calibre, and what his habits, and I will tell you what will be his destiny for this world, and his destiny for the world to come, and I will not make five inaccurate prophecies out of five hundred. All this makes me solicitous in regard to young men, and I want to make them nervous in regard to the contraction of unpayable debts. I give you a paragraph from my own experience.

My first settlement as pastor was in a village. My salary was $800 and a parsonage. The amount seemed enormous to me. I said to myself, "What! all this for one year!" I was afraid of getting worldly under so much prosperity. I resolved to invite all the congregation to my house in groups of twenty-five each. We began, and as they were the best congregation in all the world, and we felt nothing was too good for them, we piled all the luxuries on the table. I never completed the undertaking. At the end of six months I was in financial despair. I found that we not only had not the surplus of luxuries, but we had a struggle to get the necessities, and I learned what every young man learns in time to save himself, or too late, that you must measure the size of a man's body before you begin to cut the cloth for his coat.

When a young man willfully and of choice, having the comforts of life, goes into the contraction of unpayable debts, he knows not into what he goes. The creditors get after the debtor, the pack of hounds in full cry, and alas! for the reindeer. They jingle his doorbell before he gets up in the morning, they jingle his doorbell after he has gone to bed at night. They meet him as he comes off his front-steps. They send him a postal card, or a letter, in curtest style, telling him to pay up. They attach his goods. They want cash, or a note at thirty days, or a note on demand. They call him a knave. They say he lies. They want him disciplined in the church. They want him turned out of the bank. They come at him from this side, and from that side, and from before, and from behind, and from above, and from beneath, and he is insulted, and gibbeted, and sued, and dunned, and sworn at, until he gets the nervous dyspepsia, gets neuralgia, gets liver complaint, gets heart disease, gets convulsive disorder, gets consumption. For the sake of your own happiness, for the sake of your good morals, for the sake of your immortal soul, for God's sake, young man, as far as possible, keep out of it.

But I think more young men are slaughtered through irreligion. Take away a young man's religion and you make him the prey of evil. We all know that the Bible is the only perfect system of morals. Now, if you want to destroy the young man's morals, take his Bible away. How will you do that? Well, you will caricature his reverence for the Scriptures, you will take all those incidents of the Bible which can be made mirth of—Jonah's whale, Samson's foxes, Adam's rib—then you will caricature eccentric Christians, or inconsistent Christians, then you will pass off as your own all those hackneyed arguments against Christianity which are as old as Tom Paine, as old as Voltaire, as old as sin. Now, you have captured his Bible, and you have taken his strongest fortress; the way is comparatively clear, and all the gates of his soul are set open in invitation to the sins of earth and the sorrows of death, that they may come in and drive the stake for their encampment.

A steamer fifteen hundred miles from shore with broken rudder and lost compass, and hulk leaking fifty gallons the hour, is better off than a young man when you have robbed him of his Bible. Have you ever noticed how despicably mean it is to take away the world's Bible without proposing a substitute. It is meaner than to come to a sick man and steal his medicine, meaner than to come to a cripple and steal his crutch, meaner than to come to a pauper and steal his crust, meaner than to come to a poor man and burn his house down. It is the worst of all larcenies to steal the Bible which has been crutch and medicine and food and eternal home to so many. What a generous and magnanimous business infidelity has gone into! This splitting up of life-boats, and taking away of fire-escapes, and extinguishing of light-houses. I come out and I say to such people, "What are you doing all this for?" "Oh!" they say, "just for fun." It is such fun to see Christians try to hold on to their Bibles! Many of them have lost loved ones, and have been told that there is a resurrection, and it is such fun to tell them there will be no resurrection! Many of them have believed that Christ came to carry the burdens and to heal the wounds of the world, and it is such fun to tell them they will have to be their own saviour! Think of the meanest thing you ever heard of; then go down a thousand feet underneath it, and you will find the headquarters of the meanness that would rob this world of its only comfort in life, its only peace in death, and its only hope for immortality. Slaughter a young man's faith in God, and there is not much more left to slaughter.

Now, what has become of the slaughtered? Well, some of them are in their father's or mother's house, broken down in health, waiting to die; others are in the hospital, others are in the cemetery, or, rather, their bodies are, for their souls have gone on to retribution. Not much prospect for a young man who started life with good health, and good education, and a Christian example set him, and opportunity of usefulness, who gathered all his treasures and put them in one box, and then dropped it into the sea.

Now, how is this wholesale slaughter to be stopped? There is not a person who is not interested in that question. The object of my sermon is to put a weapon in each of your hands for your own defence. Wait not for Young Men's Christian Associations to protect you, or churches to protect you. Appealing to God for help, take care of yourself.

First, have a room somewhere that you can call your own. Whether it be the back parlor of a fashionable boarding house, or a room in the fourth story of a cheaping, I care not. Only have that on your fortress. Let not the dissipator or the unclean step over the threshold. Come up the long flight of stairs and at the door, meet them face to face, kindly yet firmly refuse them admittance. Have a few family portraits on the wall if you brought them with you from country home. Let no bad newspaper come into that room and than you would allow a cobra to your table.

Take care of yourself. Nobody will take care of you. Your help will come up two, or three, or four flights; your help will come through roof, down from heaven, from the who in the six thousand years of the history never betrayed a young man tried to be good and a Christian. Say in regard to your adverse world circumstances, in passing, that you are level now with those who are first to succeed. Mark my words, young man, think of it thirty years from now you will find that those who thirty years ago are the millionaires of this country who are the orators of the count are the poets of the country, who are strong merchants of the country, the great philanthropists of the country, the mightiest in church and state—tomorrow on a level with you, not in above, and you in straightened circumstances now.

Herschel earned his living by playing violin at parties, and in the intervals the play he would go out and look at the midnight heavens, the fields of mortal conquests. George Stephenson rose from being the foreman in a hew to be the most renowned of the engineers. No outfit, no capital, no capital with! young man, go down to the railroad and get some books and read of the wonderful mechanism God gave you your hand, in your foot, in your eye, your ear, and then ask some doctor to take you into the dissecting room and illustrate to you what you have read of and never again commit the blasphemy saying you have no capital to start with. Equipped! Why, the poorest of men is equipped as only the God of the universe could afford to equip him. With his body—a very poor affair compared with his wonderful soul—Oh, that makes me solicitous. I am not so anxious about you, young man, I am sure you have so little to do with, as I am anxious about you because you have so much to risk, and lose or gain.

There is no class of persons that I sympathize as young men in cities. Not quite enough salary to get on, and all the temptations that come from that deficit. Invited on all hands to drink and their exhausted nervous system requiring to demand stimulus. Their religion caricatured by the most of the class, the store, and most of the operators of the factory. The rapids of temptation and death rushing against that you may be forty miles the hour, and he in a fraught headed up stream, with nothing to broken oar to work with. Unless Almight God help them they will go under.

Ah! when I told you to take care of yourself you misunderstood me. I thought I meant you are to depend on human resolution, which may be dissolved in the foam of the wine cup, or blown out with the first gust of temptation. Here is the helmet, the sword of the God Almighty. Clothe yourself in the panoply, and you shall not be put to confusion. Sin pays well neither in this nor the next, but right thinking, an intelligent believing, and right acting will take you in safety through this life and in triumph through the next.

I never shall forget a prayer I heard a young man make some fifteen years ago. It was a very short prayer, but it was a tremendous prayer: "Oh! Lord, help us. We find it so very easy to do wrong, so hard to do right, Lord help us." That prayer, I warrant you, reached the throne of God, and reached his heart. And there are a hundred men who have found thousands of young men, perhaps, who have found out that very thing. It is so easy to do wrong, and so hard to do right.

I got a letter one day, only one paragraph, which I shall read: "Having moved around somewhat, I have run across many young men of intelligence, ardent strivers after the o' the-wisp, fortune, and of one of the would speak. He was a young Englishman."

FIGHTING SIN IN NEW ORLEANS.

The Work of the Union Gospel Mission Among the Vicious Classes in the Southern City—
A Crusade Deserving Generous Support.

ANY readers of this journal are already acquainted with the excellent Christian work that is now being carried on in New Orleans by the Union Gospel Mission.

Through many trials and vicissitudes, the Mission has lived and prospered, and at the present time its operations in the darkest quarters of the Southern City are being more greatly blessed than at any previous period of its existence.

Mr. A. E. Vail, the founder and General Superintendent of the Union Gospel Mission, writes for the information of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers this most interesting sketch of the work, whose headquarters are 725 Camp St., New Orleans:

Years of severe trial and arduous effort, cheered with great success from all spiritual points of view, convince me that God desires the continuance of this Mission. It is all the more needful that the beacons be maintained on the most dangerous reefs, no matter how exposed to hardships and dangers those who attend the lights. And it is no answer at all to say that such beacons, storm-swept and billow-bound, do not look so trim and tidy, and that the occupants are not so safe and comfortable as those in less exposed and less trying situations. This Mission is a light in a dark place, a beacon on a most dangerous reef, in a sea of raging waves, foaming off their own shame. It is situated in a neighborhood turbulent and disorderly, where the noises of mockery, opposition and studied insult sometimes drown the voices of prayer and exhortation, even to the indoor listeners. To have a policeman detailed for the suppression of disorder would cost us $2.50 per night, and for our regular services (three nights per week) would amount to something more than we sometimes collect in a month.

During a series of revival meetings, just closed, over a dozen conversions resulted. It Mission in their behalf. Very recently he died. In our late revival, his son and wife were both converted and will join the Baptist church, of which he was an honored member.

The Union Gospel Mission is strictly a union Mission and undenominational. The active participants in its worship are members of several Protestant denominations: Protestant Episcopal, Baptist, Presbyterian, and Methodist Episcopal (Southern). Sectarianism is eliminated and no discordant note is ever heard in the joyful music of Christian brotherhood. We have learned the inestimable lesson of "keeping the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace," of "standing fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the Gospel," and of becoming "all one in Christ."

The Mission has no support from any church or denomination, but depends solely on the free-will offerings of Christian people everywhere.

"All our co-workers are poor," Mr. Vail explains, "and have their own burdens to bear. The people in our neighborhood, too, are very poor, largely habitues or patrons of saloons. Our principal workers are devoted to their work, are uncompensated. If anyone asks how he or she can help us, we say, 'in any way.' Bibles, Testaments, copies of the Gospels, tracts, Sunday School papers, Berean Leaf Clusters (back numbers) pictures for children and clothing. We especially aspire to all. There was a brass band of 4,500 pieces. One of the features of the celebration was the reading of a message from Queen Victoria, in reply to one that had been sent to Her Majesty by Gen. Booth, conveying jubilee festival greetings from the Salvation Army. In her letter the Queen expressed her appreciation of the humanitarian work of the organization in different parts of her empire, and trusted that "Divine guidance and blessing might accompany all its future efforts."

MEMORIAL SCHOOL-HOUSE AT CISAMBA.

How A Missionary Works.

A Sketch of the Varied and Successful Labors of a Devoted Medical Missionary in West Central Africa.

IN a letter just received from Dr. Walter T. Currie, acknowledging a contribution from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD toward the expenses of his mission work in Cisamba, in West Central Africa, is a description of missionary life, interesting to all Christian workers. It shows that the ideas sometimes entertained of the romance and adventures of missionary work are not always correct, and that there must be a great deal of drudgery for the faithful worker to undergo. There are, Dr. Currie says, about a hundred natives living around the station which is the centre of his circle of Christian influence. A few white traders have settled in the neighborhood, but none within a radius of ten miles of Dr. Currie's home, so the missionary seldom sees a white face save those of his helpers. The industrial work which was begun tentais not the custom of the Mission to take public collections. As a rule they are never taken, except in an emergency, when extra expense is incurred. It is impossible to conceive of any Christian work where the Gospel is more literally "without money and without price" than with us. This Mission needs to be maintained because in a radius of about a hundred yards, there are five saloons where intoxicants are sold night and day, every day of the year, Sunday included, despite the law prohibiting their sale on the Sabbath. Until a little while ago, there were seven saloons dealing out "liquid damnation," but the nearest two have been discontinued, one by the death of the husband, the other, by failure of the proprietor. I have not counted the number of saloons within a radius of three or four blocks of our Mission, but I have no idea that there are less than between thirty or forty. There is no church where whites worship, within several blocks.

A GROUP OF TEACHERS, PUPILS, AND ATTENDANTS OF THE UNION GOSPEL MISSION, NEW ORLEANS.

This Mission, through God, has been instrumental in saving scores of souls, even during its most trying ordeals. It has fed many an hungry one, clothed many naked, visited many sick, prayed at the bedside of many dying, distributed many thousands of tracts and copies of God's Holy Word, and it has been a source of comfort and blessing to many of its worshippers, who are now in heaven. Are not such fruits worth far more than the trials it has undergone? A most remarkable illustration of how God crowns endeavor was shown by our late revival services. A Baptist brother, living near by, used to attend our meetings very regularly. His prayers were burdened with supplications for loved ones who were indifferent about salvation and seldom or never came to our meetings. Ever and anon, he would solicit the prayers of the own our building (to cost about $3,000), as we have been renting for seven years. To some Christian possessed of a holy ambition to do a great work for God here is a chance. It would be an inexpressible help to us."

The large photograph which appears on this page was taken at a recent gathering of the Mission's young folks at the Lower City Park, one of the most picturesque of New Orleans breathing-spots, and particularly rich in its live oaks. Under one of those great trees many duels used to be fought—a wide-spreading tree, with branches sweeping the ground in all its circumference. It was the dark and bloody ground in bygone years, but the crack of the pistol has ceased and now the merry shouts of romping children are heard there.

A Monster Demonstration.

On July 20th the Salvation Army celebrated its thirty-second birthday at the Crystal Palace, London, in a remarkable fashion. Delegates were present from all parts of Great Britain and from every country on the globe, and the gathering in the great auditorium was one of the most picturesque and representative imaginable. Not only were many languages and nationalities represented, but many grades of society, from the poor, debased drunkard and criminal to the sober, substantial citizen of means. It is estimated that over 60,000 persons were present in tively during his earlier years at Cisamba has developed and has proved beneficial in many ways. The boys who were trained as carpenters and builders under Dr. Currie's superintendence, are now in frequent request from other places, and wherever they go, they always leave behind them an excellent record of consistent Christian conduct. They can now make good adobe bricks, have thatched the mission building, and have cut down trees and made good windows, doors, etc. The ruling chief of a neighboring district has applied for their help in erecting a school-house, the entire cost of which he will pay out of his own pocket. He also proposes to pay the salaries of two of Dr. Currie's boys as teachers. Dr. Currie also maintains a blacksmith's shop, and hopes shortly to set up a flour-mill at the station. He has also a dispensary, in which some hundreds of cases were treated last year. Besides these are the schools, the senior and junior boys' schools, the same for girls, a kindergarten and a teachers' school for adults. From this last school native teachers have gone out, covering a circle around the mission with a radius of two days' march, and have preached in the villages to audiences varying from two to three hundred. These villages Dr. Currie visits at stated intervals, as a kind of episcopal visitation. In four villages regular Sunday services are held by teachers whom Dr. Currie has trained.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Paul Opposed at Ephesus.

Sunday School Lesson for Aug. 29. Acts 19:21-34. Golden Text: Luke 12:15.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

LIKE his Master before him, Paul's life was regulated from above. He did not choose or plan his own way. His ministry at Corinth was at an end, and taking with him his fellow-laborers, Priscilla and Aquila, he set sail for Ephesus on the way to Asia. At Ephesus he entered into the synagogue as he was wont, and reasoned with the Jews. Had he been master of men's plans, the desire of these Jews that he should remain with them might have influenced him to delay his journey. But he had his orders, and carried them out irrespective of any desire of his hearers, of any circumstances favorable or unfavorable. Oh, the rest of a life in harmony with the known will of God! Oh, the power of knowing that that way must be the way into which God has directed us, and the absolute certainty that he makes us responsible for all the consequences! Paul was, however, free to make a promise that he would return to Ephesus if God will.

Meanwhile he left behind him there his rustic helpers Priscilla and Aquila. It was an accident that just at this time Apollos, a man of no ordinary gifts, and mighty in the Scriptures, should visit Ephesus and come, of course, to the synagogue. This man had some knowledge of Christ, but knew only the baptism of John. He did not yet know what it was to receive the Holy Ghost. Aquila and Priscilla, far less gifted probably in intellect and learning, saw that they had a ministry to add to this man. When a child of God, under the real discipline of the Holy Ghost, he has a humility which is free from the self-consciousness which accompanies human modesty. Divine humility does not compare itself with the people; human modesty does. Divine humility can trust God to make the way, another's heart when God has sent in a message to that other.

It came to pass that Priscilla and Aquila had not to consider the flesh in frequent and learned Apollos; they did not think that he might consider it presumptuous for such as they to attempt to teach him. God could not send them to him without preparing him to receive their ministry. When the Holy Spirit enters us, we do not look on things as between man and man, but as always ordered, or permitted by God. Thus they took him unto them and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly. And their ministry to him was not in vain. Passing over into Achaia, "he helped them much which had believed through grace, for he powerfully confuted the Jews, and that publicly, showing by the Scriptures that Jesus was Christ" (Acts 18: 18-28, R. V.).

God had special purposes for Ephesus. Paul was to remain a longer time in this, a more heathen city than in any other, and his Epistle to the Ephesians was one of the deepest and the richest of all his writings. After his ministry in Achaia, and pastoral visits to the churches in Galatia and Phrygia, Paul returned to Ephesus. There "he found certain disciples, and said to them, 'Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?'" These disciples had not so much heard whether the Holy Ghost was given. Baptized into John's baptism, they knew the promise that he who comes after John should baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire (Matt. 3: 11); but they neither knew Christ nor the Spirit. They were, however, willing to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Paul laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost came on them, their tongues were loosed, and they prophesied, i. e., they spoke unto men to edification, and comfort and consolation (1. Cor. 14: 3), a sure mark that the Holy Ghost had taken possession of them.

The quickening of disciples gives an impetus to the work of God. Backed by the witness of these God-filled lives, Paul "spoke boldly in the synagogue." Thus the Holy Spirit is come to God's children. "He shall convict the world" (John 16: 8), and when the worldly heart is convinced or convicted of sin, it can no longer remain neutral; something happens, either it yields, and God takes possession, or it becomes hardened and opposes. This was the case with some in the synagogue at Ephesus. They spoke evil of the Way before the multitude, and Paul, loyal Jew though he was, left the synagogue and separated the disciples, who met with him in the school of one Tyrannus. Here Paul preached the Gospel every day for two years, God sustaining his indefatigable servant, for necessity was laid upon him, yea it was woe unto him if he preached not the Gospel (1. Cor. 9: 6).

It was the promise of Christ that when they preached the Gospel, signs should follow "them that believe" (Mark 16: 15-18), and certainly in Ephesus he did confirm the Word with signs following. "God wrought special [i. e., extraordinary] the magnificence of the renowned temple of Diana was also in danger and it was time they should make themselves heard. A great excitement was the result; the agitators cried out aloud in the streets. "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," and the whole city was filled with confusion. This was just what the agitators wanted. Everybody rushed into the theatre and a most disorderly assemblage began shouting, some one thing and some another, and many did not know what the stir was about. But the Jews and Christians were roughly handled, and Paul who wanted to go into the theatre was restrained both by the disciples and also by certain of the chief officers.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

ABOUT four years appear to have elapsed between Paul's departure from Corinth described in the lesson for August 1, which was the last of the lessons dealing with the history of the Acts, and this lesson, dealing with the riot in the theatre at Ephesus. During this period Paul had paid a brief visit to Jerusalem, proceeding there from Corinth and making a short stay at Ephesus by the way. At Ephesus, as usual, he went to the synagogue to argue with the Jews. Many people went to the magnificent city to see the great temple, one of the wonders of the world, with its columns of jasper, now in the mosque of St. Sophia at Constantinople, and its beautiful pillars of Parian marble, sixty feet high, each the gift of a king. But Paul's motto was, "This one thing I do," and to the synagogue he went. Here he had the novel miracles by the hands of Paul; inasmuch that unto the sick were carried away from his body handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out." The demoniacal rebuke of the sons of Sceva, one of the Jewish high priests, and the public burning of the books of sorcery, testify how high was the tide of spiritual life at this time in Ephesus.

RUINS OF THE THEATRE AT EPHESUS.

An intimation from the Spirit of God led Paul to see that the time of his ministry in Ephesus was drawing to a close and he saw before him as God's will, a journey through Macedonia and Achaia to Jerusalem; and farther in the future he "must also see Rome." But he must pass through the furnace before leaving the city and must see his beloved Ephesian converts in such danger that it would need all the reality of his knowledge of God to trust him, and leave them behind. The enmity of the Jews had arisen from spiritual pride. The persecution began at this time as in Philippi through the greed of Gentiles who lived only for earthly gain. What cared they whether their idols or the God whom Paul preached were true? Commerce and wealth had possession of their hearts, and all must give way to business considerations. The manufacturers of silver shrines to the heathen goddess Diana, was the leading industry of the city. Christianity was ruining their trade; the call for their goods was lessening, men would be thrown out of work, and they would stand it no longer.

Demetrius, one of the leading merchants, taking matters into his own hands, gathered together a crowd of those interested in the trade, and harangued them showing them that the commerce of the city was in danger and that the repute of the city and the orator much that he did not know before. He had gone on to Corinth when Paul reached Ephesus. Twelve men were left behind who had accepted the Gospel. They had trusted in Christ for the salvation of their souls, but like many men in our own day, they knew nothing by experience of the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit. Paul did not disturb their faith, but with the tact of a wise man, used the stage they had reached as a basis for further progress. One fault Paul set himself to correct which had serious consequences later. This was their belief in magic and charms and amulets. So successful was Paul in this effort, that the people abjured their sorcery and brought their books of magic to the value of nine thousand dollars, and publicly burned them. This act caused enmity in the vested interests, as reform generally does. The silversmiths and other trades did a thriving business in charms and amulets and models of the temple of Artemis, whose Ephesian name was Diana. Visitors to Ephesus bought these things and carried them away to their native lands to worship them and to use them as fetiches to ward off disease and calamity. Paul's teaching, as they were shrewd enough to see, injured this business. Demetrius, their leader, called the manufacturers together and warned them that their craft was in danger. But in order to give the agitation a general public interest, he based his attack on the plea that the great temple would be despised if Paul's teaching became popular. The same tactics are often pursued now. He succeeded in stirring up a riot which threatened to become dangerous, but which was quelled by the diplomatic speech of the town-clerk, or local scribe. This disturbance brought to a close Paul's visit, which appears to have extended over three years.

Our craft is in danger. Effective speakers are those who appeal to motives which have weight with their hearers. To the people of Ephesus, Demetrius talked about their great temple. To the silversmiths he said, "Our craft is in danger." We often hear eloquent attacks on the Churches, the Salvation Army, and the Temperance Societies. "They are so intolerant, so noisy, so officious," we are told. They would restrict people's liberty, and "rob the poor man of his beer." These are the public pleas; when the opponents of reform are talking among themselves, they are little likely to use such arguments. The real trouble is that there are so many businesses that reform would curtail if it did not destroy them.

They be no Gods which are made with hands. Mr. Roper, the African missionary, relates that a woman of Ibbadan was inclined to give up idolatry, but could not be persuaded to part with one idol, in which she had great faith. She had often prayed to it to take care of her and believed that it had protected her from many dangers. Mr. Roper reasoned with her and eventually a test of its power was agreed upon. The woman was going on a three months' journey, and before leaving, placed the idol in the middle of her hut. "Now," said she, "I shall see if you can take care of yourself." On her return she looked at the idol and found that it had been gnawed by rats. She immediately cast it out. A god that could not protect itself from rats, she argued, could not protect her.

He himself stayed in Asia for a season. We can understand how helpful to the converts such a sojourn would be. When Paul came to the city he found that they were in need of instruction, as the work of Apollos had necessarily been imperfect. A similar incident occurred in modern times. Dr. Chamberlain, of the Reformed Church, used to tell the story. He said that a Hindoo purchased from another native a Bible that the latter had obtained from a mission station. The Bible was the means of his conversion and that of his wife. They gathered the people of their village together and read it to them. Eventually a kind of church was organized, but without baptism or the Lord's Supper, the nature of which they did not understand. The Hindoo was known far and near among his people as the man with the book. Seven years afterwards a missionary traveling through the country found the church, and gave them further instruction. They were eager to receive it, and were received into communion.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.
T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadas, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the day on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald will not be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post office at New York, as Second-class Matter

Child-Study of Robert Browning.

IN Camberwell, England, where Robert Browning was born, and where for years he attended the Congregational Chapel as a worshipper, and student in the Sunday School, the teachers in the public schools have been encouraged to give their course in English literature to the children especially on Browning. It would not be expected that boys and girls of from eleven to thirteen would write very wonderful essays upon a poet, whom adult readers often find so obscure. And yet, an article in The Academy quotes the very satisfactory results of this effort.

Soon after the death of Longfellow and Whittier and Eugene Field, especial observance of their birthdays obtained in some parts of this country. American poets are very safe and wholesome teachers. It is true of them, as one of the little essayists of Camberwell said: "All great poets and writers are sent by God to deliver a message to us, which they do in pleasant form of poetry or prose." And if our American poets could be taught in the public schools of the towns where they were born, the pupils would be made acquainted with good literature and good morals at one and the same stroke. Let the thing be thoroughly tried in America. Let Cambridge begin with Longfellow, and Great Barrington with Bryant, and Irvington with Washington Irving, and Concord with Emerson, and Salem with Hawthorne. Let the birthplace of Dr. Holland do him a like honor, and see how happy the effect will be. We have literature whose study would be a benediction to our young people.

The Strength of the Hills.

MEN readily find God in the sublimer things of Nature. There are beautiful intervals along the Saco river in Fryeburg, Maine. They are favorite subjects with the landscape painter. It is so with the intervals in North Conway. But it is beauty which is their language, not strength. Strength we find in the hills. The poets treat the hills as the pillars of Nature's temples—as the ribs of Nature's skeleton. A man may have the same sense of his littleness when he climbs a high mountain as when he traverses the ocean. The ocean teaches him instability, uncertainty; shows him how untrustworthy are the winds and the waves. The mountains teach him how strong God is, and how strong He has made the earth. And what the hills suggest as their nature, they often do for him. They make him strong. How often it is, that what man loses in the life of the city, he regains from the life of the hills. This rushing away to the mountains for recovery from illness, from invalidism, is a correct instinct. In the habits of city life, man loses his strength. The food he eats, the water he drinks, the air he breathes, even the society with which he is most familiar, result in his degeneracy. The fable of the ancients, that one of their heroes recovered his strength whenever he touched mother-earth again, is grounded on truth. Get among the hills and the sights of the hills; live among the people who inhabit the hills; climb the hills, drink of the mountain brooks that course down their sides. The strength of the hills is God's; avail yourself of this strength, and throw physic to the dogs.

The Lost Ear.

A MAN cannot afford to lose one of his ears. There are so many sweet sounds in this world to hear, that we need all the faculties God has endowed us with to listen. The Lord Jesus knew what damages the stroke of Peter's sword brought to Malchus; so he stretched forth his hand and touched Malchus, and the ear was restored as perfectly as before it was cleft by the sword. There are thousands of people in the Church of God now, who have had their right ear cut off. They listen to the truths of the Gospel, and to the exhortations and prayers in devotional meetings, but it is with the left ear. There has been some influence at work to cut off the right one, and the religious service is wasted for the simple reason that they have not the right capacity to listen. We hear a great deal about good speakers and poor speakers, but we have yet to recognize in the Church of God, that it requires just as much skill, just as much grace to hear aright as to speak aright. This occurrence which took place in the time of Christ—the sword of Peter hewing off the ear of Malchus—we see repeated again and again. The sword of prejudice—how often that cuts off the right ear! People come into religious meetings, and some man rises to speak for Christ; he is a thoroughly imperfect man; you know many unfortunate things about him; and you say: "That man cannot talk to me;" and although he may have a message from the skies you will not let him deliver it to your soul, because you do not like the man. You have met with him, perhaps, in the marts of trade; he has perhaps done things of which you could not approve; he has said things that did not meet your approbation, and because of that you reject the message he brings, forgetting the fact that Baalam had iniquity in his heart, and yet he brought a message from the Lord Almighty; and so even a very sinful man may tell a great and solemn truth. In other words, the sharp, keen sword of prejudice cuts off your right ear.

It is the simple fact that the vast majority of people who attend at religious services upon the Sabbath, go to hear how they like the minister; and the thought seldom occurs to their souls—"For this day's hearing I must give an account. Ten thousand times ten thousand years after that minister is dead and forgotten, I will be feeling in the eternal world, the grand, or the iniquitous result of this day's hearing." So that, when we stand in the church on the Sabbath, and talk to the people, or when men rise in the prayer-meeting to talk to their comrades on the road to heaven, they are conscious perpetually of the fact that there are scores of people who by prejudice have lost their right ear.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

Romance of the Bread-Basket.

No. 1.

HOW many good housewives, standing with elbows bare over their bread bowls, remember that they are performing a part in a domestic rite touching the very gates of Eden. The story of the white wheat flour begins there, for God said unto Adam: "In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread." And it is a mystery we may well consider that in no place in the world does wheat grow naturally. Everywhere wheat will grow—in Lapland, seventy degrees north latitude; and at La Vittoria, two hundred and seventy-three toises above the ocean; but everywhere it must be sown and harvested in the sweat of the brow.

We are told in Genesis 26:12, that "Isaac sowed the land and received the same year one hundred fold," and the story of wheat thereafter blends itself with all the loveliest of our sacred dramas of life. To name the word "Wheat," is to call up visions of Joseph and old Egypt; of Gideon on the threshing floor and an angel visitor; of Ruth gleaning in the wheat fields of Boaz; of Solomon feeding Hiram's men with a yearly dole of twenty thousand measures of wheat while they worked on the temple; of the wheat fields blowing on Judean hills and the Holy Jesus walking through them. And as these memories crowd on our consciousness, they will bring with them such gracious promises as "I will feed you with the finest of the wheat," or such pertinent queries as "What is the chaff to the wheat?" The Bible history alone of wheat may fill the heart and the head of the breadmaker, and add to every baking some personal means of grace, and to every loaf some subtle sense of antique flavor.

Aside from its Biblical history, the story of wheat is wonderful. Isaac sowed for a hundred-fold; but in Africa, a hundred-and-fifty and even three-hundred-fold was not uncommon; while the teeming granaries of Egypt, Nineveh, and Babylon are only to be likened to the wheat fields of our own Great West. From Africa wheat went to Sicily and then to Rome, where a chaplet of wheat ears was the first crown worn in that imperial city. It was the most sacred badge of the first priesthood instituted. Let us try to imagine the broad-browed, majestic Acca Laurentia, sitting on the hills around the new city weaving it for her son. Thereafter prayers were not offered without an oblation of wheat; for these worshippers of Jupiter knew that the homage of the heart is glad to express itself by the gift of the hand.

Wheat was probably taken to England by the Phœnicians in exchange for tin, since Cæsar found it growing there; but until a century ago, it was not plentiful or cheap enough to be the ordinary bread of the people. In the eighth century monks—and they had always the best of everything—ate only barley bread; and at the close of the eighteenth century, Eden says: The town of Carlisle was searched in vain for a loaf of white bread. In my own youth in England, the wheat loaf was kept for the master's table, and barley cakes in the Isle of Man, were the ordinary bread of the people. At the close of the seventeenth century wheat was taken to America, and now her immense granaries stand between the nations of Europe and their great dread of famine, or of having to exchange the white loaf for the brown.

How early mankind learned to leaven bread is unknown, but it antedates history. Chaldeans claim the discovery, and the Chaldean bread was famous for its excellency. Egypt was very early acquainted with the process, for Moses interdicted it during the Passover. The art was not known to the Romans in the beginning of the Republic. They parched the ears of wheat or made a gruel of the meal, and it was not until 580 years after the foundation of the city, the first public bakeries were instituted. Public bakers, though important functionaries in all ancient nations, have never found favor among Anglo-Saxon peoples, unless circumstances of unusual growth compel their service. When the great manufacturing city of Manchester had a population of 90,000, she had not one baker's store; and in all the smaller towns of England every household yet bakes its own bread. There seems to be something so personal in bread that this feeling is easily understood. The hands of the mother have moulded it; she has put part of herself—her life, her thoughts, her love—into it; and there are few men and women, who do not retain to the end of their lives the belief that their mother's bread was the very best bread ever made.

Still it can do no harm to explain that the four main points in the making of good bread are now acknowledged to be the following: First, the setting of all the sponge at once. Second, having iron pans with very deep sides to prevent the escape of the carbonic acid gas from the baking loaf. Third, thorough and careful firing. Fourth, free exposure on every side to a current of cold air when taken from the oven, in order to prevent the warm vapor which rises from the hot bread condensing on the loaf. And yet, if every housewife should be given the same flour, and all follow the same rules, the bread of each would differ. Unconsciously every woman would put her own individuality into her bread; it would partake of the lightness or heaviness of her mood, and herein is the mystery of breadmaking, and the root of that unconsidered preference which we all have for the home-made loaf.

However, if the family bread has been bought of a public baker, then there is no way of deciding on the excellence of its makers, than by placing a piece in a saucer and pouring clean water over it. The bread that absorbs the most water weighs the heaviest, is the best in any case, bread is the gift of God, a mystery which we ought not to think of. From its white crumb is made the stream of life; the brawny muscle of lovely flesh; yea, and the thoughts that and the words that burn.

Amelia E. L. H.

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. A. J. Diaz, M.D., the Cuban has arranged to go into Mexico to co-operate the other forces in that field in giving the to the Mexican in his own tongue.

Evangelist John H. Murray who has been organizing rescue missions in various parts of the country, is now laboring at Newburgh, N. Y. He will be glad to assist pastors in revival work during the coming fall and winter. Rev. B. Fay, S. H. Hadley and other well-known workers are with him.

Franklin College, at New Athens, taken a new departure in establishing a graduate course for the degrees of Doctor of Divinity and Doctor of Philosophy. The step was general approval and promises to be a development on the present system of these as honorary degrees.

Professor Petrie has unearthed thousands of mason's mallets, of the sons of the men of the Pyramids. And Mr. Quibell, his young lieutenant, has laid bare the contents of a shop, and a clay model of a graven image, moulded by the fingers of a potter in the reign of a pharaoh.

The Annual Convention of King's College was held at Ocean Grove, N. J., on the 30th. Bishop Fitzgerald, Dr. L. W. Mumford, Dr. J. E. Price took part in the exercises. The venerable President of the college was able to be present, and received a warm welcome. Mrs. Isabella C. Davis and Miss Libbey presented the reports of the work of the Order for the year.

Commander Booth-Tucker of the S. Army is pushing his great colonization scheme which he proposes to take hundreds and thousands of the poor of our large cities to the United States of Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, and southwestern Kansas. These lands are fertile, and while he will begin in a small way, he expects to make as successful colonies as those have in Utah.

One of the most important branches of the Church Army has separated from the N. Y. management. This is the Massachusetts branch which will be controlled by an association of headquarters in Boston. The President of the Church Army, Francis B. Sears, of the Second National Bank, Boston. This is understood to be a temporary arrangement pending the discussion of the question of Army control in the Diocesan Convention this fall.

A young lady who graduated from the School of Denver, Colo., wishing to become a student at Vassar College, but being without money, opened a shoe-blackening establishment in New York City, and hired boys to do the work. Several friends came to her assistance, one as cashier, another as buyer of supplies. She is making money and feels confident that by the end of September she will have sufficient to carry her through college.

Dr. Asa Blackburn who succeeded Dr. F. Deems as pastor of the Church of the Holy Trinity in New York is making an effort to raise the erection of a new church building on the ground lease of the present building expires May 1, 1898, and as it is the Saviors' property and the church will not pay the rental demanded by the owners, it is probable a new church edifice. The new building probably not be far from the present site of the street.

The Scotch Plains Baptist Church, Plainfield, N. J., celebrated, on August 1st, one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of its organization. The present building, which is the church has occupied, was erected in 1848. The church has had thirteen pastors in the long history, three of whom are still living. It is an active and vigorous church, and is doing missionary work in India, another in Liberia, a large Sunday School and Christian League Society.

The Christian Alliance Convention at Orchard, Me., this year, has surpassed all that have gone before it in the numbers who have attended. The meetings as usual have been marked by wonderful consecration and an enthusiasm for service and for giving, which have not been gathered in former years. On August 8th, Dr. A. B. Simpson made his appeal for funds to carry on the foreign work of the Alliance for the year. Over twenty thousand dollars was contributed in response to his appeal. One of the gifts was a certified check for twenty-five thousand dollars. When the checks were examined, it was found that the donors had stripped off their finger-rings, gold chains, and brooches, and had given them to the Lord.

An effort is being made by J. Albert, a negro of West Indian birth to found a colony in Africa. He has selected the north of the Zambesi as the most suitable place, he says, for white men, but he believes negro could bear the climate and might be able to take from the West Indies and United States a number of colored men of constitution and unblemished character to settle there. If the colony prospers, he will invite more settlers. It will be necessary to have a first contingent that each should have money to pay the cost of reaching the colony to support himself for a year. Mr. Thorne that if the success of such a colony were demonstrated philanthropists would contribute to send out emigrants.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

SPAIN'S PREMIER SHOT.

VERY civilized nation in the world was shocked when the news was received that on August 8 a cowardly assassin had shot down Senor Canovas del Castillo, the Premier of Spain. Senor Canovas had gone to Santa Agueda, at a well-known health resort in the north of Spain, to get the benefit of a sulphur baths there. He arrived on August 5, and intended to remain three weeks. As he was sitting, one day in the gallery of the bathing establishment, waiting for his wife to join him for a walk, a man walked up close to him and shot him with a revolver. The assassin fired three times, and Canovas was wounded in the head and arm. He lingered for two hours and without fully recovering consciousness the assassin was immediately arrested and had a narrow escape from execution. He is an Italian. He said that his name was Rinaldi, but it is believed his real name is Golli. He is about twenty-eight years of age. He declared that he had no personal enmity against Canovas, but had killed him on anarchistic principles. He is connected with the Italian societies and has taken part in demonstrations in France, England and Belgium. It is significant that every day of the murder, an anarchist addressing a meeting in Paris, declared that Canovas ought to be shot. This shows that the crime had incurred the approval of the Anarchists and the statement of the assassin that the crime was a just one. The dead statesman was in his sixty-seventh year, but has been prominent in public affairs for more than twenty years. He was the leader of the conservatives as Sagasta was the Liberals. It was through his skillful management that the royal throne was restored in 1874. At that time his influence was paramount. Correlations between them have been always maintained, but the public recognized his eminent abilities and how great was his power and influence to his guidance. Though Sagasta in high moral principle was superior to him in his inflexible skill with which he controlled the House in Parliament. He was a firm friend of Gen. Weyler and a warm supporter of his policy in Cuba. He never used all his power to maintain relations with our Government from our minister's demands with a conciliatory spirit. What a contrast can hope to gain by his methods not appear. They have never anything by their cowardly murders. All history shows that in private affairs crime is apt to be the perpetrator.

He shall return upon his own head, and his evil shall come down upon his own head. (Ezekiel 18:26.)

fatal idea. The exhibitions of foolhardy men draw crowds of spectators. The termination in Brooklyn, N.Y., on August 1. The proprietors of a pleasure garden, which is usually filled with picnickers on Sunday nights, had a new attraction for their patrons. Prof. Ariel was to ride on a live trolley wire, three feet long, stretched over two hundred and fifty feet high. The trolley was to charge the wire with five hundred volts of electricity. At nine o'clock the professor mounted to his perch at the top of the first pole, his body decorated with bulbs which the electricity would light by means of wires connecting with the trolley line. His bicycle had metal tires, grooved to fit the line, and as he started over his perilous passage, the bulbs on the wires of the frame became circles of parti-colored light and the lamps on his person shone out brilliantly. A large circle of white faces looked up at the daring performer as he shot rapidly across the three hundred feet of live wire and loud cheers greeted him. He bowed slightly in response and quickened his speed. He had almost reached the opposite pole when, without the slightest warning, he toppled over and fell to the ground. He was still alive when the attendants picked him up; but he died in a few minutes. His shocking death was degrading alike to himself and those who by their presence encouraged him to risk his life. All that he could hope for, apart from the money to be paid him for his feat, was to amuse the spectators. There is nothing to admire in the courage that carried into the lake were raked out, and they too had turned to stone without their shape being in any wise changed. These were carried away as curiosities, but none of the water was used. The men preferred to go thirsty to taking into their system water having such powerful properties. It would be well if people were similarly averse to running the risk of taking into their hearts, the thoughts and passions which have like properties. The poet warns us against sins which "harden all the heart and petrify the feeling" and the Apostle mentions a hopeless condition which results from them.

Having their conscience seared with a hot iron. (1 Timothy 4:2.)

Protected by a Dog.

A crowd of sympathetic people at Bridgeport, Conn., a few days ago, were prevented helping a sick man by a dog. The man was prostrate on the sidewalk and was evidently in a fit. Several persons went to his assistance, but on approaching the man, a big Newfoundland dog which was by his side turned threateningly upon them. He would bend down and lick his master's face and howl, and would then make a dash at the crowd. He would suffer none of them to come within arm's length of his master. There was some talk of shooting him to save the man's life, as it was feared he might die for lack of medical assistance. But the dog was a fine, valuable creature and his fidelity to his helpless master touched the sympathies of the spectators. So a call was sent for an ambulance and it was hoped some one would come in whom the dog would have new, some seventy or eighty years ago, they were the homes of wealthy merchants and people prominent in New York society. There were other houses of a lower character, wretched frame structures full of vermin, leaky and unsanitary. They were all to be sold, and the buyers were a crowd of Italians, Jews, and dealers in second-hand building materials. The auctioneer asked fifty dollars as a starter for the first house to be sold, a four-story brick building on the corner of Stanton Street. There was a minute's hesitation, and then some one offered one dollar. The bids rose slowly to ten dollars, and after much urging by the auctioneer, forty dollars was obtained for the house, which originally cost more than five thousand. The prices gradually declined for other buildings in the row, until one—a three-story brick house—was sold for two dollars. Later, there was a revival, and twenty-two dollars was obtained for a house in good condition. After that sale, the prices again declined and the majority of the buildings went for five dollars each. The reason for the amazing shrinkage of values was that the buyers were bound by the terms of sale to tear the houses down and remove the debris within three weeks. People know better than to give much money for houses which must soon be destroyed. It is much to be wished that they showed the same wisdom as to their own being. Too many, who neglect their souls, lavish care on their bodies which must soon be consigned to the dust.

Take no thought for your life what ye shall eat: neither for your body what ye shall put on. The life is more than meat, and the body than raiment. (Luke 12:22.)

THE POLITICAL ASSASSINATION IN SPAIN.

DON ANTONIO CANOVAS DEL CASTILLO.
(The Murdered Spanish Premier.)

ALFONSO XIII.
The boy King of Spain whose early reign has been clouded by disaster. He is now eleven years old. Being a posthumous child he has the unique distinction of being born an actual king.

MARIE CHRISTINA.
(The Spanish Queen Regent.)

faces death in such a cause, as there is in the intrepidity of men who dare die for their principles. It is noble to go forward in spite of such a premonition as the Apostles had.

As men doomed to death; for we are made a spectacle unto the world. (1 Cor. 4:9.)

A Petrifying Spring.

A remarkable pool in Zapata County, Texas, is described in the San Antonio Express. It states that, guided by a ranchman from the lower Rio Grande, a party of hunters spent several days in the wildest part of the county. They camped one day on a dry arroyo, along the banks of which several large trees were growing. As there was no water in sight, the canteens of the party were emptied to supply water for dinner. But when these were exhausted, a more systematic search for water was made. At last a shout from one of the men announced success. He had found a spring under a shelving bank. Two or three of the men went down to it with the empty canteens. But they hesitated about filling them when they examined the little lake that filled a basin about four feet in diameter and three feet deep. The water was warm and had a milky appearance. One of the men picked up a branch of a tree, one end of which had fallen into the lake. He was astonished to find that the end that was in the water was quite heavy, and on looking at it, he saw that it was turned to stone. Several twigs and leaves which the wind had confidence. But just as the ambulance drove up, the sick man recovered from his fit and opened his eyes. The joy of the dog was unbounded. He licked his hands and capered around him. The man was unable to rise to his feet, but he had plenty of help then, as at his word, the dog allowed the sympathetic bystanders to come to his aid. He was helped to a drug-store, where he recovered sufficiently to walk home. The dog had evidently a poor opinion of humanity. He apparently thought, that the people who tried to approach him were more likely to do him harm than good. He could not be expected to know any better, but the same excuse cannot be made for wordly friends of the sin-sick soul who often try to keep from it the children of God who would administer to it the unfailing remedy.

We have taken away the key of knowledge: ye entered not in yourselves and them that were entering in ye hindered. (Luke 11:52.)

A House Sold for Two Dollars

There was a novel auction sale of real estate on the east side of New York City last week. All the houses on two blocks of East Houston, Pitt, Willett and Stanton Streets, 113 buildings in all, were sold to the highest bidders. A year ago, the city decided to lay out the two blocks as a park, and since that time has been buying the lots from the owners. Having secured them, the houses were put up for sale. Many of the houses were three-story brick buildings. When they were Needs Identification.

A young Irishman had a peculiar experience in New York last week. He has been wandering about the country for about a year seeking employment, and has not been successful. He has received a liberal education, and has taken the full term of ten years in Maynooth College, Ireland. It was intended that he should become a priest, but he conceived a repugnance to the priesthood and determined to become a farmer in Canada. He settled in Manitoba, but did not succeed there. Early this year he came to the United States. He wandered from city to city, spending the little money he had left, until he reached Philadelphia, where he was stranded. His poverty became so severe that he was arrested as a vagrant, but was released when, in response to his appeals to his family, his father sent him a letter containing a post-office order for twenty-five dollars, and a relative sent a banker's order for sixty-three. Both were payable in New York, so he set out for this city, walking, as he had no money to pay his fare. He arrived at night and slept in an empty wagon, but congratulated himself that the morning would put an end to his hardships for some time. On presenting his order at the post-office, he was told that he must be identified in order to obtain the money. At the bank the same difficulty presented itself. He had not a friend in the city, nor a single person that could vouch for him. He appealed to the British consul and to other persons, but could get no help. A benevolent policeman found him a cheap lodging and paid for his bed and a meal, otherwise he would have been homeless again that night. At last accounts he was still wandering about the streets with the orders for eighty-eight dollars in his pocket, but without a cent to buy him a meal. A like difficulty sometimes prevents sinners obtaining the blessings their heavenly Father has provided for them. But in their case it is generally their own doubts and not the doubts of others that hinder them. They cannot be convinced that the invitations of the Gospel are for them, though they are broad enough to take in every needy sinner who desires them.

Whoever will let him take of the water of life freely. (Rev 22:17.)

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Pleasures of House-Boating.

It's an Economical and Delightful Way of Spending a Vacation—Steadily Increasing in Popularity Here and Abroad.

EVERY year multiplies the number of house-boats upon the rivers and smaller lakes of Europe and America. These floating summer homes—not to be compared with the magnificent ocean hotels of the great transatlantic liners, to be sure, but much cosier and more picturesque—are growing in favor in every country where they have been introduced. Undoubtedly the house-boat, as we know it, is a modification of the "dahabiyeh" of the Nile—the smooth-sailing, comfortable vessel which most travelers up "the ancient river of Egypt" from Cairo, usually prefer to any other means of transportation. But in our temperate climate, with no noxious Nile marshes, nor malarious fevers to guard against, the house-boat can be made as free and open to heaven's breezes in all good weather as though its roomy cabin and snug berths were only protected by a canvas awning.

Our photograph, taken during the midsummer holidays in England, presents a gay scene on the Thames river. A large house-boat party of probably several hundred young folks have anchored their craft under a shady bank, and are getting into position to view the university crews as they sweep past in their annual aquatic competition. Such a boat as the large one shown in the foreground of the picture is capable of accommodating a good-sized party. With a well-stocked larder, a capable cook and pleasant weather, there are almost endless possibilities for pure and wholesome enjoyment. All the arrangements are of the simplest description and are made with a view to coolness and comfort, rather than for display. Quarters in a house-boat, however small, are preferred by many to being cooped up in a room in a crowded hotel. Pure air, keen appetites and sound, refreshing sleep are among the many good things one is practically assured of, while spending the "dog-days" on a house-boat; besides, considerable pleasure and profit may be derived from sight-seeing, for with an occasional tow, long distances can be traversed in comfort and safety. You retire at night, while the vessel is still "tied up" at some locality which a few days' stop has made familiar, and you awake next morning and look out upon new scenes and strange faces. If the party has been well selected and the society on board is thoroughly congenial, there are few pleasanter ways of spending a holiday than in a good-sized, roomy craft of this description, along the banks of some picturesque river.

The Blessing of Cheerfulness.

Everybody likes a cheerful person, but to "take to" a gloomy, taciturn, morose individual is like the liking for some repugnant medicine, an acquired taste. "A cheerful man (writes Rev. J. R. Miller) carries with him a fragrance in his presence and personality—an influence that acts upon others as summer warmth on the field and forests. It wakes up and calls out the best that is in them. It makes them stronger, braver, and happier. Such a man makes a little spot of this world a lighter, brighter, warmer place for other people to live in. To meet him in the morning is to get inspiration which makes all the day's struggles and tasks easier. His heartly handshake puts a thrill of new vigor in your veins. After talking with him for a few minutes, you feel an exhilaration of spirits, a quickening of energy, a renewal of zest and interest in living, and are ready for any duty or service. Happy and wise then is he who cultivates the spirit of cheerfulness.

Don't Cage the Song-Birds.

Mr. W. Weston, a subscriber in Ontario, O., writes: "I cannot refrain from saying a word in favor of our song-birds. We do not need to cage the robin to learn its song. I have for several years rejoiced to hear them welcome Spring; and while I live in a country not far from cities and towns, I do not get lonely. The robin's first call is, 'Hurry up, Susie, hurry up! Hurry up, quick!' One comes to my very door and says, plainly, 'Marie, hurry up; hurry up, Marie!' too plainly to be misunderstood.

A HOUSE-BOAT PARTY AT HENLEY, ON THE THAMES, ENGLAND.

"I invited a niece to visit me and to hear her name called. 'Hurry up, Susie, quick!' I am of the opinion they can talk, and we fail to give ear to their sweet songs. My dear little linnet comes every summer to bathe and drink from a dish of water placed in my hanging baskets on the veranda. Now this linnet is raising a family close by the door, in my honeysuckle vine; yes, and within one foot of my balcony, where I keep my choicest house-flowers, the cat-bird chose a nook for a nest and we all were delighted. They perch upon a wee crab-apple tree and sing their pure, sweet songs while we eat breakfast and take tea.

"My wild birds (so-called) and my flowers are full of sweet lessons from a Divine hand. Let us protect the birds! On the Fourth of July, amid many noises from guns and fireworks, the birds seemed afraid. I opened my doors and began to sing and accompany my voice on the piano, when I was attracted by the birds that came to the nearest tree. I had a concert! Robin, linnet, cat-bird and sparrow, with a woodpecker on the roof beating time!

"Be gentle to the dear little birds."

Traits of Character.

Boys and girls must be educated for a purpose, and that purpose should be kept steadily in view. They should be impressed with the fact that they are to be the men and women of the future, and that in order to fulfil their mission with credit to themselves and profit to the country, they must be moral, upright, industrious, and frugal. Without these elements their education will be as apt to work harm as good.

How They Helped India.

Miss Ida Anderson, a reader in Gibbonsville, Idaho, writes this letter which is so timely, that we publish it in full as an encouragement to other young people in Christian work:

The teacher of our young people's class (composed mostly of young men and women of the working class), in our Sunday School, sometime ago asked each one of the class to earn a dollar for the benefit of the famine sufferers in India. The sum thus raised ($13.50) was forwarded some time since, but thinking that our example might inspire others, I send you a list of names of contributors and the way in which they earned the money:

Joe Addis and Will Crone worked regularly in a saw mill, but the others did extra work. Eva Odenwald set type; Aura Anderson cleaned a cellar; Grace Anderson, did general housework; Ida Anderson sewed for a neighbor; Mrs. R. B. Hughes, sewed for a neighbor; Mrs. Cannon washed for a neighbor; Josie Leabe did general housework; Laura McKenzie also did housework; Mrs. Green sold eggs, and Mrs. Geo. Hughes economized at home.

This is a record of loving Christian

MY HAND ON MOTHER'S FACE.

AS a baby small,
It was my way,
When rocked to sleep
At the close of day,
As the shadows grew
'Round the old fire-place
To reach out my hand
For my mother's face.

The years passed on;
My school-days begun,
Lessons grew harder
Spite of frolic and fun;
But when I was weary
Of study or race,
I would reach out my hand
For my mother's face.

Then a young man I,
And tossed about,
'Mid right and wrong,
Joy, sorrow and doubt—
Seeking for fortune
As time grew apace—
Oh! to reach out my hand
For my mother's face.

Depending on self,
Ambitious for fame,
I sought worldly honor
And reaped but shame
The shadows fell deeper—
Sin, trials, disgrace—
I forgot to reach out
For my mother's face.

Then my heart cried out
In its anguish deep,
For the old fire-side
Where, rocked to sleep

Folded so safe
In her loving embrace,
I reached out my hand
For my mother's face.

And a voice I heard
'Neath the chasten
'My son, give your hand
To your mother's side
I found my Saviour
New life and grace
With my hand once more
On my mother's face.

I'm an old man now
And sitting alone—
The world behind me
And all outgrown—
I shall soon fall asleep
By the "old fire-place"
To awake with my hand
On my mother's face.

Brooklyn. MRS. F. A. B.

Nature's Barometer.

It is worth while to note that many animals and plants discern the approach of a storm, sometimes hours ahead of its arrival. Horses and cattle stretch their necks and sniff the air, chickens hold their heads together, and geese cackle with unusual vigor. Sea-gulls will not fly from land and all birds fly very low and hover over the field to skim the ground, hearing birds, indoors and out, hush their song before storm breaks, and the caged caryatid in the farthest corner of its little prison. Nor are the signs among the plants less significant. The leaves of the maple seem to turn upside down, the maple's leaf shows its white under side, the chickweed firmly closes its leaves, the pine cone shuts up its scales, and armor at the first approach of rain, expanding them again when the rain has passed. Finally, the clouds and wind are all infallible signs. Mist precedes many storms, and rises steadily up the mountain, clears toward the valley, the storm soon pass. If, however, the mist comes up and down or clings to the top of the storm may be expected to continue.

Food as a Moral Agent.

Housekeepers by the food they provide, writes Dr. Talmage, by the couches they spread, by the books they introduce, by the influences they bring around their homes, are deciding the physical, intellectual, moral, and eternal destiny of the race.

The Captive's Song.

In a little book of poems, just issued, Rev. W. T. Sleeper of Worcester, Mass., devotes several dainty verses to a captive lark, whose feelings, in its prison, are thus described:

It was a captive lark's sweet lay,
That so arrested me,
It hushed the children's noisy play,
Drove toiling mother's care away—
A soulful melody.

His wings could find no room to fly,
His feet no open door,
But he could see the glorious sky,
With song could cheer the passers-by,
And Nature's God adore.

Thus boundaries my freedom balk;
Shut in by prison bars,
In narrow circle I must walk,
And bonds my aspirations mock,
Though thought transcends the stars.

Starved Imaginations.

In the homes of the poor, for a thousand reasons, the children seldom have books read, and never have music introduced to their minds and hearts. Consequently the beautiful imagery of the story is lost to them. Their imaginations are starved and their souls of the unawakened long past the time of unfolding, while many powers which potentially in them, never have opportunity to be developed at all.

"ONLY NANCE!"

A TRUE STORY OF LIFE AMONG MOUNTAIN HOMES.

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

By HULDAH HERRICK.

THE mountains were clothed in scarlet and gold, and trailed their gorgeous robes, even over the green fields which bordered the river. Their peaks, misty with rich coloring, were vaguely against the October sky. The faint glints of color as it babbled over the rocks; but when it res: in shady pools, the clear reflected a blaze of glorious hues. "School-miss" followed the tortuous of Jenck's Creek. Her horse way over the rough boulders, and re-fording the stream. She heed to his movements, only mating herself mechanically to the of gait.

A song broke the stillness loded there. Clear and melo: oated down the narrow ravine, he "school-miss" from her ab-

"I's got a home—home—home!
I's got a home—sweet home!
I's got a home—sweet home!
Lo! I want to jine ther angels,
In our home!"

In turn revealed the singer. On ge a girl was plowing. There be scarcely a foothold upon the, et she skillfully guided a vicious- le over the rocky field. It was gure. The scant skirts of her dress clung to stalwart limbs: s bonnet in the last stages of di- concealed her face. There ertness and grace in the form. a richness in the voice which indi- yo.

y too far away for conversation, "school-miss" rode on. She soon der destination. It was a log ing to the side of the mountain, es had appointed a "neighborhood g. A pack of dogs announced y by a wild chorus of fierce barks ros. The master of the house foard, followed by a number of sldren.

"Git erway! Shet up yer w yer!" he growled to the dogs. w. Miss. Glad to see yer!" he w. changed tone. "Light, an' cum yole woman's been powerful ed at the thoughts of yer cummin'." ing her horse to the care of ame-faced urchins, he led the e house. A woman came for- toet her—one young in years, are and sorrow.

"Cum, Miss," she said, simply. es of her voice and warm grasp h d, gave greater assurance than th woman was in the house. She k into the shadow, as they en- anconcealed the face of the child s rising. The "school-miss" went w extended hand.

"Is your name?" she asked. An enmurmur was the only response, e man barely touched the proba-. Turning away, the "school- caht a look on her hostess' face, esible look in which scorn, a contempt were blended. Mys- shurned her attention to the chil- ere was a crowd of them in the e were proudly introduced by eir mother, and bid to "make ers to the lady." Others were t into notice, only briefly in- ine bitter words.

"I lay ther womin's young uns," ean at look on the woman's face. "school-miss" comprehended the sit- e master of the house had u thins of the men of the Old Tes- nt f his example.

he s per was served in a smaller a, with was kitchen and dining-room. g preparation the "school-miss" ot of the house she was in. It was ne like most of the mountain homes. There were no comforts—no at- tempts at adornment. A few splint-bot- tomed chairs, some three-legged stools and a rough table, completed the furnishing. The entire wardrobe of the family, not in present requisition, hung about the walls on wooden pegs. Over one of the beds hung a murderous-looking rifle, and be- neath it, two revolvers and a belt of am- munition. Another gun was suspended over the fire-place. The room was heated by bituminous coal in a rude iron grate.

The summons to supper interrupted her survey. She was served with a coarse but wholesome repast: this she ate with the male members of the family (mountain etiquette forbidding the women of the home to eat at the first table). After it was over, she sat at the open door watch- ing the reflection of the sunset upon the surrounding mountain tops.

As the soft shades of dusk concealed the encompassing peaks, the little congre- gation gathered. From mountain top and

The fire-light died away from the beau- tiful face, and the "school-miss" forgot it as she carried on the simple service. In heartfelt words she presented "Christ and him crucified" to the darkened souls be- fore her. A keen sense of their ignorance and need, and a deeper sense of the great riches of God's love, drew the words from her lips with burning fervor.

How the light played upon the rapt faces! How it glistened in the earnest eyes, as though tears had reflected its glow. How it shone and lingered upon the rough cheeks. Were they moist? Deep-drawn breaths broke the still- ness. Sobs came from sin-laden hearts. The master of the house hid his face in his hands. Through his fingers the tears forced their way. The guilty creature who usurped his wife's lawful place was sobbing bitterly. The wife, heart-broken and outraged, sat with face uplifted.

In the dark corner of the room shone a face like that of an angel. Nance was listening as to the voice of her Lord.

After the closing prayer and song, the little gathering silently dispersed. But far into the night the family sat about the open fire, discussing the truths which were so new to them. They felt their sinfulness and their need of a Saviour, but sin had taken too deep a root to be lightly plucked up.

Only Nance out of that household found peace in believing. Only Nance renounced sin and received the assurance of Divine forgiveness. As the "school-miss" watched her sweet face an, studied

NANCE LEFT THE HOUSE IN THE GREY DAWN.

"kollow," from "cove" and "crick" they came: fathers, mothers and children. The cabin soon filled. There was no other light than that of the coal fire.

The fitful light played over the assem- bly, now bringing a face out into promi- nence, again intensifying the shade upon it. It played upon the tender curves of infant faces; it caressed the fresh young faces of girls; it revealed the toil-worn looks of the women; it showed plainly the sin marks upon many a rough visage. While they sang their simple weird songs, the "school-miss" looked upon her hear- ers, feeling the poverty of their souls, and longing to aid them. Her attention was struck by a face in a dark corner of the room, upon which the restless light lingered lovingly. A small, well-formed head sat proudly upon a round, slender throat. A low, square forehead, with arched brows, beneath which clear blue eyes looked wist- fully at her. The mouth was especially beautiful, with firm lines and bewitching curves. The chin was round and dimpled. About this face, tendrils of gold-brown hair glistened in the fire-light.

"Who is that?" she asked of her host- ess who sat beside her.

"That? Why that's only Nance," was the surprised reply, as the woman's gaze followed her own.

her pure char- acter, her heart went out to the girl, and she longed to trans- plant her to some more con- genial surroundings; to some environment where the desires for nobler, higher things could be realized.

Nance left the house in the grey, early dawn, to resume her plough- ing, and the "school-miss" saw her no more. She learned her simple story, however, from her hostess.

"Nance is my ole man's gal by his fist woman. She done left him—run off to Tennessee with ernuther man an' got married, when Nan war but a slip of er babbly. She haint na'ar sot eyes on er from ther day. Nance is er good sort of er gal. She's er master hand ter wuk, and duz the heft of ther fa'am wuk, seein' s ez ther baint no boys old ernuff yit ter tek it."

"Can she read?" asked the "school-miss."

"Law no. Nance haint na'ar ben ter skule. Thar haint ben no time fer her ter go."

The "school-miss" learned enough to see the poverty of that young life. No pleasure, no attainments, nothing uplift- ing—just a never-ceasing round of heavy, manual labor.

"Why has Nance never married?" she asked: for the mountain girls usually were wed at thirteen or fourteen years of age, and it was remarkable for one to reach sixteen. Nance's age, unmarried.

"O, our Nance na'ar cared. She na'ar let ennybuddy court her. She ies netch- elly 'spises sich foolishness, an hits er heap sight better fer her," said the poor woman, with a heavy sigh.

Six months passed ere the "school-miss" again ascended Jenck's Creek. Again the mountains were robed in beauty, the soft tints of early spring. The heart of the "school-miss" was too sore to notice it. A deadly fever had ravaged the country. Night after night she had watched with the sick and dying. Soul after soul passed through the "dark valley." One cold form after another was laid away in the little, scattered cemeteries. There seemed everywhere nothing but death and sorrow. An imperative summons from the head of Jenck's Creek came to her. Many were ill, some had died, others were dying: she was needed.

When she opened the door of the cabin the deathly smell of the fever made her recoil. Summoning up her resolution, she entered. A pitiful sight was before her. The wife lay weak and exhausted on one of the beds; a child scarcely a week old lay nncared for beside her. The father sat by the fire, emaciated, almost helpless, from his long struggle with the fever. Two of the children had been laid to rest in the rocky burial-place. Only a lad of fourteen and a girl of ten were there to care for the sick. The woman who had formerly lived with them had fled with her children at the first approach of the dis- ease.

On a bed in a corner lay Nance. Her face was fever-flushed: the blue eyes bloodshot and vacant. The sweet lips were swollen and blackened by the dread secretion which always heralded death. The restless form tossed to and fro, and the uneasy hands plucked incessantly at the bed-covers. There was no recogni- tion in her face as the "school-miss" bent over her.

The end was near. There was nothing to do, save to watch the young life flicker out. O the helplessness of it! So many lives had gone, that might have been saved by care and attention. The "school-miss" had nothing to give them, only the "corn-pones," the fried pork or the black coffee. No cooling drinks to allay the burning thirst, no nourishing food to strengthen the exhausted bodies. She could only watch by them and see them slip away, with no power to save or to help.

She cared for the others all the long night, coming again and again to look upon the poor, unconscious girl. They told her the story of her devotion and self-sacrifice.

"She war so faithful, war our Nance," said the father, in hoarse, broken tones. "She cud allers be trusted. She did er man's wuk on ther place, and allers war so chirker bout hit. How we uns kin do without her passes me. Ef twant fer her we uns wud na'ar hev pulled through this yere fever. She dun tuk keer on ther hull on us, an' she hed ther hull keer on ther stock, too. Night an' day, day an' night, she war up an' er doin'. Even arter the fever tuk her, she na'ar let on. She na'ar gin up ontill she dun dropped."

"She war' sich er good gal," feebly chimed in the mother: "Nance na'ar gin me er sass wud. An' wen ther young uns war tuk, Nance she talked ther best kind ter em. An' she prayed with we uns every night. Nance lied religion, Miss. ef enny mortal ever did. Do yer mind ther night she dun got hit, when you uns war er preachin' here?"

"An' only ther las' night she cud talk, she war er gwine on 'bout wat you uns dun tol' we uns, an' she med us all prom- ise to live an' do better." And the poor father hid his face in his hands, and sobbed aloud.

"We do 'low ter do right arter this," said the mother, softly, and she looked at her husband.

The "school-miss" saw that peace and right had indeed entered into the family.

Towards morning she noticed a change in the unconscious girl. The flush of the fever left her face; it grew white and wan; a grey shadow crept over it. The eyes ceased their restless roving, and a look of recognition came into their depths.

"Do you know me, Nance?" asked the "school-miss," bending over her.

The dying eyes smiled, the lips moved. The "school-miss" bent her ear to catch the faint words.

"I her—got er—home—home—home"—faltered the girl.

And Nance had gone home.

"Only Nance," with naught but toil and hardship, neglect and abuse, here, but a child of God, and an heir of his kingdom there.

THE END.

Home Talks with Mothers and Daughters.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

STEP-MOTHERS AND MOTHERS-IN-LAW.

HEARDED a very pleasant thing the other day, said by a lad in his teens about his step-mother. This lady had evidently succeeded in winning his affections and gaining his entire approbation, for he remarked to some friends, "You ought to know my mother; she's just smooth." This adjective on the lips of a boy conveys the superlative of appreciation, and even though it be slang, is, coming from him, very convincing and expressive.

Perhaps it is because the step-mother trends on such delicate ground that she has been from early ages the object of aversion in literature, while in life she is apt to be looked upon with great suspicion and jealousy. When the step-mother walks out with her brood there are not wanting critical eyes to observe whether the children's dress is as trim and neat as it ought to be; whether they look happy and well-fed and are well-behaved; whether there is a difference made between the step-mother's own children and those of the first wife—in short, the poor woman falls under a sharp fire of criticism from the people who have a right to observe her doings, and from the people quite on the outside, who have no right in the matter at all.

In the fairy books it is always the step-mother who is cruel, hateful and unjust, who sets her step-daughters to spinning and weaving and scrubbing and untangling great skeins of silk, while her own girls complacently loiter in easy chairs or walk abroad in silk attire. The fairy books simply voice the general opinion of humanity; that step-motherhood necessarily means clinging with great partiality to one's own offspring, to the children who are bone of one's bone and flesh of one's flesh. So it is really a very brave woman who assumes the office of step-mother, or else it is a very thoughtless one, who has little conception of the task before her.

Among the noblest women I have ever known, the sweetest, the most generous, the most utterly self-forgetful have been step-mothers, and they have borne the burden and heat of the day and brought up their husband's children with as much tenderness, fidelity and good common sense as an own mother could have done. Exceptions to this rule may be found. There are women whose self-love is so intense, and whose maternal natures are so narrow, that they should never undertake the charge of children. Possibly their instinct may tide them over hard times with their own, but they should not attempt the task of bringing up children who are not really akin to them. They cannot do it; they will be constantly unfair, and they will rightly incur the unkind comments of those who see them in a false position.

In the "Life of Maria Edgeworth" we find what may be called a glorification of the step-mother, quite surpassing anything else which I remember. In the first place, Mr. Edgeworth married when not yet twenty years old the daughter of a neighbor, a beautiful girl who proved uncongenial. Their ten years of married life dragged along unhappily, the wife unloved and neglected, the husband keeping away from home most of the time. Three children were born to these parents, one of whom was Maria, the gifted novelist, whose works were among the finest earlier productions of the English novel. A few months after the death of Mrs. Edgeworth, Maria's poor mother, her husband found a mate whom he greatly admired and loved. Her name was Honora, and she proved not only a devoted wife, but a most enchanting and judicious step-mother.

After awhile, Honora died. In less than a year her place was taken by her sister Elizabeth, who became Mr. Edgeworth's third wife. She, too, was a wonderful success as a step-mother, almost worshipped by the two sets of children who were there to receive her, and by her own children who came along in due course. Years passed, and she, too, followed her predecessors into the world of shadow. After a slightly longer interval the widower again married. The fourth wife proved as charming a step-mother to the large family as the others had done. She survived Mr. Edgeworth, and lived to an extreme old age. The relations between herself and Maria were singularly delightful and harmonious to the very end. The whole story is a very remarkable one; I think not to be paralleled in biography, yet a true tale of real life. At all events, such facile loving is hardly to our taste as that of the triumphant Mr. Edgeworth, who had an amazing faculty for making everyone about him his devoted slave. I doubt whether the woman of our period would so easily fall under his spell.

I have myself repeatedly known families in which there were two or three different sets of children, all living together in the most beautiful and delightful amiability and harmony, so that there seemed really no difference in the love the parents had for their own children and for the children brought into the home by the circumstance of their parents marrying when each had already a little tribe to bring under the roof. The truth is that children are very loving, and very forgiving, and are easily conciliated, and if the mother in the step-mother's place acts in a sweet and womanly fashion, she will almost always draw them to her. But she must beware of selfishness; she must be careful in nothing to be petty or foolishly exacting; nor must she expect perfection from immature minds. The mother who is in heaven, no doubt if she can see from her serene home what is going on below, looks with special approval on the woman who steps in and takes kind and gentle care of the little ones she has left.

As for the mother-in-law, it is a little difficult to understand why there should be jealousy of her, poor lady! It would seem the most natural thing in the world for a wife to love her husband's mother, and for a husband to be partial to the mother of the wife. The qualities which have drawn the married people together must have existed in their mothers before them, and why there should ever be strained relations in the case one is puzzled to see. Still, it must be owned that mothers-in-law are sometimes very imprudent. It is always well that they should not live in the same family with their respective sons-in-law or daughters-in-law; no house is large enough to shelter two families. Many little tiffs which never become bickerings take place and pass by unnoticed if there is no alien element to criticize, resent or observe. A mother naturally takes up for a daughter or a son if a little word is said hastily or imprudently. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth; the very fanning of the flame which occurs through the presence of an observer is unfortunate. Usually mothers-in-law are tolerated with great complacency if they live in another town or another street, and although John is often sufficiently unwise to state that his mother's bread, cake and pies surpass those made by his wife, still, even this little thing may be passed over if she is not there to smile at the statement. Mary knows better, having womanly tact, than to quote her mother to John's annoyance.

Life is so short that tiffs and jars and quarrels should be dropped from it. It is the height of folly to waste the precious elixir of life by pouring it out like water upon the ground. Whatever we are we can at least dispense with fighting and with bitter and sarcastic words. To bear and forbear are good rules in all domestic relations.

Margaret E. Sangster

Railroads in Central Africa.

Mr. Francis W. Fox, a traveler who has just returned from a long journey to Central Africa, brings cheering news of the progress made in railroad-building. He says: "When I visited Uganda, in April, forty-five miles of permanent way had been laid, and were in good working order. The chief engineer, Mr. Whitehouse, stated that by the end of August he hoped to have the permanent way laid for a distance of 120 miles, and that by the end of 1898, the railway would be completed to Kikuyu, a distance of about three hundred miles from Mombasa. The climate is cool and healthy, and here a most important sanatorium for officials resident in East Africa will probably be established. Captain Slater, R.E., has already successfully constructed an excellent bullock and cart road to the Victoria Nyanza, a distance of about three hundred and fifty miles, so that when the railroad is open to Kikuyu the chief difficulties in connection with the transport of goods and passengers to Uganda will be surmounted, and the main purpose of this railway as a potent instrument for the administration and civilization of the vast lake districts of Central Equatorial Africa will be largely accomplished. About 4,000 laborers have been imported from India."

Philalfrican Liberators' League.

Contributions to the Philalfrican Liberators' League, United Charities Building, New York, not previously acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Hon Chas P Daly	285 00	J P Linville	2 00
Rev L T Chamber		Saunel Thorne	25 00
Iain D D	1,071 00	Wm E Dodge	250 00
Rev J H Edwards	101 00	B Beinecke	25 00
Rev W W Atterbury	101 00	Mrs Wm Hustace	10 00
Heli Chatain	201 00	D Willis James	750 00
Anson Phelps Stokes	100 00	Fred'k R Conder	50 00
Miss J M Swift	1 00	Mrs Julia Hazard	25 00
Miss Julia B Ford	1 00	Saml P Avery	15 00
Rev L H Balfin	1 00	Simon A Hershey	12 00
Ernest T Zeltner	27 00	Dr C E Welch	100 00
Lecture, Church of		Miss S Cordier	50 00
Disciples, 56 St. N.Y.	1 60	Collection, 1st Bapt
Roy Avery	1 00	Ch. Ithaca	15 30
C LeRoy	1 00	Rev R T Jones	1 00
N H Sneaton	1 00	Mrs M T Allen	5 00
Bessie Armington	1 00	Rev D Stuart Dodge	100 00
W A Hoisington	1 00	Mrs W E Dodge	100 00
Mrs Edw H Lyman	1 00	Miss Alida Chatain
John M Kyll	1 00	& friends in Swit-
Miss M Moffatt	1 00	zerland	252 37
Mrs D J Burrell	1 00	Collection, Pres Ch
Miss K VanNest	1 00	Buffalo, N.Y.	9 00
Rev F F Enright	1 00	L H Schell	1 00
Rev P Bagnall	1 00	Eleanor P Allen	1 00
S W Woodward	250 00	Wm A Ingram	5 00
G W Leitch, per	50 00	Miss J H Jackson	2 00
Evelyn H Parsons	1 00	Mrs Frank T Lea	1 00
Charles Mah	5 00	Mrs Robert Hoe	50 00
Appiet'n R Williams	10 00	Hon Hiram Price	25 00
Pres Ch, Newton, LI	13 25	Mrs M J Ostrander	1 00
G Hallinger	1 00	W Ostrander	1 00
Geo H Gray	1 00	Mrs Viola Ostrander	1 00
Mrs Geo H Gray	1 00	G P Knox	1 00
E S Price	1 00	J M Sutton	1 00
Mrs A Price	1 00	First Bapt Church,
John J Prall	1 00	Ithaca	68 75
A D Chambers	30 00	Baptist Church,
E Doeke	5 00	Lockport	27 05
W P Thirkield	1 00	Friends, per W C Bell	5 00
Mrs M H Thirkield	1 00	Miss M I Cortwright	5 00
Miss Mary Hardwick	1 00	Mr and Mrs M J
A W Joy	1 00	Hotchkiss	25 00
Mrs I W Dimick	5 00	Miss J P McGraw	5 00
M E Ch, Floral Park	9 87	Mrs Turner	5 00
Mission's Review, per	4 00	Nelson Heller	20 00
Rev John A Dowie	5 00	Student Volunteers,
Rev John L Maile	5 00	Cornell University	30 00

In Its Worst Form

Severe Case of Dyspepsia Cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I was troubled for many years with dyspepsia in its worst form and I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am now able to eat without distress and enjoy three meals a day. I can do my own work and entertain my friends and I owe it all to Hood's Sarsaparilla."

MRS. LURA M. JACKSON, Bennettsburg, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills cure indigestion. 25 cents.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Most Durable and Decorative. Suitable for all buildings. Numerous designs. H. S. NORTHROP. Send for Catalogue. 33 Cherry St., New York

FREE TO BALD HEADS.

We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp diseases. Address, Attenhelm Medical Dispensary, Dept. N. A., Box 779, Cincinnati, O.

WOMEN Make $2 to $10 a Day selling our Mark-Infosh Dress Skirts, new dress shields, etc. Cat. Free. Ladies' Supply Co., 3115 Forest Ave., Chicago

"Fool's haste is nae speed." Don't hurry the work unless you use

A Summer Necessity! Makes the food more appetizing and digestible.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

The Treatment of Rheumal or Uric Acid Poisoning.

GOVERNOR STEPHENS

sour recently informed o representatives that Tart li was the only remedy wh him relief in uric acid pr The governor speaks of them in the highest terms.

Pamphlet on the treaten Rheumatism by Tartarh sent free by

McKesson & Robbins, 91 Fulton

SOLE AGENTS FOR

The Tartarlithin Co.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite till you investigate WHITE RO More artistic and enduring; less Prices to suit all. Work delivered c Write for designs and information. ing to investigate.

NO MOSS GROWING. NO CLEANING. THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE 70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridg

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD OF CHURCH FURNISHINGS. OPERA AND ASSEMBLY CHAIRS. SCHOOL FURNITURE COMPANY. GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

N. Y. University Sixty-third year of 1897. DAY CLAS after two years. EVEN Law School (S) L. B. After three ye $100. GRADUATE CLASSES: Twelve cours tain L.L.B. For circulars address L. B. islar, Washington Square, New York Ci

DAVIS MILITARY S WINSTON, North Carolina. any College or University. plete business college course pared by us ever failed to p tion for West Point and An climate. Low rates. Write f

FRANKLIN COLLEGE New Athens, 340 Sent out U Governors, and 340 Ministers. Total cost R courses, courses fo. D.D., Ph.D., etc.; with plan to earn funds. W. A. WILLIAM

SACRED SONGS No. No other New book equal to it. 25 pe each, if by mail. THE HIGLOW & Lakeside Building, Chicago. 26 E. Ninth

8% Security Safe as Government Your money can surely earn it by best Eastern bank. Re horn & Co., Equitable Build

SAPOLIO

Barefoots" Helped India.
SALLIE GASS, a Christian lady of Greeneville, Tenn., sends us a most interesting letter, to which the photograph that is reproduced on this page. As the example her sets forth is one worthy of emulation, we give it below in full:

GREENEVILLE, TENN., July, 10.
Christian Herald:—My Sunday school class solicited the money I sent you for the India Famine. Alexander and I at the back right-hand side, so pennies and nickles $2.25 of the amount. The example of these little is worthy of imitation, and may arouse class to a greater work. Ours is a Sunday School, held in a public school, you see our financial advantages. Yours in the Master's work, SALLIE GASS.

TENNESSEE BOYS AND GIRLS WHO WORKED FOR INDIA.

She had many instances, during relief work, of self-denial and saving, but none more touching than that of a little group of poor school-children, a country district, doing their work in this simple, trustful way. We will bring a blessing on all endeavours.

For Hindoo Wives.

ALTHOUGH in some parts of India, though the light of the Gospel and the influence of Western civilization, the condition of the Hindoo women has been improved, the condition of the Hindoo women is still little better than everywhere. Entire and abject dependence upon the husband, obedience to his wish, submission to his whims, a seclusion which makes of life one of imprisonment, are all accepted as the duty of the Hindoo helpmeet. Guinness, an experienced missionary, gives this unique sketch of a Hindoo woman from the daily experience of a missionary:

With in-law lives elsewhere usually, but Ranee (the wife), and had told me one day that he would allow her to sit in the Mission-house some time. I persuaded the husband to carry out my wish, and by dint of long persuasion succeeded. "She will not see a man?" I asked. "No, no; there is no man here." "You shall come with me." "You shall see her safely shut up here, and close all the windows your- self," he concluded at last, "come in five minutes, and we will be pre- sently minutes or more pass. Ranee's face looks smilingly over the light. I have both bathed and oiled to a readers.—The New Cure for Rheumatism and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

In the last issue the new botanical dis- coveries, is proving a wonderful curative in cases of Rheumatism, or dis- ease of the Kidneys and urinary organs. The World publishes the remarkable testimony of C. Darling, minister of the gospel in New York, cured by Alkavis, who had lost faith in man- kind, and was preparing himself for cer- tain death. Similar testimony to this wonder- ful medicine from others, including many from disorders peculiar to woman. The New Cure for Rheumatism, Bladder Diseases, etc., No. 418, New York, who so far as its only aim is to prove its value that for of production they will send a free treat- ment prepaid by mail to every reader of the Herald who is a sufferer from any of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. Sufferers to send the names and ad- dress, and receive the Alkavis free. Its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to themselves, and re-arranged their hair with special neatness. She is dressed in two or three delicate muslin saris. The anxious face of the young Brahman appears above. "You are sure, Miss Sahib, that she will not see a man?" Not till we are seated in the palki-gari with every shutter closed, his younger brother inside with us and Ranee, and he him- self upon the box, is Kashi satisfied—if then. The jolting roads jar the carriage shutters an inch or so apart as we drive, and Ranee glances shyly out, but the brother, a lad of twelve or fourteen, hastily shuts them up.

The ladies at the Mission House dared not offer afternoon tea. To eat with us would have broken her caste; to suggest such a thing have been a faux pas. The husband was on tenterhooks lest some man should appear, and in about five minutes he excitedly hurried her away back into the covered trap, and across town to the little side- way where she lives a prisoner, within four walls. This is her religion, the sum and substance of which is, as an Indian woman writes: "To look upon her husband as a god, to hope for salvation only through him, to be obedient to him in all things, never to covet independence, never to do any- thing but that which is ap- proved by law and custom." With the excep- tion of the poorest working woman, whose life is necessarily unsecluded, these views find their natural outcome in the zenana prison system as it exists in India.

Blood... Bubbles.

Those pimples or blotches that disfigure your skin, are blood bubbles. They mark the unhealthy condition of the blood-current that throws them up. You must get down to the blood, before you can be rid of them. Local treatment is useless. It suppresses, but does not heal. The best remedy for eruptions, scrofula, sores, and all blood diseases, is

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Ladies' Tailoring Our Exclusive Specialty.

A Great Success We have introduced an measuring system which we will send free on request, together with our beautifully illustrated cat- alogue, of which the first edition of Fall and Win- ter goods is just out. It shows one hundred of the most attractive styles for this season's wear and also complete samples of goods. We solicit a trial order. We prepay all express charges.

The American Cloak & Suit Co., LADIES' TAILORS, 35 E. 12th & 48-50 E. 13th Street, New York City.

A RELIABLE MAIL-ORDER HOUSE.

O'NEILL'S

6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, New York.

A Great... Skirt Bargain for $4.98

THESE Skirts are made of English Sicilian, Rich Lustre, Heavy Weave, Tailor Made, Lapped Seams, lined with Percale and interlined with Canvas; Bound with Velveteen, full width, correct shape.

ACTUALLY WORTH 8.00,
SPECIAL 4.98

And there are over a thousand other bargains equally as good in our profusely illus- trated Fall and Winter Fashion Catalogue, 128 pages, 8½ x 10 inches. SEND FOR IT. FREE UPON REQUEST.

REMEMBER—We deliver free All Purchases (except Bicycles) to any point within 100 miles of our store. Beyond a hundred miles, ex- pressage to be paid by customer upon receipt of package.

H. O'NEILL & CO.,

6th AVENUE, 20th TO 21st STREET, NEW YORK.

Are the half-hose one should buy if one wants the best—the best-fitting, the best-looking, the best-wearing.

SHAW STOCKING CO., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by Leading Dealers Everywhere.

Descriptive Price-List to any Applicant.

THE LADIES' DELIGHT.

THE "HOLDFAST"

ALUMINUM HAIRPIN.

Pronounced by all using them the Best Hairpin Made. Curved to shape of head and locks in hair, so it Cannot Fall Out. Smoother and lighter than Tortoise Shell or Horn, and many times stronger. Will not split or break; size, 2-4 inches, polished or in black. Also 3-4 and 4-2 inches, with heavy prongs, for braid or bunnet use. Apply to dealers or send 10 Cents for sample of 6 small or one large.

CONSOLIDATED SAFETY PIN CO.,

Box 10, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

Also Makers of STEWART'S DUPLEX SAFETY PIN.

HAY FEVER

and ASTHMA.

A Permanent Cure Guaranteed. Send for circular for home treatment.
GEORGE J. WEST, M.D., 510 Fifth Avenue, New York.

DR. JOHN'S EYE SALVE 25 cents.

Address CEROMA EYE SALVE CO., Pittsburg, Pa.

NEW DRESS SET, 10c.

A new and beautiful design set including pair of Ball end rigid link Cuff buttons, 3 studs, 1 collar button and new patent belt retainer. In 14 K Roman gold or sterling silver. Extra heavy plate. Worth 25c in any store. To give you an inkling of our 1,000 Bargains we send complete set and large catalogue postpaid ONLY 10 CTS. 3 for 25c. Ingersoll & Bros., Dept. 61 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

OPIUM and WHISKEY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars FREE.
B. M. Woolley, M. D., Box 487, Atlanta, Ga

LIBERAL EDUCATION NOW PLACED WITHIN EASY REACH OF EVEN THE POOREST!

Unprecedented
Unparalleled

Only One Dollar Down

Almost Incredible
Yet Absolutely True

SECURES THE FIFTEEN LARGE VOLUMES (6902 PAGES) CONSTITUTING THE WONDERFUL

World-Wide Encyclopedia

The Greatest Compendium of History, Geography, Science, Biography, Art, and Literature ever Offered to the American Public.

REGULAR PRICE $26—CUT IN TWO AT A NET SAVING TO YOU OF $13.

Thousands of commendably ambitious men and women now literally hungering and thirsting for knowledge, but prevented by circumstances from attending the higher institutions of learning, will hail with delight this exceptionally liberal proposition by which, on the payment of ONLY ONE DOLLAR down, they may secure this Treasure-House of knowledge, and henceforth eat and drink to their hearts' content. This golden opportunity will surely prove the turning-point for the better in the life of many who read this offer. THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA treats of every subject, great and small, within the range of human knowledge. It contains all the information required for the man, the Scholar, the Student, the Professional and Business Man, the Farmer, the Manufacturer, the Mother, the Wife, and the Housekeeper.

The Rich Store-House of World-Wide Knowledge has, with infinite labor, been thoroughly overhauled; its treasury of facts conserved; its wealth of material utilized. A WONDERFUL OFFER! Never before has it been our fortune to make such an Offer as this, and unless you snap it up quickly, others will get ahead of you. We place special emphasis on this note of warning in order to impress upon the reader the urgent need of promptest action on his part.

FIFTEEN LARGE VOLUMES

Rich Silk Finished Line Cloth with Gold Stamp.

SEVENTY-SIX COLORED MAPS.

6902 Pages—13800 Columns

OVER TEN MILLION WORDS.

Set Measurement when on Book-Shelf:
22 INCHES LONG, 9 INCHES HIGH.
Weight, Forty Pounds.

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA brings the history of Science, Literature, Invention, Commerce, Geography and Discovery, and the Mental and Moral Development of man practically down to date. All the Recent Discoveries and the Gigantic Growth of Commerce and Manufacture, are Intelligently and Faithfully Recorded.

In dealing with the Great Commercial Centres of this Country, the editors of THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA have with great care, and at enormous expense, obtained the latest statistics of the Growth and Development of Population and Manufacture, direct from the Civic Authorities, the Board of Trade, and the Chamber of Commerce in each city.

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA answers Every Question, however abstruse. A Digest of all Knowledge from the Earliest Time is contained within its pages, and no person, however untutored, provided he can read, need lack for full information on any subject within the scope of human knowledge, once he is the possessor of this great work.

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA is very handsomely and durably bound in modern silk finished cloth with genuine gold stamp.

These Fifteen Large Octavo Volumes, aggregating nearly SEVEN THOUSAND PAGES, make a most imposing array, Attractive enough to Ornament the best and costliest library in the world. No Two Hundred Dollar Encyclopedia can make a better exhibit on the book-shelf, and the ownership of this great work, a Complete Library in itself, will place its possessor among the intellectually progressive men of the day.

WHAT MAN HAS DONE MAN CAN DO."

ABRAHAM LINCOLN at twenty-two simply knew how to read, write and cipher.

ANDREW JOHNSON, President of the United States, NEVER ATTENDED SCHOOL. His wife was his only teacher. She taught him how to read.

WILLIAM SIBLEY, formerly President of the Western Union Telegraph Co., left his father's farm at fifteen to learn a trade. After having given away millions of dollars during his life-time, he died worth many millions more a few years ago.

PETER COOPER, whose name will ever be cherished in the hearts of the many thousands of young men and young women who have been graduated, free of expense, from the Night School of Cooper Institute, himself never had more than one year's schooling.

Now if these men, under such unfavorable circumstances, succeeded in achieving fame and fortune by dint of industrious application to study and work, why need any of the thousands of young people who have in them the making of great men and great women, despair of reaching the height of their ambition with such an opportunity as this, placing within their easy reach everything necessary for a liberal education?

HOW TO GET

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA.

Send us One Dollar, and your full name, with full shipping instructions, and immediately we will send you the Whole FIFTEEN VOLUMES of THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA, neatly boxed, freight charges payable at your end.

After that, send us One Dollar a month for one year.

No simpler plan was ever devised. You cannot go astray. The terms of easy payment which we have adopted, will place within the reach of every man and woman, young and old, who is fortunate enough to act quickly, the most serviceable Encyclopedia for everyday use which the world has ever produced.

Remember, it is ONE DOLLAR DOWN to get the books, and then One Dollar a Month for One Year. These Payments are so easy that you will never miss them, and while you are paying for the books, you are enjoying all the advantages which the possession of this great work confers.

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA has the imprint and Endorsement of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, as a guarantee of its superior excellence and complete reliability.

Address CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK DEPARTMENT, Bible House, New York

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

The best is not always low in price, but the housekeeper can have the best soap without extravagance.

Ivory Soap costs little, but experienced persons know that no other can do the same work and do it as well.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI.

Outdoor Light

Nothing adds so much to the attractiveness of a village or home, and safety from night prowlers, as well lighted streets and grounds. This is secured by the STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN CO.'S Tubular Globe Street Lamp, which is cheap, ornamental, burns 4 hours for a cent, and almost takes care of itself; will not blow out.

We make Tubular Porch, Carriage and Stable Lamps besides, and all of them are as good as the Street Lamp. Your dealer has, or can get them. Send to us for detailed description. Mention this paper.

STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN COMPANY,
Syracuse, N. Y.

FREE.

We direct special attention to the following remarkable statement.

"After being deaf thirty years have used 'Aerial Medication' with very beneficial results, the improvement was felt from the start, and I now hear ordinary conversation first-class. My left ear had been useless many years, but gradually coming right. I am well known in Sheffield, and the restoration of my hearing has caused quite a talk, and I feel in duty bound to very gratefully do all I can for this wonderful treatment.—J. M. ALLABAND, Clark Grove Road, Sheffield, Eng.

We have reliable assurance that the above statement is genuine and that Dr. Moore is a reputable physician.—Cincinnati Christian Standard.

MEDICINES

For Three Months' Treatment FREE.

This very liberal offer having proved remarkably successful last year, I have decided to renew it, and will for a short time send medicines for three months' treatment free. For question form and particulars, address, J. H. Moore, M.D., Dept K-3 Cincinnati, Ohio.

600 Second BICYCLES

to close out. All makes, 1000 lbs. weight. NEW, HIGH GRADE 96 lbs. in a fully guaranteed, $16 to $24. '97 Models $20 to $25. Shipped anywhere on approval Special Clearing Sale. EARN A BICYCLE by helping advertise us. We will give one agent in each town FREE. 125 of sample wheel is left for you. Write at once for our Special Offer. D. E. HADLEY CO., WARREN AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

Send 20 cents for sample of "Perfection Cider Tins," Catalog of new household goods, and sample free of our new specialty. Write at once. H. H. HARDEN MFG. CO., 6th St., Bath, N. Y.

Don't You Suppose that when we say we will refund your money after six months' trial if you do not find our brush to be all we represent, that our experience of 19 years, and the sale of hundreds of thousands of brushes, should make us confident that our brush will positively do all we claim?

Dr. Scott's Electric Hair Brush

IS WARRANTED TO CURE

Nervous Headache in 5 minutes! Bilious Headache in 5 minutes! Neuralgia in 5 minutes! Dandruff and diseases of the scalp! Prevents falling hair and baldness! Makes the hair grow long and glossy!

Prices No. 1 Hair Brush, $1. No. 2 Hair Brush, $1.50
No. 3 Hair Brush, $2. No. 4 Hair Brush, $2.50
No. 5 Hair Brush, $3.

Quality the same in all; the price differs only according to size and power.

For Sale at Druggists and Dry Goods Stores.

Ask for Dr. Scott's; take no other; or we will send on approval, postpaid, on receipt of price and ten cents for postage, and if you are not well satisfied with your bargain, write us and we will return the money.

"The Doctor's Story," a valuable book giving information concerning all our goods, sent on request.

Agents Wanted. Quick sales. Liberal pay. Satisfaction guaranteed.

GEO. A. SCOTT,

Room 7, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

A RARE CHANCE.

The opportunity is offered for making money rapidly and with little effort.

BROWN'S PATENT

PICTURE HOOK

can be fixed to the wall without searching for beams, can be transferred from place to place without defacing the plaster; exceedingly ornamental; superior to any picture nail. Guaranteed to bear 100 pounds weight. Send 10 cents for sample; 50 cents per dozen.

H. G. TAYLOR,

171 St. Nicholas Ave., New York

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power. Hay or Straw 46 Inch Feed Opening Bell 6" Power Leverage 64 to 1 STEEL Largest line in the world. Send for Catalog. COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

Bale Your Hay

A reliable

HAND HAY PRESS.

Cheap, Simple and very Strong. THREE SIZES.

Manufactured only by

HOBSON & CO., No. 4 Stone St., New York.

"Sanitas"

Book Free.

The American & Continental "Sanitas" Co. Ltd.
636 to 642 West 55th St., New York City.

BOYS AND GIRLS

Watches, Clocks, Tea Sets and Toilet Sets, with $5, $7 and $10 orders. Now is your chance to get orders for our TEAS, COFFEES, ETC. Send for new Premium and Price List. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y. C. O. Box 259.

An Exceptional Opportunity

To Secure a Beautiful and Useful Book at a Bargain.

THE CHURCH AT HOME

By...

Bishop John H. Vincent,
D. D., LL.D.,

Is the title of a magnificent manual for family worship and home reading, and a book that should be in every Christian home in the land. Those who are fortunate enough to secure a copy of this book will find a delightful companion. It contains 480 pages,

210 ILLUSTRATIONS,

TWO BEAUTIFUL COLORED PICTURES, THE LORD'S PRAYER and THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

LESSON, HYMN and PRAYER FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, constituting a complete family worship for the whole year.

READINGS AND MEDITATIONS FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS: NEW YEAR'S DAY, GOOD FRIDAY, EASTER, WHIT SUNDAY, INDEPENDENCE DAY, THANKSGIVING DAY, CHRISTMAS DAY, AND DAYS OF AFFLICTION.

Memory Texts for Every Day in the Year,
The Church Steps,
Home Lessons,
Special Collects,
Bible Biography.

Picture Lessons for Children,
Old and New Tunes,
Wisdom in Proverbs,
Blank Pages for Records
and Autograph

ALTOGETHER IT IS THE MOST COMPLETE HELP FOR THE HOME WORSHIPER

By the purchase of the entire stock from the original publishers, we are enabled to offer the subscribers of "The Christian Herald" ONLY a remarkable bargain, provided the stock is not exhausted when your order is received, as follows:

Cloth, Illuminated Cover, former price $3.00. Special Price, 1.50

ONLY CLOTH BINDING LEFT ALL OTHER STYLES SOLD OUT.

Remember this special price pays all express charges and delivers this magnificent book weighing 4 lbs. in size when closed 8 1-2 x 10 1-2 inches, absolutely free of expense.

If the stock is exhausted when your order is received, we will return the money at once, and as we have only sufficient copies to supply a small percentage of the subscribers of "The Christian Herald," you will be fortunate enough to avail yourself of this exceptional offer.

Send money by money order or registered letter. Write name and address plainly, giving your nearest express office.

P. B. BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICE: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK. COPYRIGHT 1897. BY LOUIS KLOPSCHE. VOLUME 20.—NUMBER 34.

By De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor. NEW YORK, AUGUST 25, 1897. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

AN NEW STRUGGLE IN JAPAN.

The Powerful Samurai Cause a Re-action Against Occidentalism—Aliens and Missionaries Arrogantly Treated.

BUDHIST PRIESTS BEGGING IN THE STREETS OF KIOTO.

country has been more prominently in the eye of the civilized world of late years than Japan, which, within a brief quarter of a century, has emerged from heathenism and semi-barbarism, to a new material progress and of moral and intellectual ment as Among is an na- as special- the highest p have n entertain- in the fu- the bold n, empire lar East, was not reable to cite a con- ae of the uphs of st civiliz- onnd the p in the a's realm. An fore- n change- er, has sped these nghtanticipa- n—for a e, at least, the politi- aendancy th Samurai e d-time de aristoc- of the t, west- has have ad a se- s eck, and otalism w been ut face to e th the d all of an- onserva- m, n the ublished below, by Mr. Van Bergen, long a resi- d an official in Japan, the character and extent of v revolution are clearly explained, and its over- ing importance to American commerce and re an missions is set forth in terms that all may eand. His letter is as follows:

lic mind. Hon. George Curzon, in his "Problems of the Far East," deems the matter important enough to devote many pages to its consideration. There is no question, then, that is worth discussing, and the good Christian people who have spent and are spending thousands of dollars that the Gospel may be propagated, will be interested in learning what has really been accomplished.

Let me preface by stating that I have spent many years in the Orient, and especially in Japan. Arriving there in 1869, just after the boy Tenno had ascended the throne, I have witnessed the evolution of that country from what it was into the Japan of to-day. I have seen Japan attempting to cast off the shackles of an effeminate civilization: how she experimented with Occidentalism, and finally settled down with great self-complacency into what she is now. Much has been said and written about her progress, and great has been the praise bestowed upon her; but the actual working of the Japanese mind has never been analyzed, and it is with this analysis that the writer on missionaries and their work must deal.

In introducing a new religion into a country enjoying a high degree of civilization, the initial work must necessarily be the destruction of the existing creed. Books on Japan tell us that two distinct religions flourished: Buddhism and Shintoism. The truth is that the common people had no belief at all. They would visit a temple when disease threatened the life of a member of the family, or they would pay their respects to a shrine when the mood struck them and they happened created especially for them by the Kami, their ancestors, they look down upon everyone who does not trace his pedigree to that origin. Their Tenno, or heaven-child, is the lineal descendant of Aonaterasu, the sun-goddess. Woe to the Japanese who should dare disbelieve that creed. "Even as late as the year 1892," says a well-known panegyrist of things Japanese, "a learned professor in the Imperial University was punished for studying Japanese history with critical care, as Europeans study it, and saying that the Mikado's ancestors were Coreans."

ENTRANCE TO A JAPANESE MEMORIAL TEMPLE.

The first missionaries,—of whom two are now living, Rev. Dr. Hepburn now of Philadelphia, Pa., and Rev. F. G. Verbeck, still residing in Tokyo—ignorant alike of language and people when they reached Japan's shores, naturally first sought to acquire a knowledge of the language, and both of these gentlemen succeeded admirably. But in the first decade of their sojourn in Japan, the forces causing the fall of the Shogun and the accession of the Tenno kept the country in an unsettled condition, and the work could only be preliminary. In the early seventies, when there was a to pass one. The struggle for life and its necessities was so severe as to require all their time, and actual religious feeling, such as influences our lives, there was none.

YOUNG JAPAN CELEBRATING THE HARVEST "MATSURI"—A HEATHEN FESTIVAL.

The official and ruling class had and has a creed that, from the influence it exerts, may be fairly called religion. It is that of ancestral worship, and its effect may be felt in the political institutions of Japan. Originating from the firm belief that theirs is the country of the gods, frantic desire to assimilate occidental habits and customs, it seemed as if the conversion of Japan was among the near possibilities. But the discontent prevailing among the Samurai or official class at losing prestige and being threatened with extinction, culminated in the dangerous Satsuma insurrection of 1877. The government remained victorious, but when the leading progressionist, Okubo, was assassinated on May 14, 1878,

(Continued on page 639.)

Ever since the opening of China and Japan, the mission question has been one of the foremost in the pub-

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Subscriber, Paris, Ont., Can. What was the difference between the offerings of Cain and Abel? I mean the actual offerings, not the spirit in which they were offered.

Cain's offering was the fruits of the field; that of Abel, the "fatlings," or young lambs of his flock. Abel, as is supposed, brought two offerings: an oblation and a sacrifice, while Cain merely brought the former—an acknowledgment of God's sovereignty—and neglected the sacrifice which would have been a confession of fallen nature and an atonement for sin. His offering was unlawful as a sacrifice, being bloodless (Heb. 9: 22). Joseph asserts that "Abel brought milk as well as the first-fruits of his flock."

A Grandmother, Houston, Tex. Please give some practical hints on how to learn to pray. I think prayer the most spiritual as well as most beautiful part of worship. I have been a member of the church over fifty years, but have never prayed in public, and never been requested to. Have been regular in attendance until of late I do not attend prayer-meetings fearing the awkward fix—if I should be called on. Have had family prayers over thirty years, mostly reading prayers or repeating short sentences and words. I should feel ashamed were it not that He that seeth the heart and understandeth our thoughts afar off, accepts and answers even such. My daily, private prayers are mostly longings and desires which I cannot find words to express.

Eloquence is not expected of all, and the gift of facile utterance is by no means a common one. The simpler the petition the better; if it be but the expression of a single thought or aspiration, it will reach the Throne as readily as the most elaborate appeal. Earnestness is far more desirable in prayer than mere eloquence, and we have listened with melting hearts, to a few broken sentences, coming from the soul's depths, where nothing else would have moved us. It is, doubtless, more difficult for most people to pray in a public gathering than in the home circle, but the difficulties will disappear after awhile and you will receive strength and eloquence as you proceed.

S. S. W., Eunice, Ia. How often was Paul imprisoned and how long?

We have no new information on the subject. All that is known is contained in the Acts of the Apostles, but it is probable that he suffered imprisonments which are not recorded there. There was the imprisonment at Philippi which lasted a few hours (Acts 16), and the imprisonment beginning at Jerusalem (Acts 21: 29), which continued until his arrival in Rome. It is estimated that the interval between his arrest and his reaching Rome was two years. There is a period of two years mentioned, Acts 28: 30, which we may suppose was practically the condition of a man out on bail.

J. H. Osborne, Wellington, Ont., Can., writes:

You published some statistics, a short time ago, and a reader in England added some last week. I from the hand of "Our Lady of the Snow" would like to add five more verses that contain all the letters of the alphabet, except one each, viz.: In the New Testament—Gal. 1: 14, lacks K; 1. Kings 1: 39, lacks Q; 2. Kings 16: 15, all but X; 1. Chron. 12: 40, lacks Q; Dan. 4: 37, lacks Q; and perhaps there are other verses. Now I would like to ask a question: In my Bible published by the University Press, Cambridge, England (for the B. & F. Bible Society) Zechariah 11: 17 are these words, "Woe to the idle shepherd." Is the word "idle" a misprint? Should it not be "idle?"

The Revised Version gives the translation as "worthless shepherd," which is evidently the correct reading.

F. M. Thomas, Leonardville, Kans., writes:

Has W. A. S. a reader in England, whose letter recently appeared in THE MAIL-BAG, noticed more recently (I would have appeared that "I" and "E" are like "L" in 1. Peter 2: 21. Years ago I saw a statement in THE MAIL-BAG that that verse contained all the letters of the English language.

Evangelist R. Ashley Cole, of Port Republic, N. J., who conducts Gospel services among the life-savers of the Atlantic coast, writes to thank friends who, having read of his work in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, have kindly sent contributions. He will personally acknowledge any and sent to him at Port Republic. He shortly begins service at Sandy Hook.

S. E. Flack, Hopkinton, Ia., writes:

I hoped some one with "The pen of a ready writer" would send a protest against the words of one who writes on "Petty or Don'tful Savings." They speak of the patching of a gingham apron, of picking up pins, etc. Jesus said "gather up the fragments that nothing be wasted." There are thousands to whom the patching of an apron means the price of a new one given to missions, or to God's poor. There are other thousands who waste so much, if their waste could be gathered up and given to home missions, the poor, overworked missionaries would not heed the disheartening word "retrench," but could go on, bravely doing the grand work God has called them to. The price of an apron may be but little; but that little gathered up all over our land would mean thousands for God. There are many of us who cannot earn the wages of a Chinaman who can gather up the fragments for Jesus. God help us gather them.

Esther M. F., Merchantville, N. J. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is always perused with pleasure by us, and one of the pleasant things in life would be gone if it did not visit me once a week. I was especially interested in the sermon for business people, for I am like "Lydia, a seller of purple and fine linen," and as I read it, I wondered how you knew so much about us, our trials, etc. I have been with one of our best firms for nearly nineteen years, and am glad to testify to the kindness and consideration with which we are treated, and that we are not considered machines merely but human beings.

Our correspondent, like thousands of others engaged in stores and counting-rooms, is doubtless so pleasantly situated and treated with so much consideration, that she consid-have apparently had two passages in mind and have combined them. See Josh. 24: 15; and Kings 18: 21. We should reply in the negative to your additional question. There are so many good books, that it does not pay to waste time upon books that are doubtful.

Inquirer, Paterson, N. J. What was the name of the soldier who smote our Lord with his spear?

It has been preserved to us by tradition as Longinus, a Roman. The tradition still further adds that the spear was brought by Joseph of Arimathea to King Pellam who was of Joseph's time, and Balim, a savage seized the spear and wounded Pellam nigh unto death.

J. L., Pittsburg, Pa. 1. Do the people of Alaska preserve any legends or traditions? 2. Have they any record of Bering's visit there?

1. Unquestionably they do, as do all the Indian tribes, although they are preserved in oral form only. Prof. Bushrod W. James some years ago collected the Alaskan legends and folklore and published them in a volume through Porter & Coates, Philadelphia. 2. Yes.

Reader, Brooklyn. What is the value of an Indian rupee, and from what is the word derived?

A rupee is worth about 30 cents, but its value varies. The word is a corruption of the Sanskrit word rupya (root word rupa, a shape), meaning "the shape of a man," that is, the figure of a man impressed on the coin.

H. S. W., Purcell, Ind. Ter. I am worried about giving my tenth to the Lord. We are in debt and are working hard to pay our debts. Is it right to give one-tenth to the Lord while we are in debt?

We apprehend that your income is greater than your expenditure, otherwise you would never pay your debts. It is possible for you honestly to pay a tenth of this surplus if you wish to do so. Probably your property would more than balance your debts, in other words, though you owe money, you are solvent, so that when you give money to the Lord you are giving your own money, not your cred-

Idumea and of the Horites. Esau is called "the father of the Edomites" (Gen. 36: 43). With his immense family he ruled Mount Seir from which they gradually possessed the existing population, and for many generations. In the course of the Maccabean wars, the children of Israel their independent existence and merged in the house of Israel.

Reader, Willow Lake, S. D. 1. If a wife causes a separation between husband and wife, ought the husband to forgive him? 2. If the wife has been unbalanced by the awful strain, will God hold her responsible for the will the wicked man be held accountable?

1. Few men have sufficient magnanimity to forgive so cruel a wrong. But the God may give him the power even. He should pray for that grace, that he may be ready to forgive, if his forgiveness is more than this is not required of him; wife will be held accountable for her sin. Her suffering will not atone for it. The man is clearly the greater sinner; punishment will be the heavier, but he holds the woman guilty of yielding and of his solemn pledge of fidelity to her, and the plea that she was tempted and not avail except in mitigation.

T. P. C., Troy. Does the coming of Christ as described in the Sunday School lesson 8th, include the final resurrection and judgment?

There are two views of the subject these views is that Christ's coming the millennium, and the other, that he will come at the close of it. The latter view involves the resurrection and the last taking place at the time of his coming, former view, which is the one advocated by the writers on prophecy, whose articles published in this journal, believe in the coming of Christ the righteous dead raised, and that the remainder of the not be raised until the end of the millennium when the last judgment will take place. (See Rev. 20: 4-6.)

N. Reed, Hamilton, Can. I have been taught that there were two dispensations in the Bible, but it seems difficult to reconcile the two made as to the character of the law: 14: 8, 9; Nahum 1: 2; Hebrew one place he is represented as angry; in another that he revenges.

The statements you quote of Paul's wrath are not contradictory. The wrath of God is all the more because of his love and his mercy. You know that a man who is angry if once really roused, is difficult to appease than a rash man. Even a gentle, tender man would fight like a tigress if he were attacked. Paul places his tributes boldly in juxtaposition shows how they are consistent (1: 22), "Behold therefore the love and severity of God."

Lily S., Chillicothe, O. Was there such a personage as Ossian the warrior, about whose deeds are so many poems were forged?

Yes, he was the son of Fingon, lived in the third century. A great deal of him is merely traditional, that were written concerning him were pure fiction.

Subscriber, Panhandle, Tex. We have

Revised Version.—Miss Margaret F. Stewartson, Pa. We are already

M. L. Briggs, Dryden, N. Y. We still in great need and will be for months.

Herbert B. C., Napanee, Ont. Vermittances will be made.—Subscriber, son's address is "Sault Ste Marie, Michi-Orangetown, Me. All the letters are as written, the "c" being soft like "s."

Moore, Palmerston, Ont. We believe in ately stated that there are gold fields on of the boundary line. There is no dis"claim every thing."—Inquirers. The of the National Congress of Mothers is and can be procured of Mrs. Clara B.

Washington Loan and Trust Building ton, D. C. The price is twenty-five paper covers and fifty cents cloth.

Chelsea, Ind. Ter. You are mistaken, the certain denomination which goes by it and was that particular denomination ferred.—Thomas Davis, Terry, S. C.

Alonda, O. We believe not.—W. C.

Haute, Ind. See answer to Subscr-

Haute, in THE MAIL-BAG of July

N., Labrador, Can. Nowhere mention

Bible.—L. T. S., Danbury, Conn. I

THE NEW CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

Our new Congressional Library, lately completed, is a beautiful building in the Italian Renaissance style of architecture. It is said to be the most imposing building of like character in the world. It stands in the centre of a plot of ten acres, on East Capitol street, between First and Second, Washington, D. C., and the building itself covers three and three quarter acres, and measures 470 x 350 feet. The first appropriation for the work was made in 1888, but the building was only completed this year, Congress having fixed the limit of cost at $5,300,000, including all the interior decorations. It can accommodate about eight million volumes, and this capacity can be increased by the erection of additional repositories. The whole building is claimed by the architects to be absolutely fireproof.

It is a duty and a pleasure to speak out. It is right that she should.

Miss L. K. Lewis, Ozeana, Va. Some time ago I wrote a letter to your paper about starting a fund for the "prevention of cruelty to animals." This you kindly published, and some of your subscribers wrote and agreed with me fully and offered assistance. Many thanks to them. I now send $2, and let all others send something, if only ten cents; and let our editor, who does so much good, turn this money over to one of said societies. How many more will help? How glad I am to see that some are willing to speak out in behalf of the poor dumb creatures! How they are often abused and ill-treated by mean men! I firmly believe God will punish all cruel treatment to animals, but this does not help the poor dumb creature. So let us try to protect them in every way we can.

Conscientious Inquirer, King Ferry, N. Y. Suppose a man who has never used tobacco (considering it a dirty, expensive habit), should open a grocery store, would it be right for him to sell the weed? Must he, for conscience sake, lose the profits which the sales would bring him, together with the custom which always comes where tobacco is sold?

If he be truly conscientious, he will not sell it, believing it to be a vice, and desiring to do nothing whereby a brother may offend (See 1. John 2: 10; Rom. 14: 21). The question of loss or gain should have no influence in the matter.

Reader. Is the following verse found in the Bible, and if so, where can I find it? "Choose ye, therefore, this day whom ye will serve: If it be Christ, follow him; and if Baal, then follow him?"

There is no such passage in the Bible. You itors' money. There is no law in this dispensation requiring you to give a tenth, but if your heart is right, you will want to give some portion of your earnings to the Lord and you might deny yourself some luxury in order to give. That self-denial would make the gift all the more pleasing in God's sight.

Reader, Evansville, Wis. I have read your explanation of 1. Cor. 3: 15 about the man whose work being burned will suffer loss yet whose soul will be saved; but still I cannot understand. Can you give me an example?

Can you conceive of a Christian man doing good works from an impure motive? Suppose a clergyman has lost the high ideal he had when he entered the ministry, and now his aim in preaching is to increase his popularity, or to get more money. Suppose a man gives a public library to the city, or pensions a widow, and his real motive, if he would honestly analyze it, is to get a reputation for charity and beneficence, or to promote his election to Congress. The clergyman's preaching may be earnest and effective and the other man's gifts may be well applied, but God, who reads the heart, knows that he has had his reward in getting the applause, or the money, or the position which was sought. Having had it he deserves no other, and he gets none. He suffers the loss of the reward God would have given him for work done for his sake.

C. H., Portland, Oreg. Who are the descendants of Esau and, if known, where are they located?

They are by many believed to have been the successors of the original inhabitants of the Pacific coast.

McM., Allegheny, Pa. It would certainly be a failure in morals were the granted. Your church is quite entitled able action in the matter.

CONVERTED IN JAIL.

The Remarkable Story of Valentine Burke's Change of Heart while Behind Prison Bars—A Grand illustration of Divine Grace.

BY DWIGHT L. MOODY.

WHEN I was holding meetings in St. Louis, Mo., in 1880, the Globe-Democrat published verbatim reports of my sermons every day. One night I preached on the subject of "The Jail," and next morning the paper came out with a sensational headline: "The Jail at Philippi was a scene of horror." A copy of the paper was carried to the city jail, and tell into the hands of a notorious prisoner, named Valentine Burke. This man was one of the worst characters known to the St. Louis police. He was about forty years of age, had spent about twenty years in jail, and was then awaiting trial on a serious charge. Through the influence of Mr. T. S. McPheeters, of St. Louis, I was able to see here the photograph of Burke in the Rogues' Gallery where he was known as "No. 1010." His features were so well known in the city that an index card was made of his character. When I glanced at the morning paper, I read the headline at his eye. I thought that it was a piece of bad news, he read it. He was anxious to see the jailer was right. He thought that once passed through a town called Philippi in Illinois, he supposed that the place would be a place of horror.

VALENTINE BURKE.

Far-smile of a photograph taken for the Police Collection in the Rogues' Gallery.

a note: "Notice the difference in the enclosed pictures. See what our holy religion can do for the chief of sinners." On the back of the Rogues' Gallery photograph he wrote: "He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth the needy out of the dunghill, that he may set him with princes, even with the princes of his people." (Ps. 113: 7-8.)

This incident shows what the grace of God can do for a hardened sinner. Not only can it save him, but it can keep him. Valentine Burke lived an active, consistent Christian life in that public position until God called him home in 1895.

VALENTINE BURKE.

From a photograph taken in 1887, seven years after his conversion.

I believe that in all our jails and penitentiaries there are souls who may become just such rich jewels that will one day sparkle in our Saviour's crown if we will only arouse ourselves to put the way of life before them. The conversion of such men as Valentine Burke and Jerry McAuley ought to stir us all to do something definite for prisoners.

TEMPLE OF IDOLS IN SANJUSANGENDO, KIOTO, JAPAN.

us all to do something definite for prisoners.

Facts like these led me to start the Prison Fund in connection with the Bible Institute Colportage Association, and by means of this Prison Fund nearly two hundred thousand religious books have already been distributed amongst prisoners in a large number of jails and penitentiaries in different parts of the United States within a period of two years.

East Northfield, Mass.

D. L. Moody.

A New Struggle in Japan.

(Continued from First Page.)

the government surrendered to the Samurai and re-instated them in their official capacity. "Even now," writes the above quoted author in 1892. (ibid p. 79). "under a written constitution and a representative government, it is the four hundred thousand adult male Samurai who rule the forty millions of people, make the politics, and shape the destinies of Tei Koku Nippon."

Since these Samurai or Shizoku as they are now called, have resumed the direction of affairs, there has been a constant and steady reaction. Furniture, occidental dress and food, have been set aside, and in their daily life the Japanese have returned to the customs of their ancestors. "By degrees," says the official historiographer, referring to the reforms inaugurated in the early seventies, "however, men's eyes began to be opened to the fact that while they were uprooting and abandoning much which had the sanction of tradition and the approval of long practice, they were planting in its stead institutions and customs not necessarily suitable to the Japanese and probably injurious to any people. Out of this sense of rash denationalization and unpatriotic radicalism a strong reaction ultimately grew, and men's minds turned once more to the customs and canons handed down from their ancestors. The reaction is now paramount."

It was necessary to enter into this long preamble that my readers might be acquainted with the difficulties with which our missionaries are beset, and because it will explain the somewhat hostile feelings entertained against some of them by prominent converts. Struggling with the indifference of the heimin or common people, tence depends upon the belief in the divine origin of the Emperor. Modesty and humbly preaching and practicing the doctrine of the Saviour, they have secured the good will of even the foreign population, many of whose members are not above reproach in their observance of the laws of morality. And there is this sword of Damocles hanging over the heads of the missionaries as well as over other alien residents of Japan.

By the new treaty with that country, going into effect on July 16, 1899, we shall be placed under their jurisdiction, and with codes uncompleted, a totally inexperienced and prejudiced judiciary, the members of which belong to the Samurai class, the lot of those whom a sense of duty or enthusiasm compels to remain, is not enviable. In maintaining their rights as American citizens, they will speedily incur the dislike of the officials. It is to be hoped that the new administration will be prepared to protect these citizens in the dangers threatening them in the Far East.

But with all these authenticated facts, it is none the less true that complaints arrive, and generally from dissatisfied converts. Most if not all of these are groundless, originating in the fancied superiority of the Japanese mind. Rev. Dr. Baker, a prominent minister of the M. E. Church of Washington, D. C., visited Japan immediately after the war with China. I met him in Kobe, and he was emphatic in condemning the arrogance and conceit, pre-eminent qualities of the Japanese mind. "We don't want you any more; provide us with money, and we will do the preaching!" is the almost universal cry of the native Christian ministers. So anxious are they to have their fancied superiority publicly acknowledged, that they chafe under the restraint of men, their superiors in every way. A native Christian paper even hinted broadly at the foundation of a new Christianity, based upon fitness with the conditions prevailing in Japan.

But of the common people who have become converted, many offer bright examples of what sincere adoption of our religion may effect. The improvement in their lives has been so marked that the government has ceased placing obstacles in the way of the missionaries, and is tacitly approving their work.

The amount of benefit, derived by Japan from American Missionary Societies, is indeed incalculable and entitles them to more courtesy than it is willing to accord. The M. E. School at Aoyama, Tokyo, is a model institution, and, since the directors have added a manual training school, it is rendering very valuable service. The location is beautiful. Situated on Green Mountain as the name expresses, nature has liberally assisted in beautifying the grounds. The College at Shibo, owned by the Presbyterian and Dutch Reformed Churches, is also constructed upon very solid foundations and acknowledged as a prominent institution of learning. The Congregational and Episcopal Churches also own colleges and do efficient work.

The condition of the people and the institutions of the country are an insurmountable obstacle to the missionaries entering upon a more aggressive system of evangelizing. As an impartial outsider, and as one who knows the Japanese well, I declare that the results so far attained deserve the highest credit. For, while there has been no active persecution or open discrimination against the natives who avow themselves Christians, it will be readily understood that every government official looks with watchful eyes upon the controversy of a creed upon whose maintenance their very existence depends. It is necessary, therefore, not to incur the active hostility of an all-powerful class, the more jealous of its privileges and reactionary in principle since occidental innovations once threatened to destroy it. The attitude of the missionaries upon the questions of the day, is highly commendable. They utterly refuse to discuss them, confining themselves to the remark that "their business is to save souls." It is this attitude that has obtained for them undisturbed sufferance and even a reluctant encomium.

The writer who, in common with other laymen shared the prejudices against missionaries in the Far East, has become an enthusiastic supporter. And there are many foreign residents who feel as I do, and give utterance to their sentiments.

R. VAN BERGEN.

History of the Empire of Japan. By order of the Department of Education, Tokyo, 1893. p. 409.

The photograph reproduced here is ten in 1887. In sending the two signs to Mr. McPheeters, Burke wrote NARROW ESCAPES.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., } I am escaped with the skin of on the Text: Job 19: 20, - - - } my teeth.

OB had it hard. What with boils, and bereavements, and bankruptcy, and a fool of a wife, he wished he was dead; and I do not blame him. His flesh was gone, and his bones were dry. His teeth wasted away until nothing but the enamel seemed left. He cries out, "I am escaped with the skin of my teeth."

There has been some difference of opinion about this passage. St. Jerome and Schultens, and Doctors Good, and Poole, and Barnes, have all tried their forceps on Job's teeth. You deny my interpretation, and say, "What did Job know about the enamel of the teeth?" He knew everything about it. Dental surgery is almost as old as the earth. The mummies of Egypt, thousands of years old, are found to-day with gold-filling in their teeth. Ovid, and Horace, and Solomon, and Moses wrote about these important factors of the body. To other provoking complaints, Job, I think, has added an exasperating toothache, and putting his hand against the inflamed face, he says, "I am escaped with the skin of my teeth."

A very narrow escape, you say, for Job's body and soul; but there are thousands of men who make just as narrow escape for their soul. There was a time when the partition between them and ruin was no thicker than a tooth's enamel; but, as Job finally escaped, so have they. Thank God! thank God!

Paul expresses the same idea by a different figure when he says that some people are "saved as by fire." A vessel at sea is in flames. You go to the stern of the vessel. The boats have shoved off. The flames advance; you can endure the heat no longer on your face. You slide down on the side of the vessel, and hold on with your fingers, until the forked tongue of the fire begins to lick the back of your hand, and you feel that you must fall, when one of the life-boats comes back, and the passengers say they think they have room for one more. The boat swings under you—you drop into it—you are saved. So some men are pursued by temptation until they are partially consumed, but after all get off—"saved as by fire."

But I like the figure of Job a little better than that of Paul, because the pulpit has not worn it out; and I want to show you if God will help, that some men make narrow escape for their souls, and are saved as "with the skin of their teeth."

It is as easy for some people to look to the Cross as for you to look to this pulpit. Mild, gentle, tractable, loving, you expect them to become Christians. You go over to the store and say, "Grandson joined the church yesterday." Your business comrades say, "That is just what might have been expected; he always was of that turn of mind." In youth, this person whom I describe was always good. He never broke things. He never laughed when it was improper to laugh. At seven, he could sit an hour in church, perfectly quiet, looking neither to the right hand nor the left, but straight into the eyes of the minister, as though he understood the whole discussion about the eternal decrees. He never upset things nor lost them. He floated into the kingdom of God so gradually that it is uncertain just when the matter was decided.

Here is another one who started in life with an uncontrollable spirit. He kept the nursery in an uproar. His mother found him walking on the edge of the house-roof to see if he could balance himself. There was no horse that he dared not ride—no tree he could not climb. His boyhood was a long series of predicaments; his manhood was reckless; his mid-life very wayward. But now he is converted, and you go over to the store and say, "Arkwright joined the Church yesterday." Your friends say, "It is not possible! You must be joking." You say, "No; I tell you the truth. He joined the Church." Then they reply, "There is hope for any of us if old Arkwright has become a Christian!" In other words, we will admit that it is more difficult for some men to accept the Gospel than for others.

I may be preaching to some who have cut loose from churches, and Bibles, and Sundays, and who have no intention of becoming Christians themselves, and yet you may find yourself escaping, before you leave this house, as "with the skin of your teeth." I do not expect to waste this hour. I have seen boats go off from Cape May or Long Branch, and drop their nets, and after awhile come ashore, pulling in the nets without having caught a single fish. It was not a good day, or they had not the right kind of a net. But we expect no such excursion to-day. The water is full of fish, the wind is in the right direction, the Gospel net is strong. O thou who didst help Simon and Andrew to fish, show us how to cast the net on the right side of the ship.

Some of you, in coming to God, will have to run against sceptical notions. It is useless for people to say sharp and cutting things to those who reject the Christian religion. I cannot say such things. By what process of temptation, or trial, or betrayal, you have come to your present state, I know not. There are two gates to your nature: the gate of the head, and the gate of the heart. The gate of your head is locked with bolts and bars that an archangel could not break, but the gate of your heart swings easily on its hinges. If I assaulted your body with weapons you would meet me with weapons, and it would be sword-stroke for sword-stroke, and wound for wound, and blood for blood; but if I come and knock at the door of your house, you open it, and give me the best seat in your parlor. If I should come at you now with an argument, you would answer me with an argument; if with sarcasm, you would answer me with sarcasm; blow for blow, stroke for stroke; but when I come and knock at the door of your heart, you open it and say, "Come in, my brother, and tell me all you know about Christ and heaven."

Listen to two or three questions: Are you as happy as you used to be when you believed in the truth of the Christian religion? Would you like to have your children travel on in the road in which you are now traveling? You had a relative who professed to be a Christian, and was thoroughly consistent, living and dying in the faith of the Gospel. Would you not like to live the same quiet life and die the same peaceful death? I hold in my hand a letter, sent me by one who has rejected the Christian religion. It says: "I am old enough to know that the joys and pleasures of life are evanescent, and to realize the fact that it must be comfortable in old age to believe in something relative to the future, and to have a faith in some system that proposes to save. I am free to confess that I would be happier if I could exercise the simple and beautiful faith that is possessed by many whom I know. I am not willingly out of the Church or out of the faith. My state of uncertainty is one of unrest. Sometimes I doubt my immortality, and look upon the death-bed as the closing scene, after which there is nothing. What shall I do that I have not done?" Ah! scepticism is a dark and doleful land. Let me say that this Bible is either true or false. If it be false we are as well off as you; if it be true, then which of us is safer?

Let me also ask whether your trouble has not been that you confounded Christianity with the inconsistent character of some who profess it? You are a lawyer. In your profession there are mean and dishonest men. Is that anything against the law? You are a doctor. There are unskilled and contemptible men in your profession. Is that anything against medicine? You are a merchant. There are thieves and defrauders in your business. Is that anything against merchandise? Behold, then the unfairness of charging upon Christianity the wickedness of its disciples. We admit some of the charges against those who profess religion. Some of the most gigantic swindles of the present day have been carried on by members of the Church. There are men standing in the front rank in the churches who would not be trusted for five dollars without good collateral security. They leave their business dishonesties in the vestibule of the church as they go in and sit at the communion. Having concluded the sacrament, they get up, wipe the wine from their lips, go out, and take up their sins where they left off. To serve the devil is their regular work; to serve God a sort of play-spell. With a Sunday sponge they expect to wipe off from their business slate all the past week's inconsistencies. You have no more right to take such a man's life as a specimen of religion than you have to take the twisted irons and split timbers that lie on the beach at Coney Island as a specimen of an American ship. It is time that we draw a line between religion and the frailties of those who profess it.

Do you not feel that the Bible, take it all in all, is about the best book that the world has ever seen? Do you know any book that has as much in it? Do you not think, upon the whole, that its influence has been beneficent? I come to you with both hands extended towards you. In one hand I have the Bible, and in the other hand I have nothing. This Bible in one hand I will surrender forever just as soon as in my other hand you can put a book that is better.

I invite you back into the good old-fashioned religion of your fathers—to the God whom they worshiped, to the Bible they read, to the promises on which they leaned, to the cross on which they hung their eternal expectations. You have not been happy a day since you swung off; you will not be happy until you swing back.

Again; there may be some who, in the attempt after a Christian life, will have to run against powerful passions and appetites. Perhaps it is a disposition to anger that you have to contend against; and perhaps, while in a very serious mood, you hear of something that makes you feel that you must swear or die. I know a Christian man who was once so exasperated that he said to a mean customer, "I cannot swear at you myself, for I am a member of the Church; but if you will go downstairs my partner in business will swear at you." All your good resolutions heretofore have been torn to tatters by explosion of temper. Now there is no harm in getting mad if you only get mad at sin. You need to bridle and saddle those hot-breathed passions, and with them ride down injustice and wrong. There are a thousand things in the world we ought to be mad at. There is no harm in getting red hot if you only bring to the forge that which needs hammering. A man who has no power of righteous indignation, is an imbecile. But be sure it is a righteous indignation, and not a petulancy that blurs, and depletes the soul.

There is a large class of persons in mid-life who have still in them appetites that were aroused in early manhood, at a time when they prided themselves on being a "little fast," "high livers," "free and easy," "hail fellows well met." They are now paying in compound interest for troubles they collected twenty years ago. Some of you are trying to escape, and you will—yet very narrowly, "as with the skin of your teeth." God and your own soul only know what the struggle is. Omnipotent grace has pulled out many a soul that was deeper in the mire than you are. They line the beach of heaven—the multitude whom God has rescued from the thrall of suicidal habits. If you this day turn back on the wrong and start anew, God will help you. Oh, the weakness of human help! Men will sympathize for awhile, and then turn you off. If you ask for their help they will give it and say they will again; but, falling away again under power of temptation, they cast you forever. But God forgives seven times; yea, seven hundred times; though this be the ten thousandth time he is more earnest, more sympathetic, more helpful this last time than you took your first mis-step.

If, with all the influences favoring a right life, men make so many how much harder is it when, for some appetite thrusts its iron gray roots of the tongue, and pull down with hands of destruction under such circumstances, he breathes there will be no sport in the unholy holiday enjoyment, but a struggle in which the wrestlers move from side, and bend, and twist, and with an opportunity to get in a heavier until with one final effort, in whose muscles are distended, and the veins out, and the blood starts, the swart falls under the knee of the victor—at last as "with the skin of his teeth."

The ship Emma, bound from Hamburg to Harwich, was sailing on the man on the look-out saw so that he pronounced a vessel below. There was something on it that looked like a sea-gull, but was afterwards to be a waving handkerchief. A small boat the crew pushed overboard, and found that it was a wreck, and that three men had lost their way out through the bow of the ship. When the vessel capsized had no means of escape. The man took his penknife and dug away at the planks until his knife broke. Then an old nail was found, with which he attempted to scrape their way up the darkness, each one working with his hand was well-nigh paralyzed, and back faint and sick. After long and hard work, the light broke through the top of the ship. A handkerchief was sent. Help came. They were taken on board the vessel and saved. Did ever so near a watery grave without escaping into it? How narrowly they escaped only "with the skin of the teeth." There are men who have been caught by evil passions, and capsize in moral and they are a thousand miles away from any shore of help. They have been trying to dig their way out, but have been digging away, and away, but they can never be delivered less now they will hoist some distress. However weak and wretched they may be, Christ will see it, and be down upon the helpless craft, and take it aboard; and it will be known on earth in heaven how narrowly they escaped, as with the skin of their teeth.

There are others who in attempting to come to God, must run between many business perplexities. If they have over to business at ten o'clock in the morning, and come away at three o'clock in the afternoon, he has some time for religion; but how shall you find time for religious contemplation when you are up from sunrise to sunset, and have been five years going behind in business, are frequently dunned by creditors you cannot pay, and when from morning until Saturday night, you dodging bills that you cannot meet, walk day by day in uncertainty, have kept your brain on fire for three years. Some with less troubles than you have gone crazy. A clerk has heard a noise in the back room, and gone in, and found a man of the firm a raving mania, and his wife has heard the bang of a pistol in the back parlor, and gone in, stumbling, the dead body of her husband. There are men pursued, harassed, downed, and scalped of business perplexities, and which way to turn they do not know. Now God will be hard on you. He knows what you are in the way of your being a Christian, and your first effort in the right way he will crown with success. Let Satan, with cotton bales, and iron hogsheads, and counters, and unsaleable goods, block up your way to heaven. Gather up all your troubles. Tighten the girdle about your loins. Take an agonizing look into the face of God, and then say, "Here goes one for life eternal," and then bound for heaven, escaping "as with the skin of your teeth."

In the last day it will be found that the high timer, and John Knox, and Huss, and they were not the greatest martyrs, not Christian men who went up incorrupt from contaminations and perplexities of Pennsylvania Avenue, Broad Street, State Street, and Third Street. On earth they were called brokers, or stock jobbers, or peddlers, or importers; but in heaven, they are heroes. No faggots were heaped about their feet; no inquisition demanded from them recantation; no soldier aimed to break their heart; but they had mental vigor, compared with which all physical coming is as the breath of a spring morning.

And in the community a large class of men to have been so cheated, so lied about so outrageously wronged, that they lost their faith in everything. In a word here everything seems so topsy-turvy they do not see how there can be a God. They are confounded, and angry, and misanthropic. Elaborate arguments to prove to them the truth of Christianity, or the truth of anything else, are of no use now. Hear me, all such men, preach to you no rounded periods, no sentimental discourse; but put my hand to your shoulder, and invite you into the Kingdom of the Gospel. God is good. For many hundreds of years he has been waiting for the world to come back to him; and more he has coaxed, the more men have been in their resistance, and the more they have stepped back, and stepped back until they have dropped into ruin.

It is God, ye who have had the blood of Christ after you, and who have thought God had forgotten you. Try him, and see if he will not help. Try him, and see if he will not pardon. Try him, and see if he will not save. The flowers of the world have no bloom so sweet as the fragrance of Christ's affections. The sun is warmer than the glow of the stars. The waters have no refreshment like the fountain that will slake the thirst of thy soul. At the moment the hand stands with his lip and nostril to the cool mountain torrent, the spray may be coming through the thicket. The crackling of a stick under his foot, the lions close by the stag, aims his gun, the lawless trigger, and the poor thing rears its ath-agony and falls backwards, its head crashing on the rocks; but the inner heart that drinks from the water-pool of God's promise shall never be fully wounded, and shall never die.

This world is a poor portion for your business man! An Eastern king, given on his tomb two fingers, represents as sounding on each other with a sword under them the motto, "All is vanity and a vexation of spirit." Apicius Cælius hanged himself because his steward informed him that he had only eighty thousand dollars left. All of this world's riches make but a small inheritance for a man. The obespierre attempted to win the empire of the world; but when he was a young woman came rushing through the doorway trying to him, "Murderer of my mother, descend to hell, covered with the blood of every mother in France!" Many have expected the plaudits of the world to die under its Anathema.

Obtain your peace in God. Make the strong pull for heaven. No half-way work will do it. There sometimes comes a time on shipboard when everything is sacrificed to save the passengers. The ego is nothing, the rigging nothing. The captain puts the trumpet to his lip and shouts, "Cut away the mast." Some of you have been tossed and driven, and you are, in your effort to keep the world, you have lost your soul. Until you have decided this matter, let everything else go. Deal with all those other anxieties and burdens. You will have to drop the pride, your pride, and cut away the mast. With one earnest cry for help, put your life into the hand of him who has pulled you out of the breakers of Melita, and you, above the shrill blast of the tempest that ever blackened the sky, look the ocean, can hear the faintest intimation for mercy.

I close this sermon feeling that some of you, who have considered your life hopeless, will take heart again, with a blood-red earnestness, such as have never experienced before, and start for the good land of the promised land at last to look back, saying, "What a great risk I ran! Almost lost, but I escaped by the skin of my teeth."

A NOTABLE ANNIVERSARY.

The Scotch Plains' Baptist Church Celebrates its 150th Year of Active Existence — A Remarkable Record of Service.

ONE of the oldest churches in the country is the Scotch Plains' Baptist Church in the suburb of Plainfield, N. J., whose 150th anniversary was fittingly celebrated on Thursday, Aug. 5th. The Scotch Plains' Church is the mother of the First Baptist Church of New York, as well as of the church of Lyons Farms, N. J., of which T. C. Vassar, D.D., is pastor; the Mt. Bethel Church, Rev. Peter Gibb, pastor; of the May's Lick Church, Kentucky; and the South Plainfield Church, Rev. J. A. Cubberly, pastor. There have been three edifices built by the congregation. One was destroyed by fire, and the second is now a landmark owned by Dr. J. Ackerman Coles, a deacon of the church. The present building was erected in 1872, having a seating capacity of 500. It is of Gothic architecture, with Ohio stone trimming and cost $35,000. Opposite the church is the old brownstone manse, 111 years old, intact as when it was first built.

There have been thirteen pastors during the long period of the church's history. Rev. Benjamin Miller was the first. His ashes now rest in the cemetery adjoining the church. The church has had a continuous history of prosperity, and of pastorates that have been strong in spiritual results. There are three living ex-pastors, Drs. J. F. Brown, J. C. Buchanan, and J. H. Parks. A few years ago, by the will of Matthias Frazee Lee, the church was left the large sum of $150,000. Litigation followed, and when the suit was finished, the church received $37,500. Four years ago, another bequest was made amounting to $12,000, which was paid over to the church. This latter gift was made by James M. Lyons, of Scotch Plains, N. J. Memorial tablets have been set in appropriate places in the front walls of the church building with the names of these generous givers.

The present pastor, Rev. James S. Braker, entered upon his pastorate three years ago. By hearty co-operation and helpful generosity, the beneficences of the church under his pastorate have materially increased. The benevolences of the anniversary year have been the largest in its history.

The present membership of the Scotch Plains Church is 168. One year ago a Christian Endeavor Society was formed with 101 members. There is also a Christian Endeavor Junior, of which Miss Carrie Bettman is president. The Sunday School is in a flourishing condition. Special attention is given to the missionary cause. The school aids in supporting a native missionary in India, as well as a missionary in Liberia. Mr. G. E. Hall is the Superintendent.

Among those who participated in the anniversary services were a number of pastors from different churches, including Rev. G. H. Winans, M. E. Church, Scotch Plains; Rev. J. W. Wilmarth, Philadelphia; Rev. W. T. Dorward, Stelton, N. J.; Rev. J. C. Buchanan, Pemberton, N. J.; Rev. G. W. Clark, Hightstown, N. J.; Rev. J. H. Parks, May's Lick, Ky.; Rev. T. E. Vassar, Lyons Farms, N. J.; Rev. Peter Gibb, Mt. Bethel, N. J.; Rev. J. A. Cubberly, South Plainfield, N. J.; Rev. W. W. Case, Rutherford, N. J.; Rev. G. W. Francis, Westfield, and others. Some of the addresses were reminiscent of the old church's history, and recalled with fervent pathos, the spiritual struggles and triumphs that had taken place under its roof. In the century and a-half of its existence, many hundreds of souls have been won to Christ, and have gloriously served the cause of the Gospel at home and in foreign lands. The labors of its long line of faithful pastors have been widely blessed, and have exerted an influence that will doubtless last throughout many generations.

PRAYER.

MY inmost soul, O Lord to thee,
Leans like a growing flower
Unto the light. I do not know
The day nor blessed hour
When that deep-rooted, daring growth
We call the heart's desire
Shall burst and blossom to a prayer
Within the sacred fire
Of thy great patience; grow so pure,
So still, so sweet a thing

THE SCOTCH PLAINS' BAPTIST CHURCH, PLAINFIELD, N. J.

As perfect prayer must surely be.
And yet my heart will sing.
It seems as if my heart would break,
If, living on the light
I should not lift to Thee at last
A bud of flawless white.
And yet, O helpless heart! how sweet
To grow and bud and say:
The flower, however marred or won,
Shall not be cast away.

— Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward.

CHILDREN OF LIGHT.

How the Soul that God has Lighted should give Light to the World.

It is a beautiful and suggestive name for the children of God. Christ used it, and from him we learn the practical import of it. Christians are to be the light of the world. The spark which is kindled in them is divine in its essence, and is to be a light for others. Enlightened themselves, they are to diffuse light. As a beacon set on a dangerous coast, they are to be warning and guidance to life's storm-tossed mariners. Their light is to shine like a ray of hope, showing the path that leads to eternal day. But their light is like the light of the candles that are put in lanterns, which may lose much of its power through the density of the medium surrounding them. While we are in the body, care must be taken that our light be not obscured by the dirt and smoke of the world. It is not given us for the use of ourselves only; but it may be rendered useless to others if our lives are so marred by inconsistencies, by idleness, by worldliness and selfishness, that the light is not visible. Our lives must be clean and bright and transparent in their purity. The light, to be useful, must also be a steady, not an intermittent light. It must shine as clearly between Sundays as on the holy day.

PAUL'S CHRIST.

Suggestions on the Epworth League Topic for September 5. Romans 1: 3, 4; 8: 3; 9: 5; II. Cor. 13: 14.

Differing from the pictures the Evangelists give us of Christ, yet perfectly consistent therewith, Paul's conception of him deserves our careful study. Of Christ according to the flesh and of his life and teaching, Paul takes little account. We cannot believe him to have been indifferent to them; but he approaches him from a different side. It is Christ as the fulfilment of the law and of the types; Christ as the revealer of God; Christ as God incarnate; Christ as the sacrifice for sin and as the triumphant victor in the struggle for the possession of this world — these are the aspects in which Paul loves to depict his Lord. Though Paul was born, as is generally believed, only five years after Christ, he does not appear ever to have come in contact with him. He may have been with his parents in Cilicia at such times as Christ went to Jerusalem and have heard of him only through his friends the Pharisees or from Gamaliel, his teacher. Even after his conversion, he does not appear to have sought information about Christ's life and teaching from the Apostles, who could have given it to him. Indeed, in writing to the Galatians, he boasts that he avoided them, preferring to depend upon the revelation which God made to him in his own mind. During his solitary meditation in Arabia immediately after his conversion, he seems to have constructed his theory of Christ, guided only by the Holy Spirit and such slight information as Ananias gave him during their talk in Damascus. Taking the two facts of the Mosaic economy and the appearance of Christ in the world with God's endorsement of him, he set himself to discern Christ's place in the Divine plan and, from this effort, we have the Christ of the epistles and the message which Paul boldly calls "my Gospel."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

GENTILES GIVING.

Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 5. II. Cor. 9: 1-11. Golden Text II. Cor. 8: 9.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

ALL things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee" (I. Chron. 29: 14). Such was David's idea of what the Apostle Paul calls a "grace of God" (II. Cor. 8: 1), the grace which permits us to give anything to him. The grace of giving is very little understood in the Church of Christ; the enemy of God and man has succeeded in making giving to be generally looked upon as a matter between man and man instead of between God and man. Paul held it to be a "grace of God bestowed upon the churches of Macedonia" that they had the privilege of giving to the churches of Judea, from whence the Gospel had come to them. It was a gift of God to them that they might give to him. Again and again Paul speaks of it as a grace, and one which was as necessary in the life of a Christian as any other grace of God. He charged Timothy that "as he had made a beginning before, so he would complete in you this grace also! But as ye abound in everything; in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all earnestness, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also" (II. Cor. 8: 6, 7.)

How different is this view of giving from the miserable begging which extorts from unwilling hands, and hard unmelted hearts the begrudged gifts which are the shame and disgrace of the Christian Church! How different from the going down to Egypt for help, by which the world deludes itself into the belief that it is keeping up the cause of God, in the way of bazaars, concerts, excursions, and other worldly devices. People whose hearts are in the world seek to get the value of their money in their own worldly pleasure, out of which a certain part goes to the church, or to some good work, while the openly worldly sneer at religious people, and say, "They can't get on without our money." How different it is from the tragic appeals to man, and the bitter reproaches against man in such appeals, which give the idea that it is by man, stirred up by his fellowman, that the work of God, financially, is kept up; and that it is absolutely necessary to put the most extreme pressure upon man, or the work would collapse. Where giving is understood to be a grace of God everything is reversed.

If Christian work is of God, it is no way dependent upon man, and it is a grievous dishonor to our God that the unbelief of his children allows it to be so regarded. God may indeed give to his children the grace of being his instruments in preaching, praying, or giving; but we are only instruments, and he alone is the true Worker. In the grace of giving, the poor are always before the rich: it was so in Macedonia. In a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality. Only poverty can give to God; he neither needs our riches nor our strength, neither our wisdom nor anything in us which is to our advantage. It is the poor in spirit who shall have the kingdom, the weak which shall confound the strong, the foolish confound the wise (I. Cor. 1: 27), and equally it is the deep poverty which abounds, as in the widow's mite, to the riches of their liberality. The gifts and prayers of the poor are the most dependable help in all Christian work.

The urgency of begging letters or spoken appeals bear their own witness, that these earnest pleaders cannot see God at work for them. They see what their needs are, they know a certain sum is required, they tell man, and especially such men as they think are able to help them and they expect their need to be met by man. They hold their fellow Christians responsible, and sometimes yield to feelings of disappointment and condemnation of others if their giving is not that which they judge to be becoming them. How different to this was the spirit of the Macedonian churches! Instead of being urged by fellow Christians, "to their power..." and beyond their power they were willing of themselves. Instead of contributions being dragged out of them they prayed with much intreaty that we would receive the gift. The begging was on the other side; the donors begged of the recipients; they counted it a grace or favor that their gifts should be accepted, and that they were permitted their share in the work of the Lord. Thus they regarded giving as a grace of God and not as hard bondage to man.

The privilege of giving on the part of the donor. "Who am I, and what is my people that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort?" (I. Chron. 29: 14), and the privilege of the recipients who receive all as from the Lord, is equally blessed. If both are looking to him then the one who gives settles with the Lord what he is to give, and he who is to receive is quite content to receive that which the Lord sends him unsolicited from man.

Paul having spoken of giving in relation to God, now speaks of it in relation to man. "Ministering to the saints." We only really minister to the saints as we minister to the Lord. The example of our Lord is the basis: "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich" (II. Cor. 8: 9). Is it not our inestimable privilege if we are permitted in anything to deny and impoverish ourselves for the saints of God, and especially for those in difficult places, in heathen lands, or working in the slums of our great cities. Paul reminds the Corinthians that they were ready a year ago, and that now he was sending messengers to bring their gifts to the churches.

Willing giving is the law of God's kingdom. "Of every man that giveth it willingly from his heart, shall ye take my offering" (Ex. 25: 2). "Whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring... an offering of the Lord" (Ex. 35: 5). "The children of Israel brought a willing offering unto the Lord, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to bring for all manner of work" (verse 29): "Not grudgingly, or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver." "There's another appeal from so and so, I suppose I must give something," says a Christian man with a shrug of his shoulder, as though he did not much relish the process. "God has shown me to send such and such a sum to so and so," says one, who has been sitting at the feet of Jesus, and who has heard his word in the quiet stillness within, where the still small voice is audible. No thought whether it is pleasant or unpleasant agitates the calm sea of that God-filled heart, no computation of the loss to himself; self is out of the question; the will of God has been law, and is now become nature; newness of life.

But there is another law of the kingdom it is this: In whatever you economise, don't economise in giving to the Lord: "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly, and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Soweth! Is giving then in any sense a sowing?

Is it not a loss, a parting with what we give? We do not expect to see it back again. In all death which is unto the Lord we sow for future gain. Everything which comes from one who has eternal life and lives in the honor of an endless life, has its bearings on the future. Who knows all the issues of the smallest things we do in the spirit and in the power of the life of Christ? The Word of God which rules our life "liveth and abideth for ever" (I. Peter 1: 23), the Spirit of God which is the power of our life is the Eternal Spirit (Heb. 9: 14) and as we sow for eternity we shall surely reap for eternity.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

"CAST IN ALL HER LIVING."

CONSUMMATE delicacy and tact are displayed by the Apostle in this appeal to the church at Corinth. There can be no doubt that he was anxious about the money. This great man who would not stoop to ask anything for himself, who had supported himself by his own labor while he preached at Corinth, could plead for gifts for others. He wanted the rich church to contribute liberally and to do it gracefully and promptly. We, who sometimes complain of the urgency of appeals for money from the pulpit, and blame the ministers for giving so much prominence to the subject of contributions, are apt to forget that there is apostolic precedent for the course.

Not only here, but in other places Paul pleads for money. His first words after that magnificent argument about the resurrection in the fifteenth chapter of his first epistle to this church, were: "Now concerning the collection." There was nothing sordid about it. None of the money would go into his pocket. He pleaded the cause of the poor, Christian Jews in Jerusalem who at that time were suffering social ostracism and were in sore straits. Paul was personally pledged to attend to this matter. When he carried his point in the great Council and secured for his Gentile converts freedom from the Mosaic law, he was enjoined (Gal. 2: 10) to secure contributions for the relief of indigent Jewish Christians. He faithfully carried out his part of the agreement, though, as we know, the other party to the agreement did not act with the same fidelity. With that, Paul had nothing to do; he would do his duty whether others did their's, or neglected to do it. It is interesting to notice the means he took to accomplish his object. In pressing the appeal for a liberal collection he relies on three considerations: First, the personal. He begged that he might not be humiliated by any failure on their part. He was in Macedonia at the time and he tells these people at Corinth, that he had been boasting of them, telling the Macedonians how liberal the Corinthians were and urging them to do likewise. Now if there should be any failure on their part, the Macedonians would take note of the fact and think that Paul had misrepresented. He wanted the Corinthians to live up to his report of them. Second he reminds them of the example of Christ who for their sake gave up everything even his life. Third, he tells them how God will regard liberality on their part. He will be pleased with it and will reward them and he describes the kind of giver God loves to see. He is a man who does not need to be urged to give, but gives because his heart is full of love and compassion. The same plea may still be urged. God does not change his character. He still delights to see his people caring more for pleasing him than for their money.

Shall reap also sparingly. Luther used to tell the story of a monastery in Austria which was famous for its benevolence. More was given to the poor from its treasury than from any other monastery. Yet it was rich and the more it gave away the more it had. But it passed under new management and its gifts were diminished.

It was no longer famous for its hos and benefactions. Yet though the ceased the treasury was not full at a time it became poor. One day a cant applied at the gate for alms refused. He was told that the mo no longer had the means of feed passing wayfarers. The mendic swered: "The reason of your po that you have not among you t brothers whom you used to have your roof. The one was Dave (gi the other Dabitur (it shall be give The former ye cast out; the other lonely left of his own accord."

Multiply your seed. It is asto how often God repays our gifts cause. When they are given with peccation of the loss being made sometimes sends far more than wa A few months ago a child in a State began saving up the penn earned by going on errands and do jobs of work. She was anxious fifty cents to buy flower-seeds for little garden. But when spring c had heard her father read in THE TIAN HERALD that little childre dying of hunger in India. Her fat sending a gift to the famine fund her own accord the little girl bro savings to be sent with it. Th told the story in his letter accom his contribution. Not long after package of seed reached the child far more than could have been with her fifty cents. So God rewar who give from their poverty to hi but never those who give to get the According as he purposeth in h. It is worthy of notice that the urges the people to give, not bec the need of the poor, but because be good for the giver. A great e tells the story of an old bachel lived a dull, dreary life, taking no and spending his days in gloom content. His business was every him, and he drove from his door e who asked him for a subscription f city. He was very rich, but he was and discontented. No one spok word to him; everyone shrank f harsh words and manner, and feared and disliked. The thi changed his life was that he b give and to take an interest in the of other people. His friends and natives benefited by the change, t man who derived most good from the man himself. He became ap cheerful, and contented. The mny gave away blessed others, but it was good investment for himself, for it his happiness.

He hath given to the poor. Krun relates that a rich youth in Rome, recovered from a dangerous illness appeared likely to be fatal, resed offer a sacrifice to the gods in proof of gratitude. He was so thankful at said if the gods would receive rec he would give them all his possi. Hermas heard him and said: "g gifts come from the heavens: it canst thou send nothing. Come me." He took the youth to a hys there was sickness and poverty wife and children were destitute, d father lay on a bed of suffering. H is your altar of sacrifice," said "These are the representatives who are authorized to receive name." The youth gave liberally mas smiled on him and said: "T always thy grateful countenance heaven and then to earth."

Ministering to the saints. Edw ing drew a vivid picture of thesc some good man was ushered into after living a life of poverty and on earth. Irving imagined God him if his piety had been recogni was known that he was a child. The man answers that it was, "Th fed you and clothed you? Tell his name may be written in the The man answers that none gave "What," exclaims the Ruler of verse, "What! one of my children to be mine and left to starve, na left unclothed! Where are those Are they poor?" No, he is in some of them wore gold and jew fed sumptuously every day. The indignation burns and he bids him smite that town with famine ar lence and with fire and sword, one of his children suffered hung ther and no man gave to him.

OUR GRAIN IN CALCUTTA.

Arrangements by Bishop Thoburn's Inter-denominational Missionary Committee for the Distribution of the Famine Relief Cargo to the Starving People.

Announced in part of our edition last week a cable message from Dr. Hobbs reports the arrival in Calcutta of the steamer City of Everett laden with grain contributed by our friends in America.

God, but at the same time cannot disguise the fact that every day adds to the peril of the situation. If the rains do not come within a very few weeks, the mid-year harvest will be lost, and then the sufferings will be something frightful to contemplate.

"Sooner or later, however, this famine will end and brighter days will return to India. I hope and pray that those who have given so freely to feed the dying millions, will retain a permanent interest in India and having provided the bread which perisheth, devote themselves hereafter to equally earnest and permanent efforts to give to these millions the bread of eternal life."

Similar reports of the grave crisis come from other missionaries. Miss Edith H. May, who is laboring at Allahabad, under the auspices of the Women's Union Missionary Society, writes: "Many of the people say no such weather has been known for years. Unless rain comes soon the famine will become worse. We have people come here daily to be fed, and I keep on hand (through the money provided by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD), dahl and rice to give to such as need it. Within a few days we have had to provide homes for several who came to us perfectly destitute. The children have such a sad, pleading look in their eyes skulls of a number of famine victims. Mr. Gordon photographed them as they lay, as an incontrovertible proof of the horrors by which he is surrounded. In his letter thanking the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the relief he is now able to give through their consecrated gifts, he says: "A few days ago I found the body of a lad of fourteen years out in the open field. To all appearances he had died from starvation, and upon my mentioning the matter to the Tehsildar the body was buried before it was molested by birds or animals. Last Sunday morning, while on my way from Bilaspore, at the sixteenth milestone, I found the body of a woman lying in the ditch. Life was all but extinct. By the side of the mother lay her timely aid with which I can reach some sufferers and relieve them. May God bless the good friends in America whose hearts were moved to help these needy people in their distress. Day by day the famine is becoming more severe and the number of sufferers is steadily increasing. Many villages in the Kankar have been deserted and the villagers are working in the relief camps opened by the Government. They have to work very hard and they are paid so little that they can scarcely buy sufficient grain for one full meal a day. But besides these who are partly provided for there is a large number of people who, unable to work, wander daily from door to door and beg for a morsel of food. They are quite destitute and suffer most. I intend to help first the most needy and the greatest sufferers with the money you have kindly sent and then if more funds are sent, attend to the others. Besides, here are our own Christian brethren in the villages who are suffering from famine. So far they have managed to pull through somehow with the little help from the church and what little the missionaries could give them. But now their condition is getting worse and I think they should be helped as

By Rev. E. M. Gordon of Mungeli, India.

SKULLS OF DEAD FAMINE VICTIMS.

with the grain contributed by our friends in America for the relief of India's starving millions. On this page we give pictures of the scenes in which the cargo is being distributed. The docks where the steamer is now anchored are in the suburbs of the great city and the manner in which the Governor of India resides when in Calcutta. In a letter received from Bishop Thoburn, written before the arrival of the steamer, he speaks gratefully of the help ordered by the people of America to the afflicted among whom he is laboring. He confirms the statements repeatedly made in the columns as to the moral of this Christ-like charity. He writes: "The present crisis cannot but impress the minds of thousands of the world with the conviction that the Gospel must be preached with hope and trust in its real need. I think we appreciate very much what Christians are doing for them. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has pre-empted the relief of this great crisis and speaks on behalf of the dumb millions of India who will be appreciated and remembered many years to come. We earnestly hope that the great scourge of famine will pass away before many months and yet as we are all in a state of almost painful suspense. I am writing on July 9 and the sky is blue and almost cloudless. The rains should have been here on June 10. We are living in hope and looking to when they answer to your question, 'We have no one to care for us.' It makes one long to take them and mother them all."

SCENE AT THE DOCKS IN CALCUTTA.

SCENES IN CALCUTTA, INDIA — THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE.

A ghastly evidence of the fearful pressure of the famine is furnished by a photograph which is reproduced on this page. It is sent to us by Rev. E. M. Gordon of Mungeli, and depicts a scene he witnessed at his station a few days before writing. The jackals had left on the ground the body of two years, apparently asleep. I had not gone 500 yards farther when I found the body of a man of about forty years, much emaciated. He also had died from starvation. This morning something new awaited me. I heard of a dead body lying in a mango grove. I went out and found the body of a boy of about four years. The body had been eaten, gnawed away, right up both legs to the waist, and round about sat three dogs, apparently well gorged with human flesh. I had just returned to the bungalow when I heard of still another body lying out in the opposite direction. I hurried out. In this second case I found the body of a grown person, much mutilated, the bones and flesh showing in different parts. Around the body were dogs and crows and vultures.

"The government officials are doing their utmost to cope with the distress, but they seem unable to bring matters under control, simply because the distress is overpowering. It is increasing, and will, I believe, reach its height in the monsoon, when importation of grain will be utterly impossible, on account of bad roads."

Shwarani Masoji, Pastor of the Native Church at Kolhapur, writes:

I feel very thankful and glad for receiving this

1. Given employment to about 120 men, women and children for three months at brickmaking. Some of the bricks were sold and the price turned into the fund for relief of the starving. 2. I have given seed to fifteen poor cultivators who, without aid, would be unable to sow their fields. 3. I have provided food for from seventy-five to one hundred and twenty starving people daily for two months. 4. I have buried the dead, clothed the naked and ministered to the dying. The money will continue to do this kind of work unto the end. We try to use it in such way that the Lord may bless it to the glory of his name.

Many of the starving become so reduced by lack of food that they fall a prey to disease, and even though they afterwards be fed and cared for in the best way possible, death takes place from the result of hunger. Two such deaths occurred here yesterday, and others are on the border land.

This suffering must continue here for months to come, and I shall need much more money than I have at present, and shall do my best with any you may send.

Yours truly, MORTON D. ADAMS,
Foreign Christian Missionary Soc'y.

CHITPORE ROAD, CALCUTTA.

well. I am going this morning to Hercla to inquire personally about the condition of the Christians there.

The following letter tells its own thrilling story:

BILASPUR, C. P., India, (July 6, 1897.)

DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH:

Dear Friend and Brother—Your second remittance of $500 to hand. God only knows how thankful I am for the money. In behalf of the starving people I thank you heartily, and may heaven reward all who worked through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for this grand work. The famine is now worse than ever, and the almost entire failure of the monsoon so far this year is very distressing and full of prophecy of horrors beyond anything we have yet witnessed. I still hope that we get rain, but the outlook is bad. We should now have had one month of rain where we have had but one week of slight rain.

With the money sent, I have accomplished the following:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPSCHE, PROPRIETOR.
T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadian and Mexican postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald will not be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post office at New York, as Second class Matter

The New Papyrus.

THERE is something very interesting in this new "logia," which has lately come from its Egyptian hiding-place. It is older than any other sacred manuscript known to the Christian world. Two-thirds of it, indeed, is to be found in the Gospels themselves. Some of it reads more like Ralph Waldo Emerson than any of the evangelists: "Wherever there is one alone, I am with him. Raise the stone and there shalt thou find Me. Cleave the wood and there am I." The text of this "logia" is nearer to that of Luke than to that of Matthew or Mark. Evidently this is not one of the Saviour's sayings: "Except ye fast to the world, ye shall in no wise find the Kingdom of God; and except ye keep the Sabbath, ye shall not see the Father." This is not in harmony with: "That thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret," nor with "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." Perhaps, this very "logia" was one of the rejected sources of the Gospels themselves. If so, it illustrates how men were guided by the Holy Spirit in making up the sacred canon.

Godless Husbands.

A WOMAN ought to be especially careful in her choice of life-time companionship. She cannot afford to make a mistake. If a man err in his selection he can spend his evenings at the club; but woman has no club-room for refuge. If a woman make a bad job of marital selection, the probability is that nothing but a funeral can relieve it. Divorce cases in court may interest the public, but the love-letters of a married couple are poor reading, except for those who write them. Avoid affiance with a despiser of the Christian religion, whatever else he may have or may not have. I do not say he must needs be a religious man, for Paul says the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife; but marriage with a man who hates the Christian religion will ensure you a life of wretchedness. He will caricature your habit of kneeling in prayer. He will speak depreciatingly of Christ. He will wound all the most sacred feelings of your soul. He will put your home under the anathema of the Lord God Almighty. In addition to the anguish with which he will fill your life, there is great danger that he will despoil your hope of heaven, and make your marriage relation an infinite and eternal disaster.

aster. If you have made such engagement, your first duty is to break it.

Further, do not unite in marriage with a man of bad habits in the idea of reforming him. If now, under the restraint of present acquaintance, he will not give up his bad habits, after he has won the prize you cannot expect him to do so. You might as well plant a violet in the face of a northeast storm with the idea of appeasing it. You might as well run a schooner alongside of a burning ship with the idea of saving the ship. The consequence will be, schooner and ship will be destroyed together. The almshouse could tell the story of a hundred women who married men to reform them. If by twenty-five years of age a man has been grappled by intoxicants, he is under such headway that your attempt to stop him would be very much like running up the track with a wheelbarrow to stop an express train.

Instead of marrying a man to reform him, let him reform first, and then give him time to see whether the reform is to be permanent. Let him understand that if he cannot do without his bad habits for two years, he must do without you forever.

Avoid union with one supremely selfish, or so wound up in his occupation that he has no room for another. You occasionally find a man who spreads himself so widely over the path of life that there is no room for any one to walk beside him. He is not the one blade of a scissoring, incomplete without the other blade, but he is a chisel made to cut his way through life alone, or a file full of roughness, made to be drawn across society without any affinity for other files. His disposition is a lifelong protest against marriage.

The Sea is His.

THERE is no sphere where God's power is so clearly shown as upon the sea. There is no situation where man may be so wholly helpless as on the sea. We call the earth terra firma. We can walk on it, we can plant and sow on it, we can build on it. It is just the opposite of the sea. On the sea we commit ourselves to the mercy of the winds and the waves. Our structure may spring a leak, may catch on fire, may become unmanageable and drift to the breakers. There is no employment so well calculated to awaken reverence and godly fear as that of the seaman. He lives amid perils. He is exposed to sudden surprises. He is the witness of rare escapes; he is the subject of them. How often may he say with the Psalmist, "Then the channels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered, at thy rebuke, O Lord, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils. He sent from above, he took me, he drew me out of many waters."

And yet the sailor's life is not always a reverent one. Familiarity with scenes which should make us thoughtful, does not always so result. It is said, "an undevout astronomer is mad." So, an undevout seaman; an undevout surgeon. For if the sea is God's, so is man; if the skies are God's, so is man. And if the paths of the sea should make a man thoughtful, so the paths of science; so the lecture room and laboratory.

The Peril of Mistakes.

THE result of a mistake may be as disastrous as the result of malicious intent. It is not so culpable. A railroad engineer mistakes a signal; a signal-man mistakes the identity of a train; a telegraph operator mistakes the meaning or address of a despatch, and the result is just as fatal as though the act were one of malice instead of ignorance or carelessness. Many a life is imperiled because of limitation of human faculties, or error in human judgment.

The higher the official who is guilty of a mistake, the more fatal the consequences. In his "Cure of Souls," Ian MacLaren says: "To-day, a religious teacher makes for the open sea, and people feel in every sermon the swell of the Atlantic. It is an exhilarating and invigorating experience, but has its hazards for hearers and its anxieties for the preacher. Never could there have been any time when he required to be so fearless and honest, and at the same time so reverent and careful. When a man carries his own life and the lives of others in his hand, he may well pray for humility and the mind of Christ."

This is all true. But was there ever a time when the public preacher was so indifferent as to the authority of his message; when he was so flippant and irreverent, when he seemed so to court the favor of the people, by giving them something they never thought of before; something so little worthy of their thought? And the peril to himself and others should he make a mistake! Nero fiddling while Rome was burning is serious business compared with his conduct. "Take heed to thyself and the doctrine!"

Godly Stimulus.

THERE is one thing Satan does well. He is good at stating the discouraging side. He knows how to fish for obstacles and every time brings up his net full. Do not help him in his work! If you have anything to say in prayer-meeting that is disheartening, may you forget your speech! Tell us something on the bright side. We know a Christian man who did something outrageously wrong. Some one said: "Why do you not expose him?" We replied: "That is the devil's work, and it will be thoroughly done. If there is anything good about him we would rather speak of that."

Give no sermons or newspaper articles that are depressing. We know all that before you start; among the greatest disheartenments there are hopeful things that may be said. While the Mediterranean corn-ship was going to smash, Paul told the crew to "Be of good cheer." We like apple trees because, though they are not handsome, they have bright blossoms and good fruit, but we despise weeping willows because they never do anything but cry.

On a dark day do not go around closing the window-shutters. The world is dark enough without your making it more so. Is there anybody in the room who has a match? Please then strike it. There is only one kind of champagne that we temperance folks can take and that is Encouraging Remark. It is a stimulus, and what makes it better than all other kinds of champagne is, it leaves no headache.

Old Manuscripts.

THERE lies upon our table a manuscript yellow with age. It was written forty years ago, by an uncle long ago departed. It is an old-fashioned sermon, both in analysis and style of rhetoric. But how suggestive. The hand that dotted those i's and crossed those t's was still fifteen years ago. Its discussion about heaven, how dull it would be to him who has been so long in its positive possession. With what fatigues he may have written it! With what anxieties he may have delivered it! But it is only the old sack from which the seed-corn of the Gospel was scattered and harvests may have been raised.

Ministers! What will become of your old manuscript sermons after you are dead? Will they tell the story of your earnest work and consecrated spirit, or show to the generations following that you were the slaves of conventionality and worldliness? The manuscripts over which you have never prayed, the sermons born on the green baize of a study-table, rather than in the warm heart of divine sympathy, had better be burned up before you are dead. More accurately than anything ever chiselled on your monument will your hand-writing tell after you are gone what kind of a servant you have been to the best of Masters.

BRIEF NOTES.

Although Bishop Ryle of Liverpool, has passed his eightieth birthday, he preached every Sunday for the past year engagements for every week day besides.

The most ancient piece of furniture is now deposited in the British Museum, the throne of Queen Hatshepsut, who reigned 1,600 years before Christ.

A little Moslem child accounted preference for the Christian religion by its like you Jesus because he loves little girls. Mohammed did not love little girls.

A first trial will shortly be made under the direction of the War Office of a number of dogs which have been trained to search out the wounded on a battlefield until somebody comes to their assistance.

The Luther League of America, a therian young people's organization in this numbering more than 65,000 members, will hold its third biennial national convention in New York City, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, 20, 21, and 22, 1898, are the dates of the meeting.

Mr. Moody has invited a party of women of Hope Chapel, New York, of whom John B. Devins is pastor, to occupy the Seminary buildings at Northfield, Massachusetts. This is the third summer that the invitation has been extended. About thirty accepted the invitation.

Northfield visitors have not been by the close of the Convention. A post-series of meetings to continue until September is being held every day except Monday, Campbell Morgan, of London, Rev. A. of Brooklyn, Rev. K. A. Torrey, of Chicago, Mr. D. L. Moody are the speakers.

The Brooklyn Young Women's Association has sent several parties of girls to the farm, Wildwood, which is about twenty miles from New York. The association collects a week from those who can afford it, which goes toward the general work. The mansion has been well filled all the summer.

A remarkable suit was tried in the Jersey Court of Chancery last week. It was an application of one member of a firm for a compulsory dissolution of partnership. The basis of complaint was that his partner so habitually profane that it was an associate with him.

Remarkable meetings have just been held in Deadwood, S. D. The town has several churches and is one of the most populated in the Black Hills. The meetings were largely attended and have had an excellent effect in the town. The Baptist Church received a donation of fifty members, of whom ten were men.

Rev. A. G. Martyn, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Denison, Ia., writes recommending to churches needing the earnest and devoted evangelist, the Rev. R. C. Denison, who was formerly in the London Evangelization Society, but is now engaged in evangelistic work in Iowa. Mr. Martyn is in the highest terms of the young preacher's piety and Gospel power.

The Bible work in Russia is largely on by the Russian Bible Society through the assistance of the American Bible Society. A letter to the Society acknowledging the success of the past year, reference is made to the effective work in Siberia. The prisoners in their places of exile were met and supplied with copies of the Scriptures, in many instances to their delight.

The advance in the popular sentiment regarding temperance in England is illustrated by the support it is receiving from Churchmen. Recently a letter signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop of York, and the Bishop of Chester, has been sent to every clergyman in England, emphasizing the necessity of work against intemperance, especially by the branches of the Church of England Temperance Society.

Martha's Vineyard, Mass., with August 14th, the assembling of the sixteenth annual Camp Meeting. The Sunday services were conducted by Dr. George K. Morris, of New Haven, and Rev. Levi Gilbert, of New Haven, Conn. Andrews and Bishop Foster were present during the continuance of the camp meeting. A large number of preachers famous in the Methodist Episcopal Church, took part in the services which continued ten days.

Rev. E. P. Dunlap and wife, missionaries to Siam, have made their mission boat, the Valley, the means of carrying the Gospel to the numbers who never before heard the things. One tour was along the coast of Siam, chief towns were visited and inter-tribe reached by walking. One convert was made and over three thousand portions of Bibles and tracts were sold. At another time made in the interior by riding on elephants, all twenty Siamese provinces were reached, many hundreds of Christian books distributed.

A great gathering of converted people lately held in Victoria Park, London, under the presidency of Dr. McKillop. With the exception of the speakers were Jews, who were converted to Christ. Among them were representatives from various parts of Russia, from Austria, Hungary, Germany, and several Jewesses also gave brief testimonies of their conversion. The speakers were Socialists among Jews, advised disbelievers to try residence in Russia for social reform.

The marriage is announced of Miss Kutnam, M.A., the talented young Christian who recently graduated at Princeton University, to Miss Mary H. Irwin, M.D. Miss Irwin is well known to many of our readers through her frequent and scholarly lectures on Christ, among the high caste races of India. She is a medical missionary to Ceylon, and will render him valuable help in his efforts to civilize his people in the far East. Dr. Irwin is Dr. Kutnam—has evidently the countenance of a saint. She was doubtless aware of the prejudice her marriage would arouse in the American society in the island, and the races, among whom she and her husband will know how to respect her for it. What the united labors of the young couple for the civilization of the Ceylonese will be, blessed of God.

FIGHTING ON THE NILE.

THE KHALIFA'S ARRIORS.

THE recent dispatches from the Soudan announce the capture of Abu Hamid by the Anglo-Egyptian expedition. Thus another stage has been reached in the attempt to rescue the vast region to the south of Egypt from the oppression of the Mohammedan. The Soudan was abandoned thirteen years ago after the death of Gen. Gordon, and its people since then have been the prey of the Khalifa, the Mohammedan fanatic who succeeded the Mahdi. Now the Egyptian government has been engaged and the army drilled and thereby Englishmen an effort is being made to reclaim the region. The progress is necessarily slow as it is to proceed cautiously in the presence of an enemy so powerful as the Khalifa. There is danger in so long a line as the Nile from Egypt to Assuan, of the communications being severed and the advanced post being surrounded by the enemy. To avoid this peril the line, as it is occupied, is fortified by a line of forts connected by railroad and telegraph with the next station north, so that troops can be quickly moved to any part of the line in the event of an attack. The advance reported is to a place only a few miles from the equator. It was reached only by hard fighting. The expedition, setting out from Merawi, after a march of eighteen hours, arrived at the sight of Abu Hamid. The British troops, overlooking the town, were surprised and then the town itself was captured. It was bravely defended by the narrow, tortuous streets, and hand-to-hand fighting ensued. Colonel Hunter, who commanded the expedition, describes the valor displayed in the fighting on both sides, but finally the Mahdians were driven out and the British captured. The next day an attack will be made by the British, but it is probable that no attempt will be made until a flotilla of steamers has been built for the navigation of the Nile, is ready to operate, so that a combined attack upon the Mahdians from the land and the river. Colonel Hunter reports the inhabitants of the region as showing the utmost joy in the expedition and giving it their aid. It is recognized as a deliverance from the intolerable oppression of the Khalifa. It is much to be wished that the joy and gratitude as these people were displayed by sinners who have been delivered from the thralldom of sin, they would welcome the aid of the Lord so ready to give.

But though death, he might destroy him that the power of death, that is the devil, and the one who... were all their lifetime subject to him. (Heb. 2: 14.)

Electrical Rat-trap.

One of the ingenious applications of electricity to the needs of modern life is a trap constructed by a gentleman of Danish birth for the capture and destruction of rats. It consists of a wire cage having a series of trap doors, and a revolving disk, operated by a small battery of ten cells, giving a power of fifteen volts. Within the cage as bait, is a wire coop containing live chickens. A funnel-like passage leads directly to the coop, but the rat entering passes over a trap-door which by electric power causes the coop to swing aside into a hollow space and closes the entrance to the passage-way. The rat cannot return by the way he came, but must proceed. A little farther is another trap-door which under the weight of the rat causes the coop to swing back into place and shuts the passage-way. He is now in the centre of the cage, within sight, but not within reach, of the chickens. The floor on which he stands is a revolving disk which at every revolution leaves an open space through which the rat drops into a well of water and is drowned. The trap-doors move so easily that the weight of a mouse is sufficient to move them, and by closing the electric circuit set the machinery in motion which seals the doom of the victim and opens the way for another to enter. One of the traps was set up recently in a down-town cellar, in New York and caught over a hundred of the rats in a single night. The inventor says that the principle is applicable to larger traps and he can make them so that they will just as readily catch rabbits, foxes, or even bears. It would not so easily catch men, but they are caught by a different application of the same principle. The enemy of souls tempts them by a bait to enter forbidden

"A foundation of piles is always more or less risky. The piles are only driven into mud or sand, and if that mud or sand should wash away, they would rest on nothing. Then, again, with a pile foundation the water level may become lower and leave the tops of the piles exposed. Under such conditions it would only be a question of time, and not necessarily a long time, when the piles would rot and decay, and the stability of the building would be gone." He added that the expenditure of going to bed-rock was amply justified by the increased security of the building which could never sink or get out of plumb. It is so with character. A mere superficial profession will suffice to secure the world's approval, but he alone is safe who, at whatever cost may be involved, lays the foundation of his life on the rock of his Lord.

Whoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man who built his house upon a rock... and it fell not. (Matt. 7: 23.)

Spanish Leaders.

The murder of Canovas, the Premier of Spain, has made a vacancy that it will be difficult to fill. He was easily the ablest statesman in the country and his power was far greater than any of his rivals. The people felt that the honor of the nation was safe in his hands and trusted him implicitly. The duty of carrying on the Government temporarily has been entrusted to Gen. Azcarraga, who was Canovas' Minister of War. It is not expected, however, that he will continue to hold office as Premier. In the emergency, the thoughts of the people turn

Government. In the meantime, it is thought probable that Senor Pidal, or Francisco Silva, the present President of the House, may be asked by the Queen Regent to form a Government. The situation is critical and the Cuban people are watching it with intense anxiety. Now that Canovas is dead their hopes of freedom from Spain's rule have increased. It is remarkable that in such a country as Spain where illustrious lineage is so highly esteemed, so grave a crisis should have resulted from the death of a man who was the son of a common peasant. Spain is realizing now that her need is not so much for her nobles, as for men like those of Issachar, described in the Bible, who have wisdom to govern in the fear of God: Men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do. (1. Chron. 12: 32.)

SENOR SAGASTA.

GEN. AZCARRAGA.

A College Man on Tramp.

An interesting story of a college-man's experience as a tramp is given to the New York Herald by Mr. Walter A.

Wyckoff, of Princeton, N. J., who has commenced a series of articles on the subject in Scribner's Magazine. During his college course he became deeply interested in the labor and sociological questions, and determined to learn for himself what the life of a man was who set out as an unskilled laborer to seek work. During his experiment he worked in several capacities. Among his occupations, which covered a period of two years and involved walking over two thousand miles, he worked at tearing down old buildings, digging sewers, as a hotel porter, as a factory hand, in a logging camp, as farm hand, in mining camps in Colorado, and as section hand on the Union Pacific Railroad. Asked which he preferred, he said: "Some varieties of farm life were not unpleasant, though the hours were, of course, long, and I did not particularly dislike the work in the livery stable, nor the life of a hotel porter." He took whatever work he could obtain, as a man would who, without special training, must seek work. He found it readily, except for about three weeks in Chicago, when he walked the streets day after day seeking employment and finding none. At night he slept in the station-houses, and sometimes twenty-four hours passed without his tasting food. His most trying experience was with pick and shovel, with the boss of the crew swearing at them and constantly driving them to the limits of endurance. That was the hardest of all, and working at such exhausting labor, a day seemed like an eternity. He had also some interesting experiences of the hospitality of churches and ministers during his two years' life as a laborer. His object was to obtain data for science by learning what kind of labor such men do, what their privations are, and what their surroundings must be. All this could have been learned by questioning the men, but not the actual sensations of a refined, college-bred man, living as a day-laborer. The record of such an experience may help us to understand something of what Christ endured that he might save our race, when he laid aside his divinity and assumed humanity:

Who being in the form of God... made himself of no reputation and took upon him the form of a servant and was made in the likeness of men. (Phil. 2: 6.)

ASSUAN THE HEADQUARTERS OF THE ANGLO-EGYPTIAN SOUDAN EXPEDITION.

paths and prevents their retracing their steps when they find themselves entrapped.

The snare is laid for him in the ground and a trap for him in the way. (Job 18: 10.)

Costly Foundations.

Two large office-buildings now being erected on Broadway, New York, will cost a larger sum than such structures usually do, owing to what some people call a whim of the builder. He determined not to follow the usual custom of making the foundation on piles, but to dig down to bed-rock. A large force of men have been employed for a long time on the work and at last the rock has been reached. In one instance the rock was eighty feet below the street level, and in the other case it was more than sixty feet below. In reply to criticisms of his course the builder admitted that the work had been expensive, but claimed that the money had been well spent. He said:

naturally to Senor Sagasta, the Liberal leader, who was the political rival of Canovas, and the only statesman whose ability and influence approached those of the late Premier. But it would be impossible for Sagasta to hold office with so decided an opposition as there now is in the popular branch of the Legislature. The Conservatives hopelessly outnumber the Liberals in the Chamber. Sagasta did once govern in similar circumstances, but then Canovas had pledged him Conservative support, and his influence over his party was so strong that at the mandate of Canovas they voted for Liberal measures and kept Sagasta in power until Canovas was ready to take the reins of Government. But now that the great leader has fallen, there is no one who could so control the Conservative majority, and Sagasta would have to dissolve the Cortes and order a general election of a new House, before he could undertake the

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Peasant Women of Russia.

Leaving Home and Friends to Work in the Fields—A Hard Lot, but it is Now Much Better than in Former Years.

PEASANT-LIFE in the land of the Czar, even in its best aspect, is full of hardships and privations. In the twelve central governments, it is said by statisticians, the peasants have their own rye-bread for only 200 days in the year, and often for little more than 100 days. Twenty years ago a large proportion had allotments of less than two and a-half acres of land per male, while others had from eight to eleven acres. It was estimated that from twenty-eight to forty acres were necessary to the support of an average family, under what was known as the three-field system. Land was rented from the owners at enormous rates, and altogether the farmer and raiser of small crops did little else than earn money enough to supply the landlord and the tax-gatherer. The bulk of the taxes was raised from the peasants. As a result, many being unable to meet such demands, and arrears increasing, thousands of the inhabitants left their houses and wandered through the country in search of employment.

To-day, however, the condition of the Russian peasant has advanced. Education is becoming more general, and there has been a marked relaxation in many of the land laws that formerly bore so heavily upon the workers. Woman's place in the peasant household is not one of abject servitude, as it is in some less civilized countries; yet it is far from being as pleasant and desirable as it is in Western Europe or America. She is a toiler in the home, on the farm, at the loom and in the factory, and the average Russian woman of the rural districts is as ready to undertake heavy physical work as man. Trained to it from her youth, she has a strength and power of endurance that are surprising.

Our photograph on this page shows a group of Russian peasant women of the agricultural type, at work in the fields. It is a scene which might readily be duplicated in many parts of our Western States. It was people of this class who suffered during the great famine of 1892, when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sent a relief ship laden with breadstuffs for the famished and delicacies for the sick. These hardy daughters of toil, on their simple fare, consisting of coarse bread, cabbage soup and a little tea, will labor without fatigue from early morning until the deepening of twilight, about 9 p. m., makes longer toil impossible. They are patient and uncomplaining, and although their whole life is a dreary, laborious monotone, they rarely complain. Meat and butter they regard as luxuries only to be indulged in on rare occasions. With better educational opportunities, and more tolerant religious laws—both of which are now reasonably hoped for—their lot of the peasantry of Russia would be greatly improved.

Marketing in Paris.

In the French capital, nearly every woman carries a basket or netbag to market on certain forenoons. Groceries are not always delivered, and have to be carried by the buyer. Fruit and vegetables are seldom wrapped. Most of the trading (writes Louise Cushing) is done by vendors who draw carts with a harness which either Monsieur or Madame slips over the shoulders. The women's voices, as they cry their wares, are fearfully vibrant and heavy. Other women, in contrast to these, are those who sell fish in the great wholesale markets. They are rich. They wear a bonnet with lace, and diamonds glitter on their unclean, odoriferous hands. Their dress is of excellent material, covered with a white apron.

The baker, with a suit of white, is patronized for bread, at least, by nearly every family in Paris. It is found in all shapes and varieties. Just before it is taken from the oven steam is turned in upon it, giving a very brown crust. The workmen, who have twelve hours a day of labor, take a roll or two for the second meal as well. Children at play eat bread as young America eats candy or chews gum. Passers-by carry bread, without a wrapping, under the arm or in work-aprons, or a child measures his length with a long, narrow stick of it. A par-capable of the best work. Those in all lines of duty who do the most work are the calmest, most unhurried people in the community. Duties never wildly chase each other in their lives. One task never crowds another out, nor ever compels hurried, and therefore imperfect, doing. The calm spirit works methodically, doing one thing at a time and doing it well, and it therefore works swiftly, though never appearing to be in haste. We need the peace of God in our heart, just as really for the doing well of the little things of our secular life, as for the doing of the greatest duties of Christ's kingdom.

Our Dependent Ones.

In nine cases out of ten, where the average man or woman of the middle or lower class is concerned, there is some dependent one—either at home or elsewhere—for whom they work. It may be a father, kind but inefficient and unfortunate, or it is a mother well stricken in years. There are invalid relatives to be taken gently down to the grave-side, and money smooths

THE MESSAGE.

A Plea for the Birds.

[SAW before the altar,
Mothers and maidens fair,
With brown and golden tresses
With grey and snowy hair.
Amid the hats and bonnets,
Of every kind and grade
With laces, buds, and ribbons
Of many a hue and shade.

I saw, alas! the pinions
That still aloft should bear
The tiny little warblers
So swiftly through the air;
And, sadder yet—a birdling
Of form and beauty rare—
Was perched upon the bonnet
Of a maiden young and fair.

I said: "They must be cruel,
Or they surely have not heard
About the wide-spread slaughter
Of our sweetest singing birds.
They are mothers—they are children
Oh! they cannot know
E'en a tithe of what 'tis costing
All this cruel show."

"Go tell them," came the message
"All the grief and pain,
Of the cold and hungry nestling
When their cries are vain.
Tell them how a loving Father
Marks the sparrow's fall;
How he feeds the little raven
How he cares for all."

E. Corinth, Me. —MRS. MARY B.

The Best Stories for Children.

MOTHERS the world over have a valuable aid to child and mental development in the telling of stories. During the sessions of the National Congress of Mothers held in Washington, probably no more interesting address was delivered than that of Dr. Walter L. Hervey of New York on this particular subject. Regarding the realm of the story as the child's world, and the characters as the inhabitants of that world, he proceeds to indicate the sort of story that is most likely to be available and serviceable to the child. "An old story," he says, "is like a better than a new story, and a world story than one written by an individual, while for young children a story of a plant or animal is better than a human story, unless the human story is very simple and true. The story of Jacob and Esau, told about imaginary people, would lose the exquisite flavor of a story told about real boys of one's acquaintance, it might cause embarrassing relations.

In stories of animals and plants we have the basal ideas of food, of the simple relatedness of things, we have the elemental passion of the epic of growth, reproduction and death. And in these the child can find, sooner or later, the picture of his own being and becoming. There is no whose knowledge of himself is enriched and quickened by the story of the Discontented Prince, the Constant Tin Soldier, or the Duckling. While in the story of the Heavenly Father as the source and creator of us all, the child finds a key to the questions that first arise in his mind when he looks at the world. What do these things come from? What before anything was? 'If I could see everything, who made God?' 'What last count?' and if so, what? 'What shall be here after every one is gone? And where shall I be?' 'I know a child of four who has read the story of Creation for many successive days. He would hold up his cloth with the ejaculation, 'X! I make the moon.' He would have one raised the curtain or turned the gas. 'Let there be light,' and he would set forth the reason why it was for God to make light first of all, that he might see to make every thing. And this was not irreverence, it was simply the natural impulse to put in the place of every actor in the world, and thus to widen his sphere and himself.

To know a good story is to have a taste; to tell a good story is to be a master of a noble art. The mother who is a kindergarten who holds a group of children for a quarter of an hour with the story of Siegfried in petto, is as truly a teacher as the one who casts the spell of the Siegfried over children of large tial loaf has often with it one thick slice added to make the weight exact. But it must be a fastidious person who insists on having his bread done up in paper!

PEASANTS IN THE RUSSIAN HAY-FIELDS.

An Unique Wedding.

At a recent wedding celebration, two flower-bearers in dainty costumes rode in advance of the bride and groom, carrying handsome bouquets. Five ushers and bridesmaids followed all a-wheel, the ladies, prettily robed in colors to suit the festive occasion. All the ushers wore pink carnations in their button-holes, and like the rest, were a-wheel. Most picturesque and effective of all were the bride and bridegroom who wore white costumes and rode upon white bicycles.

Heart-peace an Aid to Work.

Your hurried, agitated, anxious, and continually perturbed person is really in-even that weary way. There are brothers to be helped through college. There are sisters to be instructed and trained, in order that they can do something to add to the income and yet stay at home. This is the kind of burden many workingwomen carry all their lives uncomplainingly.

Economy and Stinginess.

It has been well remarked that true economy is not to be confounded with stinginess, but is rather a happy medium. Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher wrote: "No woman can build a home worth having who does not understand that she must cheerfully accept much labor, suffering, and self-sacrifice." "But true economy," writes Mary Newcomb Allen, "should not be counted a sacrifice. It is steadily laying by little by little for a rainy day, or a time of sickness, that will lift us above want in old age, or enable us to help the institutions God wishes to maintain."

GIFTS.

Gifts we Receive from God in our Personal Circumstances and the Gifts we Render to God.

One conspicuous and fundamental difference between the devout and the worldly man, is the way he regards the things in his circumstances that he values. The one regards them as coming from God and the other as the product of his own effort or an inheritance from his ancestors. We hear a great deal in the mouths of self-made men, and freemen, there is a real sense in which the latter is correct. A man is entitled to the place in his boyhood among his fellows, pleasure-loving people, who set himself to the cultivation of his mind and tries to develop his powers. Or, if he starts in vicious and dissipated circumstances and, without the aid of encouragements and discipline, enjoys a clean life and a higher position in the ranks of his fellows, he deserves the praise of right men. But even in such cases, something short-sighted in the view to the man himself, he becomes the faculties that he developed. Even the evolutionist hesitates to attribute all mental differences to the evolutions of the brain. There is reason and more probability, in the non-Christian, in the Bible than in the Christian. "Every gift that is good and every boon that is perfect cometh from the Father of Lights." God created this world as a mechanism, winding it up and leaving it to go by its own force, withdrawing it into a state of beatific indifference. Law does regulate the world, but further we press our investigations, the further we find its domain, but there is a sphere beyond which God does not interfere in his creation, to disturb but to mould and develop. All history shows his handiwork. Men are raised up to do the things that need to be done, and they are ended with the faculties necessary for performance. Circumstances are unforeseen and unaccountable to man, in their operation to bring about definite results. God's hand is working and we are under the laws he has made to his purposes, the work is as it would be if he did it by himself. The power that "shapes our clay" hew them as we will," is whether we recognize it or not. It is his own being and in his creation, every man has received from God. Beside these, are the gifts which have come from him to us, pre-eminently, the supreme gift is only begotten Son. What is due to him we cannot conceive, but that the cost was infinite we know. Christ's words: "God so loved the world that he gave" imply this. The reverse of this fact cannot be denied. The gift entails obligation. It must be fulfilled in our lives and in our actions, which we put God's gifts and the development of them that is expected of us. But the sense in which it is resumed the Committee designed subject to be considered is the matter of sacrificial offerings. As the child receives everything he has from his father, to give that father nothing that enriches him, so we can give nothing to God. It is even the child can give his father pleasure by denying himself that shows his love and gratitude. Christ has shown this duty repeatedly. He has shown us his love for him by our love for our fellow-men. Our gifts may be used to the people who need them; they may be used to carry the Gospel to those who have not heard it; or they may be applied to any one of the multitude of things which the spirit of Christ requires; but gifts should be made for love of him. It is that motive that sanctifies and measures the gift. The pleasure of seeing his name in subscription list operates upon a giver, and his gift is diminished. To be passing in God's sight there should be love for the gift but love of him is not man's and not even the hope of recognition and reward should influence the giver.

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

Under His Wings.

"Hide me under the shadow of thy wings."—Ps. 17: 8.

Rev. W. O. CUSHING.

SOLO OR DUET.

IRA D. SANKEY.

1. Un - der His wings I am safe - ly a - bid - ing; Tho' the night
2. Un - der His wings, what a ref - uge in sor - row! How the heart
3. Un - der His wings, O what pre - cious en - joy - ment! There will I deep - ens and tem - pests are wild, Still I can trust Him; I yearn - ing - ly turns to its rest! Oft - en when earth has no hide till life's tri - als are o'er; Shel - tered, pro - tect - ed, no know He will keep me; He has re - deemed me, and I am His child.

balm for my heal - ing, There I find com - fort, and there I am blest.
e - vil can harm me; Rest - ing in Je - sus I'm safe ev - er more.

CHORUS.

Un - der His wings, un - der His wings, Who from His love can sev - er?

Un - der His wings my soul shall abide, Safe - ly a - bid - e for - ev - er.

Copyright, 1896, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From the new book "SACRED SONGS NO. 1." By per. of The Biglow & Main Co.

THEY DECLARE THE GLORY OF GOD.

THE bright stars smile and beam

From the clear azure sky

On a world in the shadow,

A world all awry;

And the stars sing together

The Creator to laud—

Sing to men in the shadow,

The glory of God.

The wild tempest that sweeps

O'er the sea and the land,

Lifting high the wild billow,

Strewing wrecks on the strand,

Has a voice that is music;

For 'tis lifted in praise

Of its King and Controller,

The Ancient of Days.

Even winter so drear,

Even blizzards which sweep

O'er a world still and frost-bound

O'er nature asleep,

With its weird, minor music,

When all mankind is awed,

Lifts aloft a strange anthem

Of glory to God.

The bright summer with songs

And with fragrance most sweet,

With its beauty of flowers

And its burden of wheat,

With a heaven-born gladness

God's praises prolongs,

Filling all the wide domain

Of nature with songs.

Noank, Conn.

—W. C. MARTIN.

"PEACE; BE STILL."

WILD as the storm on Galilee,

When winds and waves in fury roar,

So wild with such dread potency,

Temptations cloud our heavens o'er.

With fiercest rage, and lightning's play,

They rend our hearts with fatal skill;

We sink, unless the Saviour say

Those royal words: "Peace, peace; be still."

Afflictions come, a ghastly band,

Engulf our boat, storm-tossed and frail,

With wildering clouds shut out the land,

Towards which we sadly, fearful, sail.

Stern disappointments, bitter fears,

Our lives with grimmest darkness fill.

Till through our heart-aches and our tears,

We hear our Lord say: "Peace; be still."

Our passions rage! How wild and strong!

Like cyclones on the sea of life!

Their clashing hate, and wrath, and wrong,

Their endless energy of strife!

'Mid these, I eager look to thee,

O God, I seek thy spirit's thrill;

Come thou, who stilled the troubled sea,

Pronounce thy mandate: "Peace; be still."

I seek, my God and King, that realm

Where passion's power is lost in thine;

Temptations cease to overwhelm,

And hearts ne'er doubt the Word divine;

Whose stormless, waveless, deathless shore,

Forever feeds the Master's will;

Emotions flash, and tumults roar,

Revere thy mandate: "Peace; be still."

Council Bluffs, Ia.

—T. F. THICKSTON.

WAITING FOR DAWN.

The Closing Hours of this Dispensation
Like the Hour Preceding the Sun-rising.

BY WILLIAM ANDERSON, LL.D.

We are told that before the coming of the Lord there will be the precursory signs of the darkening of the sun and moon and stars of the political firmament, and down on the earth the signs of the distress of nations with perplexity, and of the sea and the waves, of the millions of its population roaring, and of men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. Was ever description more graphic than this of the state of the world at the present hour? Well, what next? Then they shall "see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." If the apostle, therefore, would rouse the slumbering Christians of his day by saying, "Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed," how much more arousing ought the words to be for us, when we reason and plead, "Now is salvation nearer by eighteen hundred years, than when the apostle originally issued the exhortation!" It must surely be that the night is far spent, and that the day is at hand. Let us see how expressive is the representation which likens our age to the hours of darkness.

First, night is a time of ignorance: when we are either unaware of the existence of the objects with which we are surrounded, or mistake their qualities, positions, and relations; when we know not where we are, or whither we should go; when we know not what to do, or how to do what is needful; when we mistake friends for foes, and foes for friends; stumble on stones and fall into pits. That, even in respect of secular objects and interests, a night of ignorance broods over the human family needs little illustration. Not only among savage tribes, but among nations the most civilized, millions on millions have risen little above the grade of the instinct of the inferior creation.

And whatever his other acquirements may be, is not that man's mind in a state of gross darkness who is ignorant of his origin, whether it be divine or not, and ignorant of his own constitution, whether it be immortal, or if death will blot him out of existence and extinguish his being forever?

Secondly, night is a time of sin. It is especially the drunkard's time—"they that are drunken, are drunken in the night." It is especially the robber and murderer's time—that wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth. Oh, then, when there is so much wickedness of this character, there must be a sense in which the world is immersed in the darkness of night.

Night is a time of sorrow, fear, and danger—when there is fear for traveler that he may miss his way and be lost, and fear for the householder of the attack of the robber and assassin. What a night it is for the world in these respects! Where are the joyousness and security of sunshine? What a dark midnight scene of weeping, lamentation, and woe, does not this wide world present as the prevailing characteristic of its condition! It has ever been so since sin entered it to darken it; but especially at the present hour, let any one informed, even in a slight measure, of the condition of the human species, testify—east and west, and south and north—in Asia, Africa, Europe, and America—is throughout the whole of this globe—it is a scene the grand characteristic of which is the darkness of night, for the weepings and groans of sorrow and the perturbations of fear under which universal humanity labors!

But night is a time of hope—waiting for the morning. There are men sensitively alive to many of the evils under which the earth groans, and who, studying the course of affairs both politically and morally, are speaking very despairingly of the fortunes of humanity. I do not wonder they should; so would I, but for the assurances of this book: but with these assurances, though the darkness should become Egyptian; though the desolation should proceed till worse than the dark ages had enveloped the whole earth, still I would not despair of man, but wait confidently for a joyous morning.

BASHARA, THE BEARER OF TIDINGS.

AN ORIENTAL TALE,
WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."
By ALFREDA POST, of Beirut, Syria.

CHAPTER I.

RIDER picked his way along the edge of the Syrian desert. An anachronism he might have seemed, a son of the East and the West alike. His matter-of-fact European dress was relieved by the white traveling robe over his shoulders, and the lingering touch of Orientalism, the red fez, which served well to set off his handsome dark features and thoughtful brow.

Bashara's mind surged back over a multitude of far-away recollections as he rode. Could it be that he was the same eager student who went to Beirut to college? The memory made him heart sick.

Only a year before, he had grasped in triumph his medical diploma, and had gone forth to be a man of power in his country. He had settled in a sea-port city, where foreign customs were growing. "There will be a demand for doctors there," he thought. But so, alas! thought others of his kind, and as the year wore by Bashara in bitterness found himself with neither position nor influence. Now in desperation, he must return to his far-away inland home a failure!

He rode on gloomily, absent-mindedly. Suddenly his mind-picture shifted. He looked about with startled alertness, the rocks, the undulations of the plain, were new to him; he had lost his way. He sought to retrace his steps but to no avail. As time wore on, his horse went lame; Bashara dismounted to lead him—whither? With eager eye, he detected some dark objects in the distance. He made his way painfully toward them; his horse gasped with every breath, and with pleading human eyes seemed to beg for a chance to lie down and die.

Man and beast revived as they drew nearer and made out the low black tents of a Bedouin encampment. They were greeted from afar by an onset of barking from the camp-dogs and hooting from the half-clothed barbarian children. These were silenced by a young man in dirty flowing robes who came forward with a salute of welcome: "Marhaba! Greetings!"

"Marhabtein! Double greetings!" answered Bashara.

"Welcome! Most welcome!" said the youth. "Come, prefer yourself at the tent of the Sheikh."

"The preference is from you," answered Bashara. "But my horse, can anything be done for him?"

"Come this way to Abu Sharr, there is no skill like his in all the world!"

"Abu Sharr? 'Father of Evil?' What a name!" thought Bashara, but in politeness said nothing.

They were now the centre of a curious and vivacious group, each clamoring with his own advice.

"Cursed be the father of children!" cried the guide, cuffing the heads of the younger marauders, and opening a way through the group of men to greet the esteemed Abu Sharr.

The case was explained and the horse examined. Abu Sharr stroked his chin solemnly.

"You have your choice of three remedies. You can bleed the horse, put in a seton, or pierce his nostril."

"Is there nothing else?" asked Bashara, his pathological and medical training rising in double protest.

Abu Sharr gave a withering glance. "I raised horses before you were strapped into your cradle."

Bashara was tossed helplessly between the horns of the dilemma.

"I am under your orders," he said, "as "HE WILL BE GOOD FOR A JOURNEY TO-MORROW," SAID ABU SHARR.

you tell me to choose, let us try bleeding—though the poor creature has little blood to spare!" he added under his breath.

Abu Sharr with a deft motion, pricked the two front veins in the horse's knees; then to Bashara's dismay, mounted and started off at a jog-trot, leaving a double red track on the clay behind him.

"Stop!" cried Bashara, "the horse is already exhausted; he is sick from over-work!"

But by this time Abu Sharr was beyond call. The horse at first could hardly take a step without stumbling, but to Bashara's amazement, as the rider urged him on, his step became visibly firmer. At the end of a half-hour, he returned on a canter, head erect his eyes clear and his whole bearing improved.

"He will be good for a journey to-morrow," said Abu Sharr, dismounting.

Bashara was now taken to the tent of the Sheikh, and received with the hospitality which is the Arab's glory. He was given the seat of honor, while the elders ranged themselves in a solemn circle about him. Pipes were served and smoked in silence. Only at intervals did the Sheikh break the spell by some question about the journey or some renewed expression of welcome. In the centre of the group, the Sheikh's son pounded coffee in a carved wooden mortar, beating out with the pestle a sort of rhythmic tune. The coffee was then prepared over a brazier and poured out, frothy and sugarless, into tiny cups.

The supper came later. A copper pot was lined with dates; the gigantic pie thus formed being filled with melted butter, and placed, steaming hot, in the centre of the group. The guests tore off morsels of the tough bread, and dipped them into the common dish. They drank from earthenware jugs, which they held high above their heads, while the water poured from the nozzle in a long stream into the drinker's throat. Two men stood throughout the meal, holding aloft lighted lanterns. The meal was concluded in silence. Then Bashara rose and saluted the Sheikh. "Deimi—forever!" he said, leaving it to the company to interpret, "May God establish forever your hospitable board."

"May God establish forever your life," answered the Sheikh. "You have eaten bread and salt with us now; henceforth we are brothers."

The dining-room was easily converted into a bed-room, the guests rolling themselves in their rugs and sleeping upon the ground.

Bashara awoke refreshed, and found, contrary to all his former knowledge of cause and effect, maladies and their cures, that his horse was now in excellent condition for the day's journey.

The Sheikh walked with him toward the open space where the horses were picketed.

Bashara's foot was in the stirrup when a pleading voice caught his ear. He turned and saw a woman with a baby on her back, and a little girl at her side.

"May Allah preserve those beautiful black eyes! Tell me truly did you come from the great school for doctors at Beirut?"

"Yes, truly," answered Bashara, smiling. "Allah lengthen your life! Look at my

(Continued on next page.)

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY

BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.

DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.

FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.

ANCHOR } Cincinnati.

ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.

ATLANTIC } New York.

BRADLEY } New York.

BROOKLYN } New York.

JEWETT } New York.

ULSTER } New York.

UNION } New York.

SOUTHERN } Chicago.

SHIPMAN } Chicago.

COLLIER } Chicago.

MISSOURI } St. Louis.

RED SEAL } St. Louis.

SOUTHERN } St. Louis.

JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.

MORLEY Cleveland.

SALEM Salem, Mass.

CORNELL Buffalo.

KENTUCKY Louisville.

After Serious Illness

Hood's Sarsaparilla Built up and Restored Health.

"My son had diphtheria and scarlet fever and after getting over his sickness he was weak and poor. A friend advised me to give him Hood's Sarsaparilla and I did so. In a short time it built him up and restored him to health. Since then we praise Hood's Sarsaparilla highly." MARY A. LEES, Sherman Park, New York.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills cure constipation. 25 cents.

You may imagine your skin is beyond help. If you do, you haven't tried HEISKELL'S Ointment. It cures all diseases of the skin.

HEISKELL'S Soap keeps the skin healthy. Ointment 50c, Soap 25c. At druggists or by mail. JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., 681 Commerce St., Philadelphia.

SPECTACLES at wholesale. Send for catalog. Agents wanted. COULTER OPTICAL CO., Chicago, Ill.

A Summer Necessity
Makes the food more appetizing and digestible.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

A tree is known by its fruit, and we are well known
the

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

should be judged by its graduates. Many—very many—of the dramatic vocal and instrumental artists of the public eye to-day were instructed here.
GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Musical Director.
Send for our catalogue to
FRANK W. HALE, Gen'l Mgr., Boston, Mass.

CANCER

Its Scientific Treatment at Cincinnati

Drs. McLeish & Weber, of Cincinnati, Ohio, made the treatment of Cancer and its specialty for many years, using no knife or severe measures. As an evidence of this, they cite the names of a few well-known who have been cured by them.

Mr. T. E. C. Brinly, Louisville, Ky., of the Brinly, Miles & Hardy Co., maker of the famous "Brinly Plows," was cured of a cancer of the mouth. Had been upon three times before going to them.

Prof. H. McDiarmid, formerly editor of "Standard," Cincinnati, now professor of "College," Hiram, Ohio, was cured of cancer of the face. Before their treatment applied the diseased part had been cut out each time returning in about six months.

Judge R. J. Bowman, of Alexandria, La., cured of cancer of the right cheek in three years ago. A line addressed to T. McLeish & Weber, 121 W. Ninth st., Cincinnati, secure a 48-page treatise free.

IT is a significant fact that responsible dealers sell and responsible painters use Pure White Lead (see list of genuine brands) and Pure Linseed Oil. They know their business. Those who don't know, try to sell and use the "just-as-good mixtures," called White Lead," &c., &c.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead and its valuable information and card showing samples of various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

N. Y. University sixty-third year, 1897. DAY CLASS after two years. EVENING CLASS after three years. GRADUATE CLASS—Twelve courses required for LL.M. For circulars address Registrar, Washington Square, New York.

FRANKLIN COLLEGE New Athens, Ohio. Sent out U. S. Governors, and 340 Ministers. Total cost 8 courses, course for D.D., Ph.D., &c., with plan to earn funds. W.A. WILLIAMS, President.

SACRED SONGS No. 100. No other New Book equal to it. $25 per copy. If by mail. THE HIGLOW MUSIC CO., Lakeview Building, Chicago. 16 E. Nineteenth St., New York.

Bashara, the Bearer of Tidings.

(Continued from preceding page.)

"I see this great swelling on his face. I can neither eat nor sleep." Bashara's heart had always warmed for the children since the days in the Hospital, when he used to sit upstairs in his arms. He examined the baby and relieved it at once. "Allah!" exclaimed the Sheikh, "I do not know that one was with us from God. I beseech you to let me see a poor fellow in this tent who is shot in the side." Bashara followed the Sheikh into a dark and velvet place for microbes. He knelt down beside the patient. "He is all here," he said, placing his fingers on the wound. "He has revealed it to you!" exclaimed the Sheikh, dumbfounded. "I cannot take it out," said Bashara, "neither dressings nor drugs." "I will send for everything," said the Sheikh. "Only stay." Bashara considered. "There are many things I should have to change the treatment. What has been done?" and he noticed more closely the face of the patient. "He is cup and bleed me," groaned the patient to keep down the fever." Bashara repressed a smile as he recognized the skill of Abu Sharr. "The Sheikh's eyes almost twinkled. 'I know how to raise horses here,' he said. 'We do best to stop there.' Those who have treated the patient want to give up to me—'" "The Sheikh Mustapha says a word to his host, 'it is so.'" "I will send Bashara out of the tent. 'I will send him up there!' he called. 'He appeared, leading a dainty creature, graceful, light, sensitive, one of the finest mares of the desert. 'This is her name,' said the Sheikh. 'She is yours.'" "I said as it was that Bashara was in the camp of the Surgeon-General in the camp of Mustapha.

CHAPTER II.

Bashara threw himself eagerly into his work. His heart and bright young eyes, with zeal, he served the tribe with intelligence, the skill, the science, he had been given him. At two hours making perfect his aseptic dressing. He left the tent to another patient and returned in an hour. The man, with grimy hands, and the dressing off. "What did you do this?" asked Bashara. "I was uncomfortable," answered the man. "I learned soon to expect such a matter-of-course. 'I was no longer the guest of the tribe. 'I am their slave,' he said to himself. 'The cleanliness, the uncleanness of their camp disgusted him, but he kept on. 'The day passed, he noticed a strange fire in the camp. Fire-arms were taken out, and the men were armed. 'The conversation was all of war and peace. 'Remember,' said Abu Sharr to the man, 'how Asaad Nimr tried years ago under the name of our Sheikh. 'The features were something like those of Sheikh Mustapha, so he rode out an enemy calling out. 'I, Sheikh Mustapha, demand your surrender.' The man was alarmed, and gave up at once his arms and all he had. For a moment he boasted, till some one learned the head taken his booty. The Council assembled, and without a dissent, it was voted that the plunder be given to him whose name won it. 'I will live Sheikh Mustapha!' answered the men. 'I will live my children,' said the Sheikh. 'The man must be by the way of the desert, turned to Bashara. 'I will be ready to start with us at once. 'I will take your bandages and medicines. 'I will show that we have needed you for all this time.' Bashara leaped to his feet with flashing eyes. 'I will show what you have tricked me into? 'I will make me a highway robber? Take my blooded mare; I leave you to the Cur the religion of the Nazarenes!'" cried the Sheikh. "You will go with us if we carry your dead body." A dozen men grasped their knives as though to make good the threat. "You would better not be a fool," said the Sheikh.

"Truly," answered Bashara. He resumed his seat in silence, but his mind worked more fiercely than in his hardest student days.

They started at dawn. A few camels were taken to carry provisions and horse-feed. "And to bring back the booty," said Abu Sharr.

The warriors rode on horseback.

"We need not carry much water from here," said the Sheikh. "We reach the Well of the Eagle to-night, and will fill the water-skins for the two remaining days in the desert."

It was a burning ride through the sun-glare. During the noon rest, Bashara tested the temperature in the shadow of a kneeling camel, 105 degrees!

They plodded on, hour after hour, till the landscape swam and Bashara fancied himself forever moving on through a white waste of clay and stones. Only one thought remained clear before him—the well at sundown!

They reached it at last. The thirsty animals spied the clump of verdure from afar, and quickened their steps. Bashara leaped from his horse and threw himself full length upon the ground, to peer over the rocky rim into the water. A fetid odor rose up into his face. With dumb despair, he saw the surface covered with floating dead locusts; on one side, half in the water, lay a dead wolf. Two days in the wilderness before them! A sudden hope rose in Bashara's breast. "They will have to turn back!"

He watched the Sheikh's face. The grave countenance was as unmoved as when he was smoking his nargileh in his own tent.

"My children," he said, "Bedouins never despair. We must sleep here to-night, and to-morrow take the two days' journey in one."

Without a murmur the men threw themselves upon the ground; it was still like the floor of an oven.

Before light they were roused. "We have a little leben" (curdled milk), said the Sheikh, "to divide among us this morning; we must keep our last bag of pure water for noon."

The horses were quickly saddled. The poor brutes with parched tongues hanging out, looked dumbly at the green water, but would not touch it.

The day's ride was past description, a day when the fever burns and mounts into the brain, and men move in a horrible trance. The sirocco wind, robbed by the desert of every drop of moisture, wrapped itself round them as though to suck their life-blood. Columns of dust stalked down upon them like genii risen from some enchanter's bottle.

At noon they stopped for breath. Each man was given two or three dates, and the precious water-skin was unstrapped.

"The pebble, where is it?"

Abu Sharr produced it. Each man in turn held it in the palm of his hand, and enough water was poured into the palm to cover the pebble. The last drops were poured out for Sheikh Mustapha. "Allah Carim! God is gracious!" murmured the men.

"Pretty Pill" says Pretty Poll

She's just "roll parrotting." There's no prettiness in pills, except on the theory of "pretty is that pretty does." In that case she's right.

Ayer's Pills

do cure biliousness, constipation, and all liver troubles.

They plodded on till sundown, when the Sheikh called a halt of two hours. They loosened the horses' trappings and lay down in the open desert. The empty water-skin lay shriveled and cracked upon the ground beside them. The moon rose clear and full.

(To be Continued.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Paths that Cross, by Rev. L. M. Zimmerman. A story of remarkable interest, and in which some of the leading truths of Christianity are excellently illustrated. This book will be read with interest by both old and young. Pp. 257, cloth, illustrated, price $1.25.

The Growing Revelation, by Rev. Amory H. Bradford, D.D. A series of fourteen sermons and a Prologue and Epilogue. Among the sermons are "The Vision of God," "The Voice of the Cross," "The Way of the Cross," "Love and Life," "The Coming Church," and "Christ and the Creeds." Dr. Bradford's words are always helpful and inspiring and these sermons are his newest and best words. Pp. 254; price $1.50. Published by The Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Ave., New York.

Macbeth lamp-chimneys save nine-tenths of the cost and all the trouble. Go by the Index.

Write Macbeth Pittsburgh Pa

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS, 102 Fulton St., New York, sell all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped by trial. Guaranteed first class. Largest house in the world. Dealers supplied. 62-page illus. cat. free.

Don't Go to Alaska

FOR

GOLD DUST

All Grocers Sell It.

Cleans Everything.

MADE ONLY BY

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia.

O'NEILL'S

Sixth Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, N. Y.

The Most Popular Department Store in America.

NEW YORK is the CENTER OF FASHION.

A Postal Card will bring you this Profusely Illustrated Fashion Catalogue FREE.

Ready September 10th.

SEND FOR IT!

FREE UPON REQUEST.

Home Talks with Mothers and Daughters.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

THE MARRIED DAUGHTER.

FROM the day on which the youthful bride steps across the home threshold, and puts her hand into that of her husband, she enters into new relations to the household she leaves. She is just as much the dear child of her father and mother as ever she was, and indeed, there is a sweet and very peculiar tenderness in the way they cling to her, and the day after the wedding, if you can peep in on them as they move softly about, missing her everywhere, is sometimes almost as sorrowful in the old home as the day after a funeral. But the married daughter has stepped into a state of independence very different from that of the girl who remains with her parents; she has merged her individuality in that of another, she has dropped her maiden name and assumed that of her husband. She and he together are to found a new family, and for her at least, the injunction is, to a certain extent, to "Forget also thine own people and thy father's house."

When the daughter goes home after her marriage, it is as a very dear and cherished guest, but she realizes from the first visit, that many things are altered. Old duties formerly hers have been assumed by her sister, her father and mother treat her with a subtle difference, with the most nebulous and vague, but still real quality of respect, which blends with their former affection half unconsciously to themselves. She is no longer wholly theirs, for she has cast in her lot with another, and she will henceforward have separate interests, separate ambitions, a whole world of thoughts and affairs with which her childhood's home has little to do.

Very probably she will find her husband's relations rather trying. Their family and her family may be in marked contrast. But she will begin by accepting them loyally for John's sake, then by tolerating them where they run counter to her ideas, and at last, as a rule, by adopting them into her very heart. Each new pair, as they set forth together on the journey of life, have to face the fact that they have been brought up under somewhat different influences and conditions, and that they must begin by becoming acquainted with one another.

There is a fallacy that courtship means acquaintance. It means no such thing. It simply stands for introduction, and the girl and the man who leave the altar, promised husband and wife by the clergyman's lips, and by the sanction of the State, have still to learn the ins and outs of each other's characters, to discover the highways and byways of each other's modes of thought, to become, day by day, year by year, one in soul, as they are one in the union of their lives. This is what makes the first year of marriage hard rather than easy. The process of adjustment in a new relation, the growth of adaptability, the instinctive knowledge of one another which needs no speech for interpretation, all come only by degrees. And the newly married are not unlike pupils in a school, who must master certain tasks before they can expect rewards.

While the process of learning to bear and forbear always lovingly, is still in its initial stage, the married daughter would better not dwell under the roof of her mother. Nor, if it can be helped, should she go to live with the mother of her John. No house is large enough to comfortably accommodate two families, and the new family in particular will thrive best by itself without the surveillance of criticism, or even the brooding wing of maternal love and partiality.

Many a slight tiff will pass like a sudden gust, many a cloud will fly before the sunshine, if there is no onlooker to stir up pride, or jealousy, or conceit, and, in the long run, love and common sense may be trusted to bring things around comfortably, if Christian principle be added thereto, as the rock on which real happiness is always to be built.

Between the mother and her married daughter there arises by and by a very precious confidence, an understanding and sympathy completer than that they knew in earlier days. The younger children observe it, and say, "Mamma tells Mary everything," or "Mamma takes Kitty's advice in preference to ours." Kitty or Mary speedily becomes the beloved confidante of the brothers and sisters in their love affairs. She sees the first faint signal of love's approach in the blushes which tint her young sister's cheek, in the manly pride in some sweet girl of that pet brother who was yesterday only a hobble de-hoy. Then as a young matron, she is called upon to officiate as a most desirable and delightful chaperone, and her presence in a pleasure party among a troop of young people is hailed with joy. Herself as beautiful as any girl, as gracious as any older woman, she is much appreciated in society, and the Christian Endeavor circles, the Chautauqua groups, and the Sunday School look to her now as ever to be their efficient helper in every worthy labor. Blessings on the married daughter.

Margaret E. Sangster.

HALL'S
Vegetable Sicilian
HAIR RENEWER

Beautifies and restores Gray Hair to its original color and vitality; prevents baldness; cures itching and dandruff. A fine hair dressing.

R. P. HALL & CO., Props., Nashville, N. H.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

THE DEAF HEAR

"Common Sense Ear Drums" relieve all conditions of deafness and head noise, where Medical skill fails. The only Scientific Aural Sound Conductor in the world. Safe to wear, comfortable, invisible, no dangerous wire or metal attachment. Recommended by Physicians. Write for book.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO.
223 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
1122 Broadway, New York.

Asthma and Hay-Fever Cures. Free.

We are glad to inform the readers that a sure specific cure for Asthma and Hay-fever is found in the Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery from the Congo River, West Africa. Many sufferers report most marvelous cures from its use. Among others, Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, Editor of the Farmer's Magazine, and Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg West Va., were completely cured by the Kola Plant after thirty years' suffering. Mr. Lewis could not lie down at night in Hay-fever season for fear of choking, and Mr. Combs was a life-long sufferer from Asthma. Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, writes that for eighteen years he slept propped up in a chair, being much worse in Hay-fever season, and the Kola Plant cured him at once. It is truly a most wonderful remedy. If you are a sufferer would advise you to send your address to the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, who to prove its power will send a large case by mail free to every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who need it. All they ask in return is that you send yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. It costs you nothing, and you should surely try it.

Persons who are afflicted with scrofula, salt rheum, boils, and pimples, will find an absolute cure in Hood's Sarsaparilla. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla, the one true blood purifier.

GAIL BORDEN EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE FOR THE "EAGLE BRAND"
THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS TESTIFY TO ITS SUPERIORITY.
"INFANT HEALTH" SENT FREE. NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO. N.Y.

An Exceptional Opportunity

To Secure a Beautiful and Useful Book at a Bargain

The Church at Home,

By Bishop John H. D.D., LL.D.

Is the title of a magnificent manual for family worship and home reading, and a book that should be in every Christian home in the land, those who are fortunate enough to secure a copy of this book will find a delightful companion. It contains 480 pages,

210 ILLUSTRATIONS,

TWO BEAUTIFUL COLORED PICTURES, THE LORD'S PRAYER AND THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

LESSON, HYMN and PRAYER FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR, constituting a complete family worship for the whole year.

READINGS and MEDITATIONS FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS: NEW YEAR'S DAY, GOOD FRIDAY, EASTER, WHITSUNDAY, INDEPENDENCE DAY, THANKSGIVING DAY, CHRISTMAS DAY, AND DAYS OF AFFLICTION.

Memory Texts for Every Day in the Year,
The Church Steps,
Home Lessons,
Special Collects,
Bible Biography.

Picture Lessons for Children,
Old and New Tunes,
Wisdom in Proverbs,
Blank Pages for Letters
and Autographs.

ALTOGETHER IT IS THE COMPLETE HELP FOR AM WOMEN
PUBLISHED

By the purchase of the entire stock from the original publishers, we are enabled to offer the subscribers of "The Christian Herald" ONLY a remarkable bargain, provided stock is not exhausted when your order is received, as follows:

Cloth, Illuminated Cover, former price $3.00. Special Price $1.00.

ONLY CLOTH BINDING LEFT
ALL OTHER STYLES SOLD OUT

Remember this special price pays all express charge and delivers this magnificent book weighing 4 lb. 7 oz. size when closed 8 1-2 x 10 1-2 inches, absolutely free of expense.

If the stock is exhausted when your order is received, we will refund the money at once, and as we have only sufficient copies to supply a small percentage of the subscribers of "The Christian Herald," you will be fortunate enough to avail yourself of this exceptional offer.

Send money by money order or registered letter. Write your address plainly, giving your nearest express office.

P. B. BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

000 Waifs Made Happy.
Remarkable Record of Our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, up to the time—A Far-Reaching Charity.

THE POSIES.

EVER the whole world, summer is the season of delight for the young. It is true, winter has peculiar pleasures of its own, but they are sadly restricted, while the golden-hearted summer is full of sunshine and gladness for them, from beginning to end. This ought to be universally true of the little folks, but unfortunately isn't; for there is certainly nothing fascinating about the "glorious" rich, ripening August, in the heat and stenchful atmosphere of work tenements. Yet, the tenement with children, for, be other they may, it is usually the lot of to be blessed with big families. In the present time, as shown by our names, kept at Mont-Lawn, of these poor tenement boys and girls, have been received at our Children's Home, have spent a very happy ten years in the woods and orchards, it are a part of the property. Many visitors to Mont-Lawn, on the midsummer days, was a lady, on a Saturday forenoon last listened to the singing of our children's choir. Her eyes rested upon a curly-headed, barefooted chap of six or six years—a toddler who did so heartily in the early hours he immediately to fall asleep during the day. The lady reached out and touched the fellow on her knee, where he was frequently with wide-open eyes. He was an Italian child of the street, and it was his good fortune number 7,000 on the register. He was known, Canute the Little, the minute the Great at a bound, and he was the recipient of many kind words and pleasant attentions. His mother, warmly commending our Home, are received, almost all contain substantial contributions. Mrs. J. Y. S., Muscatine, writes: "May God's richest blessing rest upon the workers." Mr. J. Bethlehem, Pa., writes: "May the reward of all his servants who do his will and to bring sunshine and gladness into the hearts of the weak and frail, from the hot sunny places of your great city." The Sunday School class (the Little) last year sent $2.50 to the Home, at this year they worked $11.00. I enclose $3.00 for the children who come to Mont-Lawn." Mrs. C. A., of Corona, L. I., writes D. E. L., Edinboro, Pa., "accept the enclosed $10.00 for the tenement waifs' outing." This is $3 to send one more dear child to Mont-Lawn, that they may breathe God's pure air for a short time and revel in the good things arranged for them by loving hands and gentle hearts," writes Mrs. M. A. V., Justin, Cal. "The intense heat of these last days and the suffering even in the country, warns me that it was high time I was giving some poor little one a chance for life," writes A. K. L., Jonesville, Ind. Mrs. J. J., of Oshkosh, Wis., in sending $3, writes: "May it be blessed to the guiding of one pair of little feet at least, into the strait and narrow way." "My own little girl is now in heaven," writes Mrs. M. E. M., Sardis, Miss., "and if by a little self-denial I can help those little ones for Jesus' sake, I send my mite."

Hundreds of others, written in a similar cordial strain, might be quoted to show how deeply our work among the tenement children has touched the hearts of many of God's people. All contributions in aid of the work will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The following were received last week:

Prev ack. $2,622.66	Friend, Dorchester. 1.00
Friend, Lake Linden. 2.00	Grace Stewart. 1.00
N. E. Lendemann. 3.00	R. H. Hannah. 3.00
Mrs J. Mottern. 50	Y. P. C. E. Hope Ch. 1.00
Snrh, Somonank. 1.00	Matamoros. 3.00
Overt Brownsey. 2.50	I. H. N. Boston. 3.00
Mrs A. Parker. 50	Mrs M. Bedell. 3.00
M. M. Oberlin. 2.00	A. R. L. Jonesville. 3.00
In memory of Baby. 3.00	Mrs H. Vinton. 3.00
Mrs. E. Gilbert. 3.00	Virginia, N. J. 1.00
J. E. Moore's wife. 10.00	Mrs J. M. Convin. 3.00
I. H. N. Omaha. 3.00	H. Wood. 2.00
A. H. R. Johnsonville. 1.00	M. S. M. New Berlin. 3.00
Pres. S. Beaver Creek. 8.00	A. Kintergartner's. 3.00
Friend, Rahway. 3.00	Assistant, Dayton. 5.00
Lenox King's Daughters. 3.00	Janet Wherry. 1.00
Mrs. D. Pickens. 2.00	John. 1.00
Friend, Ipswich. 1.00	John Miller. 3.00
H. L. F. Kansas City. 1.00	Mrs C. A. Satterlee. 5.00
E. & W. S. Lake Mills. 2.00	Lee & Ethel Hadley. 50
I will try land, Derby. 6.00	Mite, Melrose. 50
3 Kas. childn. Smith. 10.00	J. Thos Livingston. 1.00
Centre. 10.00	I. H. N. Shiloh. 25
Eden. 10.00	M. O. S. Gloversville. 2.00
Ja. Fraser. 2.00	R. J. Whitney. 3.00
E. M. L. Winthrop. 5.00	R. J. Quale. 3.00
Mrs M. Park. 1.00	M. B. E. Dietz. 1.50
W. H. H. Brooklyn. 1.00	E. G. Dietz. 50
Mrs M. E. Minor. 1.00	H. J. M. Marion. 1.00
Mrs S. Odlin. 50	The Pastor's children. 1.00
M. L. M. Bridgeport. 3.00	Chas. 1.00
Mrs J. Miller. 5.00	Mite, Ohio. 1.00
H. Hales. 5.00	Lizy Jane, Hailey. 5.00
One of the readers of the CH. Esheburne. 1.00	Mrs E. W. Getchell. 3.00
Friend, Bangor. 1.00	Collected by Rosie. 1.00
E. B. S. Canastota. 10.00	& Ernie, Cleveland. 1.00
Mrs. D. W. Geale. 1.00	In memory of the late. 1.00
Rollin B. Heaton. 1.00	Santee Agency. 2.00
Washington Sq. Ch. N. Y. 100.00	Mrs & Mr. L. E. Curtis. 10.00
With best wishes, Ind. 1.00	Mrs C. B. Gough. 3.00
Sunshine Com of Wash. 2.00	Friend, Delavan. 2.00
St. Bapt. Juniors. 3.00	I. H. N. Lambertville. 3.00
Matilda Brooks. 1.00	H. H. Albany. 1.00
Reed's Ridgebury. 1.00	Bertha Schmitz. 10.00
Baroda. 2.00	Friend, Jersey Cy. 2.00
E. R. Holyoke. 1.00	F. M. Wright. 1.00
G. H. Kimball. 6.00	Guests at Rock Enon Springs. 6.00
One who is willing to do what little lies in her power to do. 1.00	Mrs A. R. Wright. 6.00
Yermillion Grove. 1.00	J. J. K. Schoemaker. 3.00
M. W. Oak Hill. 3.00	Vandermeulen. 3.00
Mrs W. B. Voorhees. 2.00	Mrs M. A. 3.00
Mrs J. M. Prentiss. 1.00	K. Bitzel. 6.00
N. M. L. Friend, Jersey Shore. 1.00	Geo W. Stockwell. 3.00
John Gough. 3.00	Friend Woodstock. 1.00
Ja. H. North. 10.00	Copper Union S. S. 2.50
Mrs I. B. Shelling. 3.00	W. A. A. Carthage. 3.00
Nellie M. Hamm. 3.00	Landing. 3.00
E. G. Winn. 2.00	Mrs Frank Woodside. 5.00
Resolute Circle K. D. 1.00	Kuttawa. 1.00
Ivoryton. 6.00	Wm J. Lohbert. 1.00
Mrs N. R. Voorhis. 5.00	Edner Chandler. 3.00
Friends, Astoria. 3.00	Mrs Mary Bennett. 3.00
Balance of proceeds of entertainment given by Connolly childn. 50	M. Keokuk. 2.50
F. S. H. R. Scranton. 25.00	Mite for his sake. 25
Wm Turner. 13.00	J. J. Ala. 20
Woodman & Bros. 13.00	In mem of father and daughter, Middlet'n 1.15
Mrs G. Snitcher. 1.00	Anshelm. 9.00
Mr & Mrs A. M. R. 2.00	C. A. Hazanum. 3.00
Hahn's Peak. 2.00	H. B. Wheeler. 10.06
One who loves children. 3.00	T. Boardman. 10
Luzerne, Pa. 10.00	W. J. Flanders. 15
Mrs. M. Archib. 1.00	So Battle Creek S. S. 1.75
Marion C. Hartell. 1.00	Ima Herkimer. 1.00
I. H. N. Merrimack. 3.00	Wm. H. P. Wilson. 50
Mrs E. Yonnagan. 1.00	E. G. Peckskill. 2.00
Mother, Keokuk. 2.00	Chas Livingston. 12.00
Mrs S. A. Wilde. 1.00	M. S. Manchester. 3.00
	Total. $3,173.97

Truths About Klondyke.

The only authentic, up-to-date, and duly authorized work, as compiled for the Department of Interior of Canada, and is used by the Dominion Government. The very latest maps in colors of the gold region. Ten actual photographic views of the route, including Lake Lindeman, Miles Canon, and the famous White Horse Rapids, taken for the Canadian Government, and other engravings of value and interest.

Also report of Wm. J. Lohbert, Esq., Supervisor for the Dominion, describing in detail difficulties and best means of reaching the Klondyke. Is different subjects of value to prospectors. Tables of distances, means of access, game, fish, etc., etc. Also the reports of the Police Inspector and Health Officer.

Extract from official government report: "Prospecting has only just begun on Bonanza Creek. From one to twelve dollars per pan of dirt, and no bed rock yet. This means from one thousand to twelve thousand dollars a day per man sluicing!" and I may add that every report is more encouraging than the last." Millions will be taken out of this district."

The Canadian Government owns the Klondyke. Read its story of the untold wealth that is there, written by government officials, no fancy stories or fake information. Sent, post-paid, for 50 cents, silver or stamp. Two dollars. Send for a set of maps, each mounted on one dollar. BRITISH AMERICAN PUBLISHING CO., 67 Park Place, P. O. Box 736, N. Y. City. Mention this paper.

EXTRA SPECIAL OFFER!

Positively Limited to September 30.

Our special advance sale of The American Educator ended last month. Several thousand prompt buyers saved 80 per cent. of their money by paying cash for advance sets at half actual cost of making. Of our first edition, wholly set aside for advertising purposes, a very few sets still remain. These will be distributed during September to the earliest applicants on wonderfully easy terms. This extra offer will end when these special sets are allotted, and no order will be accepted later than Sept. 30; therefore, lose no time in securing sample pages and satisfying yourself that this magnificent new work is absolutely without an equal, and positively the only reference work that is fully up to date. Until Sept. 30 a first payment of only

$1.00
SECURES Immediate Possession of the Four Volumes

at less than one-third regular prices, the remainder being payable at the rate of a few cents a day. This proposition deserves the instant attention of every man, woman and child who desires to keep up with the wonderful scientific progress of this marvelous age; and, on these liberal terms, no ambitious student need be without the latest, greatest, and only up-to-date

Encyclopædia, Dictionary & Gazetteer

THE AMERICAN EDUCATOR combines the essential features of a complete general Encyclopædia, a Pronouncing Dictionary, a Library of Biography, and a Gazetteer of the World. It is the work of 200 prominent American scholars and specialists, is based upon the latest reports and statistics up to date of issue, and stands absolutely alone in its treatment of the live subjects of our wonderful to-day. Two-thirds of the subject matter has been written since Jan. 1, 1897—a marvelous performance—and special attention has been given late subjects of 1897, on which all other books are necessarily silent.

4 Immense Volumes
65,000 Encyclopedic Articles.
15,000 Geographical References.
75,000 Biographical Sketches.
10,000 Columns of Solid Matter.

4000 ILLUSTRATIONS.
300 Designs in Brilliant Colors
Cost $250,000
Until Sept. 30 an initial payment of only $1.00 secures the set at the advance price.
That's Our Way of Advertising.

No Other Work Will Tell You All About the KLONDIKE GOLD FIELDS, with maps and charts, prepared by a prominent officer of the U. S. Survey; how to photograph in 3 colors; how to calculate the gear of your "bike"; what Edison and Tesla have discovered in electrical science during 1897; meteorology, astronomy, bacteriology, agricultural chemistry, and all other useful sciences up to date and by the greatest living specialists; hmetalism, banking and currency; battleships and cruisers; Hawaii, Cuba and Greece up to September, 1897; how to pitch a "curved" ball; farm insects and household pests—how to destroy them; Andree's and Nansen's Polar researches; how microbes ripen cheese; population of countries, states, counties, cities, towns and villages, from special reports of 1897; biographies of living men of recent fame—the ones you most want to know about. In short, no other encyclopædia, no matter how large or costly, will tell you half as much regarding matters of present interest and importance.

YOU NEED THIS BOOK, THOUGH YOU HAVE A DOZEN OLDER ONES

Partial List of Editors and Contributors.
Prof. Chas. S. Morris, of Academy of Natural Sciences.
Prof. D. G. Brinton, A. M., M. D., of University of Pa.
Prof. Marcus Benjamin, Ph.D., of Smithsonian Institution.
Prof. Mansfield Merriam, C. E., Ph.D., of Lehigh University.
Prof. J. Mark Baldwin, Ph.D., of Princeton University.
Prof. Simon Newcomb, of U. S. Naval Observatory.
Prof. Ernest Ingersoll, of U. S. Census Bureau.
Rev. John F. Hurst, Bishop of the M. E. Church.
Rev. George T. Purves, D. D., Princeton Theol. Seminary.
Prof. Lewis Swift, Ph.D., M. N. A. S., of Lowe Observatory.
Prof. Amos E. Dolbear, Ph.D., of Tufts College.
William George Jordan, Man. Ed. of Ladies' Home Journal.
Rev. Henry C. Mc Cook, D. D., the eminent Naturalist.
Prof. F. A. Lucas, Ph.D., Curator U. S. National Museum, and nearly 200 other Experts and Specialists.

READ OUR OFFER. The American Educator is now on press and will soon be completed—four great quarto volumes, 9 1/4 x 11 1/2 inches—with more than 4000 superb illustrations, in brilliant color and monotone. There are two styles of binding, viz: Cloth at $35.00 a set, and Half Russia Leather, at $45.00 a set. In pursuance of our well known and original method of advertising and popularizing a new publication, we are distributing the entire first edition at a fraction of the actual cost of paper, printing and binding, thereby securing immediate publicity and endorsement. If you place your order now you may secure one of these advance sets at less than one-third above prices, and on a first payment of only $1.00. All we ask in return for this concession is that you shall show the work to your friends.

HOW TO ORDER. Send $1.00 and the entire set of four volumes will be forwarded on cloth style is desired), making a total payment of $11.00 for the $35.00 set; if Half Russia is preferred (which we strongly recommend) there will be one additional monthly payment of $2.00, making a total of $13.00 for the $45.00 set. Book of sample pages and colored plates free for 2c stamp. Books guaranteed as represented or money refunded if returned in ten days. We refer to any Commercial Agency, and to any bank or newspaper in Philadelphia.

SYNDICATE PUBLISHING CO., Dept. 68, 234-236 S. 8th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

$200.00 IN GOLD GIVEN.
International News and Book Company, Baltimore, make a most liberal offer of $200.00 in gold, for selling 200 copies of "Talks to Children about Jesus." This book is among the most popular ever published. One agent sold 21 in 2 days, another 35 the first week. Freight paid, credit given. They also publish Bibles, and other popular books, and a beautiful set of children's books for the Christmas Holidays. A few General Agents wanted on salary.

CONSECRATED WOMEN
whose mind and heart have been turned in love and sympathy towards erring girls, and feel called to work among them and capable of being matrons in a Home for such girls, communicate with
MRS. K. W. BARRETT, General Superintendent of the National Florence Crittenton Mission, 218 Third St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

$10 to $35. High Grade Bicycles. Largest stock. All makes and models. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. Write today for lists of bargains. T. BROWN, LEVIN Cycle Co., Chicago, Ill.
$9.50 BUYS A HIGH GRADE VICTOR ADAPTED TO LIGHT AND HEAVY WORK. RELIABLE AND FINELY FINISHED. GUARANTEED FOR 10 YEARS. ATTACHMENTS FREE. 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL. Address VICTOR MFG. CO., 90 to 95 Market St., Chicago, Ill.

New Shrub that Cures Kidney and adds Diseases, Rheumatism, etc. Free.
I have previously described the new botanic Alkavis, which proves a specific cure for all diseases of the blood, or disorders of the kidneys or urinary organs. It is now known that Alkavis is a product of the well known Kava Shrub, and is a specific cure for all diseases just as quinine is for malaria. R. Wood, of Lowell, Ind., writes that his wife Alkavis cured him of kidney and bladder disease of ten years' standing, and Rev. Owen, of West Pawlet, Vt., gives testimony. Many ladies also testify to its curative powers in disorders peculiar to women. The only importers of Alkavis so far as the U. S. is concerned, are the Arch Church Kidney Cure Co., of 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, and they are so anxious to prove its due that for the sake of introduction they will give a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid to every reader of The Christian Herald who writes from any form of Kidney or Bladder trouble, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or any ailment due to improper action of the Kidney or Urinary Organs. We advise all sufferers to give names and address to the company, receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you free of cost, and prove its wonderful curative power

HALL PAPER
Write to the largest wall paper house in U. S. for samples—mailed free. From 2 1/2 cts. to $3 1/2 a roll—50 yds. Our prices $9 per cent. lower than others. KAYSER & ALLEN, PHILADELPHIA, 932-934 Market St., 418 Arch Street.

"Mizpah" Valve Nipples
WILL NOT COLLAPSE
and therefore prevent much colic. The valve prevents a vacuum being formed to collapse them. The ribs inside prevent collapsing when the child bites them. The rim is such that they cannot be pulled off the bottle.
Sample Free by Mail.
WALTER F. WARE, 512 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
CRAZY WORK 800 SILK REMNANTS, enough for a Quilt, 4 yds. 50c. IMMENSE PACK, with Boss & patterns, 10c. postpaid. Lemarie's Silk Mill, Little Ferry, N. J.

MUST HAVE AGENTS
 end Door Holders. Sample Sash L fresh cent stamp. Immense, better than white proof. $10 a day. Write quick. Free
BROTHARD & CO., Box 22, Philadelphia

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK. VOLUME 20.—NUMBER 35.

De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 1, 1897.

JEWISH EYES TURNING TO ZION.

Agitation for the Return of the Ancient Race and their Colonization in Palestine—The Restoration Prophecies.

ALTHOUGH all races and creeds may be found intermingled in the Holy City, the native Jewish type is easily distinguished. Our illustration on this page shows a group of aged Hebrews of a class one meets in almost all the public and thoroughfares. Bent with age and weary with travel—it may be from Europe, Russia, or the farther East—their countenances are sad and their eyes are representative of the Jews who, wherever they find their way to the beloved Jerusalem, are satisfied if they are allowed to rest peacefully to make their pilgrimage, or, perhaps, to pass a few remaining years of their lives.

In a series of interesting articles he is now contributing to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Dr. S. H. Merrill, long United States Consul in Jerusalem, has faithfully described the orthodox Jews in their native home. While the Conference is in session in Basle, for its principal object, the discussion of the question to establish Jewish colonies in Palestine, and thus to bring to pass the restoration of the ancient race to their own inheritance. Dr. Merrill is supported by an influential fellowship of friends in Europe and America. Moreover, the movement has been popularized by the continued persecution of the Jewish race in Russia, and in other European countries—conditions which have led to the study of Scripture and the hope that clearly show the return of the Jews after much persecution and suffering, to their ancient seat, and the restoration of Jewish influence. It is noted that their ancient past tribulations have been providentially designed for the purpose of fixing their feet upon their patriarchal home. Ostracized everywhere, our own free people are, in these latter days of the century, turning their vision Zionward, and reviving the hopes spoken by the prophets (Isaiah 42:42-44), may be in course of fulfillment, and the Lord "will cause captivity to return." It again places in our possession "the fields and the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the south." Then, when the restoration is complete, shall come that which Zechariah foresaw (chap. 14, verse 16), that the nations shall go up year by year to worship the Lord and to keep the Feast of Tabernacles. Although the rehabilitation of the Jewish State has been a dream of the ages, to multitudes of the race scattered throughout the globe it never seemed nearer to realization than now. It is not expected by the leaders of the Basle movement, that the land can at this time, or even in the near future, be acquired by purchase, for the Sultan, as possessor through ancient conquest, clings to his possession, and will not willingly part with a foot of Palestinian soil. It is thought, however, that the Turkish ruler might ultimately be induced to yield assent to an arrangement under which, by the payment of annual rental or tribute, the Jews might return to the land of their fathers. (Isaiah 14:1-4.) Cherishing this beautiful hope—which is an essential part of their religion—the Jewish race has preserved through all the passing centuries, its individuality and the integrity of its political and religious purpose. To be a participant in this glorious restoration is the ambition of every son and daughter of Abraham to-day—an ambition which ages of suffering and world-wide dispersion have been powerless to eradicate. So the Jews of Jerusalem to-day, old and young, as they walk about the walls of their beloved city, turn to those sacred pages that are illumined by the prophecies of a restored nation and a glorious reunion.

Travelers estimate that there is at the present time a larger Jewish population in Jerusalem than at any period since the Moslem conquest, and their number is constantly increasing by immigration. Max Nordau, one of the foremost advocates of the movement for the return, and who is thoroughly well informed on the subject, asserts that "Palestine could support six million Jews," adding "but we do not expect more than three million to settle at first." He points to the fact that all attempts by philanthropists and others to found permanent Jewish colonies in other lands have resulted in failure, as further evidence that they are destined to have no fixed habitation, until they turn their faces toward their divinely allotted location, in Palestine.

Twenty-eight sieges have covered up with accumulated ruins the ancient glories of Jerusalem, and every abortive effort to wrest the Holy City from the hands of the infidel Turks has added to the burden of Hebrew sorrows. No other people, since the beginning of time, has suffered so long or so deeply, and none have a more intense love of the land of their forefathers—a love which has the warmest sympathy of the whole Christian world. Even the nations which in times past have been ranked among the persecutors of the race of Abraham, would rejoice to see the holy places of Judah and Israel once more in the possession of the "chosen people." When Mount Zion, celebrated in psalm and song, the site of the ancient Temple, the citadel of David, the "little town of Bethlehem" with its hallowed manger, the sacred soil of Olivet and the precious Rock of Calvary, are no longer Mohammedan, it will be a day of world-wide rejoicing indeed.

AGED JEWS IN JERUSALEM, READING THE SACRED PROPHECIES.

SEEKERS AT NORTHFIELD.

Thirteenth Convention at Northfield of Christians Intent on Gaining Spiritual Power for Future Evangelistic Work—Two Notable Preachers.

THE fifteenth Bible Conference just closed at Northfield will be memorable even to those who have attended those which have gone before. The intense earnestness of speakers and hearers was manifest throughout the eighteen days of the meeting. The higher life was not explicitly the subject of conference. The attention of the convention was directed to those subjects which are included in that phrase. It was assumed that every one present was a Christian. There are no evangelistic meetings at these conventions. Mr. Moody's object being to deepen the spiritual life, not to impart it. It is the post-graduate course of the Christian, who has entered the church and needs deeper and fuller views of the Kingdom within his reach, and the way to the treasures where power is kept for those who have the key to the doors. The object of the speakers are aimed at showing Christians what they may become and what their religion may do for them and what Christ expects of them, and, above all, how ready Christ is to impart to them the power they need to live Christ's life eternally. As the meetings progressed the effect of the teaching was seen in the countenance of the people. There was a deeper piety, and an evident desire to use every opportunity for prayer and solitary meditation. It was a wonderful experience, like that which the three disciples had in the Mount of Transfiguration, which impelled Peter to say, "Lord, it is good to be here." Like the disciples, however, the need to return to the world of service could not be postponed, but there is many a field of labor which will yield the effects of those seasons of holy communion where the laborer was refreshed and consecrated for his work. Among the speakers at the Convention took a prominent part were: Mr. Moody, Bishop Newman, Dr. A. T. Pierpont, Rev. R. A. Torrey, Dr. A. A. Lyon, Dr. Teunis A. Ham, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, Dr. W. J. Erdman. But the addresses of the Convention left the deepest influence on the people were two preachers from the other side the Atlantic—Rev. George Campbell Morgan and Rev. Geo. H. C. Macgregor. These preachers are thirty-five years old and both occupy prominent pulpits in London. They belong to what is known as the Keswick School, and have exercised a notable influence on the higher religious life in England. Mr. Morgan is pastor of the Tollington Park Church, which boasts of having had for one of its ministers Richard Baxter, the author of "Saints' Everlasting Rest." A year or two ago Mr. Morgan was heard at Ocean Grove and preached at the Metropolitan Temple in New York. Dr. B. Meyer advised Mr. Morgan to invite him, and the result has justified the advice. Mr. Macgregor is pastor of the church at Northfield, London, to which the late Dr. Saphir ministered. He is a Scotchman and was pastor of one of the largest Free churches of Aberdeen before going to London. He assisted Mr. Moody in the world's Fair campaign in 1893, and his acceptable were his services that he was engaged to become pastor of the Chicago Avenue Church, which was organized by Moody and is now under the pastorate of Rev. R. A. Torrey. Mr. Macgregor is one of the managers of the Keswick movement and has been for eight years active in the Conventions there. Mr. Moody arranged to have these two speakers give an address every morning. Mr. Morgan speaking first on alternate days and Mr. Macgregor first on the other days. Both men are somewhat ascetic in appearance and in their teaching, and were frank in exposing those faults of Christians, which are generally deemed harmless but which, as they believe, diminish spiritual power. Smoking, drinking, excessive eating and sleeping all came in for denunciation and many other indulgences which usually escape condemnation from the pulpit. The style of Mr. Macgregor's preaching may be gathered from the following extract from one of his vigorous addresses:

"If you and I are ever to enter into possession of our heritage in Christ Jesus, we must first deal definitely with God about our sins. We must examine ourselves to discover them, and when they are discovered we must drag them forth, that in God's presence they may be slain. To this work we now set ourselves. My object will be to help you to make it thorough."

"What, then, is it in your life that hinders you from actually experiencing the fulfillment of God's promises? Is it some act or course or habit of wrongdoing? It may be something in your secret life—the life of which none but God knows—some habit of thought, some exercise of the imagination that is impure

"Or it may be the trouble with you lies in your business life. Your love of money and your eager pursuit of it have hindered you in the Christian race. Your heart condemns you, low that in your business you have been, as you say, compelled to follow worldly ways. You are conscious of a certain irritation at being asked to examine your business life. That irritation is the evidence that something is wrong. Search yourselves, brethren."

"What are you seeking? What do you want? What is the sense of lack in your life at the present time? Perhaps some would say to me, 'I am very lonely. God came into my life a little while ago and took out the dearest friend of all the days and the years, and there is that great gap there. And I am athirst this morning for companionship. Ties were broken and a place left empty, and I have just pined in the lonely darkness ever since. I want

NORTHFIELD BUILDINGS FROM THE RIVER BANK.

Search yourselves as with a lighted candle. For, remember, sin cherished turns blessing away. Iniquity persisted in cancels the divine promise; so Israel found her disobedience changed the blessing into a curse. So we will find it. It will be impossible for us to enjoy the consciousness of the divine favor and blessing if we are living in things displeasing to our God."

"But perhaps what is hindering us from the blessing may be not so much an friendship and companionship.' If that is your answer to the question, I want to mark this truth, and although it may seem a hard one, I would not say it if there were not healing behind: so long as you are living and serving with that sense of lack of companionship, you cannot be a channel through which rivers of living waters shall flow. You are a thirsty soul. If you have to think about your own pain and loneliness and bereavement, that thirst in your life prevents your giving out anything to any one else. It is one of the most sublime forms by which many Christian workers are hindered."

"When the soul comes into the place of surrender, the Master comes into the place of possession, and not till then can you and I become channels of blessing to others in the full and large and blessed sense of the term. God wants us to come away from ourselves, our enterprises, our foregone conclusions, and say, 'Lord, I come to thee alone; do thou reveal thyself to me and take me fully and satisfy me with thyself.' Is that possible? Blessedly possible. Some three or four years ago, Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, told me how, upon one occasion, in China, God gave him that promise as he had never had it before. God seemed to come to him with that great promise. 'He that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst.'"

"Mr. Taylor told me he lived right in the secret and glory of it, realizing there was never a day he thirsted for anything, because Christ absolutely filled all the gaps and avenues in his life. Suddenly darkness settled upon him, and God took from his side, out there in China, his beloved wife. He told me of the day when, having committed her to the soil in that strange land, he went back into his own room and getting down before his Master, he said, 'Lord Jesus, thou didst say I should never thirst,' and it seemed as if his Master, bending over him, said to him, 'Well, what are you thirsting for?' He said to me, 'I could not look my Lord in the face and tell him I wanted companionship, and from that supreme hour of darkness in my life he filled the whole horizon, and I went quietly on with my work resting with him.'

"I warn you, my beloved brethren and sisters, at this convention not to seek the baptism of the Spirit merely to help you to do anything. Seek rather to know the will of God and to get into the very place of power with God, in order that God may have his way with you."

A MEETING IN THE AUDITORIUM AT NORTHFIELD.

and unholy. It may be some book that is read in secret—tasted as a forbidden thing, and sweeter because forbidden. It may be some course of action which breaks and destroys communion with God. It may be something in your family life—over-indulgence in matters of eating or drinking or dress. It may be selfishness—an unwillingness to consult the comfort of those that live with us—ill temper, irritability, the habit of fretfulness and complaining when things are not exactly as you would wish them to be."

"Or, perhaps it is something in your social life. It may be a certain pride, an envy at some one more highly placed. It may be a habit of evil-speaking, or a certain untruthfulness. Or perhaps the hindrance lies in worldly conformity. You love the pleasures of the world, and for the sake of those dear to you you plunge into them, acting in direct disobedience to the command, 'Come ye out from among them and be ye separate.'" iniquity as a sin. It may be that we are refusing to do what God commands. What is withholding the good you desire from you? It may be a neglect of the Bible or a neglect of prayer, or a neglect of witnessing for Christ. Any disobedience of a divine command, quite as often as any transgression of the divine law, is the cause that hinders us from entering into fulness of blessing."

Mr. Morgan's preaching was equally searching. Speaking on the text John 7: 37-39: He said: "The baptism of the Holy Spirit would upset a great many of our arrangements in the churches to-day that we are apt to think very beautiful. What is this personal condition? May we ask ourselves in the presence of God, What is the supreme sense of need in my life at the present time? That question cannot be answered in the crowd. I must get into the place of calm and quiet and loneliness with my Master if I am to answer it aright."

A STORM AT SEA.

A Sermon by

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Mark 4: 36, 39.

And there were also with him other little ships,
... and there arose a great storm of wind. ... And the wind ceased and there was a great calm.

IBERIAS, Galilee, Gennesaret—three names for the same lake. No other gem ever had so beautiful a setting. It lay in a scene of great luxuriance: the surrounding hills high, terraced, sloped, groved, so many hanging gardens of beauty; the waters rumbling down between rocks of gray and red limestone, flashing from the hills, and bounding into the sea. On the shore were castles, armed towers. Roman baths, everything attractive and beautiful; all styles of vegetation in shorter space than in almost any other space in all the world, from the palm-tree of the forest to the trees of a rigorous climate.

It seemed as if the Lord had launched one wave of beauty on all the scene, and it hung and swung from rock and hill and oleander. Roman gentlemen in pleasure boats sailing the lake, and countrymen in fish-smacks coming down to drop their nets, pass each other with nod and shout and laughter, or swinging idly at their moorings. Oh, what a wonderful, what a beautiful lake!

It seems as if we shall have a quiet night. Not a leaf winked in the air; not a ripple disturbed the face of Gennesaret; but there seems to be a little excitement up the beach, and we hasten to see what it is, and we find it an embarkation.

From the western shore a flotilla pushing out: not a squadron, or deadly armament, nor clipper with valuable merchandise, nor piratic vessels ready to destroy everything they could seize; but a flotilla, bearing messengers of life, and light, and peace. Christ is in the front of the boat. His disciples are in a smaller boat. Jesus, weary with much speaking to large multitudes, is put into somnolence by the rocking of the waves. If there was any motion at all, the ship was easily righted; if the wind passed from one side, from the starboard to the larboard, or from the larboard to the starboard, the boat would rock, and by the gentleness of the motion putting the Master asleep. And they extemporized a pillow made out of a fisherman's coat. I think no sooner is Christ prostrate, and his head touching the pillow, than he is sound asleep. The breezes of the lake run their fingers through the locks of the worn sleeper, and the boat rises and falls like a sleeping child on the bosom of a sleeping mother.

Calm night, starry night, beautiful night. Run up all the sails, ply all the oars, and let the large boat and the small boat glide over gentle Gennesaret. But the sailors say there is going to be a change of weather. And even the passengers can hear the moaning of the storm, as it comes on with long stride, with all the terrors of hurricane and darkness. The large boat trembles like a deer at bay trembling among the clangor of the hounds; great patches of foam are flung into the air; the sails of the vessels loosen, and the sharp winds crack like pistols; the smaller boats like petrels poise on the cliff of the waves and then plunge. Overboard go cargo, tackling, and masts, and the drenched disciples rush into the back part of the boat, and lay hold of Christ, and say unto him: "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" That great personage lifts his head from the pillow of the fisherman's coat, walks to the front of the vessel, and looks out into the storm. All around him are the smaller boats, driven in the tempest, and through it comes the cry of drowning men. By the flash of the lightning I see the calm brow of Christ. He has one word for the sky, and another word for the waves. Looking upward he cries, "Peace!" Looking downward he says, "Be still."

The waves fall flat on their faces, the foam melts, the extinguished stars re-light their torches. The tempest falls dead, and Christ stands with his foot on the neck of the storm. And while the sailors are bailing out the boats, and while they are trying to untangle the cordage, the disciples stand in amazement, now looking into the calm sea, then into the calm sky, then into the calm of the Saviour's countenance, and they cry out: "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him?"

The subject in the first place impresses me with the fact that it is very important to have Christ in the ship; for all those boats would have gone to the bottom of Gennesaret if Christ had not been present. Oh, what a lesson for you and for me to learn! Whatever voyage we undertake, into whatever enterprise we start, let us always have Christ in the ship. Many of you in these days of revived commerce are starting out in new financial enterprises. I bid you good cheer. Do all you can do. Do it on as high a plane as possible. You have no right to be a stoker in the ship if you can be an admiral of the navy. You have no right to be a colonel of a regiment if you can command a brigade; you have no right to be engineer of a boat on river-banks, or near the coast, if you can take the ocean steamer from New York to Liverpool. All you can do with utmost tension of body, mind and soul, you are bound to do; but oh! have Christ in every enterprise. Christ in every voyage, Christ in every ship.

There are men who ask God to help them at the start of great enterprises. He has been with them in the past; no trouble can overthrow them; the storms might come down from the top of Mt. Hermon, and lash Gennesaret into foam and into agony, but it could not hurt them. But here is another man who starts out in worldly enterprise, and he depends upon the uncertainties of this life. He has no God to help him. After awhile the storm comes, and tosses off the masts of the ship; he puts out his life-boat; the sheriff and the auctioneer try to help him off; they can't help him off; he must go down; no Christ in the ship. Here are young men just starting out in life. Your life will be made up of sunshine and shadow. There may be in it arctic blasts or tropical tornadoes; I know not what is before you, but I know if you have Christ with you all shall be well.

You may seem to get along without the religion of Christ while everything goes smoothly, but after awhile, when sorrow hovers over the soul, when the waves of trial dash clear over the hurricane deck, and the bowsprit is shivered, and the halliards are swept into the sea, and the gangway is crowded with piratical disasters—oh, what would you then do without Christ in the ship? Young man, take God for your portion. God for your guide. God for your help; then all is well; all is well for time, all shall be well forever. Blessed is that man who puts in the Lord his trust. He shall never be confounded.

But my subject also impresses me with the fact that when people start to follow Christ they must not expect smooth sailing. These disciples got into the small boats, and I have no doubt they said, "What a beautiful day this is! What a smooth sea! What a bright sky this is! How delightful is sailing in this boat; and as for the waves under the keel of the boat, why, they only make the motion of our little boat the more delightful." But when the winds swept down, and the sea was tossed into wrath, then they found that following Christ was not smooth sailing. So you have found it; so I have found it. Did you ever notice the end of the life of the apostles of Jesus Christ? You would say that if ever men ought to have had a smooth life, a smooth departure, then those men, the disciples of Jesus Christ, ought to have had such a departure and such a life.

St. James lost his head. St. Philip was hung to death on a pillar. St. Matthew had his life dashed out with a halbert. St. Mark was dragged to death through the streets. St. James the Less was beaten to death with a fuller's club. St. Thomas was struck through with a spear. They did not find following Christ smooth sailing. Oh, how they were all tossed in the tempest! John Huss in the fire; Hugh McKail in the hour of martyrdom; the Albigenses, the Waldenses, the Scotch Covenanters—did they find it smooth sailing?

But why go to history when I can find all around me a score of illustrations of the truth of this subject? That young man in the store trying to serve God, while his employer scoffs at Christianity, the young men in the same store antagonistic to the Christian religion, teasing him, tormenting him about his religion, trying to get him mad. They succeed in getting him mad, saying, "You're a pretty Christian." Does this young man find it smooth sailing when he tries to follow Christ? Here is a Christian girl. Her father despises the Christian religion; her mother despises the Christian religion; her brothers and sisters scoff at the Christian religion; she can hardly find a quiet place in which to say her prayers. Did she find it smooth sailing when she tried to follow Jesus Christ? Oh, no; all who would live the life of the Christian religion must suffer persecution; if you do not find it in one way, you will get it in another way.

The question was asked, "Who are those nearest the throne?" and the answer came back: "These are they who came up out of great tribulation;"—"great flailing;" as the original has it; great flailing, great pounding—"and had their robes washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb." Oh, do not be disheartened. Oh, child of God! take courage. You are in glorious companionship. God will see you through all these trials, and he will deliver you.

My subject also impresses me with the fact that good people sometimes get very much frightened. In the tones of these disciples as they rushed into the back part of the boat, I find they are frightened almost to death. They say: "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" They had no reason to be frightened, for Christ was in the boat. I suppose if we had been there we would have been just as much affrighted. Perhaps more.

In all ages very good people get very much affrighted. It is often so in our day, and men say, "Why, look at the bad lectures; look at the Spiritualistic societies; look at the various errors going over the Church of God; we are going to founder; the Church is going to perish, she is going down." Oh, how many good people are affrighted by triumphant iniquity in our day, and think the Church of Jesus Christ and the cause of righteousness are going to be overthrown, and are just as much affrighted as the disciples of my text were affrighted. Don't worry, don't fret, as though iniquity were going to triumph over righteousness.

A lion goes into a cavern to sleep. He lies down, with his shaggy mane covering the paws. Meanwhile the spiders spin a web across the mouth of the cavern, and say, "We have captured him." Gossamer thread after gossamer thread is spun until the whole front of the cavern is covered with the spiders' web, and the spiders say, "The lion is done; the lion is fast." After awhile the lion has got through sleeping; he rouses himself, he shakes his mane, he walks out into the sunlight; he does not even know the spiders' web is spun, and with his voice he shakes the mountain.

So men come, spinning their sophistries and scepticism about Jesus Christ; he seems to be sleeping. They say, "We have captured the Lord; he will never come forth again upon the nation; Christ is captured, and captured forever. His religion will never make any conquest among men." But after awhile the Lion of the tribe of Judah will rouse himself and come forth to shake mightily the nations. What is a spider's web to the aroused lion? Give truth and error a fair grapple, and truth will come off victor.

But there are a great many good people who get affrighted in other respects; they are affrighted in our day abominations. They say, "Oh! this is a religious gale; we are afraid the Church of God is going to upset, and there is going to be a great many people brought to the Church that are going to be used to it;" and they are affrighted whenever they see a revival taking hold of churches.

As though a ship captain with five thousand bushels of wheat for a cargo should say, some day, coming upon deck, "Throw overboard all the cargo;" and the captain should say, "Why, captain, what do you mean? Throw over all the cargo?" Oh, says the captain, "we have a peck of chaff that has got into this five thousand bushels of wheat, and the only way to get rid of chaff is to throw all the wheat overboard. Now, that is a great deal wiser than to talk of a great many Christians who are to throw overboard all the thousands and tens of thousands of souls who have been brought in through great awakenings. Throw all overboard because there is a peck of chaff, a quart of chaff, a bushel of chaff! I say, let them stay until the day; the Lord will divide the chaff from the wheat.

Oh, that these gales from heaven sweep through all our churches! In such days as Richard Baxter saw in London and Robert McChesney saw in New York, and in Northampton! I have heard my father tell of the fact that in the early part of this century a revival came in Somerville, N. J., and some of the people were very much agitated about it. He said, "Oh, you are going to bring ten people into the church at once;" and he sent down to New Brunswick to get John Livingston to stop the revival. We thought there was no better soul in all the world than John Livingston. He went up; he looked at the revival; they wanted him to stop. He stood in the pulpit on the Sabbath, and looked over the solemn auditory, and said: "This, brethren, is in reality the work of God; beware how you try to stop it. And he was an old man, leaning heavily on his staff—a very old man. And he lifted his staff, and took hold of the small end of the staff, and began to let it fall very slowly, through, between the finger and the thumb, and he said: "Oh, thou impetuous heart falling now—falling away from the falling away from peace and heaven, falling as certainly as that cane is falling through my hand—falling certainly, or perhaps falling very slowly." And the cane kept on falling through John Livingston's hand. The religious emotion of the audience was overpowering, and rising a type of their doom as the cane kept falling and falling until the knob of the staff struck Mr. Livingston's hand, and he clasped it stoutly and said, "But the work of God can stop you, as I stopped the cane;" and then there was gladness through the house at the fact of the cane and peace and salvation. "We are the people after the service," I guess had better send Livingston home, he is making the revival worse." Oh, the gales from heaven, and Christ on the ship. The danger of the Church of God is not in revivals.

Again, my subject impresses me with the fact that Jesus was God and in the same being. Here he is in the back part of the boat. Oh, how tired he must be! What sad dreams he must have! Oh, his countenance; he must be tired, the cross to come. Look at him, a man—bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh. Tired, he falls asleep; he is a man, then I find Christ at the prow of the boat. I hear him say, "Peace, be still;" and the storm kneeling at his feet, the tempests folding their wings in his presence; he is a God.

If I have sorrow and trouble, a word of sympathy, I go and kneel down at the back part of the boat, and say, "O, weary one of Gennesaret, sympathize with all my sorrows, man of Nazareth, and take the cross." A man, a man. But I want to conquer my spiritual foes, if I cannot get the victory over sin, death, and hell, come to the front of the boat, and kneel down, and I say, "O, Lord Jesus, thou who dost hush the tempest, hush my grief; hush all my temptations; I am a poor sinner, a man; a God, a God."

I learn once more from this subject that Christ can hush a tempest. The disciples had given up the idea of making the ship; the crew were entirely demoralized; yet Christ rises, and he puts the ship

On a storm, and it crouches at his feet. O her! Christ can hush the tempest. You have had trouble. Perhaps it was the little child taken away from you—the sweetest child of the household. The one who asked the most curious questions, and stood around you with the greatest fondness, and the spade cut through your bleeding head. Perhaps it was an only son, and your heart has ever since been like a deserted castle, the owls in the night hooting among the falling rafters, and the crumbling stairway. Perhaps it was an only daughter. You always went to her with your sorrows. She was in your heart to welcome you when you came into life, and when she died she was like a pity you; that she will do you no more kindness: a white lock of hair you put away in the pocket, or in the locket, did not look as it usually did when she brushed it away from her wrinkled brow in the morning circle or in the country church. Or your property gone, you said, "I have so much bank stock, I have so many government securities, I have so many houses, and so many farms"—all gone, all in vain.

Why, all the storms that ever threatened with their thunders, all the shipwrecks, have not been worse than this to you. Yet you have not been completely overcome. Why? Christ hushed the tempest. Your little one was taken away. He says, "I have that little one; I can care of him as well as you can, better than you can, O bereaved mother!" Hushing the tempest. When your property went away, God said, "There are treasures in heaven, in banks that never break."

There is one storm into which we will never run, the moment when we let go of this life, and try to take hold of the next when we will want all the grace we can give—we will want it all. Yonder I see the Christian soul rocking on the surges of death: all the powers of darkness seem to be at it against that soul—the swirling of the thunder of the sky, the screaming of the angels, all seem to unite together; but the soul is not troubled; there is no sighing, there are no tears; plenty of tears in the room at the departure, but he weeps no more; calm, satisfied, peaceful; all is well. Jesus hushing the tempest. By the blast of the storm you see the harbor just ahead, and you are making for that harbor. Strike eight bells. All is well.

To the harbor of heaven now we glide:
We're home at last, home at last.
Still we drift on its bright, silvery tide,
We're home at last, home at last.
Cry to God, all our dangers are o'er,
Stand secure on the glorified shore:
Cry to God, we will shout evermore,
We're home at last, home at last.

A Temple at Auction.

A remarkable building near Chatham, England, known as "The Temple," has recently been sold at public auction, bringing only a small price, altogether disproportionate to its original cost. It is a monument of fanaticism, and was begun many years ago by a sect called the "Jezzeels," followers of a man named White, who called himself Jezreel, and proposed to build together up there on the top of Chatham Hill the 144,000 of the lost tribes of Israel who are to ascend to heaven at the millennium.

This singular temple was intended to be in 144 families of them, and it is now there to this day, a vast brick and mortar shell 124 feet square. It is said to have cost $200,000. It was built of fireproof materials, so as to resist the general conflagration at the end of the world. It is generally believed that the money was supplied by a Mrs. Cane, who had sold out her estate to enter the new movement. White's followers were taught that he would not die, at any rate till the tribes had been got together. He did die, however, and nine or ten years ago his wife (who was called "Queen Esther") died also. For many years the basement of the unfinished temple was used as a printing office, from which enormous quantities of Jezzeelish literature have been poured out and circulated throughout the world.

OUR BUSY ORPHAN BOYS AT OORFA.

Miss Shattuck Writes of their Progress in Education and Industry—How they are Employed in Vacation Time—Forgetting their Sorrows.

It is a beautiful and comforting thought for those readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who have furnished the means of rescue and education for our large family of Armenian orphans at Oorfa, to know that the little people hold their benefactors daily in most affectionate remembrance. Rescued, body and soul, from the Mohammedan tyrants who slew their parents, these children are being trained to useful Christian lives. In the letter below, Miss Corinna Shattuck, our faithful missionary guardian of the children, tells us of their welfare and progress, and we believe what she has written will have an interest for all our readers. The photographs accompanying the letter show groups of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Orphan Boys, all bright lads, whose whole lives and prospects have now been changed from gloom and sadness to glad anticipation and hope. Miss Shattuck's letter is as follows:

"OORFA, July 20, 1897.
"Dear Christian Herald Friends:
"We are in the midst of vacation days. Our 1,801 pupils were all very happy at release from school a month ago, and all for two or three hours in the back yard has been but play for the boys. It has been quite irresistible: I have had to raise my head at almost every cart-load of boy, as they returned from the hill, so merrily jolted. Never once have I heard them quarrel, as they pulled or rode in turn. To-day they have finished tying 800 brooms for use during the year. These are from a stiff weed, found on the hillsides and used for scrubbing pavements, as well as ordinary sweeping. Our last year's supply long since gave out, as we were not expecting to sweep or scrub to the extent we were obliged to, by so great a crowd, and the boys have had to use hemp cloth mops, as they wash the paved part in our large front yard three times a week.

ARMENIAN ORPHANS CLEARING A PIECE OF GROUND.

"One grand work for them has been filling a cistern which was not in readiness for the rains last winter. 6,000 buckets of water were lugged without any complaint, being apportioned off in regular system, and their eight-quart tin pails being light. The water not yet three weeks buried is sufficiently cold to be a refreshment to us all these hot days, when the thermometer stands for twelve hours between 90 and 100 in the shade.

"It is not easy to keep memory what it took four primers, in some cases, to impress upon them. A few of the older ones are working up lessons in which they were somewhat deficient.

Others are reading during a part of their leisure. Thus far, the habit of being busy has not been lost, and I trust may not be during the entire vacation.

"The older eight boys every Saturday evening come to my room for a little time after the others have sung and recited their verses and throw themselves down on the long platform on the big roof, with the glorious heavens for a ceiling, and all the city as companions in the same room.

"The change that has come over some of these lads during a year is very gratifying. One who did not know his alphabet is now able to look up references with the others and he has a decidedly changed face and heart. I believe.

"We know that in the care of these precious children, you are co-workers with us, and thus we write of what interests us and them. Your prayers are constantly needed for not only these, but those all about us, some less comfortable than the children you call yours. Sincerely, CORINNA SHATTUCK."

Armenian Aid.

The following contributions to the Armenian relief work have been received:

Prev ack'd. $8,364.94	Mrs Jas Semple...	2 00
L B M. Warsaw...	C A Hagaman...	3 00
2 friends, Newcastle...	M Leith...	1 00
Mrs J Heatwole...	R L M. Phila...	5 00
A P C E. Prairie Hall...	A L C. Balto...	1 00
	W L O. Springfield...	1 00
	E L S. Ark...	5 00
	C A Hagaman...	3 00
	P C E. Berea C'ty...	14 00
	I H N. Manchester...	1 00
	I H N. Denver...	5 00
	Ticonderoga...	2 00
	Marie L Hauck...	1 00
	Elizabeth Herkimer...	5 00
	W Dayton School...	7 65
	M Zook...	1 00
	W H M S M E Ch...
	Harrisville...	5 00
	Mrs O C T. River... side...	1 00
	A E. Cole...	1 00
	Bro J R Norris...	5 00
	Mrs Marie S Wil...
	lisms...	1 00
	Rev. John Walker...	1 00
	Friend, So Livonia...	1 00
	Ladies Aid Society...
	Earville Ch...	4 00
	Pity, Pasadena...	5 00
	M R Stover...	1 00
	G H S. E. Orange...	5 00
	G B Shirts...	3 00
	Friend, Louisville...	3 00
	Mrs K R Forgy...	1 00
	St Louis...	5 00
	Jennie P Smith...	2 00
	Mrs C B Gough...	1 00
	Friends, Tarrytown...	2 50
	Mrs H A Cunning... ham...	5 00
	In Christ's name,
	New York...	2 00
	C A Hagaman...	3 00
	The Lord's money,
	Dudley...	2 00
	2 friends, Nichols...	3 00
	Oliver Porter...	1 25
	Goodville Union SS...	2 50
	Mrs Georgia Goot...	5 00
	Wm J D Perrin...	1 00
	C A Hagaman...	3 00
	S Z Taylor...	3 00
	Mrs S S Simmons...	1 00
	C A Hagaman...	3 00
	Y P S C E, Cumb Pres...
	ch, Madisonville...	5 00
	J Seward Frank...	5 00
	Miranda Peck...	2 00
	Anon, S Branch Nat...
	Home...	1 00
	Union Hope S S Dist...
	No 2, Remington...	7 00
	Anna Backus...	5 00
	Bert Myers...	5 00
	Mrs O Hills...	25 00
	Mrs C Johnston...	25 00
	Total...	$8,550.04

OUR ORPHANS AT LUNCH.

would be equally happy to begin school to-morrow. In our Home we are getting on very nicely, though it did seem rather formidable as we looked forward to the sixty-five boys being set free for long, hot July days. I felt a new sympathy with the mothers who would incline to perpetual school.

"We quickly disposed of eight boys for half-day work with olaja weavers, one extra boy put into our shoe-shop, making eight there, and four were sent to a carpenter. These all serve in turn, half-day at work, half-day off.

"Our enlargement of our school premises by purchase of neighboring rooms gave an uneven, disorderly yard, which was not to be at present arranged by hewing away the rough-faced ledge, but filling in with stone cuttings at hand, and levelling off with the fine stone dust, white as chalk, which rolled, becomes hard. Krikore, who has been with us as servant since last we nursed him, with his awful six wounds after those memorable massacre days, made a little cart with a big amount of racket about it, and work our little ones out of the sun during the extreme heat, and a few have had a touch of ophthalmia (eye disease), but only slightly as yet. It is the dread of all mothers at this season and most of them seem to feel that it is an unavoidable evil, but we do not accept this as the truth.

"The older boys listen to the little ones reading for an hour and a-half every morning, that they may not let slip from their

SCRUBBING THE COURTYARD UNDER KRIKORE'S INSTRUCTIONS.

Silver Stream S S...	7 50
Jas T Cox...	1 00
Andrew Hagerman...	2 00
A H Kershaw...	5 00
J E Amerman...	1 00
Nellie Spangler...	25 00
C S Cooper...	25 00
J H Bowlin...	25 00
Wm J Van Doren...	1 00
A J Kershaw...	10 00
Doe Lake I O G T...
No 127, Royston...	2 00
Miss J Oepke, col by...	15 35

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

CHRISTIAN LIVING.

Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 12. Rom. 12: 9-21. Golden Text Rom. 12: 21.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

CHRISTIAN living! Living out in our lives the life of Christ! What does it involve? The whole of the doctrinal part of the Epistle to the Romans leads up to this twelfth chapter, where the experimental life of the Christian is dealt with. How should we obey the holy precepts, which are our subject for to-day, if we had not learned our utter depravity, and our justification through faith alone (Rom. 1: 4)? How should we produce from a fallen nature "the righteousness of God" (Rom. 3: 22); how should the impure bring forth purity? How, being justified by faith and having peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, should we be saved from our self-life by his life (Rom. 5: 10), except our old man had been crucified with him, and we had been made "alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6: 6, 11)? Only the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus can make us "free from the law of sin and death" (Rom. 8: 2). The former part of the Epistle makes the latter part possible.

But if these things are personal realities to us—if in every deed we "walk, not after the flesh, but after the Spirit;" if indeed, we are "led by the Spirit," if we are truly "waiting for our adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our body" if we are "predestinated . . . to be conformed to the image of God's Son" (Rom. 8: 4, 14, 23, 29), can he, by any possibility, ask too much of us? That we should be called to, nay, permitted to present our "bodies a living sacrifice," is, in all conscience, only a reasonable service," which leaves us with the humble acknowledgement, "We are unprofitable servants; we have done not anything extraordinary but that which it was our duty to do." Our business and our duty henceforth is to learn, and to do the will of God, and only as living sacrifices can we "prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God" (Rom. 12: 2).

The first principle of Christian living which follows in this chapter the presentation of our bodies as living sacrifices, touches our relations to one another as being one body in Christ, and everyone members one of another. A living sacrifice to God, a whole burnt offering, all upon the altar, all fuel for the altar fire, has, as such, no claim upon his own life. All for God and for his fellow members means nothing at all for himself, and all the precepts which follow are the natural outflow of this. A living sacrifice can have no claim on, no disposal of the gifts which God has conferred upon him; he gives himself to his ministry, his teaching, his exhortation, his giving, his ruling, all is done in the spirit of sacrifice; he does not want credit for anything he is or does, he is a sacrifice. As a member only of the body of Christ and a member belonging to every other member, he considers in all he does the whole body as well as the individual members. All have one common place of nothingness and death at the cross; all have one common life, Christ in them the hope of glory.

Thus rooted in Christ at the cross, thus drawing from him one common life, it is not a hard thing in love of the brethren (all of them), to be tenderly affectioned one to another (R. V.). If we draw upon the resources of our own human hearts for a love which shall love the most unloving and difficult of our brethren, we shall find it does not reach out; it is like a well which yields no water. How shall I be tender to him who is hard to me; or how consider him who has no consideration for me? Self repudiates such an obligation as exaggerated, impossible and absurd. But the disciple of Christ says,

"My Lord has dealt thus with me, that the dwelling in me may produce such a spirit towards others: it is due to him that he shall see such fruit in me, and it is not too much for him to ask of me that I shall do to others as he has done to me; I am only a living sacrifice."

How easy then for love to be without hypocrisy! Love is the thing of all others which cannot come by constraint, and which is abominable when it is assumed; hypocrisy in love is the worst hypocrisy of all. One who has true love will "abhor that which is evil" in a brother while he loves the brother all the more, because he sees how much that brother needs his prayers and his help; and he will "cleave to that which is good" in the brother, because he does not consider himself in his relations with him; he sees with God's eyes. And thus he learns in honor and not in self-interest to prefer his brother. Untouched by what may affect him personally in that brother's conduct, he is free to be faithful to him, and to watch tenderly over his soul. All his relations with his brethren are for God and in God; he seeks for himself neither affection nor gratitude: he gives himself as Christ gave himself.

The next principle is that of diligence: to be not slothful. In the Authorized Version this is rendered, "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit serving the Lord." But in the Revised it reads, "In diligence, not slothful." This may apply to every relation of life; to Christian progress in the Word, and in the conquest of temptation equally with family and business matters. "A living sacrifice cannot be slothful; his time and strength belongs to Another, and thus it is his privilege and his strength to be in all things "fervent in spirit serving the Lord." This is the rule for all business, all house regulations, all education of children, all social life, that all shall serve God and prepare for the coming of the Lord. It is a blessed test of all we do, "Am I in this serving God or serving myself? Should I like my Lord to come while I am doing or saying just this?" So doing, the "rejoicing in hope" of his coming is constant, and it creates a hopeful atmosphere which makes it easier to be hopeful about the conversion and progress of others, for it is the constant recognition of the Almighty God in all things.

And it is again this same recognition of God and his hand in everything which alone can make us "patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer." How can one who is not living in constant intercourse with God be patient when he sees all going against him? How can he but fear? How can he be still when there is everything to disquiet him? He sees danger and cannot escape it. But it is quite another thing with one who is in everything serving the Lord, and who fully trusts him. Such an one continues "instant in prayer," and God continues instant in his response, and shows him whose hand has permitted all, and above and beyond the danger, he sees an Almighty and loving Father, and he is at rest.

Again the apostle comes back to the relations between fellow Christians; "Communicating to the necessities of the saints given to hospitality." The members of the early church in the days of Pentecost, "not one of them said of aught of the things which he possessed that it was his own; but they had all things common." (Acts 4: 32, R.V.) Of course they communicated to the necessities of saints and were given to hospitality. The prevalence in the Christian church of religious beggars has made this less easy than it might otherwise have been. But we may be quite sure that our God can easily distinguish between the "disorderly," who would sponge upon Christians, and "work not at all" (11. Thess. 3: 2), and real saints who are the laborers that are worthy of their meat (1. Cor. 10: 11), and he will surely make known when we are quiet enough to listen to him whether such a one who comes to us is indeed a saint of God, to whom we can minister in his name.

Another principle of Christian living is the entire absence of retaliation. Our beloved Lord, like a "lamb dumb before her shearer, so opened not his mouth" (Isa. 53: 7), even under the greatest injustice and provocation. If we really take our place with him as the accused, crucified with Christ, who was "made a curse for us" (Gal. 3: 3), we are at too low a level to claim any personal rights. And as such it is in accordance with the Christ-life within us and not in any way a strain, to bless them which persecute us.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

WORDS fail to describe the condition of society in Rome in the year 58, when it is believed Paul wrote his letter to the Christians there. Vice, horrible beyond our conception, was rampant there. More than one-half of the population of the city consisted of slaves and these were the victims of revolting and

"WEEP WITH THEM THAT WEEP."

loathsome crime. They were absolutely at the mercy of their owners and could be killed—tortured to death—with impunity. Men and women alike treated them with appalling cruelty. We read of delicate, high-born women, thrusting long pins into the flesh of their women slaves, as a punishment for trivial faults; and of nobles throwing male slaves into their ponds to be food for fishes. In the homes and in the baths, foul crimes too detestable to mention were committed. Among all this slime there were a few Christians trying to lead a clean life. How the Gospel was introduced into the city, we are not told. Paul had not been there and it is extremely unlikely that any other apostle had been there. The most probable theory is that some converts from Antioch, Corinth and Ephesus had gone to Rome, carrying with them the Gospel, and had won others over to it by private conversation or by speaking in the assemblies of Jews and proselytes. Paul had so strong a dislike to "building on another man's foundation" that we cannot conceive of his writing this letter if the church in Rome had been founded by another Apostle. But if, in the constant intercourse then going on between Rome and the great cities in which he had preached, his converts had gone propagating his Gospel, he would regard the Christians in Rome as his spiritual children, and would feel justified in writing to them. The greetings at the close of the epistle confirm this theory of the origin of the church. They contain expressions which Paul would scarcely have used to people whom he had never met. To these people, then, surrounded by all evil, and exposed to persecution, Paul writes this wonderful letter which differs in construction and tone from every other book in the Bible and contains a vigorous and stalwart statement of Paul's system of theology. The paragraph selected for this week's lesson is an outline of what he considers the Christian's life ought to be. His remedy for sin was not repression or asceticism, but a change of heart. He believed that the life of God in the soul might be trusted to work out a good moral outward life and he here brackets the forms in which it might be expected to manifest itself.

Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. The same power which will have two opposite effects according to the nature of the object presented to it. Thus, electricity has different effects on different substances; some it recoils while others it fuses; power is the same, but its operation according to the material operated upon.

In honor preferring one another. Does not recommend "pushing to the front." He follows Christ's advice to his disciples "to sit down in the lowest room." A man of large experience says that always most successful when he is in the background and put someone else in the position of honor. It was the rule that if he occupied the first place, but when he put another in the place of honor, he carried his point. It is so in politics. A man who has the most power in a party is the man who is not seeking it, but who is listened to attentively, and he is believed to be disinterested.

Heap coals of fire on his head. The first sight this looks like revenge. As Paul were teaching his converts to make their enemies suffer. Coals of fire on the head would burn and kill. A ingenious explanation is given by a writer. He describes the process of melting gold. It is not enough to put the gold in the crucible and the heat over the fire. This would heat the gold only to the furnace heat. But the gold is put on the top of the crucible, as under it, and then the gold surrounded by the fire, melts. Paul would have his converts melt their enemies by compassing them with love and kindness. During the Revolutionary war, a man, Peter Miller, pastor of a Baptist church in Pennsylvania, appeared in Philadelphia to plead with George Washington for the life of a man condemned to death for treason. He had walked all the way to Philadelphia, a distance of sixty miles, to present his petition. It was in Washington told him he was sorry he could not pardon his friend. "My friend," exclaimed Miller, "he is no friend, but a worse enemy in the world than I am." Washington looked at him in amazement. "Will you tell me," asked, "why you have walked sixty miles to save your enemy's life?" The man explained that he was obeying his orders, and Washington was so impressed with his noble conduct that he signed the pardon and gave it to him. When Peter put the pardon in his foe's hand, he learned how it had been won, how down and cried like a child, "I was melted by the coals of fire on his head."

Weep with them that weep. Sympathy covers several of the Apostle's injunctions. He would have his converts take an interest in the affairs of their brethren. There are some people who are not much affected by anything but the things which concern themselves. This is distinctly unchristian. A well known writer describes a woman who was the best person in her town. She had suffered much, had lost property, husband and child. Whenever anyone was in trouble she was sure to be on hand. She would go to the house and do little things that needed doing and would in a most unobtrusive way, give all the comfort she could. Her own sorrows taught her to sympathize, and she would sit and suffer and in a gentle voice speak to the troubled heart. The people of the town grew to depend upon her, and was sent for as regularly as the minister. She was a minister in many a home and seemed really bear the sorrows and sufferings of others. That is what the Christian always does.

Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good. When anyone does an injury or uses abusive words to you, are not to blame. But we are to bless, we retaliate, or are provoked to retaliate with abuse. One of the greatest elements of Christian character is the ability to overcome evil without being moved to retaliate. "What do you think the moon did when the dog barked at it?" Mr. Moody said in a recent address. "Why, it just kept shining." Socrates allowed his wife to abuse him, but could never be moved to anger. He said her most violent abuse at last affected him no more than the noise of the carriages on the street.

ON A GOSPEL HOUSE-BOAT.

"Bon Messenger," the Floating Chapel of the Famous McAll Mission in Paris, and its Five Years of Christian Service.

SEVERAL years have elapsed since THE CHRISTIAN HERALD laid before its readers an interesting account of the work of the McAll Gospel Mission in France, and of the establishment of a new phase of that work—a mission boat—to ply on the waters of the Seine and the other rivers of that country. Since that time, the McAll experiment has been duplicated on several of the American rivers and lakes, and accounts have at different times appeared in these columns of the excellent work performed by floating Bethels and other Gospel boats both in the East and West. Our correspondent sends us this most interesting and instructive letter, reviewing the work of the parent Floating Mission on the McAll boat, during the last five years:

PARIS, Aug. 1st.—Few readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have forgotten the late McAll Mission, which for many years has been doing the Lord's work among the poor and lowly all over Catholic France. Its floating chapel, Le Bon Messenger, by following the rivers and canals for many miles around Paris, has carried the good Word to the remotest of villages and hamlets. Le Bon Messenger is now entered upon its fifth year of activity in the service of Christ. It is a species of house-boat, upon whose bottomed iron hull stands a hall with a ordinary seating capacity of 160 persons, a double cabin for the captain and family, a smaller cabin for a servant, and kitchen. The wood-work is stained and varnished, and the windows fitted with panes of colored glass which diffuse a pleasant light over the interior. The appearance of the craft is cosy and comfortable, especially the fore part with its array of bright plants and flowers, and the steeple that reach up to the zinc roof. Le Bon Messenger has no means of propulsion of its own, and has therefore to be towed from place to place by a steam tug or horse. The novelty to the French of its whole arrangement is one of the leading factors of its success. "A floating church, a floating church!" the villagers claim as the queer craft approaches. As far as they all crowd around to see what such a thing can be like. The boat, with its flags and its enormous sign, Le Bon Messenger (meetings), acts as its own advertising agent, and successful announce-mentally free in his movements, and can select his own point of vantage along the water's edge. It is truly a case of the mountain coming to Mahomet, to recall an old saying, and one is almost inclined to add that it is also a case of faith moving the mountain!

So this boat floats along, along on the silent highway, a messenger of glad tidings to the toilers in the fields, the frugal, hard-working sons of the soil, the backbone of the French nation! Since the spring of 1892, she has been twice on the Marne as far as Epervanay, on the Aisne, on the Oise, and on the Seine as far as the junction with the Yonne. It is along the charming banks of the last-named river that she is now wending her way, and by the time this letter appears in print she will be moored off the quays of the historic town of Sens. Her present "captain" is Monsieur Huet, an ex-priest of the Catholic Church, who formally renounced his allegiance to Rome, and is now married and the father of two little girls, both of whom with their mother live on board. He is assisted in his work by other members of the McAll Mission, so-called evangelists, who are sent to join him from headquarters in Paris.

The usual stay of Le Bon Messenger at any one given point is of three weeks' duration, in which period not alone the inhabitants of the immediate vicinity, but many from far back in the interior are in-

Whatever hostility the Catholics may entertain toward the McAll Mission, and indeed toward all Protestant missions, the same has not manifested itself in any overt acts towards Le Bon Messenger.

The worst that can be said is that the 'sisters' strenuously endeavor to keep the children away from the meetings. Sometimes, however, feeling shows in a more amusing than offensive form, as when the bedeau (beadle) of a Catholic church came on board at Cergy (Oise) and insisted on sprinkling the boat with holy water, while mumbling some 'prayers' in Latin. He was evidently exorcising the Evil One, whose presence he felt must necessarily be associated with so heretical a craft as Le Bon Messenger. More troublesome than the ultra-Catholics are the so-called 'atheists' and 'free-thinkers'—in reality nothing more nor less than anarchists, since they refuse to allow others the right of selecting their own belief. St. Denis, north of Paris, is a great stamping-ground for this gentry, and thither Le Bon Messenger betook herself a short while ago, at the request of shore, the gangway overturned, floating in the water, the chains sunk to the bottom, and the anchors and pins giving signs of loosening from their moorings. Presently the pole that kept the craft from the banks broke in two, and, exposed to the full fury of the elements, the good boat seemed in imminent danger of being blown into the middle of the river, and from there against a large stone bridge, which would have meant destruction. As if by a miracle the wind changed its direction at this juncture and Captain Huet succeeded after three hours' hard work in mud and water, in bringing his craft to a place of safety. It was only appropriate that the evangelist on board, Mr. Henry James Benham, should have devoted his first sermon after this thrilling experience to the story of Noah and the Ark.

Le Bon Messenger, be it known, derives its support from the voluntary contributions of Christian friends in England, France and the United States. Her expenses are about $150 per month, and that she earns her money is evident from this year's report, which gives the total number of meetings on board from March 1, 1896, to March 1, 1897, as two hundred and fifty-seven for adults and sixty-two for children. So successful has she been in her work that the construction of a second mission-boat is contemplated—one of the proper size to pass all the canal locks of France. This one will cost about $5,000, of which sum $600 has already been subscribed. V. GRIBAYEDOFF.

An Astonished Chief.

In his letters from Africa, the late Dr. Moffat related many remarkable incidents of the effects of Gospel teaching among the natives. One of these we quote:

"In the course of my remarks to Makaba, the ear of the monarch caught the startling sound of a resurrection. 'What!' he exclaimed with astonishment—'what are these words about? The dead—the dead arise?' 'Yes,' was my reply, 'all the dead shall arise.' 'Will my father arise?' 'Yes,' I answered, 'your father will arise.' 'Will all the slain in battle arise?' 'Yes.' 'And will all that have been killed and devoured by lions, tigers, hyenas, and crocodiles again revive?' 'Yes, and come to judgment.' 'And will those whose bodies have been left to waste and to wither on the desert plains, and scattered to the winds, again arise?' he asked with a kind of triumph, as if he had now fixed me. 'Yes,' I replied; 'not one will be left behind.' This I repeated with increased emphasis.

"After looking at me for a few moments, he turned to his people, to whom he spoke with stentorian voice. 'Hark, ye wise men, whoever is among you, the wisest of past generations, did ever your ears hear such strange and unheard-of news?' Makaba then, turning himself to me, and laying his hand on his breast, said, 'Father, I love you much. Your presence and your visit have made my heart white as milk. The words of your mouth are sweet as honey, but the words of a resurrection are too great to be heard. I do not wish to hear again about the dead rising. The dead cannot arise! The dead must not arise!'

"'Why,' I then inquired, 'can so great a man refuse knowledge, and turn away from wisdom? Tell me, my friend, why I must not speak of a resurrection.' Raising and uncovering his arm, which had been strong in battle, and shaking his hand as if quivering a spear, he replied, 'I have slain my thousands, and shall they arise?'

Oh publish this salvation,
Ye heralds, through the earth!
To every buried nation
Proclaim the day of birth!
Till, rising from their slumbers,
The countless heathen numbers
Shall hail the risen light.

THE HOUSE-BOAT'S CAPTAIN AND FAMILY AT HOME.

duced to attend its conferences. The good folk appear in crowds from the start, and often manifest genuine pleasure at the welcome extended to them. It is the singing and the music of the melodeon, however, that pleases them most, and they attempt to join in almost at the start. The following from the diary of one of the evangelists will convey an idea of their general behavior:

"On Tuesday evening, before seven o'clock, a crowd had gathered near the boat, waiting for admission. At seven the people were allowed to come on, and at ten minutes past, every available seat being occupied, and the doorway being blocked, we began the meeting. At the close thirteen francs' worth of Testaments and hymn-books were bought; two Bibles were also sold.

"Yesterday at half-past six, in the darkness and the damp, the crowd were impatiently waiting at the entrance; and at seven the boat was literally invaded: the people poured in and took possession of every nook and corner, women and boys sat on the platform, several sat on each others' knees, and the bridge, the deck, and the passage between the benches right up to the platform were full of standing men, women and children, who had to remain in that position more than one hour. The audience was composed of hardy, healthy-looking country folk, broad-shouldered, round-faced, ruddy-cheeked men and women, noisy and blustering as they took their seats, but silent and eager while listening."

the local Wesleyan Missionary committee. At first the disposition of the working people was distinctly hostile to the work. Many men would crowd around the gangway of the boat, crying, "Death to the bourgeois: neither God nor devil for us." For a time things looked very threatening, but finally the evangelist in charge succeeded in winning over one of the loudest brawlers, and with his help the rest were silenced by degrees. Many were the conversions as a result of this trip to this very hot-bed of revolution and anarchy. Volumes would not suffice to tell of the great good which has been wrought through the instrumentality of this novel system of evangelization, introduced by the late lamented Robert Whitaker McAll. Captain Huets' daily experiences, indeed, afford a marvelous insight into the varying emotions of poor human nature, and testify to the saving grace of God's word.

Last winter, with the continuous rainfall and heavy floods, the navigating of the boat was fraught with the greatest possible danger. For instance, at Champagne, on the Seine, where the boat was moored, a terrific storm occurred in the first days of February. One evening during prayers the river rose with such rapidity that it was feared the audience would not be able to disperse in safety before the gangway was submerged. Luckily no accident occurred then, but the next morning, when the occupants awoke they beheld a rushing, foaming stream fifteen yards wide between the boat and the men's part of the battle in religious work is everything else. Another great advantage is the fact that its 'captain' is far more master of the situation on board than if he were in charge of a meeting-room on shore. Even those inclined to be riotous and unruly feel that his authority is beyond dispute. Then again, he is en-

THE HOUSE-BOAT AT ANCHOR.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPCH, PROPRIETOR.
T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadian, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by hurried renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald will not be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-office at New York, as Second class Matter

The American in Sports.

IT is only of late years that the American has cut any figure in sports. He has been too busy, or he has found sport enough in the regular activities of his business life. Or he has tabooed sports, as the near relative of idleness and dissipation. Probably there may have been some action of conscience about it. Daniel Webster used to know the art of drawing fish from the Atlantic, off Marshfield, and from the brooks of Merrimac county, New Hampshire. It was my privilege once to visit his home after the great occupant had gone hence to be here no more forever. There hung his fishing-tackle and great overshadowing straw hat still upon the walls of his library. But this was only the diversion of his leisure hours. I once visited a distinguished lawyer in Central New York. He came in at eight P. M., Saturday night, accoutred in fisherman's attire, a man then over seventy. This was his prescription for health. But a new era has now arisen. America has her professional sports. It remains to be seen whether the evolution is to be an advantage. Sport for recreation and health is one thing; sport as a business is quite another. The old couplet was:

All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy,
All play and no work makes him a mere toy.

How many "mere toys" this new tendency will produce remains to be seen. And then, when recreation is made a business, where will men look for recreation from recreation?

Undevout Physicians.

THERE is a wise saying that the undevout astronomer is mad. If a man who traces the pathway of the stars is not reverent, who should be? We have often thought the saying might still more emphatically be made of the undevout physician. It is said that the great preacher, Wesley, would not employ a physician who did not fear God. The distance between a living body and the Creator must be very slight; so slight, that we may hear the echo of his footsteps there. Wesley did not wish to put his life into the hands of a man, however eminent, who made no recognition of God in a creature so fearfully and wonderfully made. Then, too, if any one needs prayer for guidance, for God's blessing on the work of his hands, it is the physician. God sent Isaiah to Hezekiah, who was "sick unto death," with a prescription, and the royal patient recovered. Other men take the perplexities of their occupations and professions to God. Why should not the physician? Still more, why not the physician more than all other men? The nearer God in one's employment, the greater need of prayer; the surer prayer will help.

A Virtuous Bicycle.

I WAS riding through a quaint old town the other day, when I saw a drunken man attempt to ride a bicycle. It is said a real quadruped has some charity for drunken men. He treats them like babies and fools. For example, in Tam O'Shanter the poet writes:

Wheel mounted on his gray mare, Meg—
A better never litted leg—
Tam skelpit on through dub and mire,
Despising wind and rain and fire.

And many another mare has shown her fidelity to a drunken master by taking him safely home, when he no longer had the sense to get there of himself, or to guide her there. But, this two-wheeled steed, the bicycle, is evidently for teetotalers only. So the equestrian of Gloucester was soon thrown. He had just come from the dram-shop, and did not realize that he was not mounting a steed with genuine horse-sense. Among the virtues of the bicycle, then, let Temperance people set this down that it affords a new motive to keep a level head by keeping the Temperance pledge.

Little Japan.

THERE is something in the bristling attitude of Japan toward Hawaii that is almost amusing. It reminds you of the airs of a young rooster just beginning to strut around and crow. Little Japan, having whipped a great nation like China, is ready to fight any other nation that will step into the ring. But, certainly, Japan will not be so foolish as to disturb the peace of the Occident, when Hawaii has offered to settle all differences by arbitration. At any rate, Hawaii is so soon to be a part of the United States, we cannot allow any quarrel between them. We stand ready, as soon as Hawaii comes into proper relations with us, to guarantee a fair adjustment with Japan.

What is Enough?

I HAVE been amused to hear people when they start in life say at what point in life they will be contented with worldly possessions. One man says: "I want to get $20,000 and I will be satisfied." Another, "I want to get fifty or a hundred thousand or a million, and then I will be satisfied. Then I will say to my soul, 'Now just look at that block of storehouses. Just look at those government securities. Now, my soul take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry!'" Thou fool! If you are not happy now with the smaller possessions you will never be with the larger possessions. If with decent and comely apparel you are not grateful to God, you would be ungrateful if you had a prince's wardrobe crowded till the hinges burst.

If you are not content with an income to support comfortably your household, you would not be contented though your income rolled in on you fifty or a hundred thousand a year. It is not what we get, it is what we are that makes us happy or miserable. If that is not so how do you account for the fact that many of those who fare sumptuously every day are waspish and dissatisfied, and overbearing, and foreboding, and cranky, and uncompromising; with a countenance on which wrath always lowers and a lip which scorn curls; while many a time in the summer evening you see a laboring man going home in his shirt-sleeves, with a pail on his arm and a pickaxe over his shoulder, his face bright with smiles and his heart with hope, and the night of his toil bright with flaming auroras? It is an illustration of the fact that it is not outward condition that makes a man happy. The heart right, all is right. The heart wrong, all is wrong.

Romance of the Bread Basket.

No. II.

ARTEMIDORUS says, "Barley was the first food that the gods gave to men;" but if its lineage is as ancient as that of wheat, it is far from being as honorable. Its native land is Syria, and probably Egypt; for we read in Exodus, that the barley fields of that land were smitten by the plague of hail. As a bread-stuff its history is that of poverty, hardship, calamity, and punishment, and with very good reason it was placed far below wheat. Nine hundred years before Christ, we are told in the seventh chapter of Second Kings, that at Samaria, a measure of fine flour sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for the same price.

It was the chief food of the hardy, frugal Spartans; but the Romans only used it as the bread of punishment. If soldiers lost their colors or standards on the battlefield, or were guilty of any neglect of duty, they were fed on barley bread instead of wheat. Speaking broadly, barley has always and in every land been the bread given to criminals and prisoners; and though the peasants of several nations subsist largely on it, their necessity and not their choice compels its use. True, the Duke of Argyll wrote a song to his "Bannocks of Barley Meal," but his enthusiasm was poetical; as a matter of diet, His Grace preferred his wheat loaf or his oatmeal cakes.

No plant since the world began has exercised such an influence on mankind as barley, but this influence has been entirely bad; and it is only necessary to say, that it lends itself with singular readiness to malting, and is therefore, the principal ingredient in beer, porter, whiskey, and gin. As a means of crime and woe, this little grain stands beside the fruit that brought death into our world and all our sin. Barley is the black sheep of the cereal family. All its associations are of misery, crime, and suffering; and every field of blowing, bearded barley, reminds us—not of the hearth and the home table—but of the saloon, and the hospital, and the prison.

Oats, on the contrary, are an eminently moral, honorable, thrifty grain. No one can say anything against oats. To be sure, they cannot boast of the antiquity of wheat and barley, nor are they mentioned in the Bible, where all other grains are mentioned, nor yet have they ever been chosen as the armorial bearings of any noble family in any country, though wheat, barley, rye, and beans are common in heraldry. It is most likely that oats are indigenous to England, and were unknown as food until Caesar took them from England to Italy, and not many years afterward we are told that the monster Caligula fed his favorite horse on gilded oats out of a golden cup. Wild oats are found to-day on the shores of the Euphrates and eastward, but England was likely their place of practical recognition. There Caesar not only found them used as food, but was astonished and delighted with the exquisite hats made from the plaited straw of oats, and for these plaited straw bonnets and hats England is yet famous.

In later times oats have been the special bread of Scotland, and Dr. Johnson described them scornfully in his dictionary as "food for horses in England, and for men in Scotland," an explanation which brought the retort—"and where will you find such men and such horses?" No soil is too hot or too cold, too rich or too poor for oats, and wild oats are said to be "the pecker of the poorest land." They come no one knows how or whence, and in the Middle Ages the devil got the credit of sowing them. From this idea, doubtless, came the conceit of calling the follies of young men "sowing their wild oats." It is worth noticing that a drink made by steeping oatmeal in water, was considered by the celebrated Hoffman a wonderful diet, and its inventor kept himself alive on it until he was 120 years old? Modern investigations have proved that no cereal gives such general vigor to the animal system as oats.

Kye is indigenous to Egypt, for with the wheat, it was not smitten in the plague of hail. It was brought to England to relieve a great famine in 1596. It makes a good bread; and will grow in the poorest, driest, sandiest soils; even on the frozen wastes of Finland, and Northern Asia. It is the poor relation of cereals; the one grain not needful, in rich communities; yet the Swedish peasants live much on it.

Buckwheat has been used from time immemorial in China, and in Brittany, it was the bread of the entire population. The famous Italian "polenta" is made of this meal; and in all the central parts of Europe and Asia it is much used. It was brought to England by the Crusaders, and it has made for itself a permanent home in America.

Rice is an Ethiopian grain, and its progress in Europe is not known. It came to America with the earliest Southern settlers, and took well to the climate of the Carolinas. It was greatly cultivated by the Egyptians, Persians, Babylonians, and all the nations with whom they warred and traded. The Greeks knew it 300 B. C., and took it to Italy, where it was among the libations prescribed for the gods.

Maize is the gift of the New World. Cleanly, and beyond question, maize is the American cereal. It would indeed have been impossible for such a nutritious, prolific, valuable food not to have come into general use, if it had been known previous to the discovery of America. Every way that it is possible to cook maize, it is good! suppan, mush, hiny, samp, hoe-cake, and Johnny-cake, good! but if we would taste the flavor of Eden in the white, sweet grains, we must see the green ears, folded in their silky leaf among the embers. No cereal that God made, could have so gloriously typified teeming plenty of a land, that has "bread enough and to spare" for all who come to

Amelia E. Bar

BRIEF NOTES.

We have received many letters expressing hearty appreciation of the beautiful special Lilies of the Field which have been sent to people who supplied us with names of church members. We have only a small stock now left of these which were grown in Galilee, and we advise our friends as contemplate availing themselves of this offer to act promptly. The condition of this offer is that the names of the flowers, which one of these precious flowers may be obtained, are: To send twenty-five names and post addresses of adult Protestant church members, each name representing a different household, two living in the same house. These names must be written on one side of the paper only, and other business must be referred to in the communication. On the outside of the envelope in which they are sent must be written, in the lower hand corner, the words, "For the Million Lilies." Of course we prepay the postage on the "Lilies of the Field."

Mr. James Stokes, of New York, who munificence helped the Paris Young Men's Christian Association to secure its new building is presented the Y. M. C. A., of Rome, with a handsome home, well adapted to association work.

It is reported that in Russia the Czars joined forces in favor of Sunday rest by pronouncing a decree prohibiting under a severe penalty any form of labor on Sunday or on the four principal Russian feast days.

After having been expelled from Spain and from Russia, the Jews, says the Independent, are passing through a similar experience in Germany. Under special orders from Emperor William the Jews in the Eastern provinces of Prussia are being driven forth with the most pitiless severity.

Rev. P. W. Pitcher reports that in the Fukien Province of China, the number of converts has increased by 5,280 souls since the year of 1895, and the adherents by nearly 10,000, and nearly 4,000 adults have been baptized, and contributions have been increased by over $9,000.

Dr. L. W. Munhall preached a remarkable sermon at Ocean Grove, N. J., on August 1, dealing with the inspiration and inerrancy of the Bible. There was an enormous audience, and the preacher's vindication of the Word of God in the attacks of sceptics was listened to with attention.

Ex-Rabbi Max Magil, of Allentown, Pa., for the last three years missionary among the Jews in New York, is prepared for lectures on Jewish-Christian topics, and Old Testament School work in English or German. For arrangements please address Max Magil, 213 East 10th St., New York City.

The Bible Institute of Chicago is offering three great evening Bible classes on the three sides of the city, to include Christians of all denominations, for the study of the Word of God. Mr. W. R. Newell, the Assistant Superintendent of the Institute, will be the teacher. Special prayer is asked that these classes may lead to deeper and more thorough knowledge of the scriptures among Christian people.

A helpful convention has been held by the Anglo-American Christian Endeavor society of Paris. They suffer much from a constantly changing membership and the difficulty of reaching many of the students who come to the city; but the good work is done. The society in the first quarter reported an average attendance of 18,000 other society furnishes a tea to strangers on Friday evenings, which gives the Endeavorers an opportunity to meet newcomers, and nearly all present remain to the evening service.

The Oberlin Young Men's Christian Association will have committees composed of all the college and academy classes to meet the students at all the trains entering Oberlin at the beginning of the fall term. They will be required to act as personal guides, to introduce new students to their classmates, and help them find room and boarding places. The College Chapel is headquarters, and a complete boarding register and additional guides will be found there.

Cardinal Jacobini has addressed a letter to all Catholic bishops throughout the world, proposing a widespread series of religious services to commemorate the close of the nineteenth and the beginning of the twentieth century. This project is stated to be a response to the desire of Pope Leo XIII. to mark the transition from one century to another by "an extraordinary invocation of the assistance of Jesus Christ, as a happy preparation and comfort." Protestant churchmen doubtless hold services for the same purpose.

Bishop Henry Whipple, of Minnesota, writes enthusiastically of the warm welcome American bishops received on all hands during the sittings of the Lambeth Conference. There was, he says, the kindest feeling manifested everywhere by the Queen, by the church dignitaries and by prominent persons for the American visitors. It was freely admitted that the American church while in close fellowship with the world stood alone and independent. What Bishop Whipple most was "the new life in the Church of England to great virtue to God at home and abroad."

The Second Annual Conference of the Chicago Hebrew Mission will be held Thursday, September 30, to continue to October 1. The conference will give its attention to unfulfilled promises, especially in relation to recent Jewish movements. Among the speakers will be Rev. J. Torrey, Rev. S. P. Henson, D. D., Rev. J. Marvin, D. D., Rev. W. J. Erdmann, D. D., Rev. J. Barrows, D. D., Dr. S. M. Merrill. A paper on the restoration of the Jewish Palestine to be read at the Conference. Further particulars may be obtained by addressing Mr. Blackstone, Oak Park, Ill.

I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. (John 10:28.)

RESCUING CHILD-WIDOWS IN INDIA.

Pandita Ramabai Thanks Our Readers for the Means of Saving Hundreds of her Child-Widows from Starvation and Ruin.

A CABLE message from Bishop Thoburn received at this office on Aug. 21, brings the cheering news that "the famine is steadily abating." Rain has fallen in copious abundance on all the provinces of India except Bombay and the Deccan and there is promise of an abundant harvest in every district where the people were able to avail themselves of the opportunity to sow the seed. Unhappily, in many places, the cattle which in India are used for ploughing, have died, or have been sold to buy food, and the farmers have consequently been able to till only such portions of their farms as could be worked by spade and fork. The general harvest will therefore be curtailed, but it is to be hoped that sufficient food will be raised to bring the prices once more within the reach of the poor.

A HINDU WIDOW.

Bishop Thoburn mentions a problem, which, now that the heaviest of the burden of feeding the starving millions of adults is in some degree removed, is causing serious anxiety to the missionaries. This is the support of the large number of orphan children, whose parents perished in the famine, and of those children whose parents brought them to the missionaries begging that they would save them from starving to death. Scarcely a mission station in the famine districts, or on the borders, is without a number of these children, and in some of them there are hundreds. The missionaries must have had hearts of stone to have resisted the pleadings of the parents for succor for their little ones, and the spectacle of the bright children reduced to skin and bone who might be fed. Mr. Smith of Ahmednagar; Dr. Johnson of Jabbalpur; Miss Lillian Dietrich of Cawnpore; and many other missionaries encouraged by appropriations from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Fund took in large numbers of these little waifs, whom they have fed and clothed with the means so generously supplied by our readers. Some have died in spite of all the care bestowed upon them; their protracted suffering before the missionaries took charge of them had already done its fatal work. But a large number remain, and the missionaries are concerned about their future. It would be inhuman to turn them out to starve now, after having rescued them from the jaws of famine. It would appear a manifest duty to keep them and train them in the nurture of the Lord. Many of them are exceedingly intelligent, and might be so educated that they would become the best missionaries to their people. But this will require money, and in the case of the youngest the expenditure will continue for several years. It may be hoped that the various missionary societies will receive liberal contributions for this purpose, which is one of the most hopeful they could pursue.

One of the most interesting of these labors of love is the work being done for the girl-widows by Pandita Ramabai, whose portrait was published in a recent issue of this journal. The following letter from her, written for our readers, gives pathetic expression to her gratitude for the help she has received, and tells her hopes of the blessing to come:

I thank THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the generous donation given by you for the support of my famine girls. About four weeks ago Rs. 3,310.58 came to hand, and now another sum of Rs. 1,500 has been sent to me from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund. I thank you most gratefully for your kindness in sending this timely help to me. The Lord will bless and reward you according to his riches. You will be glad to know that the Lord has given me two hundred girl-widows out of the famine districts and He continues to send more girls. He has most graciously and wonderfully helped us during the past five months and brought us out of many and great difficulties. Our new girls are no longer "Famine Girls;" they look quite plump and happy and are beginning to enter into school-life and to learn regular habits. I am sending you a picture of some of them. The Lord helping me I hope to save three hundred girl-widows from starvation and a life worse than death. The Collector of Poonah district has given me permission to build houses on the farm belonging to our school. It is about forty miles from Poonah. The Lord willing I will build several little houses on that farm for able to work long; it is, therefore, necessary to help them, with food at this time. Money is urgently needed to support the famine children who have been gathered during the famine into the schools. I thank you again for your kindness to my children. May the Lord bless you! Believe me, Yours in his service,

RAMABAI.

Miss Sarah F. Gardner who is laboring in Calcutta under the auspices of the Women's Union Missionary Society, writes, gratefully acknowledging the funds placed at her disposal through the generosity of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. "My plan," she says, "has been to get it into the hands, or rather the mouths of those too old to work on the relief works. I have been much moved by the sufferings of the aged in this time of universal suffering. No care is taken by relations and friends to share with them the little they have. Alas! most of them have nothing to share. One old woman was found lying in the road too feeble to walk any farther, and left by her people to die or be torn to pieces by the jackals before she died. The bulk of the money has been distributed through a young Australian woman I know, who has fed two hundred people every day, most of whom were unable to work."

The following letter is from one of the most eminent of the American Board's missionaries:

PAUL AND THE DISCIPLES.

The relations of the Apostle to the Gentiles with the Disciples of our Lord.
1. Cor. 1: 26-28; Gal. 2: 9.

Many expressions of Paul's perception of the perfect character of the early disciples of Christ. Not many wise among them, nor were there many mighty. He declares that he understood Peter himself, "because he was to be blamed." Evidently there was a cordial feeling between the Apostle Paul. They were troubled by the freedom with which he opened the door to the Gentiles, and were unable to free themselves of the trammels and fetters of Judaism. To them Christ was the development of Judaism, and the Messiah and future King who would restore the Jewish nation to power and glory. Even in Christ's lifetime they were occupied with the worldly glories which Christ might aspire to, and which he hoped to share with him. In spite of the decision of the Council at Jerusalem, which decided more than once with Paul, and made them uneasy about their position as Gentiles. They committed a fatal blunder which has been shown in so many ways in their time, of which Christianity a religion of rites and ceremonies, failing to take Paul's view of it as spirit and life, the Romish church transformed the Lord's Supper into a mass, as the Seventh Day of our time are insisting on the letter of the commandment and others are making the simple rite of baptism into a regeneration power, so these who were Christians would be robbed of its life.

Christian Character.

Suggestions on B. P. U. Topic for September 12.
11. Peter 1: 5-9.

THE calling of God is a call to holiness, to high attainment. It is a call for man to turn from his own nature and seek the glory of his soul. The two are open before every one at the outset of his life. He has two sets of capacities and capacities of which he may avail himself. He can find his happiness in gratifying his animal desires, or in the cultivation of his spiritual nature. On the one side he is called CHILD-WIDOWS IN THE COURT YARD OF PANDITA RAMABAI'S HOME AT SHARADA SADAN, POONA.

VICTORIA ROAD, MAZAGON BOMBAY.
To the Editor of "The Christian Herald."

Dear Sir:—I received to-day word that a second gift of $500 has been received to be administered by me for famine relief. I wish to sincerely thank you and the kind donors for entrusting it to me, and thus enabling me to help the poor and destitute within my field.

The first $500 you sent me has nearly all been spent in such ways as the following:

1. I have been able to help many women and children left widows and orphans by the plague.

2. There are no signs of the famine in the city of Bombay to greet the eye, but cases of extreme difficulty are of course frequent. The famine up country has driven many families to this city for employment. They come as strangers and for a time without house or food are in great distress. I have been able to help many such.

3. In my district south of Bombay, I am feeding a hundred people in one place, and fifty in another every day at present. Good rain is falling, but for two months yet the distress is likely to increase.

I have thus given you, in brief, the general class of people whom I have been enabled to help. Of course those who are helped are extremely thankful, and are touched by the kindness shown to them. Their oft-expressed prayer is that God may bless the kind givers.

Thanking you for the privilege you have given me of being instrumental in helping the poor whom otherwise I should have to have seen suffering before my eyes without power to render any help. Yours sincerely, creatures below him, and on the other the heavenly spirits. It depends on himself which of the two he shall bring to light. There are some men of mature life who know no happiness except that which their physical nature affords them. They were offered any thing they wished, they would choose ease and luxury and pleasure. Their physical nature is the predominant in their being, and their condition differs but little from that of the brute. The other course is difficult, requires more effort, is tried by more obstacles. It, too, has its pleasures, but they are of a higher order. Conversion should be the beginning of that course. It should be a starting point of successive attainments in which the spiritual powers are developed. The Apostle names the stepping-stones to upward climb. He sees the man who has listened to the call of God escape from the corruption that lust has caused in the world, exercising faith, going on to true, gaining knowledge, becoming patient, gentle, kind, loving. His character is rounded out, developed, has risen to likeness to God. This is not barren, but is fruitful in all around him. And this he attains the power of Christ, the power which is given to him to aid him in developing that side of his nature.
American Marathi Mission. J. E. ARBOTT.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE.

Ut Mothers and Babies.

Pictesque Indian Tribe Whose Members are Slowly Becoming Civilized.

F testimony were needed to show the effects of introducing Christianity and education among the Indian tribes in our western and southwestern states, it is abundant in the reports of the work accomplished at Hampton Institute, Virginia. Undoubtedly this famous educational institution has done more to produce permanent results than all other agencies in that particular field. Young women from all the tribes have been trained and educated, and with a burning zeal have entered the labor among their red brethren. Many of the men who have been trained there are now leaders; a few are mechanics, and some are farmers. While the women it may be true that a great majority, their industrious and useful lives have given evidence of the value of their education. Some of the reports of the progress of the Indian pupils are interesting. Of one of the Crow tribe—the wed-Head—it was said, "besides being a housekeeper, she is skilful with the needle and has certain responsibilities in a large household, a slow character and a useful greater usefulness." Another girl, Grace, who left school and returned to her parents, said: "I don't want you to have forgotten what I have learned. I am Christian, though my people are outside like Indian, inside Christian still." Another girl, Grace, while in school developed a fine talent for drawing and painting, and besides a capital sewer. Celeste P., a girl, grew out of her infancy, dressed neatly and became a really excellent housekeeper. A notable case is that of Mabel Thrown-Away (her name), who on returning home after finishing educational course, began a useful work among her friends. Another influence, her father became a judge; the children attended school and the home changed as much as possible. Though she lived a ye, her influence has never waned. Her whole family are still on the side of civilization and progress. She also had a cousin who gave up his Indian life, opened up a farm, became an earnest Christian, and for her sake led a life. Amy W., another Indian girl, the daughter of a petty chief, on leaving the vernacular school, reconstructed her Indian home so that visitors surprised to find everywhere evidence of taste and refinement, while the machines, books, pictures, and the luxuries, made the room a home. In contrast to this, nearby was an old time cabin, devoted to the old Indian and others, who did not feel at home amid surroundings so redolent of floors so clean. Unfortunately, there are some Indian men and women who, on leaving government schools, seem to drift back into the old life, but they seem to be an exception. These retrogrades are pitied quite as much as those who are the force of circumstances, have not enjoyed any training advantages. Our photograph on this page presents a group of Ute women, mothers and daughters, and a pair of little brown Indian babies—"papposes." These, judging from appearances, have had to do with civilizing influences to a certain extent, sufficient to somewhat modify the native dress of the women of the tribe. The Utes formerly comprehended about fifteen tribes and occupied the central and western portions of Colorado and the northwestern portion of Utah. They extended into New Mexico and intermarried with other tribes, north and south. Always warlike and restless, they were among the hardest of the tribes to civilize, but of late years the Moache and Capote Utes have developed a taste for agriculture. Up to the present time, however, the southern and western Utes are still what are termed "blanket Indians," and prefer the old ways and the old dress to the manners and garments of civilization. Those on the reservation in Utah are peaceable and disposed to industry, and have made fair progress. There are probably five thousand Utes not yet gathered on reservations who are still nomads, and cling to the old tribal customs.

A GROUP OF UTE MOTHERS AND THEIR "PAPPOSES."

Enslaved Turkish Wives.

Mr. Ramsey, a traveler in Moslem lands, has recently issued a book on this subject which is attracting much attention in Europe at present. He gives this touching and impressive picture of the condition of woman in Turkey:

The most depressing and melancholy part of the traveler's Turkish experience relates to the women and their position. As a rule, the peasant women have such a hard life of constant work from a very early age, their life is so devoid of relief or enjoyment, of educating or humanizing influences, they seem so tattered, ragged, forlorn, and uncared for, as they stand with their face towards a mud wall while you ride past, that indignation and disgust grow strong in your mind against the social system that treats women in this way. A Greek-speaking Albanian servant, Akhmet, whom we had with us in October and November, 1881, pointed to a herd of Turkish women toiling like beasts of burden near a village, and remarked with a world of scorn in his tone: "Thus are the Turks; the wife of Akhmet sits at home." It would be difficult to live much among the peasants without learning to sympathize with the "woman's movement" in more civilized lands. The total want of pleasant intercourse and friendly open relations between men and women greatly intensifies the monotony and the ignorance of village life, and also produces many other evils—a subject on which I will not enter. But after a long time among Turks, it was quite delightful and refreshing to meet, beside a Kurd village, a young man driving out a bullock-cart to the harvest, and a young woman walking beside, talking and laughing and engrossed in each other's company. It was like a breath of Europe, bearing a scent of home.

How a Queen Lives.

There are few ladies in Victoria's realm who, in all that relates to their own individual comfort and preferences, are so simple in their tastes, or so easily satisfied. But her station and surroundings do not permit her the luxury of following her simple tastes. Dressing in the plainest garments, she is surrounded by a multitude of gorgeously attired nobles, courtiers and lackeys. Eating wholesome and unpretending fare, she finds others about her partial to the most expensive luxuries. Seldom sick, the slightest ache or twinge in her person summons to her side twenty-two distinguished medical men who are specially employed to minister to her bodily health. These include physicians, surgeons, dentists, oculists and chiropodists. None of these act singly. If the tiniest corn appeared upon one of her toes, it would result in a consultation of chiropodists, surgeons and WORK.

WORK, for it is a noble thing, With worth ends in view, To tread the path that God ordains, With steadfast hearts and true, That will not quail, whate'er betide, But bravely bear us through.

It reck not what the place may be That we are called to fill, How much there is of seeming good, How much of seeming ill; 'T is ours to bend our energies And consecrate the will.

Work, with cheerful earnest hearts, Your bravest and your best; For in a busy world like ours There is no place of rest; And think not they who vainly dream Their lives away are blest. For in each weary, painful task A lesson is inwrought, If we would read the truth aright, And let ourselves be taught Patience and faith and fortitude And fixedness of thought.

An Aim in Life.

MRS. R., an accomplished Christian lady of Mynard, Neb., and a reader of this journal, has set forth in the lines quoted below, some very excellent advice for the benefit of those about to begin life in earnest. "Every young person," she writes, "on entering the great field of the world should determine what should be his occupation and follow it with the determination to make it a success; such persons do not often make life a failure. The aim should be to improve the mind in every possible channel; for the mind has a certain vegetative power which cannot be wholly idle. If it is not laid out and cultivated into a beautiful garden of knowledge, it will of itself shoot up into weeds or flowers of wild growth. Let one not be too ambitious to do the highest work and the grandest work, but the work God has given to do. Be it the meanest service, be it what some call drudgery, we may make it beautiful by the spirit in which we do it. Strive not after the 'many things,' but the one thing needful, and remembering every part assigned you is a good part, be it the master's or the servant's, the teacher's or the scholar's, the tradesman's or the student's, the part of action or suffering, of trial or tears, of speech or silence.

"No person can expect to learn and know everything for this can neither be sought nor required, for it is utterly impossible; yet every person is under some obligation to improve the understanding, otherwise it would be as a barren desert, or a forest overgrown with weeds and brambles."

Vegetarianism in India.

Every high-caste Hindoo is a vegetarian. The very touch of meat, egg, lard, or fish, he considers contaminating, and he lives exclusively upon butter, milk, sugar, flour, rice, pulse, and herbs. In Bengal the people generally eat fish, but in the upper provinces, or in Bombay or Madras, where Hindooism is more strict, fish is quite as forbidden as meat. During the day the Hindoo generally takes an hour's siesta. He gets up at four o'clock in the morning, and goes to bed from nine to ten o'clock at night. He works all the time that he is awake. And as a respite from his incessant labor, he enjoys an hour's rest during the hottest part of the day.

Siam's Gallant King.

It is learned that one of the ambitions of King Chulalongkorn of Siam, now visiting in Great Britain, is to elevate the social status of woman in his native land. Siamese women are still the slaves of the seraglio, subject to the whim of their lords and masters. The King has against him the traditions and selfish customs of his rajahs, and with him only his own weight of individuality and the prestige created through many successful reforms. His successful is doubtful.

As the World Giveth.

THE hero of this narrative Was large and richly clad, And all the comforts earth could give He evidently had. He wore in front a double chin, And, just below, a diamond pin. He walked with august bearing to His cushioned pew. With strong and mellow voice he sang, "All riches here below I freely give without a pang; Go, earthly treasures, go!" And as the basket came his way He ope'd his purse, without display, And gave, to my astonishment, One copper cent! —W.C.M.

JUST A WEE ITALIAN WAIF.

But Little Canute was King of the Children at Mont-Lawn for a day—A Teacher's Interesting Description.

CANUTE GOLTEELLI—"LITTLE NO. 7,000."

HE past week has been an unusually happy one at Mont-Lawn. In the first place, the weather was fine so that the children were out of doors from 5:30 in the morning until 7:30 at night, and were able to take many walks in the woods. Every morning and afternoon merry parties start out, sometimes to find ferns and flowers; sometimes to fill caps and baskets with blackberries, but oftenest of all to "go for apples."

I took a party of five or six for a tramp of about two miles to a farm where big, juicy green pippins lay thickly strewn upon the ground. The farmer's daughter told the boys to take all they could carry, as otherwise the fruit would be wasted. So those who had coats stripped them off, tied knots in the sleeves, buttoned them up and stuffed them full of apples. One boy, who wore a sweater, kept filling in at his neck until he was puffed out to an alarming extent both behind and before. Some tied up their handkerchiefs, and others packed their pockets to the utmost capacity. It was indeed a strange-looking procession that wound down the road to the Home, and one which made the passing farmers smile, for we looked more like gypsies moving camp than like proper girls and boys.

It is almost pitiful to watch the interest of the children over everything in the country. How wild the boys are to catch the pollywogs and watch them grow! Many a time has the gravity of the boys been upset in chapel time by a bull-frog, locust or turtle escaping from a dark pocket and hurrying along the aisle. The children call every sort of evergreen a "Christmas-tree," and a high, green hedge a "railing." They wonder at the spiders and the squirrels, and call out to their teachers to look at a cow.

Our impromptu morning entertainments have been especially bright this week, for we have had some good home talent among the children. One little fellow in particular who recites Eugene Field's "Just Before Christmas," as well as a number of dialect pieces very finely, has favored us again and again. Two little sisters, whose mother is a singer, have given us some sweet children's songs, which they have learned from their mother. No matter how noisy the crowded chapel, it becomes perfectly quiet as soon as the little Ward girls begin to sing. Thus, from one and another, selections are given, some bright and funny, others less clever, but all helping to pass away a happy hour.

An attractive feature of the play-ground under the trees is the new sand-pile—"Coney Island dirt," as one child called it. Many a happy hour do the little ones spend building most remarkable forts, digging tunnels and laying out gardens in the sand. The sand-pile is, moreover, a good place to collect the children and watch their ways,—to find out the originality of each one,—and to talk freely with them at their quiet play.

One day last week a missionary from India visited our Home, bringing with her three Hindu girls who sang their native songs for the children. When our children heard about the poor little orphans and famine sufferers in India, they were much touched and responded heartily to Miss Collins' suggestion that we have a mission-box up here. Before that day was over, we had eighty-one cents in the little bank, many of them being the precious pennies saved up for candy. One little boy who had earned the sum of five cents for sweeping up the sand-heap, willingly dropped it all into the mission-box. Is not that much more in God's sight than some of us give? Some of the older boys were so much interested that they got together on Sunday and had a little meeting of their own on the hillside; sang, prayed, and read the Bible, and then collected about twenty cents additional. They were not satisfied with the missionary stories told them in chapel, and begged for them at night in the dormitory.

Our new bell, of which mention was made last week, is another of the things we have enjoyed especially. Every night about half-past six it has rung out its sweet call to the evening service, often catching the new arrivals as they come up in the stages and giving them its melodious welcome.

Canute Golteelli, who has been a prominent member of our family this week, and who is the seven thousandth child received since the opening of the "Home," is a shy and forlorn little fellow. He comes from Thompson street—an Italian quarter—and speaks both English and Italian, although one would judge from his first name that his parents were Danes. One evening, Canute was surprised at being carried off from the supper table in state, while two hundred voices cheered for "Little 7,000," and the drum beat time for the grand march. Two of the teachers seized brooms and, tying on aprons for flags, led the procession out of the dining tent, past the house, twice around the ball grounds and back. Part of the time little Canute, our distinguished guest, rode at the head of the parade in a wheelbarrow, and part of the time on crossed hands. At any rate, whether on throne or coach, he was equally happy, and still more so, when he was at last let down on the porch and presented with five sticks of candy and a peach! His face fairly beamed.

We are here to care for and teach these poor little street urchins, but many a lesson do we learn from them of childlikeness and loyalty to each other. Our constant effort and prayer is that we may be able to show them how they may conquer the wrong, and even in the short time that they are here, to strengthen the good that there is in them.

ISABEL B. TROWBRIDGE.

The following contributions for our Children's Home have been received:

Prev ack	$3,123.07	Friend, N. Y.	5.00
One who loves child.		I. H. N. So. Gardiner	2.00
Vail	1.00	Teacher, Greenport	3.00
Mrs. Tobin	1.00	Mrs. Doeckstader	5.00
L. M. P. Hartford	2.00	R. L. Beevers & wife	6.00
A. M. Jefferson	2.00	Outing, Edwardsdale	10.00
Mrs. Van Kleeck	1.00	Miss Ella Van Br-
Mrs. P. Tiler	2.00	kle's SS class	2.00

Jas Ray	2.00	I. H. N. Battle Creek	2.50
Two Lady Visitors to		Mrs. Howard S. Taylor	3.00
Mont-Lawn	6.00	Miss S. Ross	1.00
Mrs. B. F. S. Sam's Val	5.00	W. H. Shepard	10.00
2 Friends, Granville	6.00	J. Buchanan	1.00
In memory of Jas G		Mrs. Palmer	3.00
Beemer, Jr.	12.00	Mrs. I. D. Stehman	1.00
I. H. N. Ashland	5.00	I. H. N. Warren	3.00
Mary E. Parmelee	5.00	Thank, Offering, O.	5.00
Mrs. P. L. Cobb	25	Mrs. W. M. Hall	1.00
E. V. Decker	3.00	Ream Co.	3.00
Frances A. Curtis	5.00	J. Jay	2.50
Mrs. T. A. Murray	5.00	Friend, Hawke	7.05
Geo. Logan	2.00	Baby Keith, Carroll'n	1.00
Chas. A. Tyler	3.00	Emma E. Kingsley	3.00
Rufus Lord	5.00	Mrs. R. Allen	3.00
S. Penna	3.00	J. T. G. Huntingdon	5.00
Subr. Hartford	3.00	West Manchester	5.00
M. B. Ballie	3.00	"Driftwood," Turner's
V. E. S. Roney	3.00	F. A. Page	3.00
Minnie P. Taylor	1.00	Mrs. C. A. Voris	20.00
Mrs. J. V. Wilson	1.00	Chas. V. Knowles	1.00
Charlotte S. Berry	1.00	Pres. S. S. Beaumont	2.45
Rufus Meyer	5.00	Friend, New York	1.26
Lucy & Edith Moore	25	Shut-in, E. Jefferson	35
Mrs. A. Buck	6.00	Father, Bklyn	25
Col'n taken at Bapt		Friend, Mt. Joy	3.00
Ch. Netherwood	3.10	L. E. Sears	6.00
Mary H. & Anna L.		W. A. Goehring	2.00
Everett	5.00	Fredk. Richards	1.00
Elizabeth & William		E. J. Vawter	6.00
Hunter	5.00	Margt. G. Watson	1.50
Mrs. E. A. Elford	2.00	A. B. N. La Jara	50
Mrs. E. F. Liberty	3.00	One who loves child.
Florence, Flushing	3.00	Bklyn	1.00
Barbara Ruvenacht	3.00	The Patterson Social
I. A. H. Member, Tampa	25	Club, N. Y.	12.00
A. F. B. Bingham	25	S. B. Lake Mahopac	5.00
Mr. Witherspoon	2.50	H. T. Walker	10.00
Jessie Hickok	40	Constant Read, Dana	3.00
2 friends of children.		John S. Fogg	3.00
Colon	2.30	H. Page	1.50
Mrs. B. A. Hegeman	25.00	F. A. D. Monticello	50
H. W. H. D. Dark	13.00	I. H. N. Manchester	3.00
In the Master's Name		M. A. C. McCammon	3.00
Oswego Falls	3.00	Nettie W. Jones	1.00
J. E. Baird	20.00	Hay Lake S. S.	4.00
M. H. Boyer	5.00	Angie & Maynie
Cecile Ethel, Afton	10.00	Seammon	4.00
One who wants to fol-		Mrs. A. Wightman	3.00
low the Master, Ax-		Mrs. Lydia Lott	3.00
ton	1.00	Jane C. Rose	50
Little workers, Corona	3.00	Mrs. Emeline Riddle	1.50
Mrs. H. L. Hart	1.00	Esther Needham	1.00
Mrs. M. J. J. Oskosh	3.00	Anna Needham	1.00
I. H. N. K. K. K. K. K.	5.00	Friend, Hobay Park	5.00
M. A. R. O. Windsor	3.00	Hugh Jackson	10
Mrs. Rhodes	6.00	Nellie Jackson	10
H. Lincoln	10.00	Kings Dau's, Wyckoff	5.50
I. H. N. Oakham	3.00	G. W. B. Agassiz	3.00
Mrs. E. H. Pennoyer	2.00	Mrs. Malinda Geiger	2.00
F. Gilbert	6.00	"Gredo," New Castle	2.00
C. A. H. Putnam	3.00	Mrs. A. C. Bowen	2.00
B. F. Trow	1.00	C. C. Martin	10.00
I. D. Fletcher	1.00	J. M. R. Frederic City	1.00
Believer in Christ,		Friends, Cohoes	1.00
Monticello	1.00	M. A. W. Deposit	2.00

CANDIDATES FOR OUR CHILDREN'S HOME—FAMILIAR STREET SCENE IN NEW YORK.

Jno H. Braden	1.00	Madge E. Howland	1.00
Daisy Francisco	10.00	Mrs. A. W. C. Williams	5.00
Two who are trying		Mrs. John Lerner	2.00
to do God's will,		Friend, Loda	2.00
Colo Spgs.	2.00	Z. J. J. Neshannock Fls	2.00
Oak Grove S. S. Mich	1.70	Mrs. A. A. G. Sweet	3.00
Refr. Dutch S. S. Bklyn	12.50	Zillah May Trewin	2.00
D. W. Loomis & wife	3.00	M. L. Lacouina	3.00
C. Stuntun	1.00	J. G. Pierce	3.00
Friend, Geneva	1.00	Mrs. W. E. Martin	4.00
Mrs. H. Blauvelt	3.00	Nels P. Bruvold	3.00
Dora Coddle	3.00	Lida Hoffman	1.00
Mrs. J. H. Chinn & J.		Vina Hoffman	1.00
C. Stanley	6.00	Richmond	2.00
I. S. Chinn	2.00	M. S. Morrison	1.00
M. Tiltot	2.00	D. D. Davis	50
Clarence, Hazel, and		J. H. R. New York	50.00
Leon White	3.00	Abbie F. Batten	3.00
Miss A. Riddlestorf	1.00	H. W. Miller	3.00
Mary, Burnside	1.00	Mrs. M. Lathrop	1.00
Martha C. Osborne	3.00	Mrs. D. Milne	3.00
C. E. & A. S. New York	6.00	M. L. Lacouina	3.00
Mrs. Eliza A. Sprague	5.00	Phoebe Sanders	1.00
Mrs. E. H. Nichols	3.00	Cong'th S. S. & C. E. Soc.
O. Reed	5.00	Daytona	11.00
Blount family	3.00	Wilfred & Florence,
Ann T. Otis	3.00	Brooklyn	1.00
West Hampton Hall		Mrs. Emma Thompson	3.00
M. S. S.	8.50	Mrs. S. W. Swanson	2.00
Mrs. Mary Whipples	2.00	Hannah Swanson	1.00
Friend, Clark's Grove	1.00	So. Newbury	1.00
Mauna Charite, Bklyn	2.00	Mrs. M. W. White	50
Little Charite, Bklyn	1.00	Friend E. Brooklyn	6.00
Mrs. Hulskamper	5.00	Mrs. Mary Landon	2.50
Subr. Medford	3.00	In memory of Little
Friend, Lebanon	2.00	Low Chiegezie	50
Lemoyne, Gilbert	50	Total	$3,887.53

Contributions of Clothing, etc.

Friend, W. Va.: A. J. Farrington; Mrs. R. H. Anderson; Mrs. Smith Pray; H. E. Bullock; Mrs. Geo. Storkopf; Miss Minnie E. Austin, Chairman Mercy & Help Dept., Norwalk, E. I.; C. E. Wilmarth; Friend, Renington; M. E. Lillibridge; Helen Fay Roller; Mrs. A. V. Rhule; Mrs. E. I. Bullock; T. H. S. & M. C. H. Carbondale; Walter M. C. Cal; Mrs. G. W. Ramsey; Ray & Marion, Waltham; Clyde, Renington.

UPLIFTING THE LOWLY.

The Roberts' Mission in Kansas City and its Work Among the Fallen.

THE Roberts' Mission is a name to the inhabitants of Kansas City, but the zeal of the woman who is its founder, through ten years of missionary labors,

MRS. JESSIE ROBERTS.

Mission, which she founded ten years ago at 106 East Third street, has gone steadily on. Some idea of the work may be gained from the following report:

It is with great pleasure that I my mission work in Kansas City ten years. I arrived from St. Louis in May, 1887, believing that a work for me to do. After canvassing the east side of the city for the church, I found the terrible condition of the houses, and dens of iniquity. Many families were living among their dear little children growing atmosphere of vice. The excuse of were that it was necessary to live there; cause of the rents. We teachers at hand I started the people in whether and called to their souls answered: No, as they were there. This while I read with the vited me again. I did and white together, so had never in my mission in New York. Louis. In I reproved sharply theged me to my safety.

At that time up my mission of mission on h with only 5 ed the br No. 106 at the rent, went in, locked the door, long talk with the Lord. The bought lamps. The Y. M. C. A. three dozen chairs and some books, succeeded in inducing a large number of folks to come in. Bare feet, dirty faces were the rule, but after a few what a change! Clean hands and clothes, and altogether changed. This trial school was next started. This by the good ladies of the First Church. After six months we had a larger store above. Ladies and from different churches came to the first being Mrs. E. Schaufliker, now Lord. Miss Jennie Williams, who ing good work in Dallas, Tex., a missionary spirit from the Roberts' Mission. Allan Cameron, who is laboring in got his missionary inspiration in the Mission. The north end of the city on Third street, is 100 per cent, be was nine years ago. Some of the entered the school at its commencement with us to-day. Others are married and made good wives and mothers, and near to us. Nellie Bishop died talking of Jesus, and many others to meet her. Many unfortunate were died, who received strength and the Lord in the Roberts Mission.

The Roberts Mission is supplied voluntary contributions, and is wholly as a work of faith. No workers are salaried, and Mrs. Roberts gives her own efforts freely in charge. The address of the mission is 106 E. Third St., Kansas City, Mo.

GOSPEL TOUR IN ASSAM.

Paul Writes of His Voyage Up the Grt River in his Mission Boat, the Hubo Barta (Good News)—Preaching in Native Villages.

ASSAM is a country containing a population of about six millions. Its people are divided into about fifty distinct tribes, speaking not less than forty languages and dialects. From this it will be seen at once that the work is made out of the twelve different mission of the province by the society is of the kind and that scarcely any two tribes can employ exactly the same language. The majority of the people are Hindus, but there is also a large body of followers of the Christian religion. These latter are to be found in the large towns, while in the quiet villages, living in small villages throughout the province. The Miris are a people who, tired of continual fighting between tribes while in their independence in the mountains to the north of the district, descended into the plains at a time that the British government occupied this country, (1827): they have lived in peace and quietness since, multiplying in three generations a few families to a people numbering forty-five thousand.

TEA SIFTING IN ASSAM.

Of our missionaries who had opened a station for work in the tea-garden lands, (who are all immigrants from lower India), the North Lakhimpur district, in 1894, seeing the large number of the numerous in the neighborhood, urged the missionary to be sent. As the writer, who was then in the United States, and had recently lived in India, the British government offered himself to go and to the society which auspices he went, as a foreign missionary. The appointment was made and the missionary and his wife were on their way to Lakhimpur, Assam, for their work. We had our destination in mind of January, and began at once to acquaint ourselves with the people and their language. The first three years were spent in a little earthen hut, half of which was used for our bed. Before the rainy season had become familiar with the country, by making trips in a little boat cut out of a log, along the rivers which run through the beautiful forests and through the dense jungles.

One day Miris most thickly settled along the Subinsiri river, so determined to build a house near the mouth of this river, that our station might have the easy reach of the Hill Tribes on the border, as well as in the midst of those who had become British subjects in the plains. (I wrote) Boston asking an appropriation for a boat. This done, my wife and I applied ourselves to the study of the As-samese language; for we found that the Miris spoke and some of them read in Assamese. By the end of the rainy season we could read the New Testament, and talk to the people, although not fluently.

Our hearts rejoiced in August when we received a letter from Boston saying money had been given for the boat. September saw me hunting the Brahmaputra river for a suitable boat. I succeeded in buying one from a Hindu priest whose disciples were rather upset because I would not bow down and worship this man who calls himself a god. This boat is made in the shape of a very long-bodied goose, by means of long strips of wood which are wonderfully fastened together by flat nails. It is 45x6. I had it properly fitted up, so that we should be protected from sun or rain and have room for sleeping and eating purposes. By the first of October all was ready; and on the fourth of that month my wife, our Assamese teacher, and myself, with three Miri boatmen, started out on our first aquatic Gospel tour.

On Sunday, the 6th, we had a sort of a dedication service at a Bengali Christian village on the Ronga river. At this service Mr. and Mrs. Firth, two other missionaries, were present. We named the boat the Hubo Barta (i. e. Good News). On the following morning these Bengali Christians came out to the river bank at about 7:30 o'clock and knelt down with us and asked God's blessing on the Hubo Barta and its mission. As our boat glided out into the waters they sang with us, "Take the Name of Jesus with You," in Assamese. And so we went day after day from village to village. There are just twenty Miri villages on this beautiful little river, and in them we sowed the "seed of the Word."

RIVER SCENE AT KAYIN, CHINA.

Reaching the mouth of the Ronga river, we found ourselves once more in the great Subinsiri, and traveling up stream. The people were enthusiastic in their reception of us, and the young men who could read bought copies of the gospels, some times following us for miles to do so. They brought out their sick, and begged us to cure them. Our hearts ached to help them.

This is the worst district in Assam for opium. The money spent in the Lakhimpur district last year for this drug exceeded by far the land rents and taxes. Lying, stealing, and even men selling their own daughters, not infrequently into a life of shame, in order to get money for opium; these are some of the dire results of the habit that came under our personal observation. They have no conception of truth and purity, and our only hope for them is in their acceptance of the Gospel.

After much traveling we found a piece of high land suitable for our purpose. It is within a mile of a large tea-garden, not far from two others, and within two miles of five villages, one of which is quite near the border of Assam. While taking a cup of tea on the river bank we came to the conclusion, all things considered, that this was a most desirable place. We applied to the deputy commissioner for the land, which was in due time granted.

Other trips were taken in the Hubo Barta, to visit again the villages in which we had sown the seed. Altogether we considered our first cool season's touring was attended with blessing.

Last September, being assured by our Board (the American Baptist Missionary Union) that money for a bungalow would be forthcoming, a temporary house was built at our new station, Pthalipaur. In October the missionary was joined by his wife and little daughter, born since we came to Assam) since which time this station has been open. For seven consecutive months much of our time has been spent in building a good substantial bungalow and other necessary houses.

So far, four souls have been baptized, confessing their belief in Christ. Missionary work of all kinds has been carried on, not the least important of which is the attendance upon the continual string of people of various tribes who come for medical assistance. The Gospel has been preached directly to most of the people of the neighborhood; a school has been opened, and in spite of bitter opposition on the part of the Hindu leaders and others, we find many of the people impressed. During the summer we hope to gather together the few Christians who are in the tea-garden near by, and organize them into a church.

A KAYIN PLOUGHMAN.

While some tea-garden managers and other Europeans connected with the tea industry in Assam, rather encourage than oppose missionary work amongst their coolies, a great majority of them show very clearly that they wish we would keep the light farther away from them.

The needs of this field are many, the most immediate being means to support at least two more native Christian teachers. It is my great desire to place these at important points in this field where they may open schools, and do all the direct preaching and hand-to-hand Christian work that it is possible for them to carry on. We have only one native helper employed now.

I have learned in the short time I have been in Assam not to measure the influence of the Gospel among Hindus by the number who openly profess Christ, but by the quiet acknowledgments of its divine authority, the spotless character of Christ, the need of the atonement that it provides, and the sorrowful confessions that we sometimes hear to the effect that "If I become a Christian, all my friends and neighbors will forsake me; and having no place among them I should become a beggar." Pray for us. JOSEPH PAUL.

WINNING SOULS IN CHINA.

Heroic Labors of our Pioneer Missionaries Among the Hakkas—A Race of Bigots.

A HAKKA BOAT.

IN the letter below, from the pen of Rev. Geo. E. Whitman, a faithful American missionary of the Gospel in China, light is shed upon a portion of the great Mongol race concerning which little is known. The Hakkas, described by Mr. Whitman, are among the most bigoted of the Chinese, yet as his letter shows, substantial spiritual progress has been made in the face of a multitude of discouragements.

Editor "The Christian Herald:—"

Our mission is to that branch of the Chinese race called "Hakka." They do not differ very materially either in character or custom from the other branches of this great race, with this exception: that foot-binding is not practised among their women.

The spoken language of the Hakkas is closely allied to the Mandarin, and yet sufficiently different to make it a distinct dialect. The territory they occupy is mountainous, and is situated wholly inland, including portions of three provinces, namely: Kwang Tung, Fu Kien, and Kiang Si, with by far the larger portion in Kwang Tung province. The number of Hakka-speaking people has been estimated from five millions all the way up to twenty millions. The mission forces here bear no such favorable relation to the multitudes as did the five loaves and two small fishes to the thousands gathered beyond the Sea of Galilee. But Christ is here as truly as he was there, and in this is our hope and confidence.

The German Basle Mission has had a field for many years among the Hakkas, working in from Canton. The English Presbyterian Mission also has a prosperous work, starting in from Swatow as a base. Both are meeting with grand success, though they have as yet only reached a comparatively small number of the people. With the exception of the Roman Catholics, the Baptist Missionary Union is the only other body engaged in the work of evangelizing the Hakkas. Our work, also, as in case of the Presbyterians, starts in from Swatow as a base, and is an outgrowth of the mission to the people speaking the Swatow dialect.

Though our mission was started some fifteen years ago, our progress has been exceedingly slow. The continual attempt through all these years to get an equipped body of workers on the field has met with constant failure. For the first eight years or so, it was carried on, with many interruptions and changes, from a little village situated near the border of the Hakka territory. About six years ago a station was opened farther inland, at Kayin, the principal city and intellectual centre of the Hakkas. This is now the central station and home of the missionaries. We have at the present time here and there scattered over this large field about sixty church members, a small number—but only an advance guard let us hope of the many who will follow to do battle against the powers of Satan as manifested in the superstitious customs and beliefs of this people. There are six stations established, including Kayin, from which work is carried on. These all have preachers in charge except two, for which there are no suitable laborers as yet. We visit these two stations as frequently as possible and try to develop an interest there.

Our greatest need is for trained native workers. To meet this need, the senior missionary, Mr. Campbell, has recently opened up a school at Kayin. There are six Christian students in attendance, beside others who attend some of the classes. We hope that three of the number will soon be ready for active work. Next year it is expected that the number of students will be considerably larger. We also need a compound with foreign houses, so as to prevent the loss that arises from a long absence from the field in hot weather. The attendance at the chapels is large, and the inquirers are of a hopeful class. We have baptized twelve believers since the beginning of this year, and expect other additions.

Kayin, July 9th, 1897. GEO. E. WHITMAN.

BASHARA, THE BEARER OF TIDINGS.

AN ORIENTAL TALE,
WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."
By ALFREDA POST, of Beirut, Syria.

CHAPTER II—Continued.

"NOW for the last march!" cried the Sheikh, "before you are water and life!"

The camels rose first, with awkward, plunging motion, and led the way; the horsemen followed, a phantom procession. They rode hour after hour in weary silence. The moon waned, till Bashara could discern nothing but the dim outline of the white camel before him, moving ever onward with monotonous swaying gait. He struggled with sleep as with some bird of evil omen that kept ever settling back upon him when he drove it off. At last the conflict grew too painful; he slipped down from his saddle, and in an instant was asleep upon the ground. Abu Sharr's horse stumbled over him.

"What in the name of madness are you doing?" exclaimed the rider.

"Leave me!" pleaded Bashara, "my life is nothing to me."

With rough kindness the Bedouin jumped from his horse and forced Bashara back into his saddle.

"My son, you are not used to this life—we have only four hours more."

Four hours of suffering for man and beast! At last came the dawn, stretching ghost-like fingers across the plain; a mountain ridge took shape against the sky.

"Praise be to Allah! there is our well!" cried the Sheikh, "do you see the women with their water-skins?"

Water! water! who knows the life-giving meaning of the word! The men broke into cheers. The women, with eager sympathy, drew for them and their animals, and they drank with the gratitude of those who enter Paradise.

When all were refreshed, the women filled the water-skins for themselves, slung them over the backs of their little donkeys and trudged off to the Bedouin settlement at the base of the mountain. The Sheikh waited till they were out of hearing, then rallied his men.

"The first village that we seek is up yonder at the head of the valley. We must sleep here at the well for the day; when night comes, we shall leave the camels here, and the horsemen will make the attack; with the help of Allah, we shall take everything in the village!"

The men stretched themselves upon the ground. Bashara was the most exhausted of them all, but with a superhuman effort, he kept himself awake.

"This is my high calling!" he kept saying to himself. In a short time, all around him were deep in sleep. Without a sound, he rose to his feet and hastened in the direction which the Sheikh had pointed out. It was an hour's climb, a terrible task, but he pined on. The group of flat-roofed houses was reached. He hurried to the marketplace where the men were assembled.

"For your lives, defend yourselves! the Bedouins are upon you!"

From mouth to mouth, the message flew, the whole village was astir. Men rushed hither and thither carrying arms, making barricades. Bashara the bearer of the tidings, was soon forgotten; he slipped behind a low arch, his work was now done, and he threw himself upon the ground and slept.

CHAPTER III.

He was awakened at dark by the sound of guns and conflict. He jumped up, all his young blood on fire; then checked himself. With hands clenched and lips pressed tightly together, he struggled with himself. Should he, Bashara, stand still while men defended their homes! And yet, and yet, how could he in honor fight? "I have eaten bread and salt with them!" He stood, not caring that the fighting came nearer. Torches gleamed, weapons

"COME THIS WAY, QUICKLY," SAID THE GIRL.

glanced back and forth. A sudden weakness came over him; he was shot in the arm. Like one in a dream he tried to stanch the blood, but he was rapidly growing dizzy.

He was called to consciousness by a light touch; the slight figure of a girl stood before him.

"Come this way, quickly," she said, "there is no time to lose."

He followed her, dazed, through rough alleys, up and down slippery steps, between rows of huts. Smoke poured out of half-underground door-ways from household fires upon the floor beneath, and in the fitful glare he could see huddled groups of women and children; it seemed like glimpses into Dante's world.

His guide led him to the outskirts of the village. "Take care," she said, "these steps are steep."

She seemed to disappear into the ground before him, but presently emerged, carrying a smoking clay lamp. He followed her down the steps, and found himself in a cave, roughly fitted up as a human habitation. An old woman came forward to greet him.

"Grandmother," said the girl, "this is the messenger who brought the warning."

"Welcome, oh welcome he is among us!" she cried with quivering voice.

Bashara sank down upon a straw cushion on the floor.

"Grandmother," said the girl, "he is wounded; he has lost much blood."

As she spoke she brought from a corner a piece of soft material and tore it into strips.

"Let me wash the wound first," she said, bringing a jug of water.

With deft fingers, she started to bandage the arm.

"This way, please," said Bashara.

She grasped his meaning intelligently, and under his direction made a creditable dressing.

"Yasmin was always quick with her fingers," said the grandmother.

Yasmin! Jasmine! The name carried its own fragrance.

A halting step was heard on the stairway.

"Grandfather, is it you?"

"Yes, I come with joy; the Bedouins are driven away!"

"Praise the Lord!" cried they all.

The old man started at sight of Bashara.

"You are the one I have sought all day! The whole village is calling for you; they are ready to kiss your feet!"

"Then they do not think me a coward?"

The old man looked perplexed. "What do you mean? They think you a Prophet, a Messenger from God." He caught sight of Bashara's bandaged arm. "And wounded, too! Truly we owe you our lives."

The old woman leaned forward. "My son, you have not told us your name."

"Bashara," he answered.

"Bashara!" she repeated, throwing up her hands in ecstasy, "and truly did your mother name you! The Bearer of Good Tidings! Well is that name fulfilled to-night!"

The next morning the whole village crowded to do Bashara honor. They came with dancing and singing, dancing the sword-dance before him; never did a king receive more loyal tribute. They told him the story of the encounter and of the brave men who were wounded.

"Bring them to me," said Bashara. "I can use my right hand still; perhaps I can help them."

Their enthusiasm now knew no bounds. "A great Hakim is among us! With life and death in his hands!"

Bashara tended the wounded while the fever was still upon him, and the people who gathered around gazed as though upon a miracle.

"Oh, stay with us always!" they cried. "Men will come to you from all the villages round about; all eyes will look to you, the great Hakim!"

The thought worked in Bashara's mind as he lay upon his pallet.

"I should not grow rich," he thought; his glance fell upon the unselfish face of the girl, and his thought slunk away for very shame.

"Tell me," said Yasmin eagerly, "did you truly come from the great college for doctors in Beirut?"

"Yes," said Bashara, "and if I guess rightly, you, too, have not always been in this village."

Yasmin flushed, as she answered in English, "I was in the school of the Scotch lady at Ain-el-Hajai."

"Oh, the noble English language!" exclaimed Bashara. "I have not heard it since I left the coast."

Yasmin brought out from her corner a pile of English books.

(Continued on next page.)

Humor in the Blood

Hood's Sarsaparilla Found to Be the Best of Blood Purifiers.

"I had a very bad humor in my blood and began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and in a short time I was entirely cured. I believe Hood's Sarsaparilla to be the best of blood purifiers and I do not hesitate to recommend it to all sufferers with impure blood." MRS. HELEN DEWEY, Box 70, Gowanda, New York.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills act easily, effectively 25c. OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars FREE. B. M. Woolley, M. D., Box 487, Atlanta, Ga.

The Royal is the highest grade baking powder known. Actual tests show it goes third further than any other brand.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

The Treatment of Rheumatism or Uric Acid Poisoning.

GOVERNOR STEPHENS of Missouri recently informed our representatives that Tartar was the only remedy which gave him relief in uric acid poisoning. The governor speaks of the cure in the highest terms.

Pamphlet on the treatment of Rheumatism by Tartar sent free by McKesson & Robbins, 91 Fulton St., N. Y.

SOLE AGENTS FOR

The Tartaralithin Company

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite till you investigate. More artistic and enduring; less expensive. Write for designs and information. NO MOSAIC GROWING. NO CLEANING. NO THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO. 70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD OF CHURCH FURNISHINGS. OPERA AND ASSEMBLY CHAIRS. SCHOOL FURNITURE. GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

$200.00 IN GOLD CIVIL. International News and Book Company make a most liberal offer of $200.00 in gold for 200 copies of "Talks to Children about Jesus." Book is among the most popular ever published. Sold 21 in 2 days, another 55 the next day. Freight paid, credit given. They also publish other popular books, and a beautiful children's book for the Christmas holidays. Agents wanted on salary.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Most Durable and Decorative. Suitable for all buildings. Numerous references. H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., New York.

BOYS AND GIRLS

Watches, Clocks, Ten Sets and Toys with $5, $7 and $10. Is your chance to get out TEAS, COFFEES, ETC. See Premium and Price List. THE GREAT AMERICAN TOY CO. 81 & 83 Vesey St., New York, N. Y.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISE

Our INVISIBLE TUBE Ear Cure helps as glasses help eyes. NO PAIN. Whispers heard. Send to F. H. Wood, 111 W. 11th St., N. Y. for Book and Test.

SACRED SONGS

No other New book equal to it. $25 per each. If by mail. THE HOLLOWAY & SONS, Lakeside Building, Chicago.

Bashara, the Bearer of Tidings.

(Continued from preceding page.)

It means to me all that is sweetest and best in life," she said. "What is that strange language that you talk?" asked the grandmother. "It is that they teach us in the schools," Yasmin said. "At that time Bashara's love for the English language grew mightily. How can you be happy," he asked Yasmin one day, "in such different surroundings from those where you have been educated?" "I cheer to come," she said, "I could leave my grandparents alone. We could live in a house," she added apologetically, "but when my grandfather grew old, I work, we came here." "What do you do when it rains? Does the water pour down the steps?" "We have dug a trench around in the wall of the cave, so the water does not get in," she said. "I have looked at her with a sort of awe."

CHAPTER IV.

Years later, there arose on the smoking village, the cheerful and the Haki's new house, the herald of, herald of the new civilization. The Haki himself had learned that a house in a country village is a pile to start from; he was again a clerk. He looked up lovingly to Yasmin, where stood Yasmin among the pines and aromatic plants. "I love, little wife," he called. "I will be back soon," she pleaded. "I will see you go to these distant vil-

Ham leads a charmed life," he said. "I never fear!" He turned down the path. How differently he had once felt that way! Stopping at the last of the road he waved his good-bye to Yasmin, who still stood in the path. "I have told her that his road must be the desert. He passed the will he had journeyed so far to find on several hours upon the path. No living being did he see but a bright-eyed lizard that darted under a thorn-bush, and, and sat arm-kimbo watching the stranger. "We could live like you," said Bashara, "in the morning dew on the thorns, in the night farewell on the desert." "I will be back soon," she pleaded. "I will see you go to these distant vil-

He watched them as they filed in procession of the road between the two. Suddenly a demon yell burst forth, the avalanche there crashed down on the party a band of armed men; the avalanche back upon itself. They red themselves together, and struck like a serpent, again and again, and repulse. But the attacking party had the advantage.

He only a few minutes before the law the plunderers tie together the captives and gallop away on episode which may occur in the desert.

He made his way toward them, smiling, approached them on foot, wishing peace.

He answered by a groan from a dead man in the centre of the group. "I have space," said Bashara, "I think I will."

He glared down and started as from a snake. "It was no other than Sheikh Ham!" He glanced to the face opposite. "I met the sinister features of the Sheikh."

"The me of the Sheitan!" exclaimed the Sheikh, clutching his dagger; but he had been carried away. "I have the religion of the beard—" "I will forget the past," said the Sheikh. "I can you still have mercy on an?"

He lifted the Sheikh's hand to his forehead. "I owe you my life; have I not?" "I have led and salt with you?"

Carefully, tenderly, Bashara bound up the wounds. They improvised a stretcher out of their full girdles.

"We must carry him three hours to the nearest village," said Bashara.

After an hour's weary march, the Sheikh stopped them. "Let me die here in peace."

They laid him upon the burning clay and tried to shield him from the sun with their bodies.

Suddenly the Sheikh lifted himself up and spoke to Bashara.

"My son, when first you escaped from me, I swore I would take your life; but now, I know that God was with you."

He fell back heavily; Bashara caught him with his arm and laid him back upon the clay, lifeless.

THE END.

Andree's Trip to the Pole.

Whether Dr. Andree, the daring Swedish aeronaut, who started by balloon for the North Pole some time ago, has already perished or has landed at some remote point, is not yet known. Various rumors as to his fate have been circulated but all have proved unfounded. For many years past, Dr. Andree has been well known as a scientific aeronaut of particular experience in long voyages. He has made many ascents for experimental purposes, building up his knowledge of ballooning possibilities gradually but surely. Two years ago he first started the world by the formulation at the Geographical Congress of his scheme for crossing the North Polar region in a balloon, and he soon obtained the financial help necessary. The late Mr. Alfred Nobel gave him $17,000, and King Oscar of Sweden contributed $8,500. The balloon, which cost $10,000 is about seventy-five English feet in height from the opening of the balloon proper to the top, and, roughly, a hundred feet from the top to the bottom of the basket. It is made of three thicknesses of silk held together with varnish and overlaid with two coats of varnish. Although this balloon may be regarded as being in almost every respect a novelty, the most striking characteristic is the guiding and steering apparatus. This apparatus, to describe it in brief, consists mainly of guiding ropes of different lengths, the shortest being about 1,000 feet and the longest about 1,200 feet in length. These ropes hang from the bearing-ring just above the car and drag along the earth or ice. The idea is that in case one of the ropes got foul, the others should run free. These guiding-ropes drag after the balloon, and are shifted by the voyager as he wills, so that their weight and hold on the balloon shall regulate its course.

The SEPTEMBER LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Is rich in suggestive matter for girls:

The Girl About to be Married

Will find the newest ideas in decorations for home weddings; also a full outline of the groom's part in his wedding.

The Girl Starting Her New Home

Will find in Mrs. Rorer the wisest help and counselor. This month she tells twenty ways of making bread and rolls; also how the small leaks in a household can be avoided.

The Girl Who Aspires to Art by Ruth Ashmore
A New Waltz by the Composer of "Erminie"
Hamlin Garland's Story of a Beautiful Girl
All the New Winter Fashions for Girls

One Dollar a Year Ten Cents a Copy
Twenty-five Cents for Three Months
The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia

N. Y. University Sixty-third year opens Oct. 1st, 1897. DAY CLASSES (LL. B. Law School after two years.) EVENING CLASSES (LL. B. after three years.) Tuition free. GRADUATE CLASSES—Twelve courses. Five required for LL.M. For circulars address L. J. Tompkins, Registrar, Washington Square, New York City.

A-head of Pearline?

Never! Not a bit of it! That is out of the question. Probably not one of the many washing-powders that have been made to imitate Pearline would claim to excel it in any way. All they ask is to be considered "the same as" or "as good as" Pearline. But they're not even that. Pearline is today, just as it has been from the first, the best thing in the world for every kind of washing and cleaning.

O'NEILL'S

Sixth Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, N. Y.

The Most Popular Department Store in America.

NEW YORK is the CENTER OF FASHION.

A Postal Card will bring you this Profusely Illustrated Fashion Catalogue FREE.

Ready September 10th.

SEND FOR IT! FREE UPON REQUEST.

STAMPED Shawknit ON THE TOE

Remember that no Stocking will wear well or look well that does not fit well.

The SHAWKNIT is the Best-Fitting.

It is the only Stocking that is Knitted to the Shape of the Human Foot.

The Trade-mark Shawknit is stamped on the toe.

Shaw Stocking Co., Lowell, Mass.

FRANKLIN COLLEGE New Athens, O. 73d Year. Sent out U. S. Senators, Governors, and 340 Ministers. Total cost $140 a year: 8 courses, course for: D. D., Ph. D., etc.; catalog free, with plan to earn funds. W. A. WILLIAMS, D. D., Pres.

WOMEN Make $2 to $10 a Day selling our Mackintosh Dress Skirts, new dress shields, etc. Cat. Free. Ladies' Supply Co., 3115 Forest Ave., Chicago

CONSECRATED WOMEN whose mind and heart have been turned in love and sympathy towards erring girls, and feel called to work among them and capable of being matrons in a Home for such girls, communicate with MRS. K. W. BARRETT, General Superintendent of the National Florence Crittenton Mission, 218 Third St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

What brings release from dirt and grease? Why, Don't you know? SAPOLIO!

THE WESLEYAN PRESIDENT.

REV. W. L. WATKINSON.

had the opportunity of making his acquaintance. His books, too, have been widely read, and have been appreciated even more highly than in his own land. It is remarkable that there he has more readers among the Congregationalists than among the Wesleys.

Mr. Watkinson is a native of the seaport of Hull, and is fifty-nine years of age. His parents were in humble life, and his early school teaching was extremely limited. But after he joined the Methodist Church, his fine talents and remarkable oratorical ability were speedily recognized, and before he was twenty he was proposed by his minister as a candidate for the pulpit. The Conference declined to approve the proposal, but his minister was persistent, and persuaded his brethren to give the young man a hearing. The candidate preached a vigorous sermon, at the conclusion of which every member of the Conference voted for him. He has held some of the most important charges in the country, and has for four years edited the Methodist Magazine. He is an eminent scholar, and has written some of the ablest of modern articles on the relation of religion and science. His election to the Presidency of the Conference is a well-deserved tribute by his brethren to his abilities and character.

FOR THE SICK POOR.

Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop's Proposed Hospital—An Undenominational Charity.

ANY of our readers are already familiar with the character of the benevolent work conducted by Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop among the destitute sick poor of downtown New York. For some time past, she has been laboring faithfully as a medical missionary, nursing the sick at their own homes, and also giving care and attention to those who are able to visit her at her rooms, at No. 668 Water street, which she converted into a temporary cancer hospital and dispensary nearly a year ago. Mrs. Lathrop has associated with her in this work several skilled nurses, volunteers, and all labor together on purely undenominational lines. Thus far, they have been instrumental in relieving many cases of suffering, where the patients are too poor to pay a physician and at the same time not of the class to be admitted to public hospitals for treatment. A considerable proportion of her patients are victims of cancer—a disease far more prevalent among the very poor than most people imagine. The lives of those afflicted ones are sad beyond description. Too weak to labor, and generally regarded as

Free.—A Wonderful Shrub.—Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

New evidence shows that Alkavis, the new botanical product of the Kava-Kava Shrub, is indeed a true specific cure for diseases caused by Uric Acid in the blood, or by disorders of the Kidneys and urinary organs. A remarkable case is that of Rev. A. C. Darling, of North Constantia, N. Y., as told in the New York World of recent date. He was cured by Alkavis, after, as he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine and was preparing to die. Similar testimony of extraordinary cures of Kidney and bladder diseases of long standing comes from many other sufferers, and 1200 hospital cures have been recorded in 30 days. Up to this time the Chur K Kidney Cure Co., No. 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of Alkavis, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

hopeless incurables, they are practically neglected and left to linger out an existence almost as miserable as the wretched, isolated lepers on the island of Molokai.

It is Mrs. Lathrop's purpose to establish, on a modest scale, a hospital for the reception and treatment of patients among the destitute poor. It will be strictly unsectarian and undenominational. In the following communication she explains the scope and object of her plan:

It is a need hoary with age and moss-grown with neglect. The sick in life's battle—why not find them and take them from destitution to what comfort we can provide? Are our other obligations more to be respected than our obligations under the teachings, clear as the sunlight, of our Captain, Christ? Run up a building where two or three hundred poor can be kept clean and well fed; their sores dressed daily, not weekly; and their lives made decently happy. Let rafters bristle above, and old-fashioned cheapness prevail. Build for to-day. Let the hospital be secondary to the patients it harbors and serves; not a palace that eschews absolute charity because each patient costs so much in machinery. Let us build a barn or a barrack for the army of sufferers whom no one is adequately attending to. Tents are better than nothing, and there is not a desperately sick person living, suffering also from hunger and the landlord, who would not prefer a roughly-finished home that was secure and well supplied, to the agonies of anxiety they now know. Let us give a respect to the poor in spite of their poverty, and obey their command—that what can meet the greatest area of need shall be done in the quickest possible way. Be practical; stop playing with the toys of electricity and luxury long enough to solve the problem of ordinary kindness toward the sick poor of a certain class, or any class, for that matter. It will not take an Edison to evolve success in this branch of science, but merely a cable woven of many small contributions and a system of self-sacrifice in the bosom of each worker at the bedside of our sick brethren.

A Blind Heathen Student.

Some time ago, a Christian missionary was visiting a number of villages in the interior of India, and he received an invitation to go to one he had not yet entered. On his arrival, the people gathered about him and begged him to send a missionary and a schoolmaster to teach them "the Sacred Book." "What do you know about my sacred book?" he asked. An old man sitting near answered, "I know a little of it," and began to repeat in Tamil the first two or three chapters of St. John's Gospel. To his surprise, also, he found that the man was totally blind. He asked how he could possibly have learned so much, when the man answered that a lad from some distance, who had been taught in a mission school, had for months been working in this village, and had brought with him a part of the New Testament. He had read this aloud so often that the blind man had learned it by heart, and none of the precious truths had been forgotten.

The "Little Princess" Baby Wrapper

and how to get it. Made in all sizes and all grades. For sale by first-class dealers. Send for book to-day. W. S. MILLS, Bridgeport, Conn.

GEARHART'S FAMILY KNITTER.

PRICE REDUCED TO ONLY $7.50.

Has an established reputation as a RAPID SEAM-LESS KNITTER. Knits everything required in the household from housecoat or factory, wool or cotton yarns. The original and only reliable low priced knitting machine. A model of simplicity. A Child Can Operate It. Over 20,000 in use. Satisfaction guaranteed. To Secure Agents, and a more extended sale, if you send me $2.00 I will ship the machine by express C. O. D. You can pay the balance ($5.50) on receipt of machine. Don't miss this unparalleled offer, as a standard machine has never before been sold at this low price. Address: GEARHART MACHINE CO., BOX 4, CLEARFIELD, PA.

8% Absolutely Safe Municipal Security. Bought largely by best Banks and Trust Companies. Write for details. ROBERT E. STRAHORN & CO., Equitable Building, Boston, Mass.

CONSUMPTION NOT CONTAGIOUS.

The widespread alarm caused by the New York Health Board's wild, false, and untenable assertions to the effect that "Consumption is an infectious disease which can be communicated from the sick to the well," led the Chairman of the State Section of the American Medical Association, (the highest Medical Authority of the Profession) to apply to Dr. Robert Hunter, as the oldest and most experienced lung specialist of this country—for a paper giving scientific and incontrovertible proof of the utter falsity of the Board's contention, to be read at the 28th annual meeting of the Association, held at Philadelphia, June 2nd, 1897.

The points indubitably established by Dr. Hunter are as follows:

- 1st. That the history and all reliable statistics of the disease show that consumption is never communicated from the sick to the well.
- 2nd. That it never becomes epidemic as all infectious diseases do.
- 3rd. That instead of increasing through infection, it is steadily decreasing from generation to generation—which would be impossible were it infectious in any degree whatever.
- 4th. That consumption is one of the oldest diseases known to mankind, and was accurately described by Hippocrates 343 years before the birth of Christ. It is a lingering sickness which lasts for months, and often for years, during all of which time, if infectious, it would be throwing off the germs of the disease and infecting those in health.
- 5th. Nothing was ever done by the Profession to prevent its spread by infection, if it had power to do so, and yet at the end of twenty-five centuries of uninterrupted growth, it is found to be less prevalent and less fatal than it was at the beginning.

In England, where the death tables are compiled with the greatest care, the Annual Reports of the Registrar General show that the deaths by consumption in each million of the population were in

1860—	2,679
1870—	2,475
1880—	2,116
1890—	1,385

a decrease in 30 years of over 40 per cent.

Had each of these cases been a centre of contagion, producing new cases by infecting those in health, there could have been no decrease, but on the contrary, the deaths must have been increased by the numbers so infected.

No stronger proof that consumption is incapable of reproducing itself could be given than the fact that it is more prevalent in man than women. Women nurse and attend upon consumptives through their entire illness, and are constantly exposed to infection if it had the power to infect, and yet only 2,944 of these exposed females die of it to 4,482 males.

The great Hospital for Consumption at Brompton, London, in existence for over sixty years, is much the largest hospital for lung diseases in the world. It has a large staff of physicians with scores of nurses and other hospital attendants. If consumption was infectious it certainly would show itself among those in such close and constant contact with it, in all its worst and most advanced stages; and yet Dr. Williams, the senior physician, says: "Infection in the wards of the hospital between consumptives and non-consumptives is unknown."

Dr. Cotton, another eminent physician of long experience in the same hospital tells us the nurses are all in good health, while of the physicians, nineteen in number, only one has ever shown any sign of phthisis and he was delicate and consumptive when he came there.

Dr. Clapp reviews the above facts and declares that "a residence in a consumption hospital and long continued working in its wards among consumptive patients is a very good way indeed not to catch the disease!"

Other leading specialists, and writers on lung diseases, bear similar testimony.

Dr. Ancell says: "against the few facts that might seem to support the doctrine of contagion there are tens of thousands that refute it."

Dr. Forbes says, "among the thousands he has attended he never witnessed a case of infection by it."

Dr. Reginald Thompson could find but fifteen suspected cases out of 15,000 examined.

Dr. Flint but two possible cases out of 690—and Dr. Richardson no cases out of 3000 investigated.

Dr. Douglas Powell, speaking from his own personal knowledge, experience and observation, says, "Consumption is not infectious."

Dr. Duncan Turner gives "scores of cases where persons, worn by sorrow and suffering, lived in immediate contact with consumptives for years, when if infection were possible they could not have escaped,—nevertheless they came out of the ordeal unscathed."

Dr. Young says "all the evidence adduced to show the infectiousness of consumption is absurd."

My own personal experience for more than 50 years of active professional life, the chief part of which has been given to the study and treatment of lung diseases as a specialty,—each day being spent in the examination of their chests, analyzing their sputa, exposed at all times to their breath and to emanations from their bodies, with their expectorations always in my nostrils,—shows conclusively that it is not infectious and cannot be communicated by association. I have never in my fifty years of practice met with an instance of infection, or seen anything to make me believe it could be communicated from the sick to the well. With the records of over 50,000 cases so examined and treated by me I am able to speak with all the confidence of assured judgment in saying that there is no warrant or foundation for any belief that consumption is infectious or communicable in any degree under any circumstances whatever. The fact that it can be so communicated is disproved by statistics of Consumption in all civilized countries. The reports of consumption hospitals attest the united clinical experience of scientists throughout the civilized world, who long diseases a life study.

No physician can believe consumption without discrediting the annals of his profession,—the teachings of its leading authorities, the overwhelming judgment of the great medical practitioners.

To what then are we to attribute the believing it infectious by the New York Health Board? Was it gross ignorance of the fact that consumption on the part of the Medical Health Department some selfishness in view?

In the face of the facts established by statistics and incontrovertibly proved by the overwhelming testimony of the profession—of the New York Health Department Consumption contagious—is an inexplicable grounds creditable to that body. We cause or the motive, the setting up of the fake of infection, to terrorize and coerce was an outrage against truth and science, uphold it is a crime against humanity.

I can only say in conclusion to the Health Board regarding its ideas of consumption, as Cuvier said to the lexicographer, "I applied to him to know if his definition was correct. 'Lobster—a fish of a red color chiefly travels backwards.'"

"Yes," he replied, "perfectly correct except—'a lobster is not a fish, it is a color,—and it does not chiefly travel backwards.'"

Consumption is not infectious—it is communicable from the sick to the well,—neither be prevented nor cured by sequestering hospitals as recommended by the Board.

(Continued next Week.)

ROBERT HUNTER, M.D.
Specialist in Lung Disease
117 West Forty-fifth Street
New York.

Sept. 1st, 1897.

FREE.

We direct special attention to 1 remarkable since I have often avoided on account of my dry chest, went through dull pain, and began to become so deaf could not hear. Used Aerial Medication eight weeks, was fully restored, roaring and was entirely cured of Catarrh. Why anyone should suffer from Catarrh when there is such a good remedy. MISS CARRIE BOWERS, Rouseville, Pa.

We have reliable assurance that the statement is genuine and that Mr. A. is a reputable physician.—Cincinnati Standard.

MEDICINES

For Three Months' Treatment FREE.

This very liberal offer having proved so successful last year, I have renewed it, and will for a short time give for three months' treatment free of question form and particulars, address J. H. Moore, M.D., Dept. K 3, Cincinnati.

SAVE ½ YOU

By using our (stove) pl

With its 120 Cross bars,

ONE stove or furnace does the work of TWO. Drop postal for rough prominent men.

TO INTRODUCE OUR

the first order from each locality filled at WHOLESALE price and an agency. Write at once.

ROCHESTER RADIATOR CO.

15 Furnace St., ROCHESTER, N.Y.

Parker's Arctic Sock, Best for house wear. Absorbs perspiration. Recommended by Physicians for house, chamber and sick-room. Made in Men's, Women's and Children's. Ask shoe dealer or send 25c. with size to J. H. PARKER, 103 Bedford St., Boston, Mass. Room K. Take no substitute. Parker's

No lamp is a good one without the chimney in the

it.

Go by the Index.

Write Macbeth Pittsburg Pa.

Home Talks with Mothers and Daughters.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

THE SHUT-OUTS.

Have all a warm corner in our hearts for the shut-ins, and we try, I am sure, to cheer their hearts by every means in our power. We think as much about the shut-outs as this subject in my head, as hearing Katharine, a pretty acquaintance, remark in a tone of surprise, "Why, Mrs. Cameron, thank you, he isn't coming here. It's an effort to talk with her, and I'm glad to do this hot day!" "He!" remonstrated her mother, "people think of you if you say 'he'?" Poor Mrs. Cameron cannot hear. It is an infirmity we pity. Poor lady, it shuts her out of all deal of pleasure!" "May be true, mamma," said Miss Cameron rather pertly, "but I've never made a great effort on your part to hear in the conversation. The fact is, she is deaf as a post, and she makes me uncomfortable because she's so close to hear, and so resolved to go exactly as if she had ears like the rest of us." "Her mother sighed. Of all things, she surpasses that of being shut out of public by a young daughter. If she were well brought up, she would be sweet and deferential. Girls learn how much they lose by being shut out of their mothers, nor can they know how manner stamps them. They are exactly where their position is, and among ladies or among bores. Mrs. Cameron, with her joint stick in her right hand, swinging jauntily away, a hearted girl, with golden blue eyes, so fine and fair in her face, that one longed to see her perfect that makes womanhood attractive. Her mother and I continued our conversation. "That I am sure of this matter, though I own I don't like being blamed by Katharine. She always disliked talking with me. I dread their trumpets and drums, and I shrink from bawling at their ears. My child inherits my supposition." "There was a pause. The silence fell like a thin veil, and the clock ticked in the far end of the room. "I remarked after awhile, 'one of the best women I know, and one of the best public speakers, a woman whose melody, and whose words carry themselves clear, across a large audience, and when she sits on a sofa by the side of me, she told me once that the secret of her speech, and of the beautiful quality of her speech, was that in childhood she had read and interpreted the reading to her deaf grandparents. 'I love her very dearly,' she told me, 'and I make up to them for their loss. I did not let them lose the phrase, nor a shade of meaning, nor help myself, and God has given me power in the power of speaking, and I can always be heard.'"

"The lady answered, 'that if I were selfish we would consider the silent days, and the loss of voice, and our deaf friends suffer from our own convenience, and we would let them be shut out, kept on the edge of social enjoyment, and from the interests which are so precious. When we get at the very heart of a sin, it is almost always selfishness which makes it grow strong and hard to get it out.'"

"I told long that day, and we both talked about love to our neighbor would be very careful to try and entertain

Mrs. Cameron whenever we could. And not alone Mrs. Cameron, but other deaf friends and acquaintances. From this we passed to speak of friends who were shut out from pleasures by iron walls of poverty, by hindering circumstances, by the lack of education, by the care of little children, and we made a quiet vow, that we would do what we could to give freedom and ease and timely help, whenever it came in our power, to any who were less fortunate than ourselves.

Mrs. Ainsworth has not been at church in six months; she cannot leave her babies nor take them with her, for every minister is not like dear Mr. Moody, who said not long ago one Sunday morning in Northfield, "I don't want that mother to be worried because her baby is fretting. Sit still, madam. I can preach louder than a baby can cry. What is a mother with a baby in her arms to do if she has no one to relieve her at home? She must either never go to church, or carry her baby with her. If any lady or gentleman is disturbed, she or he may go out, but mothers with their little ones must feel at liberty to stay." After that, the baby behaved like an angel, and the mother seemed to enjoy the service, since she had a warrant for being there from the lips of one whom she revered.

But, though the pastor would be glad to see the mother with her baby in the pew, the people in the pews often frown, and the mother feels uncomfortable when her little ones are restless in church. She should perhaps overcome the feeling, but she is too sensitive to do so, and she stays at home, losing all the help attendance at church would give her. She is a shut-out from the sanctuary, for the time being, and is in danger of forming a habit of staying contentedly at home, even after her limitations are removed by the growing up of her children.

Here there is a chance for the sweet young girl, free as a flower in the sunshine, to go from time to time to the relief of the burdened matron. She may spend a Sunday morning, once a month, with the nursery brood, letting her friends go to church in her place. And so she will beautifully assist one of Christ's dear people.

We can all think of other shut-outs, and other ways of helpfulness.

Margaret E. Sangster

WHEN SHE DRESSES

For street or home, the woman who values both health and appearance wears FERRIS' GOOD SENSE CORSET WAIST. It insures the comfort and freedom for home wear, the elegance and grace of figure necessary to good form in dress. Recommended by physicians.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE CORSET WAIST

Always superior in quality and workmanship. Made high and low bust, long and short waist, to suit all figures. Children's, 25c. to 50c. Misses, 50c. to $1.00. Ladies', $1.00 to $2.00. For sale by all retailers.

A WARNING TO BOYS.

A Fall in Boyhood the Cause of Lifelong Suffering.

From the Press, Utica, N. Y.

Mr. Robert S. Howard, of Bridgewater, New York, has forwarded to us the accompanying valuable testimonial. From Mr. Howard's advanced age, after a life time of suffering from complicated diseases, his statement must be read with interest, and we have no doubt will go far towards convincing the doubting ones, of the efficacy of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, as a radical cure in all rheumatic and nervous affections and their sequelae.

Mr. Howard's reputation as a man and a citizen lends weight to his simple, straightforward statement.

Being desirous that others should be benefited as I have been, and that they may know that the means of relief is within easy reach, I make the following statement, solemnly declaring the same to be true in every particular:

"My name is Robert S. Howard. I am a miller by occupation. My postoffice address is Bridgewater, Oneida County, N. Y., and I am 67 years of age.

"I was a life-long invalid, my health being first impaired by a fall when a boy, which injured my spine. While in a weak condition from this cause, I caught cold, which developed into rheumatism that became chronic. In 1861 I was sufficiently recovered to think I could enlist and tried so to do, but was rejected, the surgeons telling me I was by no means cured, nor was I fit to go to the front. They knew better than I did, for very shortly after, I was again laid up with severe pain in the lumbar region. My kidneys were affected, and my joints grew swollen and painful. My usual position when trying to walk, was with my hands on my knees, every movement giving exquisite pain. I was in fact a cripple, and that became my normal condition, with few periods of partial relief until last fall. My digestion was much impaired, my stomach was in bad condition, and I, of course, had heart affection after the long years of rheumatism. I had always, when in my bad spells, called in a physician, but I received very little benefit from the usual medical treatment, and at last these gentlemen pronounced my complaint general debility, involving all the organs, nearly, of which I am possessed.

"It was last fall, I say, when I began to read in the papers of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I grew more and more interested in them through the accounts I saw of so many people being cured by them, until I came to the conclusion that they might do me good. I therefore bought two boxes of Pink Pills and proceeded to take them. It may have been fancy, but it seemed to me that the first dose made me feel better than I had been in a long time, so I continued the treatment until I took all the pills I had. By that time I knew there was no fancy in the knowledge that I was getting well. My health is now in better condition than it ever has been since childhood. My appetite is good, I sleep well, all that distress in the back has disappeared, my joints no longer trouble me, and my health is better than it has been in 46 years, and improving all the time. I am able to attend to my business as a miller, and at 67 find myself more of a man than I ever was before. I shall continue to use Pink Pills, and advise others afflicted with any of the troubles that I suffered for a lifetime to do likewise.

(Signed) "R. S. HOWARD."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are sold in boxes (never in loose form, by the dozen or hundred) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or directly by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

EMPIRE NIGHT GOWN

of fine muslin, trimmed elaborately with open work, embroidered insertion and ruffles; boxplaited back; full length and width; well made throughout; sizes 13 to 16 inches neck measure.

79c.
(Postage 16 cents additional.)

BARGAINS equally as great can be obtained through our

ILLUSTRATED FASHION CATALOGUE

(Fall and Winter number ready Sept. 10.)
MAILED FREE UPON REQUEST
Contains over 2,000 illustrations of articles for home and personal need.

Your money refunded for any goods not proving satisfactory, and expressage paid in all parts of the U. S. (when orders amount to stated sum). Send postal note for Catalogue D (ready Sept. 10), with Special Bargain Sheet.

H. C. F. KOCH & CO.

IMPORTERS AND RETAILERS,
West 125th St. bet. Lenox and 7th Avenues New York

LINE NE REVERSIBLE COLLARS and CUFFS.

TRADE MARK DANTE

ARE NOT TO BE WASHED.
Made of fine cloth in all styles. When soiled, reverse, wear again, then discard. Ten collars or five pairs of cuffs for 25 cents. They look and fit better than any other kind.

ASK THE DEALERS FOR THEM.
If not found at the stores send six cents for sample collar and cuffs, naming style and size. A trial invariably results in continued use. Reversible Collar Co., 79 Franklin St. New York show what the pencil was, for only good pencils are used to a stump. Pencils which their holders enjoy to the end, are the celebrated

Stumps

DIXON AMERICAN GRAPHITE PENCILS

Smooth, even, frictionless, tough. Every degree of hardness or softness—every grade of finish.

If your dealer does not keep them, send 16 cents for pencils worth double the money.

JOS. DIXON CRUCIBLE CO., Jersey City, N. J.
NEW LADIES GIRDLE, 20c.

HAY FEVER

and ASTHMA.
A Permanent Cure Guaranteed. Send for circular for home treatment.

GEORGE J. WEST, M.D., 510 Fifth Avenue, New York.

WALL PAPER

Write to the largest wall paper h use in U. S. for samples—Free. A million rolls—variety unlimited. 25c. to $3.50 a roll. 30% lower than others.

DEALERS
Write for large books by express with TRADE DISCOUNTS

KAYSER & ALLMAN, 952-954 Market Street, 415 Arch St., PHILADELPHIA.

$18 a Week Easy.
You work right around home. A brand new thing. No trouble to make $18 a week easy. Write to us quick, you will be surprised at how easy it can be done. Send us your address any way. It will be for your interest to investigate. Write today. You can positively make $18 a week easy. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box A-F, Detroit, Mich.

DIRECTIONS FOR LIFE.

Apostolic Rules for the Conduct of Christians in the Various Relations of Life. (Eph. 6: 1-9.)

One singular characteristic of Christianity as Christ gave it to the world was the absence of specific legislation. In the Mosaic economy there were minute regulations as to what should be eaten and what avoided, what clothes might and might not be worn, what ceremonies should be observed and a multitude of other laws governing social and religious life. But Christ left all these untouched. He prescribed no form of church government, no order of worship. The Christian was to be a law unto himself. Christ aimed at the heart. If that was made right, all else would be right. Love of God and love of man would insure a life of love and beneficence. It was a law of liberty. How wise such a procedure was, we now see. The centuries have rolled by, bringing radical changes in social life; new inventions have opened up new forms of activity; new political systems have arisen, bringing new duties and new relations, but Christianity remains ever fresh, ever useful, ever applicable to the changed conditions. The principle of love never becomes obsolete. It regulates the life of the nineteenth century as it did the life of the first. Loyalty to Christ will issue in a life of usefulness and purity in our day just as surely as it did in the life of the first Christians. Indeed, as the years pass, and our lives broaden under the discoveries and enlarged views of civilization, we seem to get clearer views than our fathers had of the true principles of Christ's teaching, and find them penetrating deeper into our lives and taking hold of outlying points of conduct they had not previously touched. We see that the further we apply the principles of Christ the more beneficent they are. They affect the individual life, the family life, the conduct of business, the duties of the citizen, and international relations. Problems of society, about which he knew nothing, are solved by the principles he laid down; questions of conscience which were not conceivable to him in the simple life of Palestine, are settled by his rules.

As it is in the family, when the child is compassed around with prohibitions and restrictions and is controlled and directed in every action of his life; but when he grows up is left free to regulate his own life, we expect him to be just as good a son and just as correct in his deportment as when he was a boy; so the Christian emancipated from law is as good a man as the Jew who was under the law. Indeed we expect a fuller and more intelligent service from the free man than from the one who is under the law. As the son grown to maturity anticipates his father's wishes and does more and better than the father could have expected him to do as a child, so the Christian yields no perfunctory or mechanical obedience, but cheerfully does the will of his Father who is in heaven. Thus in our forms of worship and of Church relation, widely as they differ, there is an emula- in all to be nearer and more completely in harmony with God.

The Apostle Paul follows Christ's example in the directions for practical life which form the basis of the Topic. The spirit of Christ is to animate the parents and the children, the master and the servant. The children are to honor and obey, and the father is to avoid the pragmatical, irritating demeanor which runs a child's temper. Each is to show to the other the consideration due to the respective relations. The servant is to give conscientious service, and the master is to treat him with the kindness of one who hopes for kindness to himself from his Master in heaven. The whole system of personal relation is lifted out of the lower selfish order, and is placed on the higher plane of duty and conscience. The result must be beneficent in all cases. The parent will have better children, and the children will have a more pleasant life; the master's interests will be safe and the servant will receive his rights. Thus the law of liberty becomes a law stringent and penetrating, working in all for righteousness.

Blood Pure?

Is it? Then take Ayer's Sarsaparilla and keep it so. Isn't it? Then take Ayer's Sarsaparilla and make it so. One fact is positively established and that is that Ayer's Sarsaparilla will purify the blood more perfectly, more economically and more speedily than any other remedy in the market. There are fifty years of cures behind this statement; a record no other remedy can show. You waste time and money when you take anything to purify the blood except Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

The Buckeye Dash Lamp

lights the darkest road 200 feet ahead, and is equally good as a side lamp or hand lantern. Has a powerful reflector and bull's-eye lens. Won't blow out in the strongest wind. Send for our catalogue.

Buy it of your dealer. He has it, or can get it if you insist. Mention this paper.

STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN COMPANY, Syracuse, N. Y.

A fact that is becoming more and more impressed upon the public mind today is, that Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine does restore health when all others have failed. Testimonial after testimonial pour in daily from every direction, praising its wonderful merit and curative powers in the treatment of the various diseases of the nervous system. For nervousness, sleeplessness, nervous prostration, exhaustion, headache, neuralgia, weakness, etc.,

Dr. Miles' Nervine has no equal. It soothes, heals and strengthens the nerve centers of the brain, repairs the worn out nerve tissues, creates a full supply of nerve fluid, gives vitality and vigor to the entire nervous system and permanently

Restores Health.

Sold by all druggists on the positive guarantee first bottle benefits or money refunded. Book on heart and nerves sent free. Address, DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind.

"How to Disinfect," Sent Free.

The intelligent use of true disinfectants is the surest defense against one half our illness.

"How to Disinfect" is a complete illustrated book, giving rules in cases of infectious diseases and in everyday life. Send your address; no money.

The American & Continental "Sanitas" Co. Ltd. 636 to 642 West 55th St., New York City.

Liquor Habit Cured!

Wonderful recent discovery! Cures quickly and permanently. $10.00 with order; $15.00 more when cured. Are you looking for business? Will send the formula for $10.00.

C. A. PARSONS, 154 Commercial St., Boston
FREE TO BALD HEADS.
We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp diseases. Address, Attention Medical Dispensary, Dept. 1, N. A., Box 779, Cincinnati, O.

$200.00 for CORRECT ANSWERS

Most Unique Contest of the Age — $200.00 Paid for Correct Lists made by Supplying Missing Letters in Places of Dashes — No Lottery — Popular For Education — Read All the Particulars.

In the United States four times as much money is expended for education as for military. Brain is better than brawn. By our educational facilities we have become a nation. We, the publishers of Woman's World and Jenness Miller Monthly have done much toward the cause of education in many ways, but now we offer you an opportunity to display your knowledge and receive most generous payment for a little study. The object of this contest is to give an impetus to many dormant minds to awaken and take part in this competition of brains to extend the circulation of Woman's World and Jenness Miller Monthly to such a size that we shall be able to charge double the rate for advertising in our columns. By this plan of increasing the number of subscribers receiving more money from advertisers of soaps, pianos, medicines, books, baking jewelry, etc., we shall add $50,000 a year to our income, and with this maturation before us, we have decided to operate this most remarkable "missing letters" contest.

HERE'S WHAT YOU ARE TO DO.

There are thirty words in this schedule, from each of which letters have been removed and their places have been supplied by dashes. To fill in the blank spaces a general knowledge of geography and history. We want you to spell out as many words as you can, then send to us with 25 cents to pay for a subscription to WOMAN'S WORLD. For correct lists we shall give $200.00 cash prize. If more than one person sends a full, correct list, the money will be awarded to the first in appearance. Also, if your list contains twenty or more correct words, we shall give you a beautiful Egeria Diamond Scarf Pin (for lady or gentleman), the regular price of $2.25. Therefore, by sending your list, you are positively certain of the $2.25 prize, and by being careful to send a correct list you have an opportunity of the $200.00 cash award. The distance that you may live from New York makes no difference. All have equal opportunity of winning.

PRIZES WILL BE SENT PROMPTLY

Prizes will be honestly awarded and promptly sent. We publish the list of words to be studied out. In making your list of answers, be sure to give the number of each word.

- | | |
|---|--|
| 1. - R A - I - A country of South America. | 16. B - S M - - K A noted river. |
| 2. - - A - I - I - Name of the largest body of water. | 17. - - C T O - I - Another name for a country. |
| 3. M - D - - E - - A - E - - A sea. | 18. P - R - U - A - Country. |
| 4. - M - - O - A large river. | 19. A - S T - A - I - A big city. |
| 5. T - A - - S Well known river of Europe. | 20. M - - I N - E - Name of a prominent person. |
| 6. S - - A N - A - A city in one of the Southern States. | 21. T - - A - One of the United States. |
| 7. H - - - - X A city of Canada. | 22. J - F - - R - - N Once I lived in the United States. |
| 8. N - A - A - A Noted for display of water. | 23. - U - - N A large lake. |
| 9. - E - - E - - E - One of the United States. | 24. E - E - S - N A noted person. |
| 10. - A - R - I - A city of Spain. | 25. C - R - A A foreign country, size as Kansas. |
| 11. H - V - - A A city on a well known island. | 26. B - R - - O A large island. |
| 12. S - M - E - A well known old fort of the United States. | 27. W - M - - S W - R - D Pop. 1,000,000. |
| 13. G - - R - L - A - Greatest fortification in the world. | 28. B - H - I - G A sea. |
| 14. S - A - L - E - A great explorer. | 29. A - L - N - I - An ocean. |
| 15. C - L - F - - - I - One of the United States. | 30. M - D - G - S - A - An island. |

In sending your list of words, mention whether you want prize money or bank draft, money order or registered mail; we will send any way that winners prefer. Egeria Diamond is a perfect imitation of a Real Diamond of large size. We warrant it to distinguish it from real except by microscopic test. In every respect it serves the purpose of a Real Diamond of Purest Quality. It is artistically mounted in a fine gold setting warranted to wear forever. This piece of jewelry will make a most desirable gift to you or to your family. At present our supply of these gifts is limited, and if they are not ordered soon, they will be sold at a high price. When your set of answers comes in, we shall send you $2.25 in money in the form of a Scarf or Shawl Pin, so you shall either receive the piece of jewelry or the equivalent in money. In addition to your participative interest in the $200.00 cash prize, this contest is an honest one, made by a responsible publishing house. We refer to mercantile and any bank in New York. We will promptly refund money to you if you are dissatisfied. What more can we do? Now study, and exchange slight brain work for cash. Send your list of answers send 25 cents to pay for three months' subscription to our great family magazine, Woman's World. If you have already subscribed, mention that in your letter, and we will extend your subscription from the time the present one expires. To avoid loss in sending silver, wrap money very carefully in paper before inclosing in your letter.

JAMES H. PLUMMER, Publisher, 22 & 24 North William Street, New York City, N. Y.

14 Years Cured:
MRS. J. E. SINCLAIR,
3 Boynton St., Worcester, Mass.

13 Years Cured:
MRS. J. L. MUNROE,
Rutland, Mass.

12 Years Cured:
REV. GEO. W. FITCH,
Fruitvale, Cal.

12 Years Cured:
W. H. WHITCOMB,
Poyntette, Wis.

12 Years Cured:
GEO. BALMAIN,
40 Chili Ave., Rochester, N. Y.

TO ASTHMA SUFFERERS

WE OFFER A CURE THAT STAYS.

Our constitutional treatment not only gives relief but eradicates the cause of the disease and stays cured. Particulars and blank for free information mailed on application.

DR. HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

BICYCLE GEARS INCREASED.

Our Patent Rim Sprocket can be put on or taken off any sprocket wheel, by the rider, in a few minutes, without removing pedals. Increases gear 12, 16 or 21 inches. Satisfaction guaranteed or your money back. Instructions for Ordering.—Give number of teeth on your sprocket and state what increase you wish and size of chain.

B. E. HAHN & CO., 42 W. Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

$12 3000 BICYCLES must be closed to Standard '07 Model $14 to $20 $25 to $30 $35 to $45 $50 to $60 $65 to $75 $80 to $90 $95 to $100 $105 to $110 $115 to $120 $125 to $130 $135 to $140 $145 to $150 $155 to $160 $165 to $170 $175 to $180 $185 to $190 $195 to $200 $205 to $210 $215 to $220 $225 to $230 $235 to $240 $245 to $250 $255 to $260 $265 to $270 $275 to $280 $285 to $290 $295 to $300 $305 to $310 $315 to $320 $325 to $330 $335 to $340 $345 to $350 $355 to $360 $365 to $370 $375 to $380 $385 to $390 $395 to $400 $405 to $410 $415 to $420 $425 to $430 $435 to $440 $445 to $450 $455 to $460 $465 to $470 $475 to $480 $485 to $490 $495 to $500 $505 to $510 $515 to $520 $525 to $530 $535 to $540 $545 to $550 $555 to $560 $565 to $570 $575 to $580 $585 to $590 $595 to $600 $605 to $610 $615 to $620 $625 to $630 $635 to $640 $645 to $650 $655 to $660 $665 to $670 $675 to $680 $685 to $690 $695 to $700 $705 to $710 $715 to $720 $725 to $730 $735 to $740 $745 to $750 $755 to $760 $765 to $770 $775 to $780 $785 to $790 $795 to $800 $805 to $810 $815 to $820 $825 to $830 $835 to $840 $845 to $850 $855 to $860 $865 to $870 $875 to $880 $885 to $890 $895 to $900 $905 to $910 $915 to $920 $925 to $930 $935 to $940 $945 to $950 $955 to $960 $965 to $970 $975 to $980 $985 to $990 $995 to $1000 $1005 to $1010 $1015 to $1020 $1025 to $1030 $1035 to $1040 $1045 to $1050 $1055 to $1060 $1065 to $1070 $1075 to $1080 $1085 to $1090 $1095 to $1100 $1105 to $1110 $1115 to $1120 $1125 to $1130 $1135 to $1140 $1145 to $1150 $1155 to $1160 $1165 to $1170 $1175 to $1180 $1185 to $1190 $1195 to $1200 $1205 to $1210 $1215 to $1220 $1225 to $1230 $1235 to $1240 $1245 to $1250 $1255 to $1260 $1265 to $1270 $1275 to $1280 $1285 to $1290 $1295 to $1300 $1305 to $1310 $1315 to $1320 $1325 to $1330 $1335 to $1340 $1345 to $1350 $1355 to $1360 $1365 to $1370 $1375 to $1380 $1385 to $1390 $1395 to $1400 $1405 to $1410 $1415 to $1420 $1425 to $1430 $1435 to $1440 $1445 to $1450 $1455 to $1460 $1465 to $1470 $1475 to $1480 $1485 to $1490 $1495 to $1500 $1505 to $1510 $1515 to $1520 $1525 to $1530 $1535 to $1540 $1545 to $1550 $1555 to $1560 $1565 to $1570 $1575 to $1580 $1585 to $1590 $1595 to $1600 $1605 to $1610 $1615 to $1620 $1625 to $1630 $1635 to $1640 $1645 to $1650 $1655 to $1660 $1665 to $1670 $1675 to $1680 $1685 to $1690 $1695 to $1700 $1705 to $1710 $1715 to $1720 $1725 to $1730 $1735 to $1740 $1745 to $1750 $1755 to $1760 $1765 to $1770 $1775 to $1780 $1785 to $1790 $1795 to $1800 $1805 to $1810 $1815 to $1820 $1825 to $1830 $1835 to $1840 $1845 to $1850 $1855 to $1860 $1865 to $1870 $1875 to $1880 $1885 to $1890 $1895 to $1900 $1905 to $1910 $1915 to $1920 $1925 to $1930 $1935 to $1940 $1945 to $1950 $1955 to $1960 $1965 to $1970 $1975 to $1980 $1985 to $1990 $1995 to $2000 $2005 to $2010 $2015 to $2020 $2025 to $2030 $2035 to $2040 $2045 to $2050 $2055 to $2060 $2065 to $2070 $2075 to $2080 $2085 to $2090 $2095 to $2100 $2105 to $2110 $2115 to $2120 $2125 to $2130 $2135 to $2140 $2145 to $2150 $2155 to $2160 $2165 to $2170 $2175 to $2180 $2185 to $2190 $2195 to $2200 $2205 to $2210 $2215 to $2220 $2225 to $2230 $2235 to $2240 $2245 to $2250 $2255 to $2260 $2265 to $2270 $2275 to $2280 $2285 to $2290 $2295 to $2300 $2305 to $2310 $2315 to $2320 $2325 to $2330 $2335 to $2340 $2345 to $2350 $2355 to $2360 $2365 to $2370 $2375 to $2380 $2385 to $2390 $2395 to $2400 $2405 to $2410 $2415 to $2420 $2425 to $2430 $2435 to $2440 $2445 to $2450 $2455 to $2460 $2465 to $2470 $2475 to $2480 $2485 to $2490 $2495 to $2500 $2505 to $2510 $2515 to $2520 $2525 to $2530 $2535 to $2540 $2545 to $2550 $2555 to $2560 $2565 to $2570 $2575 to $2580 $2585 to $2590 $2595 to $2600 $2605 to $2610 $2615 to $2620 $2625 to $2630 $2635 to $2640 $2645 to $2650 $2655 to $2660 $2665 to $2670 $2675 to $2680 $2685 to $2690 $2695 to $2700 $2705 to $2710 $2715 to $2720 $2725 to $2730 $2735 to $2740 $2745 to $2750 $2755 to $2760 $2765 to $2770 $2775 to $2780 $2785 to $2790 $2795 to $2800 $2805 to $2810 $2815 to $2820 $2825 to $2830 $2835 to $2840 $2845 to $2850 $2855 to $2860 $2865 to $2870 $2875 to $2880 $2885 to $2890 $2895 to $2900 $2905 to $2910 $2915 to $2920 $2925 to $2930 $2935 to $2940 $2945 to $2950 $2955 to $2960 $2965 to $2970 $2975 to $2980 $2985 to $2990 $2995 to $3000 $3005 to $3010 $3015 to $3020 $3025 to $3030 $3035 to $3040 $3045 to $3050 $3055 to $3060 $3065 to $3070 $3075 to $3080 $3085 to $3090 $3095 to $3100 $3105 to $3110 $3115 to $3120 $3125 to $3130 $3135 to $3140 $3145 to $3150 $3155 to $3160 $3165 to $3170 $3175 to $3180 $3185 to $3190 $3195 to $3200 $3205 to $3210 $3215 to $3220 $3225 to $3230 $3235 to $3240 $3245 to $3250 $3255 to $3260 $3265 to $3270 $3275 to $3280 $3285 to $3290 $3295 to $3300 $3305 to $3310 $3315 to $3320 $3325 to $3330 $3335 to $3340 $3345 to $3350 $3355 to $3360 $3365 to $3370 $3375 to $3380 $3385 to $3390 $3395 to $3400 $3405 to $3410 $3415 to $3420 $3425 to $3430 $3435 to $3440 $3445 to $3450 $3455 to $3460 $3465 to $3470 $3475 to $3480 $3485 to $3490 $3495 to $3500 $3505 to $3510 $3515 to $3520 $3525 to $3530 $3535 to $3540 $3545 to $3550 $3555 to $3560 $3565 to $3570 $3575 to $3580 $3585 to $3590 $3595 to $3600 $3605 to $3610 $3615 to $3620 $3625 to $3630 $3635 to $3640 $3645 to $3650 $3655 to $3660 $3665 to $3670 $3675 to $3680 $3685 to $3690 $3695 to $3700 $3705 to $3710 $3715 to $3720 $3725 to $3730 $3735 to $3740 $3745 to $3750 $3755 to $3760 $3765 to $3770 $3775 to $3780 $3785 to $3790 $3795 to $3800 $3805 to $3810 $3815 to $3820 $3825 to $3830 $3835 to $3840 $3845 to $3850 $3855 to $3860 $3865 to $3870 $3875 to $3880 $3885 to $3890 $3895 to $3900 $3905 to $3910 $3915 to $3920 $3925 to $3930 $3935 to $3940 $3945 to $3950 $3955 to $3960 $3965 to $3970 $3975 to $3980 $3985 to $3990 $3995 to $4000 $4005 to $4010 $4015 to $4020 $4025 to $4030 $4035 to $4040 $4045 to $4050 $4055 to $4060 $4065 to $4070 $4075 to $4080 $4085 to $4090 $4095 to $4100 $4105 to $4110 $4115 to $4120 $4125 to $4130 $4135 to $4140 $4145 to $4150 $4155 to $4160 $4165 to $4170 $4175 to $4180 $4185 to $4190 $4195 to $4200 $4205 to $4210 $4215 to $4220 $4225 to $4230 $4235 to $4240 $4245 to $4250 $4255 to $4260 $4265 to $4270 $4275 to $4280 $4285 to $4290 $4295 to $4300 $4305 to $4310 $4315 to $4320 $4325 to $4330 $4335 to $4340 $4345 to $4350 $4355 to $4360 $4365 to $4370 $4375 to $4380 $4385 to $4390 $4395 to $4400 $4405 to $4410 $4415 to $4420 $4425 to $4430 $4435 to $4440 $4445 to $4450 $4455 to $4460 $4465 to $4470 $4475 to $4480 $4485 to $4490 $4495 to $4500 $4505 to $4510 $4515 to $4520 $4525 to $4530 $4535 to $4540 $4545 to $4550 $4555 to $4560 $4565 to $4570 $4575 to $4580 $4585 to $4590 $4595 to $4600 $4605 to $4610 $4615 to $4620 $4625 to $4630 $4635 to $4640 $4645 to $4650 $4655 to $4660 $4665 to $4670 $4675 to $4680 $4685 to $4690 $4695 to $4700 $4705 to $4710 $4715 to $4720 $4725 to $4730 $4735 to $4740 $4745 to $4750 $4755 to $4760 $4765 to $4770 $4775 to $4780 $4785 to $4790 $4795 to $4800 $4805 to $4810 $4815 to $4820 $4825 to $4830 $4835 to $4840 $4845 to $4850 $4855 to $4860 $4865 to $4870 $4875 to $4880 $4885 to $4890 $4895 to $4900 $4905 to $4910 $4915 to $4920 $4925 to $4930 $4935 to $4940 $4945 to $4950 $4955 to $4960 $4965 to $4970 $4975 to $4980 $4985 to $4990 $4995 to $5000 $5005 to $5010 $5015 to $5020 $5025 to $5030 $5035 to $5040 $5045 to $5050 $5055 to $5060 $5065 to $5070 $5075 to $5080 $5085 to $5090 $5095 to $5100 $5105 to $5110 $5115 to $5120 $5125 to $5130 $5135 to $5140 $5145 to $5150 $5155 to $5160 $5165 to $5170 $5175 to $5180 $5185 to $5190 $5195 to $5200 $5205 to $5210 $5215 to $5220 $5225 to $5230 $5235 to $5240 $5245 to $5250 $5255 to $5260 $5265 to $5270 $5275 to $5280 $5285 to $5290 $5295 to $5300 $5305 to $5310 $5315 to $5320 $5325 to $5330 $5335 to $5340 $5345 to $5350 $5355 to $5360 $5365 to $5370 $5375 to $5380 $5385 to $5390 $5395 to $5400 $5405 to $5410 $5415 to $5420 $5425 to $5430 $5435 to $5440 $5445 to $5450 $5455 to $5460 $5465 to $5470 $5475 to $5480 $5485 to $5490 $5495 to $5500 $5505 to $5510 $5515 to $5520 $5525 to $5530 $5535 to $5540 $5545 to $5550 $5555 to $5560 $5565 to $5570 $5575 to $5580 $5585 to $5590 $5595 to $5600 $5605 to $5610 $5615 to $5620 $5625 to $5630 $5635 to $5640 $5645 to $5650 $5655 to $5660 $5665 to $5670 $5675 to $5680 $5685 to $5690 $5695 to $5700 $5705 to $5710 $5715 to $5720 $5725 to $5730 $5735 to $5740 $5745 to $5750 $5755 to $5760 $5765 to $5770 $5775 to $5780 $5785 to $5790 $5795 to $5800 $5805 to $5810 $5815 to $5820 $5825 to $5830 $5835 to $5840 $5845 to $5850 $5855 to $5860 $5865 to $5870 $5875 to $5880 $5885 to $5890 $5895 to $5900 $5905 to $5910 $5915 to $5920 $5925 to $5930 $5935 to $5940 $5945 to $5950 $5955 to $5960 $5965 to $5970 $5975 to $5980 $5985 to $5990 $5995 to $6000 $6005 to $6010 $6015 to $6020 $6025 to $6030 $6035 to $6040 $6045 to $6050 $6055 to $6060 $6065 to $6070 $6075 to $6080 $6085 to $6090 $6095 to $6100 $6105 to $6110 $6115 to $6120 $6125 to $6130 $6135 to $6140 $6145 to $6150 $6155 to $6160 $6165 to $6170 $6175 to $6180 $6185 to $6190 $6195 to $6200 $6205 to $6210 $6215 to $6220 $6225 to $6230 $6235 to $6240 $6245 to $6250 $6255 to $6260 $6265 to $6270 $6275 to $6280 $6285 to $6290 $6295 to $6300 $6305 to $6310 $6315 to $6320 $6325 to $6330 $6335 to $6340 $6345 to $6350 $6355 to $6360 $6365 to $6370 $6375 to $6380 $6385 to $6390 $6395 to $6400 $6405 to $6410 $6415 to $6420 $6425 to $6430 $6435 to $6440 $6445 to $6450 $6455 to $6460 $6465 to $6470 $6475 to $6480 $6485 to $6

LIBERAL EDUCATION NOW PLACED WITHIN EASY REACH OF EVEN THE POOREST!

Unprecedented
UnparalleledOnly One Dollar DownAlmost Incredible
Yet Absolutely True

SECURES THE FIFTEEN LARGE VOLUMES (6902 PAGES) CONSTITUTING THE WONDERFUL

World-Wide Encyclopedia

The Greatest Compendium of History, Geography, Science, Biography, Art, and Literature ever Offered to the American Public.

REGULAR PRICE $26—CUT IN TWO AT A NET SAVING TO YOU OF $13.

Thousands of commendably ambitious men and women now literally hungering and thirsting for knowledge, but prevented by circumstances from attending the higher institutions of learning, will hail with delight this exceptionally liberal proposition by which, on the payment of ONLY ONE DOLLAR down, they may secure this Treasure-House of knowledge, and henceforth eat and drink to their hearts' content. This golden opportunity will surely prove the turning-point for the better in the life of many who read this offer. THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA treats of every subject, great and small, within the range of human knowledge. It contains all the information required for the Merchant, the Scholar, the Student, the Professional and Business Man, the Farmer, the Manufacturer, the Mother, the Wife, and the Housekeeper.

The Rich Store-House of World-Wide Knowledge has, with infinite labor, been thoroughly overhauled; its treasury of facts conserved; its wealth of material utilized. A WONDERFUL OFFER! Never before has it been our fortune to make such an Offer as this, and unless you snap it up quickly, others will get ahead of you. We place special emphasis on this note of warning in order to impress upon the reader the urgent need of promptest action on his part.

FIFTEEN LARGE VOLUMES
in rich Silk Finished Line Cloth
with Gold Stamp.
SEVENTY-SIX COLORED MAPS.

6902 Pages—13800 Columns
OVER TEN MILLION WORDS.
Set Measurement when on Book-Shelf:
22 INCHES LONG, 9 INCHES HIGH.
Weight, Forty Pounds.

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA brings the history of Science, Literature, Invention, Commerce, Geography and Discovery, and the Mental and Moral Development of the world practically down to date. All the Recent Discoveries and the Gigantic Growth of Commerce and Manufacture, are intelligently and Faithfully Recorded.

In dealing with the Great Commercial Centres of this Country, the editors of THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA have with great care, and at enormous expense, obtained the latest statistics of the Growth and Development of Population and Manufacture, direct from the Civic Authorities, the Board of Trade, and the Chamber of Commerce in each city.

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA answers Every Question, however abstruse. A Digest of all Knowledge from the Earliest Time is contained within its pages, and no man, however untutored, provided he can read, need lack for full information on any subject within the scope of human knowledge, once he is the possessor of this great work.

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA is very handsomely and durably bound in modern silk finished cloth with genuine gold stamp.

These Fifteen Large Octavo Volumes, aggregating nearly SEVEN THOUSAND PAGES, make a most imposing array. Attractive enough to Ornament the best and costliest library in the world. No Two Hundred Dollar Encyclopedia can make a better exhibit on the book-shelf, and the ownership of this great work, a Complete Library in itself, will be a possession among the intellectually progressive men of the day.

"WHAT MAN HAS DONE MAN CAN DO."

ABRAHAM LINCOLN at twenty-two simply knew how to read, write and cipher. DREW JOHNSON, President of the United States, NEVER ATTENDED SCHOOL. His wife was his only teacher. She taught him how to read.

RAM SIBLEY, formerly President of the Western Union Telegraph Co., left his father's farm at fifteen to learn a trade. After having given away millions of dollars in his life-time, he died worth many millions more a few years ago.

ETER COOPER, whose name will ever be cherished in the hearts of the many thousands of young men and young women who have been graduated, free of expense, from the great school of Cooper Institute, himself never had more than one year's schooling. If these men, under such unfavorable circumstances, succeeded in achieving fame and fortune by dint of industrious application to study and work, why need any of the thousands of young people who have in them the making of great men and great women, despair of reaching the height of their ambition with such an opportunity as this, placed within their easy reach everything necessary for a liberal education?

HOW TO GETTHE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA.

Send us One Dollar, and your full name, with full shipping instructions, and immediately we will send you the Whole FIFTEEN VOLUMES of THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA, neatly boxed, freight charges payable at your end.

After that, send us One Dollar a month for one year.

No simpler plan was ever devised. You cannot go astray. The terms of easy payment which we have adopted, will place within the reach of every man and woman, young and old, who is fortunate enough to act quickly, the most serviceable Encyclopedia for everyday use which the world has ever produced.

Remember, it is ONE DOLLAR DOWN to get the books, and then One Dollar a Month for One Year. These Payments are so easy that you will never miss them, and while you are paying for the books, you are enjoying all the advantages which the possession of this great work confers.

THE WORLD-WIDE ENCYCLOPEDIA has the Imprint and Endorsement of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, as a guarantee of its superior excellence and complete reliability.

Address CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK DEPARTMENT, Bible House, New York

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

No other soap is found in so many homes.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., C. H. T.

From the Land of the Kangaroo

Where Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption are Unknown.

"HYOMEI"

Nature's Own Remedy

It creates the same conditions in the atmosphere of your home as found in that distant land. The first and only treatment for diseases of the respiratory organs ever endorsed by the medical profession.

Physicians have found "Hyomei" the only germicide which kills the bacilli of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption. They have also discovered that the Australian Dry Air Treatment is the only way by which all the diseased parts of the head, throat and lungs can be reached and cured. So positive of this have they become that not one physician in good standing in medical society can be found to-day who will advertise to treat these diseases by the old methods—sprays, douches, atomizers or steam vapors—all such treatments being considered worthless, as moisture of any kind can not enter the bronchial tubes or lungs. Not only this, they have proved positively dangerous, as nine out of every ten persons who suffer from deafness and loss of sense of taste and smell, can trace the beginning of these afflictions to the time when they commenced the use of such barbarous methods of treating the delicate air passages.

"HYOMEI" Cures by Inhalation.

It is the one treatment indorsed by the physicians. It is the one treatment which does not require the use of sprays and atomizers. It is the one treatment which the manufacturers have enough confidence in to guarantee.

It is Nature's own remedy. Taken with the air you breathe, it reaches all the parts affected, killing the disease germs of Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Rose Cold and Hay Fever at once, and bringing such relief to the sufferer as can be obtained in no other way.

There is no danger, no risk. Your money is refunded if it fails to relieve.

"Hyomei" Inhaler Outfit $1.00. Extra Bottles "Hyomei" 50c. "Hyomei" Balm, a wonderful healer, 25c. Sold by all druggists or sent by mail.

R. T. BOOTH & CO., 23 East 20th St., New York.

$25.00 and up.

INCORPORATED FOR 50 YEARS

We have the largest manufacturing in the world from which we sell direct to the consumer at wholesale prices, thus saving the profits of the dealer and the commissions of the agents. No money required until instrument has been thoroughly tested in your own house. Shipped on 30 days' trial.

FREE

Sold on instalments. Easy payment. Send for catalogue at once if you want to obtain the greatest bargain ever offered. Write your name and address plainly, and we will send by mail same day letter is received. Positively guarantee every Organ and Piano twenty-five years.

ORGAN

PIANO

$160.00 and up.

ADDRESS
BEETHOVEN
PIANO & ORGAN CO
P. O. Box 741
Washington, N. J.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power. Hay or Straw. 46 Inch Feed Opening. Power Leverage 64 to 1. STEEL. Largest line in the world. Send for Catalog. COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

AGENTS Send 20 cents for sample of "Perfection Cake Tins," a catalog of new household goods, and sample set of our new specially coated wire. RICHARDSON MFG. CO., 6th St., Bath, N. Y.

Bale Your Hay

A reliable HAND HAY PRESS.

Cheap, Simple and very Strong. THREE SIZES. Manufactured only by HOBSON & CO., No. 4 Stone St., New York.

AGENTS to sell our line of Elegant Cake Tins and Flavoring Powders. Permanent and profitable work. Write for descriptive territory and terms at once. T. H. Snyder & Co., 339 E. 34 St., Cincinnati, O.

Why We Give 'em Away

We're not philanthropists. We've a selfish motive for making the unparalleled, almost incredible offer to give to every new customer a quadruple plated teapot, which we absolutely guarantee to be worth $5. We're building future. We're establishing new business relations and making new friends. We're proving our claim that the handling of furniture (the bulk of our merchandise) and retailers is a waste of human energy for which the final price paid is dearly; that our victorious plan of factory-to-freight shipments saves him 100 per cent. Every new name we place upon our books means a new this plan and a permanent extension of our trade. That's why this proposition to you!

The articles shown in this advertisement are fair samples of the prices quoted are our wholesale factory figures. To prove satisfaction that by purchasing furniture direct from us instead of middlemen you can save the enormous expenses and profits of the middleman we'll ship you any article here shown at the price quoted here in addition will send you free, as a Quaker Valley souvenir, the quadruple silver-plated teapot shown in the accompanying illustration. no money in advance. We insist upon first proving our case. We offer to ship any one of these samples, with the teapot as a gift, understanding that bill will be due thirty days from date of shipment. Furniture and teapot are satisfactory to you in every respect; if not to be held subject to our order, and we'll pay return transportation charges that's necessary in ordering is to say you're a reader of this publication, do article wanted by name and number of the offer, and give full shipping address. All prices quoted are for the goods on board cars in Chicago. No charge for drayage. Safe delivery of all goods guaranteed. Please bear in mind that these are warranted to wear for ten years; that every one of them contains a certificate to that effect from the manufacturers. They don't belong to the cheap class of plated goods. If they did we couldn't be induced to give them away. We value the Quaker Valley name and reputation too highly for that.

Offer No. 1—This book case (with the teapot), $10.00. Size, 5 ft. 7 in. high, 3 ft. 2 in. wide; solid oak, elegantly finished in antique; hand carved; glass doors, with locks and key; adjustable shelves. Can also furnish this case in curly birch, finished natural or a perfect imitation of mahogany, at the same price.

Offer No. 2—This sideboard (with the teapot), $15.00. Solid oak, antique finish, polished like a piano; double top; serpentine shape, size of top, 21x46 in.; one large drawer and two small ones—one velvet-lined for silverware. A veritable poem in polished oak.

Offer No. 3—This couch (with the teapot), $9.00. Full size, 27x72 in.; spring edge; upholstered in imported figured corduroy or velours, any color. Samples of coverings sent free on request.

Offer No. 4—This combination (with the teapot), $12.40. So exquisitely finished; antique; size, 3 ft. 1 in. wide; 5 ft. 1 in. high; with lock and ported French mirror, 10x12; writing desk; pigeon holes; in for maid; underneath, with natural hogan; full same price.

Offer No. 7—This rocker (with the teapot), $4.50. Has cobbler's seat (genuine sole leather, embossed); oak frame, finished antique, or curly birch, finished mahogany.

Offer No. 11—This 6 ft. dining table (with the teapot), $8.50. Each additional two feet, $1.75. Made in 6, 8, 10 and 12 ft. lengths. Size, when closed, 42x42 in. A strictly high-grade, solid oak table; a marvel of symmetrical beauty; antique finish, piano polish. Retail value, 50 per cent more.

Offer No. 12—Kite (with the teapot), $6.40. The celebrated Quaker thousands in use; millions of imitations attest its popularity. Size, 27x47 in.; blue and white; wood legs and frame; shagreened; whitewood top; moulding board, one on each side; board, slide into frame; one partitioned; knives, forks, spoons, etc.

Offer No. 6—Set of 6 dining chairs (with the teapot), $8.50. Solid oak, high back, cane seat, nautical finish. All our cane-seat chairs are caned by hand—no machine work.

Offer No. 10—This rocker (with the teapot), $4.75. Frame is oak, beautifully finished in antique; upholstered in fine grade of plush or brocade. Spring seat.

Offer No. 13—This ladies' desk (with the teapot), $6.85. The daintiest bit of furniture that ever was. Your choice of genuine bird's eye maple, mahogany, quarter-sawn oak, or curly birch veneers. Plaque polish finish. Solid brass trimmings; 40 in. high, 26 in. wide, 13 in. deep.

Offer No. 9—This desk (with the teapot), $14.00. Solid oak, 3 ft. 6 in. long; 36 in. wide; extension slide on automatic lock; antique finish. Can furnish with drawers of cabinet, on the right at same price.

Personal to our Coffee-Drinking Neighbors and Friends of the West is The teapot we're giving away is plenty large enough to serve the purposes of a coffee pot.

Quaker Valley Mfg. Co., 319-321 South Canal St., Chicago

Two Great Egg MAKERS
MANN'S Green Bone Cutter
will make hens lay lots of eggs. They prove the victory of science over superstition. Success is certain. Breaks in twice the eggs when full grown and old.
MANN'S BONE CUTTERS
have a world wide fame. Send C.O.D. or on Trial. 10c each. Free if name this paper.
F. W. MANN CO., Milford, Mass.

ASTHMA CURED!
Dr. Har's cure has brought happiness to sufferers. A $1.00 bottle and valuable treatment sent free, you pay the expressage. Address, Dept. 167,
DR. H. W. HARR, Cincinnati, O.

NOVA SCOTIA APPLES

The Gravenstein grows in Nova Scotia in a soil perfect for the world's production of apples. More delicious than an orange. A box of the choicest pickings wrapped in paper by express from Boston in October, 1.11.11. $2.35. We pay duty and all charges to the orders to the Nova Scotia Fruit Co., Grand Pre, Nova Scotia. Grand Pre is noted as the home of the apple.

$2. to $5. per acre. Fine fruit, true living, more money, less work. Write for 32 page pamphlet giving full information.
S. L. BAKER, Canoe Station

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK. NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 8, 1897. VOLUME 20.—NUMBER 36. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

FAMINE RELIEF WORKERS IN INDIA

The Christian Herald's Fund is Being Distributed by Bishop Thoburn's Inter-Denominational Missionary Committee.

Rev. Dr. Talmage of New York.

group of portraits published on this page is reproduced from a photograph kindly forwarded to us by the Christian Herald. The photograph was taken at Jabalpur on the day the missionaries representing four denominational societies assembled by Bishop Thoburn to apportion Presbyterian; and Rev. David Finlayson, Church of Scotland. Three other members of the Committee who were not able to be present at the first meeting were Mr. Benjamin Aitken, Independent; Dr. Z. Uhl, American Evangelical Lutheran; and Miss Helen Stevens, of the London Missionary Society. The meeting was held in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Jabalpur, a photograph of which is also published on this page. There can be no doubt that in the hands of a committee representing so many societies and so many sections of India, the fund will be wisely and fairly administered. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is honored by having missionaries so eminent willing to devote time and trouble to this onerous work, and is glad that all denominations have cheerfully co-operated in the labor. We are sure that whatever may be the field in which the heaviest burden is felt, its claims will receive kindly and sympathetic consideration, and prompt aid will be rendered. Thus the funds being on

From a report of the meeting forwarded to us by the Secretary, Rev. E. S. Hume, we learn that after listening to the stories of the missionaries and reading the letters of those unable to attend, a resolution was passed that "In view of the widespread and great distress reported, the money in hand should be appropriated to the relief of pressing need and distributed immediately." Checks were drawn at once in proportion to the urgency reported and were sent out that day. Speaking with Bishop Thoburn shortly afterward, the bankers informed him that the checks were speedily converted into cash, and the whole sum was in the hands of the missionaries in the various fields within a few days. The eagerness with which the missionaries secured their share of the funds showed how bitter was the need and how anxious they were to save the lives of the people who were appealing to them for food. A large number of the people relieved were Christians. Mr. Hume writes that a crore of rupees (about $33,000) was thus paid out. He adds that "During the meet-from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Fund and the following resolution was passed unanimously and enthusiastically:

Resolved:—That the Secretary convey the most hearty thanks of all present to the friends in America, who have sent out through "The Christian Herald" such very generous gifts for use in Famine Relief; also the same to the Proprietor of that paper whose enterprise and Christian sympathy have made this great movement possible.

To this cordial resolution, which we are sure will be gratifying to every contributor to the Fund, Bishop Thoburn adds: "You have every reason to be thankful that God has permitted you to become a blessing to so many thousands in this stricken land." In sending the report of the proceedings, Mr. Hume says: "The work which you are doing for India through the Famine Fund can never be forgotten. The Christian spirit THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has manifested has been an example to all. You and those who have contributed to your Fund must feel great satisfaction at having done such a grand work. As Secretary of your Committee, I am receiving most urgent letters, begging for help. The need for relief has not been so great at any time as now. I trust we shall receive further funds from America to meet the urgent calls which come in from every side."

M.E. CHURCH, JABALPUR

Since Mr. Hume wrote the above letter, another remittance of fifty thousand dollars has been cabled to the Committee, so that the worthy Secretary must have been able to respond to the appeals promptly on their reaching him. It must have gladdened his heart to have in hand the funds for the work.

Among the reports of Famine Relief work presented at the meeting were the

(Continued on page 675.)

Mr. L. Booth. Rev. E. Mortimer. Rev. G. L. Wharton. Rev. R. P. M. Stanley. Rev. H. Forman. Rev. D. Jones. Rev. Andrew Stoll. Rev. A. G. Danielson. Rev. George Lambert. Bishop J. M. Thoburn. Rev. T. S. Johnson. Rev. J. C. Blair. Rev. David Finlayson. Rev. E. S. Hume. Rev. Samuel Baker. Rev. J. A. F. Warren.

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S" INTER-DENOMINATIONAL COMMITTEE AT JABALPUR, INDIA.

Weylan; Rev. Andrew Stoll, German Evangelical; Rev. A. G. Danielson, Swedish Evangelical; Rev. J. C. Blair, the spot, the time of sending appeals to this office will be saved and the aid will be extended where it is most needed.

ing there were many expressions of gratitude for the generous and timely aid which has been received by the missionaries

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

A Believer in Missions, Missouri. There are persons in this community who claim that the money given for Foreign Missions is used to pay the salaries of persons in this country, (meaning perhaps members of mission boards, etc.), or that the money passes through so many hands, that it never reaches the missionaries. I believe these charges are absolutely untrue. Am I right?

There is no foundation for such charges. Speaking generally for the missionary boards, we believe them, without exception, to be honestly and conscientiously conducted. The result of their efforts is of incalculable value to the Gospel cause, and any money entrusted to their hands is absolutely safe, and will be applied in strict accordance with the wishes of the donors.

Reader, Leadville, Colo., Thomas Owens, Carlisle, Ky., and G. T. G., and others. Does not your statement that the relics found by Prof. Flinders Petrie in Egypt, were over five thousand years old, conflict with Bible chronology? These figures carry us back beyond the date of the creation.

The commonly accepted chronology of the Bible makes the date of the Creation 4004 years before Christ. As we are now in the year 1897 after Christ, it follows that the entire period is 5,897 years. There is therefore no conflict with Bible chronology in our statement as to the relics being over five thousand years old. At the same time you must remember that the system of chronology which gives 4004 as the date of creation, forms no part of the Bible itself. It is constructed on calculations based on the generations mentioned in the Bible, but these generations may not have been continuous or they may have overlapped, so that there are many considerations which render such a system extremely unreliable. The early records of Genesis were evidently never designed to be the basis of a strict chronological computation. The Bible writers were anxious, first of all, to teach religious truth and even when they wrote history, they were less careful about dates than about the spiritual lessons to be drawn from their narrative. The dates of all events previous to the accession of Solomon are uncertain.

Subscriber, Boston, Mass. Will you kindly tell me the origin of Faith, Hope and Charity; also why represented by figures of women?

The "Three Graces" of mythology were Euphrosyne, Aglaia, and Thalia, who were supposed to be in attendance on Venus or Apollo, and who represented grace, beauty, and joy respectively. In the Christian interpretation, they are superseded by Faith, Hope and Charity, who are known as the Three Christian Graces. (See 1 Cor. 13:13) The reason why feminine figures are chosen is doubtless that in art the feminine figure is invariably selected to represent the more delicate emotions, and the masculine to portray the stronger and more heroic.

The Klondike gold craze has stirred the muse of Yone Noguchi (the famous young Japanese poet, resident in Oakland, Cal.) to express his contempt for gold-hunting in sounding lines. He likens the hunters to men who have abandoned happiness for an unsatisfying phantom. We quote these lines from a copy of his verses, which he has sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Thou, art, battling for gold-dew, art a demon-child unlike the father-god.
Gather mortal, the boundless, boundless gold that hills not abund o'er adieu—
The world-drumming gold that kindles mortal's delight—O gold! not the Klondike gold—
The gold at the proud gate of San Francisco Bay, ave, the divine gold of the majestic sun!

Hark! An awoken, about Klondike gold!
Nay, mort d, the gold of day!
Aye, the emperor's sin, the snow-robed
Alaska land with a crown of golden light!

This is the poetry of nature-worship, and breathes the same spirit as that of the Druid or the Zoroastrian.

Jessie Watterson, Cleveland, O. What are the uses and characteristics of the lithograph? I saw it mentioned in an article lately, but found no intelligent explanation.

It is a French invention designed to record words as they are spoken. As in the case of the phonograph wax cylinders, the sounds of the human voice trace irregular lines on sheets of smoked paper, which are fitted upon a revolving wheel, and these sounds, it is claimed, can be reproduced with absolute accuracy. Write to the Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., for complete description.

S. E. Caton, Santa Cruz, Calif. Is the confessional employed in the Greek Church?

Yes; confession, ablution, penance and prayers for the dead.

T. B. S., Fairfield, Ia. Why do you say that the First Epistle to the Corinthians was written from Ephesus, when the Epistle is dated from Philippi?

The date forms no part of the epistle and it is omitted in the Revised Version. There are several references which show that Paul was writing at a period later than his short stay at Philippi. 1 Cor. 15:32 shows that he had been at Ephesus when he wrote, and 1 Cor. 16:8, showed that he purposed remaining there for some time longer. The rational inference, therefore, is that he was there when he wrote the epistle. Possibly it may have been sent to the Corinthian Church from CEREMONIAL IN A BUDDHIST TEMPLE, CEYLON.

The Singhalese are devoted to Buddhism, which is, indeed, the dominant religion of the island of Ceylon; but it does not exist among them in the same purity that characterizes it in India, although the sacred books are identical. The Singhalese priests are wealthy and influential as a class, and own one-third of the tillable land of the island. Our photograph represents a party of Buddhist priests assembled in a temple, and engaged in one of the ceremonials of their religion.

Philippi, if Timothy and the others mentioned in the date line were not going farther at that time; and so some one at Corinth receiving it endorsed it with the name of Philippi.

Anxious Reader, Gill, Mass. Is there any hope for a poor weak sinner who was recently a professing Christian, but has fallen through temptation under the power of his besetting sin?

Certainly there is hope for him, both of his forgiveness and his emancipation. Backsliders are assured of forgiveness if they plead for it through Christ, and with sincere sorrow for their fall. The sin must be forsaken, and there must be a firm resolve in Christ's strength to avoid the temptation in future. There should also be an earnest endeavor to find out the circumstances which lead to the sin so that they may be avoided. There must be, too, a constant watchfulness and unceasing prayer for Christ's strength to resist. (See 1 Cor. 7:9; Jer. 3:12, 22; Nos. 14:4; 11 Chron. 7:9-11.)

H. C. K. How do you explain Christ's statement (Matt. 10:33) that he came to set members of the same family at variance?

It was the result of his coming, not the purpose of it. Christ was warning the people who came to him of the sufferings they would have to endure, among which was this of the hostility of their near relatives. Many were offering themselves as his disciples who expected that he would become the King of Israel, and that they would share his glory, and he wished none to come with any such idea. He wanted them to count the cost, and he told them of the trials awaiting them if they followed him. They must be quite sure that they loved him so well that if their fathers or their brothers cast them off for being Christians they would be faithful to Christ even at the cost of losing the love of their relatives.

Richard, M., Providence, R. I. Is "Klondike" an American or Canadian word? What does it mean?

It is a native Indian word, and, accurately written, is "Thron-duck," meaning "plenty of fish," given to the locality, doubtless, because of the abundance of fish found in the river.

Pastor. What can be done with these easy-going, good-natured, self-confident, sanctimonious professors of religion, who feel that they possess all the grace, piety, and Christian virtues necessary, and who never speak, sing or pray in social meetings, remaining mute throughout the service, but who on any secular occasion will manifest great interest and enthusiasm by word and manner, and contribute in every way to make such gatherings a success?

Don't judge them too harshly. It may be that they feel deeply and have true religion right in their hearts, although they are constitutionally deficient in moral courage and the qualities that are needed for speaking and praying in public. The mute worshipper is not necessarily less sincere than he who is a ready speaker. Everyone according to his gift or talent. You should take your quiet folks and put them in active Christian work where they don't need to fret about their inability to speak in public. Keep them busy and you may be surprised at the zeal and energy they will show. Remember that public speech, after all, is an accomplishment and not a of Cardinal Wolsey and numerous events, including the invention of railways and the end of the world. Doubtless "prophecies" attributed to her are not

W. W. W., Wallace, Va. I find in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of August 18, 1897, on page 6, an article headed "Only Nance." It is an picture of mountain life; about the best I have read. I have been doing Christian work in the mountains for five years, and quite a number of other workers are associated with me, working without salaries, and have to do our work as cheaply as possible.

R. A. G., Millbrook, N. Y. Where in New York City can I obtain instruction, either private or in a school, in burning designs on wood? Write to the Secretary of the Art Students League, Fifty-seventh street, New York, for full information.

W. G. R., Oneco, Fla. What is the population of Buenos Ayres, the capital of the Argentine Republic?

The population of the capital in 1896 was 549,307.

A Swedish reader sends us this note: "There is a large fair in Stockholm this on account of being the king's twenty-fifth as a regent, and in vain have I been looking your paper for some mention about it."

An illustrated article on the subject appeared in our issue of April 7. Those who come to this country make good and our correspondent's letter shows that do not forget the home-land.

This appeal from a reader in Elgin may suggest an opportunity to other readers to help what seems to be a very deserving cause.

Last May a few of us got together and a Sabbath School away here in the mountains of Eastern Oregon, on the little River Minu has prospered. It seems as though it is starting-point for a revival. The said that Uncle Billy would have superintendent, for some one we to pray. I thank God I could pray you send us a few good books. You have lots of them in your Schools that your folks have things would be a great help to ones here in these mountains. If you have some books, send them to W. We call our school Pine Grove Sunday School, Elgin, Union Co.

We do not believe a better library to be made of old libraries than them to this mountain Sunday

C. W. K., Augusta, Ga. Where is the Garden of Eden to be found?

We have repeatedly replied to letters like the above, at different times, but the inquiry is a perennial investigation as to the site of Eden has been completely baffled. Arabia, Syria, Ceylon, India, have each claimed to be the site of the Garden described in Genesis. The preponderance of opinion among modern scholars seems to favor Armenia. A number of volumes has been written on the subject, but it is quite as uncertain as ever.

Mrs. C. L. C. R., Summit, N. J. Are there any missionaries in Thibet? If many, and have there been converts?

Notwithstanding the fact that missionaries are not openly permitted in Thibet, several brave pioneers of the Gospel have begun operations on the frontier. Miss Annie R. Taylor, several companions, about a year ago, started a Thibetan Gospel mission on the border, which has been considerably enlarged. Moravian Brethren occupy stations in Little Thibet, but have not been permitted to enter Thibet. The China Inland Mission is engaged in border work and awaits opportunity to enter.

Constant Reader, Allentown, Pa. The verses are not connected in any way. The case the reference is to the confession in which was the basis of rock, and in the writer simply gave the greeting of who were with him when he wrote. man, Lyonsville, Cal. The nearest we get is Job 28:35.—J. A. G., Paw Paw, Mo. The persistence of misrepresentation hood provoked him to emphatic contradiction. There is imported food and a native-grown food, but the price is means of the poor. As in other lands causes high prices.—A. R. G. E., Galt, Mo. Write to Ditson & Co., N. Y.—D. W. So. Dak. It is not.—Miss Clara I. Haven, Ct. It is at Mont-Lawn, near the Hudson, N. Y.—M. L. D., Bryan, Mo. Answer to Reader, Leadville, on Thibet. R. B. J., Darien, Mo. The Christian never discusses politics. You certainly interpreted the meaning of the sermon S. Morris, Ill. It is an old English and it still in existence can doubtless be through American publishers such as Harpers.—R. S. G., Northfield, Minn. reliable, we believe.—A. B. C., Garfield, N. Y. full name and address and we will send you.—Subr., Pokesville, N. Y. Jewett, bookseller, Bible House, New York.—Mrs. W. C. B., Lee, Mass. I have ten no such book.—Reader, Newark, N. J. questionably it would conduce to heal the foot to have the place cleaned and the dust removed.—Constant Reader, Newark, can find what you want at Ocean Grove virtue. None should omit, however, that act of public acknowledgment which is the duty of every Christian. (Matt. 10:32.)

Subscriber, Atkinson, Neb. Did Paul baptize his converts? If not, why did he not?

Paul answers your second question himself (see 1 Cor. 1:17.) He implies that he had something better to do. Christ sent him not to baptize but to preach the Gospel. The value of baptism in the case of the Corinthian converts was that it was a public profession of their faith—it placed them on record. This result would be attained whoever administered the rite, and, therefore, Paul relegated the duty to some other Christian. After he left, the Corinthians began to think there was some special significance about it, and for this Paul reproves them.

Subscriber. What could I get the World-Wide Encyclopedia for if I can pay all at once and send right away?

The regular price is $13, but for cash (to subscribers only) we will allow ten per cent. discount, making the price $11.70.

Reader, Albany, N. Y. Can you give any information concerning the prophecy of Mother Shipton in the 13th or 14th century?

"Mother Shipton" (who is said to have been Ursula Southiel, wife of Tobias Shipton, a humber in Yorkshire, England), lived about 1486. Other accounts give her a different name. She is said to have predicted the death

THE BABIES' FLOATING HOSPITAL.

John's Guild is Doing for the Tender Little Children of the Metropolis in Midsummer—Happy Youngsters and Thankful Mothers.

HERE is no more beautiful or deserving charity in New York at the present time—amid its multitude of benevolences—than the St. John's Guild, whose peculiar mission is to save the young and tender babies of the tenements. When the relentless sun pours his suffocating heat down on the close quarters of the poor, and the children droop in the sickly perspiration, then, like messengers of mercy, the agents of the Guild come with made each week during the hottest weather. The Seaside Home had over 1800 patients. Caring for this vast army of children cost only an average of twenty-six cents per day for each. Last year the Floating Hospital, the Seaside Home, and the City Hospital were more in demand for the children's work than in any previous year of the Guild's history. Between $45,000 and $50,000 a year are expended in the conduct of the work as a whole. During the last season the general depression in business has resulted in a very considerable reduction in the contributions, but the Guild was carried through the year successfully, relieving over 60,000 little sufferers and brightening thousands of homes.

Many of the trips of the Floating Hospital are made at the expense of individual donors who thus, in a quiet and unostentatious way, have a large share in the saving of hundreds of little weaklings. On such trips the number carried ranges from 500 to 1500. The following: Rev. Daniel Jones of the Baptist Mission at Agra, said that their Mission sought to give relief by giving employment to the needy. On his compound, 18 hand-mills are kept busy, giving employment to a number of women. The flour is taken over by the Rev. J. P. Haythornthwaite, of the Church Missionary Society, who oversees the distribution of it, to the needy. One hundred weavers also are kept busy at their looms, and a number of women are engaged in spinning. The Municipality has helped them by giving them an order for Rs. 1,000 worth of cloth. The weaver community generally, have been the chief sufferers. They have a few orphans also, for whose support they are responsible.

Our Famine Relief Workers in India.

(Continued from First Page.)

Rev. R. P. M. Stanley, of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, reported that gratuitous relief is being distributed from seven centres, in their Mission. That week the numbers receiving it were 6,200, the previous week 6,000. They give employment to 500. Lack of funds prevents them to stop their distribution, many of these had to go to the government poor-house; but the people complain that they are ill-treated there and do not get enough to eat.

Rev. A. G. Danielson of the Swedish Mission at Chhindwara, said that around their seven stations there is distress: Sagar is the worst of all. They could use unlimited sums of money there in relieving distress. The very poor, the orphan and destitute children, are specially singled out for help. Sometimes hundreds sit about the mission compound all day. Their orphanage is full; 110 is the highest number their society will undertake the care of. In addition to this they have 35, collected in a temporary orphanage. In the Chhindwara and Betul districts together the society allows for only 100 orphans, but this number has already been exceeded by about 25.

THE DOCTOR'S VISIT.

come invincibly the mother and babies alike, in the assurance of killed medical attention, and a life-giving from the sea. The photographer reported in the columns on this general interest of the work of St. John's Guild. On all the days, the large ties up the lines on the ships and West of the city, and the crowds of mother and children with their babies are received guests, and with wholesome and pure, fresh air invigorated the sea air. In the bath are four hot baths and cold tubs, and as soon as the water is clear the fresh work of the little children in real salt water. One of the barge is used as a hospital, and the weakest children are taken care of by skilful doctors and nurses. The nationalities are represented among the beneficiaries of this beautiful charity. It is at the Seaside Hospital of the Guild that the full realization of the beneficence is apparent. It is capable of accommodating 250 sick children and mothers in the summer months, when the children of the poor who huddle together in the unhealthy tenements, are suffering, as it always full. Pale, wan and dying when they come there, when they leave after a week or fortnight's sojourn, the little patients are so changed as to be hardly recognizable, the ruddy hue of health taking the place of the pallor of sickness. Last year nearly 57,000 children and their parents were carried down the harbor, an average of five trips being big barge is well fitted out and equipped for its work, and the crowds of tired and anxious mothers who throng its decks thoroughly appreciate the kindness that has provided these life-giving outings for their frail little ones. For the hungry there is an abundant supply of good milk and bread and other substantial, and there are doctors and nurses nearby to afford relief to any little sufferer. The cribs in the Floating Hospital are cool and inviting, and of snowy whiteness—just the place for tired babies to sleep soundly, and the salt water bath-rooms are well patronized by those mothers who know how invigorating to a weak child is a dip in the sea. In a single season nearly 10,000 salt-water baths are given to the little folks, besides a large number to grown-up girls and women who accompany them.

MOTHERS AND BABIES ON THE PIER, WAITING FOR THE BABIES' HOSPITAL BOAT.

reaching more than half the number they would be glad to help.

Rev. J. A. F. Warren, Protestant Episcopal, Jabalpur, in referring to the famine work at the Society's station, at Agra, said that Mr. Haythornthwaite had sold his piano in order to get money for famine relief. In Jabalpur they have 150 children. The Mansion House Fund helps them to the extent of Rs. 226 per month. The society has also helped them, but is unable to send more money.

Rev. David Finlayson (of Sioni, Chappara, in the Central Provinces), reported that they had distributed uncooked food for four months at the rate of ten to twelve dollars a day, and their money was all done. They selected the most needy and the lame, blind and lepers as their special objects of charity. Since they have had CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund until the brethren who were surrounded by people actually dying of starvation, had received the money they needed.

Dr. T. S. Johnson, of the Methodist Mission at Jabalpur, said that usually the death rate in that district was fifty in the thousand, but during the famine the rate had risen in the Northern part to 626 in the thousand. More than half the population had been swept away. The official reports were appalling, "but the worst is not known."

Rev. A. Stoll told how in a journey of twelve miles a fellow missionary had seen fifty corpses lying near the road, many of them half-eaten. Dogs cannot live near some of the villages, because the people catch and eat them, so fearful is the pressure of hunger.

A FREEZING RESTING PLACE.

Rev. G. L. Wharton (Christian Mission, Hurda) reported urgent need of funds. He had seen as many as seven people dead round their compound at Bilaspur. Mr. Gordon of Nungeli in that district, undertakes to distribute relief in ten of the villages around them. Their Orphan Asylum and Leper Asylum are full. Every day some dead bodies are found lying about. They often came to an end of their means, and then a check would come and enable them to go on again. Mr. Wharton's instructions to all workers are that the gifts are to be given in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. Samuel Baker, of the Society of Friends, told a sad story of destitution around their missions, but he nobly said that as they had still a small sum in their treasury, it would not be right to ask for any share of THE LABOR STRIKES.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., } Whatsoever ye would that men should on the Text: Matt. 7: 12. - - - - } do to you, do you even so to them.

THE greatest war the world has ever seen is between capital and labor. The strife is not like that which in history is called the Thirty Years' War, for it is a war of centuries, it is a war of the five continents, it is a war hemispheric. The middle classes in this country, upon whom the nation has depended for holding the balance of power and for acting as mediators between the two extremes, are diminishing; and if things go on at the same ratio as they are now going, it will not be very long before there will be no middle class in this country, but all will be very rich or very poor, princes or paupers, and the country will be given up to palaces and hovels.

The antagonistic forces are closing in upon each other. The Pennsylvania miners' strikes, the telegraph operators' strikes, the railroad employees' strikes, the movements of the boycotters and the dynamiters are only skirmishes before a general engagement, or, if you prefer it, escapes through the safety-valves of an imprisoned force which promises the explosion of society. You may pooh-pooh it; you may say that this trouble, like an angry child, will cry itself to sleep; you may belittle it by calling it Fourierism, or Socialism, or St. Simonism, or Nihilism, or Communism; but that will not hinder the fact that it is the mightiest, the darkest, the most terrific threat of this century. All attempts at pacification have been dead failures, and monopoly is more arrogant, and the trades unions more bitter. "Gives us more wages," cry the employees. "You shall have less," say the capitalists. "Compel us to do fewer hours of toil in a day." "You shall toil more hours," say the others. "Then, under certain condition, we will not work at all," say these. "Then you shall starve," say those, and the workmen gradually using up that which they accumulated in better times, unless there be some radical change, we shall have soon in this country four million hungry men and women. Now, four million hungry people cannot be kept quiet. All the enactments of legislatures and all the constabularies of the cities, and all the army and navy of the United States cannot keep four million hungry people quiet. What then? Will this war between capital and labor be settled by human wisdom? Never. The brow of the one becomes more rigid, the fist of the other more clinched.

But that which human wisdom cannot achieve will be accomplished by Christianity if it be given full sway. You have heard of medicines so powerful that one drop will stop a disease and restore a patient; and I have to tell you that one drop of my text properly administered will stop all these woes of society and give convalescence and complete health to all classes. Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do you even so to them.

I shall not show you how this quarrel between monopoly and hard work cannot be stopped, and then I will show you how this controversy will be settled.

Futile remedies. In the first place there will come no pacification to this trouble through an outcry against rich men merely because they are rich. There is no member of a trades union on earth that would not be rich if he could be. Sometimes through a fortunate invention, or through some accident of prosperity a man who had nothing comes to a large estate, and we see him arrogant and supercilious, and taking people by the throat just as other people took him by the throat. There is something very mean about human nature when it comes to the top. But it is no more a sin to be rich than it is a sin to be poor. There are those who have gathered a great estate through fraud, and then there are millionaires who have gathered their fortunes through foresight in regard to changes in the markets, and through brilliant business faculty, and every dollar of their estate is as honest as the dollar which the plumber gets for mending a pipe, or the mason gets for building a wall. There are those who keep in poverty because of their own fault. They might have been well-off, but they gave themselves to strong drink, or they smoked or chewed up their earnings, or they lived beyond their means, while others on the same wages and on the same salaries went on to competency. I know a man who is all the time complaining of his poverty and crying out against rich men, while he himself keeps two dogs, and chews and smokes, and is filled to the chin with whisky and beer!

Micawber said to David Copperfield: "Copperfield, my boy, one pound income, twenty shillings and sixpence expenses; result, misery. But, Copperfield, my boy, one pound income, expenses nineteen shillings and sixpence; result, happiness." And there are vast multitudes of people who are kept poor because they are the victims of their own improvidence. It is no sin to be rich, and it is no sin to be poor. I protest against this outcry which I hear against those who, through economy and self-denial and assiduity, have come to large fortune. This bombardment of commercial success will never stop this quarrel between capital and labor.

Neither will the contest be settled by cynical and unsympathetic treatment of the laboring classes. There are those who speak of them as though they were only cattle or draught horses. Their nerves are nothing, their domestic comfort is nothing, their happiness is nothing. They have no more sympathy for them than a hound has for a hare, or a hawk for a hen, or a tiger for a calf. When Jean Valjean, the greatest hero of Victor Hugo's writings, after a life of suffering and brave endurance, goes into incarceration and death, they clap the book shut and say, "Good for him!" They stamp their feet with indignation and say just the opposite of "Save the working classes." They have all their sympathies with Shylock, and not with Antonio and Portia. They are plutocrats, and their feelings are internal. They are filled with irritation and irascibility on this subject. To stop this awful imbroglio between capital and labor they will lift not so much as the tip end of the little finger.

Neither will there be any pacification of this angry controversy through violence. God never blessed murder.

The poorest use you can put a man to is to kill him. Blow up to-morrow all the country-seats on the banks of the Hudson, and all the fine houses on Madison Square, and Brooklyn Heights, and Bunker Hill, and Rittenhouse Square, and Beacon Street, and all the bricks and timber and stone will just fall back on the bare head of American labor. The worst enemies of the working classes in the United States are their demented coadjutors.

In this country the torch put to the factories that have discharged hands for good or bad reasons; obstructions on the railroad in front of midnight express trains because the offenders do not like the president of the company; strikes on ship-board the hour they were going to sail, or in printing-offices the hour the paper was to go to press, or in mines the day the coal was to be delivered, or on house scaffoldings so the builder fails in keeping his contract—all these are only a hard blow on the head of American labor, and cripple its arms, and lame its feet, and pierce its heart. Traps sprung suddenly upon employers, and violence, never took one knot out of the knuckle of toil, or put one farthing of wages into a callous palm. Barbarism will never cure the wrongs of civilization. Mark that!

Well, if this controversy between capital and labor cannot be settled by human wisdom, if to-day capital and labor stand with their thumbs on each other's throat—as they do—it is time for us to look somewhere else for relief, and it points from my text roseate and jubilant, and puts one hand on the broadcloth shoulder of capital, and puts the other on the homespun-covered shoulder of toil, and says, with a voice that will grandly and gloriously settle this, and settle everything, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do you even so to them." That is, the lady of the household will say: "I must treat the maid in the kitchen just as I would like to be treated if I were downstairs, and it were my work to wash, and cook, and sweep, and it were the duty of the maid in the kitchen to preside in this parlor." The maid in the kitchen must say: "If my employer seems to be more prosperous than I, that is no fault of hers; I shall not treat her as an enemy. I will have the same industry and fidelity downstairs as I would expect from my subordinates, if I happened to be the wife of a silk importer."

The great want of the world to-day is the fulfillment of this Christ-like injunction, that which he promulgated in his sermon Olivetice. All the political economists under the archivault of the heavens in convention for a thousand years cannot settle this controversy between monopoly and hard work, between capital and labor. During the Revolutionary War there was a heavy piece of timber to be lifted, perhaps for some fortress, and a corporal was overseeing the work, and he was giving commands to some soldiers as they lifted: "Leave away, there! yo heave!" Well, the timber was too heavy; they could not get it up. There was a gentleman riding by on a horse, and he stopped and said to this corporal, "Why don't you help them lift? That timber is too heavy for them to lift." "No," he said, "I won't; I am a corporal." The gentleman got off his horse and came up to the place. "Now," he said to the soldiers, "all together—yo heave!" and the timber went to its place. "Now," said the gentleman to the corporal, "when you have a piece of timber too heavy for the men to lift, and you want help, you send to your commander-in-chief." It was Washington. Now, that is about all the Gospel I know—the Gospel of giving somebody a lift, a lift out of darkness, a lift out of earth into heaven. That is all the Gospel I know—the Gospel of helping somebody else to lift.

"Oh," says some wiseacre, "talk as you will, the law of demand and supply will regulate these things until the end of time." No, they will not, unless God dies and the batteries of the Judgment Day are spiked, and Pluto and Proserpine, king and queen of the infernal regions, take full possession of this world. Do you know who Supply and Demand are? They have gone into partnership, and they propose to swindle this earth and are swindling it. You are drowning. Supply and Demand stand on the shore, one on one side, the other on the other side of the life-boat, and they cry out to you, "Now, you pay us what we ask you for getting you to shore, or go to the bottom?" If you can borrow $5000 you can keep from failing in business. Supply and Demand say, "Now, you pay us exorbitant usury, or you go into bankruptcy." This robber firm of Supply and Demand say to you: "The crops are short. We bought up all the wheat and it is in our bin. Now, you pay our price or starve." That is your magnificent law of supply and demand.

Supply and Demand own the largest mill on earth, and all the rivers roll over their wheel, and into their hopper they put all the men, women, and children they can shovel out of the centuries, and the blood and the bones redden the valley while the mill grinds. That diabolic law of supply and demand will yet have to stand aside, and instead thereof will come the law of love, the law of co-operation, the law of kindness, the law of the law of Christ. Have you not seen the coming of such a time? The law of the Bible. All the full of promises on this subject the ages roll on the time will come of men of fortune will be giving law to humanitarian and evangelistic and there will be more James and Peter Coopers and William Dodges and George Peabodys, time comes there will be more picture-galleries, more gardens open for the holiday people working-classes.

I was reading in regard to a church had been made in England ago beth Palace, that it was excluded that charge demonstrated the sul that to the grounds of that wealth eight hundred poor families passes, and forty croquet compartments on the half-holidays four thousand people recline on the grass, walk the paths, and sit under the tree is Gospel—Gospel on the win out-of-doors worth just as much doors. That time is going to come is only a hint of what is going to time is going to come when, if anything in your house worth—pictures, pieces of sculpture, going to invite me to come and you are going to invite my friends and see them, and you will say, "I have been blessed with. God bless me this, and so far as enjoying yours also." That is Gospel.

In crossing the Alleghany many years ago, the stage had Henry Clay dismounted from his horse and went out on a rock at the top of the cliff, and he stood there cloak wrapped about him, and he was listening for something. He said to him, "What are you listening for?" Standing there, on the top of the cliff, he said, "I am listening to the footstep of the coming of this continent." A sublime position for an American statesman! You stand on the mountain-top of the Rock of Ages, and we hear coming from the happy industries, and smiling people, and the consecrated fortunes, and the numerous prosperities of the nineteenth and the opening twentieth century.

The great patriot of France, Victor Hugo, died. The ten thousand of his will given to the poor of the world, only a hint of the work he did for nations and for all times. I wonder how they allowed eleven days to pass his death and his burial, his body time kept under triumphal arches, the world could hardly afford to bury a man who for more than eight decades by his unparalleled genius blessed the name shall be a terror to all doers an encouragement to the struggle, made the world's burden lighter, its darkness less dense, and its less galling, and its thrones on less secure.

But Victor Hugo was not the friend of mankind. The greatest of capitalist and toiler, and they will yet bring them together in record, was born one Christmas on the curtains of heaven swung, still wings angelic. Owner of all this continents, all worlds, and all of light. Capitalist of immensity over to our condition. Coming world, not by gate of palace, but barn. Spending his first night shepherds. Gathering afterward him the fishermen to be his clerics. With adze, and saw, and axe, and in a carpenter-shop himself brother with the tradesmen all things, and yet on a hillock Jerusalem one day resigning even others, keeping not so much as pay for his obsequies; by charity the suburbs of a city that had out. Before the cross of such a and such a carpenter, all men to shake hands and worship. Every man's Christ. None so poor, he was higher. None so poor, poorer. At his feet the hostile will yet renounce their animosities countenances which have gloried the prejudices and revenge of shall brighten with the smile of he commands: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do you even so to them."

FOR A JEWISH COMMONWEALTH.

Object of the Zionist Congress at Basle Explained—Its Leaders and their Plans for Hebrew Restoration to Palestine.

August 14. Every Christian seems to me who accepts the divine origin and inspiration of the Old

DR. THEODORE HERZL.

as an integral part of his relief, must view the great gathering of "Zionist" Hebrews at Basle at the close of this month with feelings of interest and sympathy. What does this mean? I will answer the question by quoting its definition on the official programme of the Congress. It is a movement for the creation of an internationally recognized (volkerrechtlich gesichert) refuge for those Jews who are either unable or unwilling to assimilate themselves in the present places of abode." This is a comprehensive enough. The situation of Jews is not the same everywhere as in the United States. If the contrary were true there would be no need of a Zionist movement. In Russia close on to five million children of Israel are pent up in narrow space called "the Jewish Ghetto" in Germany, Austria and France, the butt of the Anti-Semites or "Kluge", whose numbers are increasing every day; in semi-civilized countries, like Poland and Morocco, they are hounded and persecuted with remorseless cruelty. It is no less to go into an elaboration of the causes of this bitter antagonism, the faults doubtless on both sides. In this situation, an appalling one, which Dr. Theodore Herzl, Max Nordau and the other great initiators of the Zionist movement propose to remedy by the re-establishment of a Jewish commonwealth in the land of their fathers—Palestine. "The time has come for the Jews!" is therefore the slogan of these latter-day prophets

DR. MAX NORDAU IN HIS STUDY.

And it must not be forgotten that they have the authority of Holy Writ on their side. Did not the Lord say unto Abraham: "For all the land which thou see, thee will I give it, and to thy seed after thee" (Gen. 13: 15). Also when Abraham attained his 99th year, the Lord made a covenant with him, saying: "And I will give unto thee and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession." (Gen. 17: 8.) So that this promise should not be forgotten by the children of Israel the Almighty repeated it a third time to Jacob: "Behold, I will make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a multitude of people; and will give this land to thy seed after thee for an everlasting possession."

The Rev. W. H. Hechler, of Vienna, an enthusiastic Christian Zionist, has discovered further justification for the promotion and encouragement of Zionism. He points to the prophecy in Revelations 11: 2: "and the holy city shall they (the Gentiles) tread under foot forty and two months." The question arises: When was the Holy City first trodden under foot by the Gentiles? History points to the years 637 and 638 after Christ's birth, when Omar, the third Khalifa and father-in-law of the prophet Mahomet, occupied Jerusalem and turned the Christian Church, which had taken the place of the Hebrew temple on Mount Moriah into a Turkish mosque—the present Mosque of Omar. The prophets, as Dr. Hechler points out, held a month to contain thirty days, but a day with them was of a year's duration! Consequently, forty-two prophetic months are equivalent to 1260 years, and if we add this figure to the dates 637 or 638 after Christ, above mentioned, we obtain the figures 1897 or 1898. The Rev. Dr. Hechler's conclusion is that since the period of Jerusalem's degradation, as stated in the prophecy, has come to an end, the time is ripe for the children of Israel to enter again into the possession of their own.

So much for the purely religious aspect of the question. Even those who refuse to see in the consummation of Zionism a fulfilment of prophecy must agree that the present intolerable situation of the Jews in some European countries demands prompt attention on the part of humanitarians of every race and religious belief. Neither Herzl, who first set the ball rolling with his remarkable pamphlet, "Der Judenstaat," nor Max Nordau, the brilliant author of "Conventional Lies" and "Degeneration," pretend to justify the movement on the ground of divine revelation. A just pride in the traditions of their ancient race, an intense pity for the sufferings of their poorer brethren, a noble desire to rescue many millions of their race from the moral and physical bondage in which circumstances have placed them—these are the sentiments which have spurred the Zionist leaders to action. Strange enough, their motives have been misunderstood or wilfully misinterpreted by some of the very people from whom they had the best right to expect aid and comfort. A section of the rabbiatical fraternity of Germany and Austria, fearing that an assertion of Jewish nationalism would justify the Anti-Semitic accusation that the Jew lacks patriotic feeling, started an open crusade against the Zionist movement which at first impeded its progress to some extent. Max Nordau, however, told me yesterday that the opposition had been practically overcome.

Max Nordau makes light of the pretence advanced by many rabbis that Judaism has a "mission" to fulfil in bringing about the union of all nations in one bond of love and brotherhood. Israel's mission, he argues, is to be true to herself, in the first place. Humanity in general will benefit far more from contact with "a strong, a free, a united, a well-developed nation of Jews," than with "a down trodden, persecuted, despised and homeless Judenthum." It is not as the victims of Jew-baiters but as the representatives of a strong and independent race that their influence will be felt in the council of nations.

It is gratifying to note the enthusiasm with which the Zionist idea has been greeted by Christian philanthropists and divines in all the leading countries of Europe. In Protestant England, the warmest sympathy has gone out to the movement from prominent members of every religious denomination and the evangelical churches of North Germany have shown an equally friendly spirit—the truly Christian spirit which aids and encourages every worthy humanitarian work, regardless of doctrinal considerations.

A few months ago, the well-known writer, Israel Zangwill, and Arthur Bentwich, visited Palestine on a mission of exploration on behalf of the Zionist scheme. Here is what Bentwich has to say, in summing up his impressions:

"THE CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS," NEW YORK.

In all my travels I have seldom seen a land and a people so monstrously calumniated as Palestine and its inhabitants. Far from being the deserted wilderness so often pictured, it is in every sense of the word as of yore, a land flowing with milk and honey, capable of regeneration and development in the interests of humanity and of its former inhabitants. The native population does not consist of beggars and loafers as is said of their brethren in other countries; but on the contrary of working mechanics, vine growers, agriculturists, and wage-earners of every kind.

Major Conder, a non-Jew, but a zealous Zionist, notwithstanding, remarks:

Properly cultivated, the country would not alone support its own population, but also produce a large surplus of cereals for exportation, thus competing with the Russian and Indian grain markets. I have traveled in the farming districts of Bechuanaland, and of Western Transvaal; I have passed through the Karoo country to the borders of the Kalahari desert, but even these rich countries now in the hands of British colonizers do not compare in point of fertility and advantages of irrigation with modern Palestine.

The outlook for Zionism is therefore bright enough on the whole, and this century, which has witnessed so many extraordinary changes in the history of the nations may possibly add yet another one to the list—the return of God's chosen people to the land of their forefathers. That would be a triumph indeed for civilization and humanity! V. GRIBAYDOFF.

A NEW MEMORIAL CHURCH.

The Church of the Strangers in New York Founded by the Late Dr. Deems to have a New Edifice.

CHRISTIAN people who were acquainted with the late Dr. Charles F. Deems and his work, will be glad to know that the church he founded and with which he was so long identified, is to continue on the lines he laid down. It is necessary for the Church of the Strangers in New York, to find a new church home, but it is gratifying to learn that it is to be in the same locality where alone the kind of work it has been doing, can be done. The present pastor, Dr. D. Asa Blackburn, and the members of his church are not disposed to follow the movement of the churches away from the abodes of the poor to the more aristocratic regions uptown. They believe that there is need for a church with the principles of Christ, in its present neighborhood. It would be easy to gather a congregation of the well-to-do in the uptown districts and the financial condition of the church would doubtless be increased by such a move; but as Dr. Blackburn says, there is a large population of working people around the present site and he would like to have it said now, as it was said in the time of the Master: "To the poor the Gospel is preached."

REV. DR. ASA BLACKBURN.

The church and its pastor would like to remain just where they are, but that is impossible. The church stands on leasehold ground, and its lease has nearly expired. It would amaze the men who signed the original lease, if they knew how the value of the land has increased during the running of the lease. No longer is the worth of that section estimated by the crops the fields would produce, or the pasture they would afford. Since the lease was signed, the fields have disappeared, and huge wholesale dry-goods houses rear their heads around the old church. The price of the ground is now quoted by the yard, not by the acre. The trustees of the Snug Harbor estate, to whom the land will soon revert, know too well the value of the site to renew the lease on any terms that the members of the church could hope to accept. A new site and a new edifice must be secured, and this will be a formidable undertaking. Both the pastor and his flock have, however, a great deal of that faith which surmounts obstacles and they are setting to work with cheerful hearts. Already the congregation has pledged twelve thousand dollars, and there is an endowment fund of twenty-three thousand more, ready for just such emergency as this. Thus $35,000 is provided as a nucleus, and the church is considering the ways and means of raising this to $100,000 which will be needed for the new building. Some help will be required, as the congregation is poor.

Happily, the church is in that kind of spiritual condition in which financial difficulties usually disappear. During the two years of Dr. Blackburn's pastorate 175 members have been added to the church, and there is on the part of the various societies a spirit of activity and aggressiveness which shows that religion with them is no formal, lifeless thing. The church is engaged in precisely the kind of effort that Dr. Deems inaugurated and it is proposed to continue it and to make the new edifice a memorial to the eminent man who planned and started the enterprise and gave it his best years.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

PAUL'S ADDRESS TO THE EPHESIAN ELDERS.

Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 19. Acts 20: 22-35. Golden Text Acts 20: 35.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

PAUL had already seen, before the outbreak of persecution in the riot at Ephesus, that his time of ministry in that city had come to an end. This we see in his purpose in the Spirit to go through Macedonia and Achaia to Jerusalem and afterwards to see Rome; with no mention whatever of returning to Ephesus. He knew the leading of his God. But it might have been hard for the elders of the church at Ephesus to understand how Paul could leave them, after three years of such ministry that all that dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord (Acts 19: 10, 21). Had not the riot of the silversmiths brought them to understand the Word of the Lord Jesus? "When they persecute you in one city flee unto another" (Matt. 10: 23). We can always trust our Lord to justify us in the eyes of others when we steadily and humbly follow his known will.

The Apostle after a visit to Macedonia, spent three months in Greece, and was driven thence by the persecuting Jews who plotted against him. His companions in labor multiplied. Hitherto we have heard only of Barnabas, Silas, and Timothy. By inference, we believe Luke also was with him in Macedonia. Now we read of Sopater, Aristarchus, Secundus, Gaius, Tychichus, and Trophimus. The time of Paul's active service was drawing to an end, and this Elijah of the Gospel must have Elishas on whom his mantle might fall. All this journey had something of a farewell character: the Apostle seems to have passed somewhat rapidly through Macedonia and Greece; and he spent only one week in Troas, in Asia Minor, from whence he went on foot to Assos, and thence by ship to Mitylene and Miletus. At Troas, he preached on the first day of the week, and there his heart was so full that he remained until midnight, the occasion where Eutychus was raised from the dead.

Paul's haste was caused by a consciousness that he must be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost. Thus, instead of visiting the beloved church at Ephesus, he sent for the elders of that church to come and meet him at Miletus for a solemn farewell. It might at first sight seem as though there were something of egotism in what Paul says to them about his own ministry. But the circumstances were unique. He was the first missionary of the Christian Church; called by God to carry Christ's name before the Gentiles, and made of him "the Apostle of the Gentiles." As the instrument of the Holy Ghost he had founded the Church of Christ in Asia, of which Ephesus was one of the most important centres. Paul's ministry was to be the type of Christian ministry for the Church in all ages; he spoke not of an ideal but of a life lived out. Paul knew that he himself was "nothing" (1 Cor. 12: 11). "Two years previously he had written to the Galatians, 'I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless, I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me' (Gal. 2: 20). Thus, we know that it was not to magnify himself he spoke of his ministry. All his life's spirit testified how truly he meant what he said. By the grace of God I am what I am" (1 Cor. 15: 10).

When the elders "were come to him he said unto them, Ye know from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons." Like his Lord before him, Paul partook with them of their ordinary life. He was not in any way an ecclesiastic, regarding himself as a privileged and superior person. No working man in the church could say it was easy for Paul to serve God; he got his living without labor and not by the sweat of his brow; anyone could be a Christian if they could be maintained without working. Such words are often spoken against ministers and Christian workers, by those who do not know that very often their work is as hard or harder than that of a day laborer. Paul could not admit the possibility of such an assertion: "Yea, yourselves know that these hands have ministered to my necessities and to them that were with me." No man could say of Paul that he labored from interested motives. "I have been with you at all seasons, in your hours of labor, in your health, your joy and your sorrow, in your family life and your business, I have been a father to you." But with all this Paul was no servant of men. Serving the Lord with all humility of mind. "Every service done to the church or to the weakest members of it was entirely free from anything personal. Paul was at the disposal of his brethren only in the Lord at the Lord's call and not at theirs. And he served with all humility of mind. Real humility is absence of self, being utterly and only at the disposal of God; counting for nothing but as he chooses to use us. And Paul's ministry was 'with many tears.' He knew what fellowship with Christ's sufferings meant (Phil. 3: 10), he filled up 'that which was behind of the afflictions of Christ in [his] flesh for his body's sake, which is the church.' (Col. 1: 24.) Paul laid things to heart; all that touched the state of the church touched him. He could not take things superficially. O how often when trouble arises in a church the first thought of many of the members is to prove to themselves and others that they themselves are not to blame! Then, in self-righteous, self-consciousness, they sit in judgment upon those whom they consider to be worthy of blame, instead of taking upon them their people's shame, as Daniel did his (Dan. 9: 20), or Paul, when he said, 'Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended and I burn not?' (1 Cor. 11: 29.) "By the space of three years I ceased not to warn everyone night and day with tears, and apart from them, were his temptations or trials which befell him by the lying in wait of the Jews. Like the Lord before him, Paul had the constant testing of the presence of unfriendly critics and persecutors. It was God's opportunity for the manifestation in him of the spirit of Christ, the Lamb of God.

And his teaching: "I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you." There was no policy in Paul's preaching; he took his command from above and left to his God the responsibility of how the word should be received. And he did not trust alone to his public ministrations. "But have shewed you and have taught you." He showed in his own life what he taught and his teaching was "publicly and from house to house." This man took pains. He sought for their souls as one that must give account. (Heb. 13: 7.) And his teaching had the ring of truth: "repentance towards God and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ." His life showed the reality of his teaching. "I have coveted no man's silver or gold or apparel." Having counted all things but loss for Christ. (Phil. 3: 7.) he could live among the money loving merchants of Ephesus without at all imbibing their spirit, and he longs to impart the disinterested spirit which was in him, to the Ephesian elders. "I have shewed you all things, how that so I do not live (as he did) for his daily bread, ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus how he said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'" (ver. 33-35.)

"And now, behold, I go, bound in the Spirit, unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there, save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me." We are reminded of Christ when he steadfastly set his face to go up to Jerusalem. (Luke 9: 51.) How often on this journey our Lord sought to make the disciples understand that he was going up to Jerusalem to suffer and die, yet nothing should turn him aside. Paul had caught the Master's spirit. If he, like his Lord, was to be a lamb led to the slaughter (Isa. 53: 7), Paul desired nothing else.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

RETURNING to the history of Paul's life we take up the story where we left it, in the lesson of August 29. Paul left Ephesus shortly after the disturbance in the theatre and went to Macedonia, which now forms part of Turkey. In this district were the churches of Philippi, Thessalonica and Berea, which he probably visited. Thence, having met Titus and obtained news of the church at Corinth, he turned southward into Greece to the region which in other places he calls Achaia. The news Titus had brought him from Corinth was better than he might have expected. His reproof had been received with meekness and the church had purged itself and had obeyed his instructions. He was now able to visit it in peace, and he stayed with the mentators some trouble. It did mean that Paul was already bound in which compelled him to go. It was a constraint of conscience, a conviction he ought to go, and Paul was not to be deterred from doing a duty dangers he might encounter. Let his spirit. When he was summoned appear before the Emperor at the Worms, his friends begged him not to go and warned him that his life in the Diet were powerful and perilous. His reply was: "If there are many devils in Worms as there are in the houstops, I would go."

Neither count I my life dear unto Eliot, the apostle to the Indians, frequently threatened with death due to work; but he never faltered. "Alas," he said, "is for God. I am ready for doing it. It is for God to take my life. When he has no further use of me, I may fall and I am quite sure that it should be so; but all the while in the country cannot kill me till it is done." The Sachems sent threaten him, but he replied: "I am of them. Tell those who sent you I am under the protection of Almighty God and I shall go on with my work, any fear of what man can do to me men stared at him in amazement, courage and went away without him violence.

I have not shunned to declare The late Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston to draw a picture which was alike to ministers who fear to offend hearers, and to hearers who are by preachers who warn them of the consequences of their sins. It was to minister at the gate of heaven.

his hearers sees him and begs him to go for his admission, reminded of his wife and of his neglect of Christ. "Why was I warned?" the hearer said. "I did warn you, I with you but you would listen, your mind of other things and sent my faithful plies the minister hearer had to acknowledge that it was so. I would have been reproach of the man he had been unable to the man to witness had been faithful!

Which is able to do up. The Apostle who have proved true, Bowery Mission of New York night men stand up and testify so. One night a gentleman was and evidently a man of education. "My failing is drink. I lost my through my drunken habits. I wife and children and for their sake of my venerable father's heart was broken by seeing his son going down to a drunkard's struggle with all my might to Again and again I signed the plea to break it when the terrible th upon me. I got down to the last and was doing any kind of work to earn a few pennies to with. All my family had lost as I had of myself, when one winter I came into this room to keep warm. I heard the word, 'power.' That I knew I wanted, and I listened, that the power of God would be any one who sincerely desired and would trust God's promise power of God! Yes that was what I ed. Nothing less than that would that might. Could I have it? I assured that I could, and I heard a meeting say that they had obtained believed and I want to-night to testimony to theirs. It does sound keeps. I have never touched of liquor since that night. My of failed, all the good motives I of failed, but the power of God.

Ye ought to support the weak. spending his vacation among in tains saw a shepherd set out to find a stray sheep. He was hours and came home very tired in having found it. "It was says the pastor, 'I shall never may I always seek Christ's wand

THE PRESENT APPEARANCE OF MILETUS.

Corinthian converts three months. He had, as we saw in a former lesson, been careful to make collections in all the churches for the poor brethren at Jerusalem, and he proposed to take the money to them at the Feast of Pentecost. Apparently at the last moment, a Jewish plot against his life was discovered, and he threw his enemies off his track he set out northward by land to Philippi. His companions, who were going with him to Jerusalem, went by sea to Troas, where they were to wait for Paul. Leaving Philippi by ship, Luke apparently having joined him as shown by the reappearance of the pronoun "we," they sailed down the eastern side of the Aegean sea, the vessel, probably a trader, calling at various ports. At Troas a stay of seven days was made, and a service was held. The incidental remark that "on the first day of the week when the disciples came together to break bread," is valuable in these days when people are asking when the change of the day of rest from Saturday to Sunday was made. Evidently in Paul's time it was on the first day of the week that the people met together to celebrate the Lord's Supper and to praise and pray. From Troas Paul walked twenty miles to Assos, and there rejoined the ship which went on from Troas without him. The voyage was continued in a southerly direction to Miletus. Paul apparently was unwilling to risk a journey thence to Ephesus, lest he should not be back before the ship sailed. But, anxious to communicate with the church there, he sent for a deputation to come to Miletus and talk with him. When the leaders arrived, he gave them the address which is the subject of the lesson.

Bound in the Spirit. This is a peculiar expression which has given the com-

THE MODERN JEW IN HIS ANCESTRAL HOME

BY HON. SELAH MERRILL D.D. L.L.D.

THE STREETS OF JERUSALEM.

here Nationalities Mingle—Narrow and Awkward Thoroughfares, Where Animals have Equal Rights with Pedestrians—Jerusalem Crowds.

HAL our visit to the streets of Jerusalem be a pleasure trip? Pictures of trees, flowers, parks with groups of people sitting or strolling here or there, dingy or dark, suggests the haunts of wild beasts, rather than the abodes of human beings. This labyrinth of thoroughfares, crossing and recrossing each other everywhere seems perfectly natural and familiar to the residents of Jerusalem, and they laugh at the idea of a person being lost in the city.

The houses of Jerusalem have no numbers; that would interfere with the indefiniteness of which Orientals are masters. If you ask an Arab for a certain place, he never points to it, nor in its direction; he will sweep his extended hand and arm over at least a quarter of the circle, and say as he does so, "it is over that way."

Of course no vehicle is seen in the streets of Jerusalem,* the streets were not made for such a purpose. As will be seen from the facts just stated these streets are entirely too narrow for a wagon to enter them. Even could wagons enter, they could not turn into another street because the angles are so sharp, nor could they return by the way they entered.

Formerly very few of the streets were paved, and those only with rough stones over which it was difficult to walk. Those not paved were deep with filth. In recent years the "principal" streets have been paved with small blocks quarried in the vicinity of Jerusalem, and are not now so objectionable or uncomfortable as before. It is almost needless to say that the streets have no sidewalks. The doors of posed or expected to step up into the store. He is thus exposed to two dangers, to be run over by animals passing in the street, and to be cheated by the shopkeeper. The size of shop here described is the general rule, to which there are a few exceptions.

If the question is asked why Jerusalem was built in this way, that is with such narrow streets, the reply is that this is the rule in all Oriental cities. The streets were not made to accommodate traffic and travel, but to keep out enemies. Another noticeable feature in an Oriental city is the fact that against the second story of the house, where they have a second story, balconies are built out over the street. The roof or house tops all being flat, soldiers have always found it difficult to penetrate into the streets of a city, since from the projecting balconies and the flat roofs the inhabitants had every advantage for defence. Many facts in illustration of this are on record.

Ibrahim Pasha once sent a company of brave troops into one of the villages south of Damascus, and not a man of them returned. Even the veterans of Titus, in A. D. 70, when they had broken the second wall and entered Jerusalem, were driven out again by the Jews who swarmed on the house-tops and threw down stones and other missiles upon their foes until they were forced to retreat.

What American does not take pleasure in walking about one of our large cities at night? Broad streets amply lighted everywhere, lavish displays in the windows, gay and happy people moving in all directions, everything attractive and delightful. On the contrary, the streets of an Oriental city at night are deserted. They are given up to hungry, prowling dogs, while possibly here and there a dull oil lamp relieves only to intensify the gloom. Perhaps nothing illustrates in a more striking degree the difference between Oriental and Occidental life than the streets of Jerusalem.

independence. Just the opposite is true. With his great ears falling back, his long neck drooping a little as though the enormous head it supports were too heavy for it, he comes straight toward you. You give him a push with both your hands, but he is stronger than you and will not budge. You must stand aside or be knocked down. If you have a walking-stick you try it on the next one you encounter. You hit him a smart blow or two over the head, round to one side goes that neck like a swinging wooden gate, but his body never deviates from a straight line. When you meet a camel or a donkey some one turns out, but it is neither the camel nor the donkey. How is it with the poor dogs? You step over them, maybe tread on them, but their right to the street is the same as yours and only force compels them to turn aside.

A STREET WHERE CARRIAGES ARE ALLOWED.

How shall we describe the multitudes of men and women whom we encounter everywhere? We cannot help noticing the Babel of tongues. On the day of Pentecost (Acts 11), the fact of fifteen different languages or distinct dialects being spoken made the occasion a memorable one; but at one time I counted nearly forty different languages that were then spoken in the Holy City, and of these it is inevitable that a large number would be heard in the streets, shops, and market places of Jerusalem.

The crowd is a promiscuous one: animals, children, women, and men. To a stranger the greatest confusion seems to prevail; yet a sort of wild order controls its movements. Every man claims the street as his own and he acts accordingly, doing what appears to us the strangest things; at the same time he admits that it belongs equally to every other individually. The crowd is not a turbulent one. It is certainly rough, but it jostles without violence.

This crowd, however, slow and apparently passive, can at times become a desperate mob, as lawless as wild beasts. Those who have witnessed the wild, savage, not to say shocking scenes connected with the Greek Fire in the Holy Sepulchre, know too well the truth of my remark.

This generally easy-going crowd, sluggish as it seems to us, that will not stir from the path unless pushed out of the way, is not wholly asleep or indifferent, for the instant the approach is announced of an official, the Governor, some consul, or some distinguished visitor who is preceded by an official guard, everybody is on the alert; men rise up from their benches or coffee-shop chairs; the crowd becomes elastic and opens a wide path of its own accord and the transformation that takes place for a moment or two in peasants, shopkeepers, camel drivers, loungers, and even beggars is simply wonderful. There is attention and quietness; deference is thus paid to the person of position or rank who happens to be passing by.

SELAH MERRILL.

CROWDED JERUSALEM STREET.

en fountains, sidewalks, beautiful elegant shop-windows full of the carriages, ladies leading small boys, by-wagons and pretty dogs, must be banished from our minds, for we shall find nothing of the kind. These things do not exist. In their places we shall find a very crowded with interesting scenes and objects which no doubt amuse us and gratify our curiosity. We find ourselves in one of the strangest places we have ever visited. Centuries ago the enthusiasts called the city the "centre of the world," and we shall discover that this is a large basis of this assertion, for people from the ends of the earth, and the motley of strange dresses, different customs, the unfamiliar faces, the features of women in such endless variety, will occupy our eyes to the fullest extent.

First we must take a bird's-eye view of the city which we are about to visit. It is a small city, a distance across it being only about half a mile north to south, and the same from east to west. It contains a little more than one hundred acres. If, for example, we take some city which very many of our readers know, Central Park in New York, we find it contains eight hundred and thirty acres, and consequently is four times the size of Jerusalem. Central Park has one hundred carriage roads, six miles of paths, and thirty miles of foot paths. Jerusalem has about ten miles of streets, counting every alley where men and women go. Streets, lanes, alleys, courts, and passages, covered ways, all of them narrow, and filthy, most of them the shops (all stores are called "shops") and of the houses as well, are one and in many instances two feet above the street, and as the shops are very small, a person must stand outside (that is in the street) and make his purchases. He is not sup-

JERUSALEM LOOKING SOUTHWEST FROM NEAR THE DAMASCUS GATE.

*NOTE.—This was true until within a very few years, but now carriages are allowed to enter by the Jaffa Gate and go as far as the Barracks and the English church, a distance of two hundred yards, or to the Armenian Convent, which is one hundred yards further; and they also enter the Damascus Gate and with great difficulty go a short distance to the Court House.

plem and those of Boston or New York when compared at night.

In the streets of Jerusalem animals and men seem to have equal rights. Of what other place on the globe could this be said? You meet a camel, a donkey, or a dog, and naturally expect that they will turn out especially if you shake your stick at them. Not so; the camel stalks on majestically, jostling aside men and women as indifferently as though they were so many flies. But the little donkey surely will be afraid to assume such a degree of

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.
T. DE WITT TAINEGE
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON.
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadian and Mexican foreign postage is at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers nor to make good omissions caused by early errors.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date of your subscription is renewed. Expression of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald will not be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City

Entered at the Post-office at New York as Second-class Matter

Our Relief Work in India.

UNDER Divine blessing, the generosity of those who aided in establishing THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund for India is being made instrumental in "bringing events to pass." A number of letters from our missionary distributors reaches us by every India mail, every letter full of rejoicing that the writer has been permitted to share in this grand relief work, which has already saved many thousands of lives.

From our esteemed contemporary, The Indian Witness (issued weekly by the Methodist Publishing House, Calcutta), we reprint the following, as illustrating the general feeling among the missionaries:

Pursuant to notice, a meeting of missionaries, representing no less than fifteen different societies, took place at Jabalpur on Thursday the 15th inst., to distribute the large sum of money sent out for famine relief by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York. Bishop Thoburn presided, and the Rev. E. S. Hume of Bombay acted as secretary. Seventeen missionaries were present, all of whom, except three, were there as representatives of one or more Societies. Several others were represented by letters. Rs. 1,00,000 (about $33,000) was distributed, and the whole amount was paid out by check before the adjournment of the meeting. It would be saying too little to remark that the utmost harmony prevailed. From the very outset it was noted that a very unusual degree of fraternal love and deep Christian sympathy was manifest on every side. The only contest which took place was the frequent effort manifested by brethren to sacrifice their claims in favor of others who were more needy.

Much more has been accomplished since the foregoing was printed in India, a month ago. Other meetings have been held and large sums apportioned from the Fund; the Christian Herald of New York has been distributed and widespread relief has been given to multitudes of the perishing natives. God has blessed the work amazingly, and it has far exceeded all expectations, and the blessing will be abundant in proportion.

Persecution of the Jews.

WE have no sympathy with the slang about the "Jew." We read and hear it on all sides. "Stingy as a Jew," "sharp as a Jew," "Jewed out of it." We have seen as much of the world as most people, and we testify that the Gentile is no better than the Jew. No better in morals. The Gentiles are in vast majority in Sing Sing and in the Tombs, and on Blackwell's Island. The Gentiles are no better in providence and forethought. They are in large majorities in the alms-houses and poor-farms. They are no better in the profession of the law. Moses, the greatest lawyer the world ever saw was a Jew. The Gentiles are no better in banking. The Rothschilds are Jews. The Gentiles are no better in military life. Joshua, the mention of whose name makes every man's heart beat a half dozen extra strokes, was a Jew. The Gentiles are no better statesmen. Disraeli was a Jew. The Gentiles are no better theologians. The Lord Jesus Christ was a Jew. But you say: "that race are physically inferior to our race." How so? "Oh!" you say, "they are smaller in stature." But what makes you think that six feet is a better height for the human race than five feet? Did you Englishmen ever hear of little Wellington? Did you Frenchmen ever hear of little Napoleon? There are a great many tall fools! A crane is taller than a dove, yet who prefers a crane? But you say: "their features are not so attractive as those of the Gentile." Who decreed that the nostril curved downward is any worse than the nostril curved upward? But you say: "they wear flashy jewelry and are uncleanly in their habits, and smoke cigars on the verandah." What a charge to be made by this smoking, spitting, cadaverous Gentile nation! One half of our young men are smoking themselves to death. I have been told that down at Coney Island on one Sabbath when the sleighing was good, there were seven hundred cigars sold at one counter in one day. Attached to all railroad trains we have a floating pig-sty called the "Gentlemen's Smoking-car," and as to the "Gentlemen's Cabin" in our ferry-boats, ha! ha! I think that most of the smoke belongs to the new dispensation. Even ministers of the Gospel who say that the Gentiles are superior to the Jews—even ministers of the Gospel smoke. Some of them smoke until their nerves are all gone. Some of them smoke themselves into the grave, and we go out to Greenwood and see beautiful inscriptions on their tombstones: "Died of overwork in the Lord's service," when if we told the truth we would say, "tobacco killed them." In one denomination of Christians I was told a man was not considered orthodox if he did not smoke.

There are many Gentiles who cannot pay their rent nor get healthy food and decent garments for their children, who smoke. There is a family which does not send the children to school because the children are not well enough dressed; but the father smokes. He thinks he is smoking tobacco. He is smoking up the worldly prospects and the immortal souls of his children. Yet that man asks for help. Great men are we, the smoking Gentiles, to criticize the smoking Jews. But they are not cleanly, people say. I answer that the weak point of the Gentiles is not washing too much! To see some men in our cities you would not think they lived so near the East River and the Potomac and the Atlantic ocean. Go into your city court room after there has been a trial for a long time on, or into the hall where there is a good Democratic convention or a rousing Republican meeting, and tell me if that atmosphere is all Jewish malodor. Go into one of those first-rate Republican or Democratic halls after the meeting has been in session two hours and make a chemical analysis of the atmosphere, and you will find that the atmosphere consists of ten parts: five whiskey, three garlic, one cologne, one oxygen.

I have baptized by immersion men who were woefully in lack of physical ablution, and been tempted to leave them in the tank. The Gentile race had better take a very large dose of soap before it denounces the Jew for the appearance of his knuckles. But you say: "they wear such flashy jewelry." That is not peculiar to Jews. The American nation is covered up with it. There are factories going day and night manufacturing pearl breast-pins and cameo finger-rings and amethystine ear-drops and solitaires by the quart. Why, you can get a "gold" watch for three dollars and a-half they say, on Chatham street. The Jews sell them, but the Gentiles buy them! And young men there are in our cities, on five hundred dollars a year salaries, who have glittering gold chains from the button-hole of the vest clear to the watch-pocket. Heaven deliver this country from this ocean of pinchbeck jewelry. As you cannot make out these things peculiar to the Jews, I repeat my first proposition. The Gentile is no better than the Jew.

"Oh!" you say — and I heard it stated in one of the pulpits last summer—"the Jews are condemned to be a hissing and a by-word among all nations, and it is only a fulfillment of prophecy." Ah! the city of Jerusalem was prophesied to be destroyed. Was that any excuse for the ministers? It was prophesied long before that Jesus Christ should be slain. Was that an excuse for his murderers?

The Favorite People.

AFTER writing the above editorial concerning the persecution of the Jews and intimating that a Gentile is no better than a Jew, I must remark that a Jew is no better than a Gentile. There is a good deal of religious bosh about the Jews being God's favorite people. They once were. They are not now. God gave especial advantages and bent over them with especial love; but they struck him hard in the face. The greatest crime of the universe and of the ages was committed by them. They slew Christ. You tell me that the Jews are God's favorite people because he is evidently going to take them all back to Palestine. I believe that many of that race will go back there. There are many things pointing that way; among them the fact that no nation has been able to get permanent possession of Jerusalem. The Romans tried it and failed; the Persians tried it and failed; the Saracens tried it and failed; the Egyptians, and failed; the Mamelukes, and failed; the Turks, and they will fail. It seems as if it is being kept for the Jews, I admit. Does that prove they are God's favorite people? Oh, you say, it is a land of figs, and olives, and pomegranates, and almond trees and wonderful skies. But the Englishman would rather stay in England, and the Italian in Italy, and the Frenchman in France, and the American in the United States. The fact that God is going to take them back to Jerusalem does not prove that they are his favorites any more than when we are in Europe and the Lord brings us safely home, that fact proves we are his favorites. I should a great deal prefer Washington to Jerusalem. The Jews once were God's favorite people, but not now. Jew and Gentile, and all the other races are in the sight of the Gospel equal. One law by which to be tried. One throne of judgment to announce approval or condemnation.

Oh, what a grand thing in this country that there is no governmental patronage for any church, so that Jew and Gentile, Protestant and Catholic, stand on the same platform; and while there is no Roman Catholic blood in my veins, I declare that if the time should come when the humblest Roman Catholic should be assaulted because of his attempt to worship God in his own way, there is not a Protestant in the United States worthy of the name, who would not shoulder his musket and march out to the defence of the cathedrals and the convents! If you have a right to throw stones at Roman Catholicism, then Roman Catholicism has a right to throw stones at you.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those who are sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

BRIEF NOTES.

There are now upwards of 21,000 Hope and other juvenile temperance societies, 3,500,000 members. The Band of Hope will be celebrated in November.

A Sunday School Superintendent is being confined to his home by an accident. Arrangements promptly made to perform his duties. By means of telephone and megaphone, he opened and closed the school from his chamber.

The Victorian (Australia) Baptist, instituted in 1884, under which it was raised $100,000 for a training college, a church and building fund, a sustentation fund, a hospital fund, has passed its expectations raised $320,636.

The Emperor of China has conferred Imperial Order of the Double Dragon on B. C. Atterbury, M. D., one of the American missionaries in China, in recognition of his medical services to the Chinese soldiers during the late war with Japan.

Christian work in the Klondike being done by the Protestant Episcopal Missions as well as by the Presbyterian described in this journal last week. Dr. a medical missionary has his headquarters in City and Bishop Rowe is moving to the same place.

Dr. Andrew D. White, United States Ambassador to Germany, says concerning alcohol by brain workers: "I can conceive of no worse preparation for literary work than the use of alcoholic stimulants. My opinion is that among literary men worthy of the name, the increasing, but, on the contrary, is diminishing."

Dr. John B. Wood, President of the Children's Rest at Merchantville, requests the prayers of God's people that they may contribute to the heating apparatus and basement for winter playroom, etc., may be by the Lord's children, who can spare those purposes.

The report of the English Bible Missionary Society shows that it has, at present, 134 missionaries, 747 local preachers, 103 preaching places, 11,868 full members on trial, 403 juvenile members, and 24,054 pupils, an increase in nearly every department.

A correspondent in Nebraska that the Evangelists Byron Beall, of Fort Union, N. D., and his wife, are being much needed in their revival services. They have worked in several towns, and over two hundred people have made profession of faith. "They are a most spirit, and anxious to reach the whole country with saving influences."

Dr. R. S. Storrs has decided to resign the presidency of the American Board of Foreign Missions. He assigns as his reason that he is six years of age, and having given to the service, he is entitled to relief. His decision causes general regret. His influence is very happy one, and the results of his labors have been exceedingly beneficial.

The difficulty of translating the Korean is increased by the peculiarity of the country. As illustrations of the difficulties J. S. Gale mentions the fact that the Korean word for bread, therefore would not understand a statement that He is the bread of life; never seen a sheep, would not know him meant by saying "I am the good shepherd."

The latest report of the American Bible Missionary Union shows that it has at present missionary stations in Asia, which include China, Japan, Burma, Assam, and India. It has 1,026 out-stations, 4,000 missionaries, 1,105 native preachers, 500 Bible workers, 853 churches, 524 of which are supported; and 99,504 members of native churches.

A novel reason for not contributing to Missions was given recently by a New Englander, as reported by a Baptist. When the collector for her mission asked her for a contribution she answered: "I have nothing to give for foreign missions. I am thinking over this whole question, and I like to have you tell me what the best ever done for me."

Miss Jane Addams, Chief Work of Hull House, in Chicago, and one of the eminent settlement workers in the United States, has been appointed post-mistress of the station to be located in the house. She did not seek the work, but finding acceptance will be an advantage to her friends, she has entered Uncle Sam's list. It will not curtail her settlement work.

According to the Lutheran Almanac Year-Book, the total membership of the Church in the United States in 1896 was 1,428,693 communicants, against 949,000 in 1886, a gain of just about half a million in the ten years. Of the four general bodies into which the divided, the General Synod is the second, having 200,000 communicants. The last Synodical Conference with 450,000.

Mr. S. C. K. Rutnam, M. A., is a few weeks in New York before returning to work in India. He is giving lectures on Ceylon, illustrated with stereoscopic photographs showing native costumes, etc. Any Christian who wishes to learn the actual life in India from the lips of an intelligent native, should address him at 40 East Twenty-Third Street, New York City.

The Evangelical Lutheran Mission Society of Leipzig, Germany, represents India, among the Tamils, as prospering. Last year of nearly 1,000 souls were won from the heathen. The missionaries among the higher classes have received their education in the neutral European schools, is greatly hindered and disturbing revival of Hinduism, set on foot by Kananda Swami.

The National Woman's Christian Union will hold its twenty-fourth convention in Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 29th to Nov. 1st. It is expected that the proceedings will be unusually interesting character. Many of the workers from the World's Convention held at Toronto in October are expected to attend. Among these, Lady Henry Somerset is prominent. She has accepted an invitation to read a convention sermon.

AND THE NEWSPAPER

A Brooklyn lawyer has received a mysterious commission from a lady in France. She believes that her parents are in America, and she wants the lawyer to find them for her, and offers him a thousand francs ($200) if he succeeds. Her story is a romantic one. She writes that for about eleven years she has been living in France with a man whom she believed to be her father. He was a wealthy ship-builder and broker, and he lavished large sums on her education and her general comfort. He died recently, leaving her in his will the bulk of his property. A short time before his death he made a startling disclosure to her. He said that she was not his child, but the daughter of his brother. This brother formerly lived in France. He became engaged to a lady there whom he was anxious to marry. But some difficulties arose, and finally the pair eloped from France and came to America. After their marriage they settled in Brooklyn, where the child was born. When she was four or five years old her father's brother paid them a visit. He grew very fond of his little niece, and of them, looking around the base of the cliff for mechanical help, found a stout hickory pole, which he applied as a lever. The girl cried in agony as the boulder yielded. She begged them to desist, as the stone seemed to be grinding her ankle to pieces. It was no time to hesitate: another effort and the big stone rolled off the ledge and she was free, but her ankle was broken by the movement. She was carried away half-fainting with the pain but thankful that her life was spared. Under other circumstances they would have waited until they could move the boulder without causing her so painful an injury; but in that emergency it was better that the ankle should be broken, than that she should be drowned. There come times like that in the moral life, when a man who would seek safety in Christ is held back by some besetting sin, or by some sinful connection which he shrinks from severing. He has to suffer great pain or lose his soul.

CZAR NICHOLAS II.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. (Matt. 5: 30.)

Chicago Menaced.

A remarkable prediction was made at the recent meeting in Detroit, Mich., of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Prof. Spencer, Prof. Gilbert and others called attention to an ominous phenomenon in connection with the lakes, which eventually would bring about the destruction of Chicago, Detroit and other cities. Prof. Spencer demonstrated by figures that at one time the Erie Basin emptied, not by the Niagara River, but by a buried valley, directly into the head of Lake Ontario, and that Niagara River and Falls were modern features. He also showed that the gorge near the Falls was eating its way backward at the rate of over a foot a year, and that in the course of a few lifetimes it would wipe itself out. There was, he said, clear proof that the earth's crust was being gradually tilted upward, which accounted for the closing of the Ontario basin. He showed by numerous data that a perceptible change was going on in the shore line of the lakes, which was independent evidence of the tilting process, the ultimate end of which must be the pouring of the water of the lakes to the Mississippi, over the low plain on which Chicago now stands. It is some consolation to property-owners in the city, that, according to the same authority, the final catastrophe will not occur before 457, if the present rate of progress is not accelerated. No one will be troubled about a catastrophe so far in the future. Even that universal catastrophe, the coming of which is predicted by inspired men, when the earth shall be burned and the elements will melt with fervent heat and every mountain and hill will be shaken out of their places, near as it may be is not dreaded. The solemn warning of its coming, though uttered by an apostle, does not move people to provide for their safety, though all will be involved in it who have not made such provision.

Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness. (11. Peter 3:11) who have left their Heavenly Father for the sake of worldly advantage.

If thou seek him, he will be found of thee.
(1. Chron. 28:9.)

Pinioned Under Water.

A singular accident nearly caused the death of a young lady of Bayonne, N. J., a few days ago. She and her brother were getting crabs at a place known as the Cove, when the young lady's foot slipped and she fell into the water, which at that place is ten feet deep. Her brother went to her assistance and together they swam to a they swam to a place where they knew there was a ledge which is only four feet below the surface at high water. They reached the ledge and stood upon it in comparative safety. The next problem was how to reach the top of the cliff, which is nearly perpendicular. The brother decided to climb it and procure a rope with which to haul up his sister. Near the top, a huge boulder projected fully two feet over the side of the cliff. It was loose, but it had been so as far back as any one can remember, and its flat surface has for generations been a favorite roosting-place for the loys on their fishing excursions.

ions. The young man, when near the top, clasped the projecting end of the boulder to draw himself up. His weight caused it to overbalance and it fell. The young man cleverly escaped falling under it, but a cry of pain from his sister told him that the boulder had struck her. He swam to the ledge where she had been standing and found that she had been brought to her knees by the blow, and that the boul-

THE RUSSIAN IMPERIAL PALACE OF PETERHOF.

President on his return as would the national appreciation of the agreement which had been consummated during his visit. There is good reason for believing that the terms of the treaty will prove that Russia has no intention of helping France to regain her provinces, but the alliance is nevertheless an ominous fact, which Germany will have to take into account. In Eng-one day when she went out for a walk with him he took her on board a steamer and returned to France. Whether her parents took any steps to recover possession of her the girl does not know. She was carefully educated and had every luxury that money could buy. She forgot all about her parents, and regarded as her father the man who now proves to have been her uncle. His death-bed

LOSING AND FINDING LIFE.

The Richer and Fuller Life that Springs from a Life Consecrated to Christ. John 12: 1-8; 20-26.

Before we can understand Christ's meaning in his apparent paradox, we must find out what he meant by the word, life. What is it that we seek and losing, find?

The word life, even in humanity, is manifold in its meaning. We say that a man has lost his life, when he is run over in the street and his body is crushed under the wheels of a wagon. That is the physical life which sooner or later we must lose. There is intellectual life that may be lost. But it is the loss of spiritual life that is most disastrous. A man who gives his life to business, or to politics, or to pleasure, and gives no thought to God and has no desire to receive from him the blessings he is ready to impart, is flinging his life away. Thus there are many senses in which life may be lost.

But Christ sets a new principle before us. There is a sense in which he that loseth his life shall find it. He compares life to a grain of corn. There are two ways of dealing with the corn. One is to store it or eat it, thus getting present or future gratification from it. The other is to put it in the ground, where it is lost to sight and will die, but from its death will come new life, in great abundance. If it is possible to lose our lives as the corn is lost, that loss is gain. It was Christ's method with his own life. His followers hoped to make him a temporal king, but even if he had attained the grandeur of Solomon, his glory would have been infinitely less than he reached by the way he chose. Through his death multitudes, in ever-increasing progression, have come to new life. His followers are to tread in his steps. They may not go to a violent and premature death, but they must hold their lives less dear than their service.

We know that this principle applies in national and social life. A man may so put his energies into enterprises and movements that we say he puts his life into them, and these movements may go on growing long after his physical life has been extinguished. Looking at Cooper Union in New York, and seeing how young men and women toiling through the day for their daily bread, go to that institution in the evening and find there the books and appliances and teachers that they need for their mental development, we see how Peter Cooper's life is perpetuated. The institution which was his darling project, on which he lavished his best thought, his money and his labor, lives on, and in its beneficence perpetuates the essence of its founder's life. It is so with books. It does not seem that Thomas Carlyle is dead, when his thrilling words are forming the characters of men. It is so in national affairs. The Pilgrim Fathers, and later, Washington and his colleagues, started influences which pulsate in our national veins to this day. Their lives are still extending. So it was with religious leaders. Who can say that Luther and Knox and Wesley and Beecher and Phillips Brooks and Drummond are dead, when the work into which they put their lives is operating still. The world's benefactors won their laurels by self-sacrifice. They gave up ease and luxury and peace and quiet, that they might make life better for future generations. They lost their lives, in so far as their enjoyment of them consisted, but they won an immortality which will endure while the world lasts. This principle of losing life to find it, is familiar to us.

The same principle may be applied in the most humble spheres. He who is ready to render service who is ready to give up enjoyment that he may help some one who needs it will lose his life in the glorious future. Opportunities come to all. The daughter who gives up her pleasure to help her tired mother with her work, the man who leaves his comfortable home at the evening that he may speak a word for Christ to the lost way; the Christian who in any way comes himself and sacrifices his own inclinations that he may help another is losing his life, but will find it to life eternal.

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

The Shepherd True.

"I am the good shepherd."—JOHN 10: 14.

F. W. FABER.

GEO. C. STEBBINS.

1. I was wand'ring, sad and wea - ry, When the Sav - iour came un - to me;
2. At first I would not heark - en, But put off till the mor - row,
3. At first I stopped to list - en— His voice could ne'er de - ceive me—
4. I thought His love would weaken As more and more He knew me,

For the paths of sin were drear - y, And the world had ceased to woo me;
Till life be - gan to dark - en, And I grew sick with sor - row;
I saw His kind eye glist - en, So anx - ious to re - lieve me;
But it burn - eth like a hea - con, And its light and heat go thro' me;

And I thought I heard Him say, As He came a - long His way—
Then I thought I heard Him say, As He came a - long His way—
Then I knew I heard Him say, As He came a - long His way—
And I ev - er hear Him say, As He goes a - long His way—

REFRAIN.

Wand'ring souls, O do come near Me; My sheep should nev - er fear Me;

I am the Shep - herd true, I am the Shep - herd true.

Copyright, 1896, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From the new book "SACRED SONGS NO. 1." By per. of The Biglow & Main Co.

RETURNING.

LORD, where thy mansions fair may be
Hast thou a little room for me,
Whose restless feet these many days,
By dark forbidden paths have trod,
And, wandering in uncertain ways,
Have missed the way that leads to God?
Lord, is there any room for me
Who, sorrowing, would return to thee?

Far have I strayed, still tossed about
On fears that would not be cast out
For all the subtle theories
That men have framed, wherein to find
For troubled hearts a doubtful ease,
And freedom for a wilful mind:
Thy word, once hidden in my breast,
Forever robbed the night of rest.

I know not, verily; and yet,
With doubts perplexed and fears beset,
And the sad heart unsatisfied,
Lord, I remember what sweet rest
I did discover at thy side;
With yearnings not to be expressed
I long to walk once more with thee;
Lord, hast thou any room for me?

MARY E. BRADLEY.

COME TO JESUS NOW.

Behold now is the day of salvation. 11. Cor. 6:2.

SINNER, hear his pleading voice,
Come to Jesus now.
Make of him your final choice,
Come to Jesus now.
Seek him, while he still is near,
Only ask him, never fear;
He will quickly, gladly hear,
Come to Jesus now.

Wait not 'till you older grow,
Come to Jesus now.
Future days you may not know,
Come to Jesus now.
Oh! He is so meek and mild;
What although you have been wild,
Come and be his loving child,
Come to Jesus now.

Come and give to him thy heart,
Come to Jesus now;
Peace and pardon he'll impart,
Come to Jesus now.
See the gentle Saviour stand,
With his outstretched, pleading hand;
Heed, oh, heed the kind command!
Come to Jesus now.

Saville, N. J.

MRS. DELL B. SMITH.

THE BUDDING FIG-TREE.

The Conference of Jews at Basle in Sign of the Approaching End of the Gentiles.*

HE restoration of the Jews to their own land, of the signs by which they were to be recognized, of the closing dispensation, it is significant that the Conference has been called assemble at Basle in Switzerland, composed of Jews, to discuss the means of settlement in Palestine, origin of this Conference is very interesting. Some forty years ago two rabbis—one in Galicia, the other where in Russia—conceived the idea of promoting Jewish Agricultural Holy Land. Their object was religious and philanthropic. It was God-pleasing work, they thought, the sons of the ancient race pre-sacred soil of their ancestral land, new settlement of the Jews—Messiah will come sooner or later to establish a Jewish kingdom. This, the Jewish community of Palestine live mostly on the charity which brethren of other lands send, which is called "halukkah," and culture and industry are lacking among them, their moral and status must be raised. This was appreciated by Jewish philanthropists. "Zionist" societies were established in various communities in Europe. The Rothschilds established an agricultural school in Palestine, bought lands to plant new colonies. The late Sir Moses Montefiore shared the work and so did other Jews on a small scale.

But, strange to say, the movement was greatly opposed and hampered by the step by the Palestine Jews themselves, who were afraid that their "halukkah" the alms whereon they live, would be diminished in a measure as it was to be encouraged.

With the rise of anti-Semitism in Germany under the leadership of Court chaplain, Stocker, the movement took a new start. They considered strangers in the land, said the religious Jews; "despite ancient rights as natives of the land, our privileges are begrudged us. Then, let us try to re-people our land, then the Messiah will soon come to fulfil the prophecies of the Bible. Something like this was the thought among the pious Jews and Zionist societies were established in Germany, Russia, Holland, Italy, Austria—everywhere. They assumed a decidedly nationalistic form. Despite much opposition, a number of Russian Jews settled in Palestine and formed agricultural colonies that are now prosperous. The success gave an impetus to the movement which will be discussed during the forthcoming Conference and which is now clearly "nationalistic."

The conception of a Jewish nationalization owes its origin to a Jewish and patriotic Russian Jew, who, in a Hebrew monthly magazine, acquired force and authority in the East. His name was Peretz Smolenski. Many years ago he begged that brethren would stop quarrelling over questions of religious observance, forming factions of various religious tendencies. They must make up their minds that they are a nation by virtue of historical vicissitudes, as well as by bonds of their common origin. His thought was crystallized into action by a brilliant Jewish journalist, Vienna, Dr. Theodor Herzl. He is not a strict observer of the Jewish law, but he believes in Jewish nationalization. About two years ago he published a pamphlet, "Der Judenstaat," advocating the establishment of an independent Jewish government in Palestine, on strictly political and financial principles, leaving religious matters out of the question. The lands must be acquired by purchase, and the government of the new, or rather the restored, state should be conducted by representatives elected by the people.

*From the August number of the "New York Times." May be had, price six cents. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE.

Along the Abyssinians.

Picturesque People of the East African Highland Kingdom.

ALTHOUGH the past year, the eyes of the world have at different times been fixed upon that strange and ancient race of Eastern Africa, the Abyssinians, in whose country remarkable changes are taking place. Habessinia, as called by the Arabs, or Itiopia, as the natives themselves designate it, is undoubtedly one of the most ancient of empires. Its monarchs claim to trace descent from Solomon, and its antiquity is fairly attested by records kept in the ancient city, Gondar. It is a part of ancient Ethiopia which many distinguished bible scholars identify with the Cush of Gen 2: 13 as one of the three sons of Eden. In its cities and villages there are many evidences of a high civilization having once prevailed, and the country is one that possesses special interest for the traveler and the student. Italy's recent abortive effort to establish colonies on Abyssinian soil, and the visit of Prince Henri of Orleans, have brought Menelek's kingdom to special prominence.

The photographs on this page represent the Abyssinians in their holiday dress. Their garments are a singular mixture of the dress of the North of Europe and the Orient, and to make the dress of any other people in Africa, except possibly the Arabs. The country is mountainous and in many places is very fertile, and most of the domestic animals of Europe thrive there. A majority of the people are clearly of the Caucasian race, their features somewhat resembling those of the Bedouin Arabs. The prevailing religion is a corrupted Christianity, some of the Abyssinians are Mohammedans and there is a strong admixture of Falashas or Jews in the population of the larger cities. Christianity was introduced early in the fourth century by Frumentius, bishop of Alexandria, but its forms and doctrines have become so intermingled with those of the native religions and so overgrown with superstitions that little of the original is left. The Abyssinian religion resembles Judaism in many respects. They keep the Jewish and the Christian Sabbath, they do not admit transubstantiation, they believe Christ was God only, and they practice an annual baptism. They fast often, worship the Virgin Mary, and abstain from the animals forbidden in the Jewish law. Morally, their condition is deplorable, divorces are frequent and polygamy is startlingly common. As a result there is little family affection. They have no images, but they worship the figures which they venerate. They have a great number of festivals and both eat and drink freely. Engaged in constant warfare, they hold human life very lightly, and the most cruel and treacherous of crimes is easily appeased.

There is a strong rivalry at the present time between France and England for the possession of Abyssinia, with a view to opening of new channels for trade. Whoever of the two secures the coveted empire, it will ultimately be the means of opening up and developing one of the most fertile regions of Africa to commerce and civilization.

berries, which is often the time when the nests are full of young birds. There were forty blue-birds, orioles, robins and brown-threshers which I counted lying under one tree. All had been shot that day by one man, because of his berries. A great many other farmers are doing the same thing every year. I hate to see a dead bird on a bonnet, but I dislike just as much to see them killed for sport or greed.

The blue-jay is the hawk among small birds, and preys upon their young, so I would like to see him exterminated, unless he could be persuaded to eat only English sparrows.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer, the eloquent pastor of the Tremont Temple, Boston, has also espoused the cause of the persecuted birds. He says:

How I have been paid in reading comments in the papers lately about the slaughter of birds! Is it not an awful comment on the loving-kindness of Christian hearts that the woods are robbed of their songsters that our girls may have a little extra decoration on their hats? Is it not a sad comment that we should convert our world into a songless world, that the white plume of the heron, the bright feathers of our sweetest songsters, or the plumes of some bird taken from it at nesting time, when you, by its destruction, kill its off-spring, may deck you, my daughters and sisters, in a little added finery? Every Chris-always found time to put beside our plates at breakfast, down to the story she had on hand to read in the evening, there was no intermission of her influence. She has always been and always will be my ideal of a mother, wife, and home-maker.

Another Word About Birds.

Mrs. S. E. F. of Hopkinton, Ia., has this kind word to say in behalf of the feathered songsters:

Much has been written about women wearing birds' feathers, but hardly one word in regard to men and boys killing them for sport, or to keep them from eating a few berries. There are many fruit farmers who kill hundreds of our lovely singers in the time of ripe tian woman ought to register a sacred vow that she will have nothing to do with this wholesale slaughter of these sweet "creatures of the air."

Loneliness in Old Age.

An incident is related of Bismarck which illustrates how the approach of old age makes us indifferent to things that were formerly enjoyed. To a recent visitor at his country home, the aged statesman said: "I feel weak and languid, but not ill. My illness is want of the joys of life. My existence is no longer of any use; I have no official duties, and what I see as an onlooker gives me no pleasure. Should I live longer it will still be the case. I feel lonely. I have lost my wife, and as regards my sons, they have their own business. With growing age I have also lost interest in agriculture and forestry. I rarely visit the fields and woods, since I can no longer ride and shoot and move about as I like. Little by little politics begins to tire me." Happy are they who, when old age isolates them from worldly enjoyments, can rest serenely in the knowledge of God's love and care. To such the lingering years seem like a calm, pre-

NOT OURS TO KEEP.*

[T]o a dream to-night;
As I fell asleep.
Oh! the touching sight
Makes me still to weep;
Of my little lad,
Gone to leave me sad,
Aye, the child I had,
But was not to keep.
As in Heaven high
I my child did seek,
There in train came by Children fair and meek,
Each in lily white,
With a lamp alight;
Each was clear to sight.
But they did not speak.
Then, a little sad,
Came my child in turn,
But the lamp he had,
Oh! it did not burn;
He, to clear my doubt,
Said, half turned about,
"Your tears put it out;
Mother, never mourn!"
—WILLIAM BARNES

Winter in the Klondike.

THERE is no family or social life in the Klondike region, practically speaking, nor can there be from the very nature of things. The few homes that have been established there are conducted under extreme difficulties and the women members especially, no matter how brave they may be, find little opportunity for the exercise of those qualities that go far toward making home life in moderate latitudes a thing of reality and substantial enjoyment. Mr. Philip C. Engel of the Northwest Mounted Police, after several years of service in that region, gives this realistic picture of life in the land of gold and glaciers:

"This winter season sets in in September and lasts till the following May. The temperature registers sixty and sixty-seven and did so the winter before last. Last winter was considered mild. And as to the stillness and the dry air, don't depend on them; I have seen it blow a hurricane when it registered over sixty degrees. You must stay in your shack or whatever shelter you have provided and burn wood all the time to keep life in you. Then there is the question of food. One must never expect fresh food the year round. In the brief but hot summer, it is true that vegetables might be grown, but there is no one to undertake this work. One must be content with canned stuff and the vital thing is to get enough of that. February is the month in which to start out. Of the many large parties who have just started for the Klondike, both from Canada and the United States, only a comparative few will ever reach their destination and the question is how will this few be received when they get there? If they are in any way deficient, and are likely to become a burden upon the miners, the latter will probably thrust them out."

Some years ago, a chaplain from an American vessel stated that he had at one time been on a surveying expedition into the Yukon district, and there found a large rock which contained enough gold to make him rich, if he could have taken it back with him. It was impossible to transport it, so he had to content himself with a few chips, and then walked off from a fortune. If we set our affections on the things of this world, we shall be doomed to disappointment, for their transitory character will in the end cause loss. There will, doubtless, be many of the Yukon gold-seekers who will see the riches of that land, but will not be able to share it. Sickness, privation, or death may intervene. In all such quests, however attractive, it is only the few who ultimately grasp the prize.

Costly Tea Things.

To those housewives who have a special fondness for nice tea sets, it may be interesting to know that the royal china in Buckingham and Windsor palaces is valued at little short of $2,000,000. One Sevres dessert service in the green drawing-room at Windsor is estimated at $400,000 and a set of great Rose du Barri vases in the corridors is valued at $250,000. There is another set of Sevres vases at Buckingham which would readily bring $150,000 if exposed for sale.

* From Our Children in Heaven, a beautiful little collection of poems on the death of children, compiled by Madison C. Peters, D.D., New York. These will afford much consolation to sorrowing parents. 64 pp.; cloth and gilt binding. Wm. B. Ewald Publishing Co., New York, publishers.

NATIVES OF ABYSSINIA IN HOLIDAY ATTIRE.

ceding the transition to a broader life and wider activities.

The Solemnity of Youth.

Viewed from a certain standpoint, youth, as the formative period, when character and destiny are being decided, is a very solemn part of life. "I believe it to be the most solemn time in the world," writes Rev. George Matheson, D.D., "more solemn than death. There is an analogy between youth and death. Both are beginnings, entering upon the unknown; but they are beginnings of a very different kind. In death I am passive; I am in the hands of One, and that One the highest. But in youth I am in the hands of three: I am between three currents—my brother, myself and God. And they are cross-currents; they are impelling different ways. Mine moves inward, my brother's moves outward, God's moves upward. Death is not a battlefield; I am a captive there; God is all in all. But youth is a battlefield, God is only one; my brother and I are the others, and there is likely to be strife. No wonder I am solemn before the burning bush of the morning."

Idle Home

The most perfect home I ever saw, wrote the poet, was a little house into the wilderness of those fires there went many things. A thousand dollars service, years living for father, mother, and the children. But the mother was the center of a home; her relations with the children were the most beautiful I ever seen; every inmate of the house continually looked into her face for the meaning of the day, and it always rang from the rosebud or clover leaf. In spite of her hard housework she

SWEET VOICES AT MONT-LAWN.

Little Tenement Guests at Our Children's Home who Love Music—Golden September Days.

"God is great and God is good,
And we thank Him for our food;
By His hand must all be fed,
Give us, Lord, our daily bread."

with the little waifs, whose lives they have been instrumental in cheering and brightening. Contributions in aid of the

A CORNER OF THE BIG DINING TENT AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOME.

TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY fresh young voices sang these lines of thanksgiving at table under the cool shade of the wide-spreading marquee tent at Mont-Lawn on Saturday last. It is the daily "grace" sung by our little tenement guests, before each meal, and it is well worth a trip to Our Children's Home to hear them sing it and watch their glowing, happy faces as they sit down to the well-filled table. So, at least, thought the sixty odd guests who had come from Brooklyn to visit Mont-Lawn and see for themselves how the little tenement waifs fared there. In the party were many ladies who are more or less actively engaged in Christian work, while among the gentlemen were Mr. C. C. Martin, Chief Engineer and Superintendent of the New York and Brooklyn Bridge, Messrs. Ferguson, McGee and Redfield, and many others, all well-known business men. There were also in the party several residents of Brisbane, Queensland, Australia. All were delighted with the Home and its little army of occupants. They watched the wee tenement lads and lasses frolicking about the lawn, and marching past to the pretty chapel; listened with surprise and pleasure to the singing, as, led by piano and violin, they made the "welkin ring" with popular and patriotic airs, and they were equally charmed with the kindergarten exercise, in which all the children are exceedingly clever. While in the chapel, Master Harold McGee, the soprano soloist, of Garden City, Cathedral sang for the children the beautiful solo, "The Holy City," the wee tenement lads listening with rapt attention to every liquid note, and fully appreciative of the exquisite singing. Then the march—a k to the tent, accompanied with perfect precision to the rattling of the drum, the whole followed by such a meal as only hungry, happy young tenement lads could tell you to.

As the day was so wonderfully bright and sunny, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD photographer seized the opportunity to take several large group pictures of the visitors and others of our children and their teachers. Some of these, including a photograph of the Home matron and staff, may appear in a future issue. We trust before the season closes to have the pleasure of greeting many more of our friends at Mont-Lawn, where visitors are always welcome. During the summer, many who have contributed to the support of the work, have paid the Home a visit and have spent several happy hours

Home should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, and will be promptly acknowledged in these columns. The following have been received during the week:

Prev ack'd $3,847.53	Wood, R H	75
C. L. V. Wayne	Golden Rule Soc. Dis-	50
Wilbur's bro's & sisters	patch	100
Lumberton	Friend, Downs	125
M. Conn	Ladies Aid Soc of Staf-	100
Sahr, Duluth	ford Grange	500
L. O. Duffenbacher	A Young	300
G. & J. Md	N. J. & C. K. Campbell	500
Mrs ERS, Frenchtown	— E Brunswick	300
L. T. Schults	Mother & dan, Morris	600
Mrs Schults	Paterston, Phila	200
Mrs M O Robbins, thro	Mrs L Smith	100
Mrs F E Griffin, thro	Lease, Mrs E G	100
Carroll Pratt Ward	Metgill, Mr & Mrs Wm	300
I. H. N. Mt Vernon	Jackson, Miss May	200
Mrs C J Walton	Friend, San Antonio	100
In memory of Mary J	Eisenhart, Eliz R	300
Smith	Boyd, Miss Ethie E	300
In memory of Baby	Friends, Ft more	100
Olive	Mrs Lizzie M. So Vass	200
Bessie Wood	Metgill, Providence	300
Jr Christian Endeav-	Turner, Mrs H G	300
or, Winthrop	Friend, Rochester	100
Jr E L. Minn Lake	MMW, So Britain	100
& Amber C Davis	— Allentown	100
X. Terrill	Darwin, Mrs J T	200
Hough, Mrs & dan	Throop, A Judson	300
Hyler, Annie	D. L. B. Columbus	300
IHS, Madison	Payne, Thos H	300
Howard, Mrs M J	Miller, Mrs M	300
Hedges, Miss	H. N. Rounoke	55
Wood, Wm W	Patch Daisy	20
	E. H. Merchantville	300

It Is True

That Hood's Sarsaparilla cures when all other medicines fail to do any good whatever. Being peculiar in combination, proportion and process Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses peculiar curative power. It absolutely and permanently cures all diseases originating in or promoted by impure blood. Remember

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills the best family cathartic and liver stimulant. 25c.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Most Durable and Decorative.

See a lot of all buildings. Numerous designs. Send for Catalogue.

H. S. NORTHROP. 33 Cherry St., New York

CHRISTMAS SOLICITORS

IS COMING WANTED FOR OUR 1897 set of Juveniles for the Holidays.

Our books from 9c to $1.25. Just right for the wee ones grown up folks. Our largest and handsomest. Easiest to read. Full lively pictures, many of them in rich colors. Bonanza for agents. Every buyer gets a present. Demand enormous. Commission 50 per cent. Credit given. Freight and Postage free. Write quick for outfit and territory. Dominion Co. Dept. 2, 356 Dearborn St. Chicago

Beardsley, Miss M	200	Little, Helen D B	100
Nesbitt, Mrs Madge	300	K D. McMasters Cors	60
Taggart, Mrs C C	300	Mr & Mrs W W Fair	200
Switzer, Mrs R S	200	banks	200
Raised by Muriel Vic-		Mrs M R Ayres	100
tor, Viola Van Wink-		2 Christn friends, Etna	100
lyn, Helen & Marion		Andes	100
Mackinnon	68	Cornell Mem'l, N Y C	125
Interested friend,		Chas E Potter	25
Arlington	232	Mrs H Doran	300
Mrs G L & Clara T		Mt Zion Union S S	257
Dunham	200	Miriam Murphy	100
		L C M, Bangor	100
		S De Mott	900
		Catharine De Mott	300
		Mrs DAG, N Clarendon	100
		W H Veza	100
		Stanley E Stewart	300
		Mrs J Homan	100
		May Hartenstein	400
		Ruth Hartenstein	50
		Mrs A Bachelor	200
		Mrs A S G	100
		Two friends	300
		Mrs A H S	50
		One who is a friend to	100
		children	100
		L F K, Brooklyn	300
		I H N, Pontiac	100
		Proceeds of a fair given by Lillie Lunddeen, Lillie Bohlen-
		der, Pauline Gill	2000
		Ethel Johnson	2000
		Centrell, Callie	300
		Wessells, F C	500
		Friend of children
		Carson City	300
		Jerabek, J S	600
		Lafayette, Bklyn	50
		Woodlawn, Bapt Ch,
		Pawtucket	340
		The Hopewell Union
		SS, Sinking Creek	250
		Smith, Mary	20
		Martian, Eva	20
		Murtian, Bertha	20
		Linsley, Julia	100
		Thatcher, Artie	200
		Kittell, John	100
		Hill, Mrs H H	100
		Cash, Patterson	100
		Broom, C	300
		In mem of dear ones
		N Y City	900
		Mrs M J Ball	300
		Silver Cross Circle of the ME Ch, Saratoga Spgs	300
		M A N S, Pomona	300
		M E Bailey	300
		Mrs W Williams	300
		Jr E Soc, Templeton	300
		Mrs L C Yaeger	100
		Sent by Kennet Sq	500
		E L, Jamaica	300
		Dr B W Whitfield	550
		Blanch Sargent	75
		Miss A Trolip	300
		I H N, Moores Mill	500
		Olive Mutt	200
		Hathaway, Mrs Geo T	200
		M E Gallup	200
		Wood, Wm	100
		W L O, Springfield	100
		Total	$1,230 36

Enameline

The Modern STOVE POLISH.

DUSTLESS, ODORLESS,
BRILLIANT, LABOR SAVING.

Try it on your Cycle Chain.

J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON

QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW

MODENE

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.

Discovered by Accident.—In Combing, an incomplete mixture was spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair had been removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It is sure, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. NOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently. If the growth is on the head or hair on the face, you may require two or more applications. If the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and with injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward. MODENE surpasses all other hair removers.

Recommended by all who have tested its merits.—Used by people of refinement who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a precious boon which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use it to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail, in safety mailing cases, postage paid on all orders, on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, full address written plainly. C. F. Correspondence carefully private. Postage stamps same as cash. (ALWAYS MENTION YOUR COUNTY AND THIS PAPER.) Cut this advertisement out and send it to MODENE MANUFACTURING CO., CINCINNATI, O., U. S. A. You can register your letter at any Post-office to insure its delivery.

LOCAL AND GENERAL AGENTS WANTED.

We offer $1,000 FOR CASH OR THE SLIGHTEST INJURY, OF EVERY HOTEL, GUARANTY

"Don't hide your light under a bushel." That's just why we talk about

The Royal is the highest grade baking powder known. Actual tests show it goes third further than any other brand.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

The Treatment of Rheumatism or Uric Acid Poisoning

GOVERNOR STEPHENS of Missouri recently informed one of our representatives that Tartar was the only remedy which gave him relief in uric acid poisoning. The governor speaks of the matter in the highest terms.

McKesson & Robbins, 91 Fulton St. N. Y. C.

SOLE AGENTS FOR

The Tartaralithine

NEW DRESS SET

Write Macbeth Pittsburgh

About half the lamps in use are Macbeth. All the trouble comes from the other half. But go by the Index.

SAPOLIO

Don't hide your light under a bushel. That's just why we talk about to cure rheumatism is to purify the blood. To do this, take the best blood purifier, Sassaaparilla. Hosts of friends testify to the success of this medicine in the cure of rheumatism it has effected.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED.
Our INVISIBLE TUBE Cushions help when all else fails as glasses help eyes. NOPAIN. Whispers heard. FREE
Send to F. Hilscox Co., S.-S. & B'way, N. Y., for Book and Proofs
$2. to $5. per acre. Fine fruit, truck, stock and farm lands. The South affords better living, more money, less work. Write at once for my 32 page pamphlet giving full information. Sent free.
S. L. BAKER, Canoe Station, Alabama.

THE PRODIGAL SON.

AN INCIDENT FROM REAL LIFE

Which Occurred at the Bowery Mission Free Dispensary in New York.

AN incident beginning in the Dispensary of the Bowery Mission, and ending in a jubilation in a Pennsylvania home, is so like the picture Christ painted in his immortal story of the Prodigal Son, that it deserves special mention. The Dispensary is now under the charge nia and Canada and an awful rough time I've had of it."

"I don't doubt it, my poor boy. No place like home, is there?"

"Indeed, no, sir. I wish I was there now, but I'm in no condition to go."

"It's a great comfort to think those difficulties don't keep us from going to Christ when we wish to, is it not? He will receive us in any condition and without money, you know. Have you been to him to save you in the same way, as you have come to me trusting in my power to cure you?"

"No, sir. I can't say I have, at least not for many a day, though I was well brought up."

"Well, it is not too late to try. Christ will give you a warm welcome; he likes to receive people who want to turn over a new leaf. Won't you try?"

"I will, doctor. You have spoken kindly to me, like my own father used to. I ought to tell you that the name I gave is not my right name." And feeling that one who had been so sympathetic was entitled to the confidence, the lad gave the doctor his right name and the name of his native town.

The doctor appreciated this sign of confidence and said: "I am glad you told me: it may be the first step toward better things," and so it proved. A few days afterward the doctor received a letter from a friend who had taken charge of a church in the town from which the sick lad came. Replying to the letter he mentioned the case and asked him to find out whether the family still lived there and what prospect there would be of the wanderer being welcomed if he were to return.

The very next day a telegram reached Dr. Dowkontt from his friend begging that of Dr. George D. Dowkontt, the famous Christian physician who established the institution for medical missionaries from which Summers, Hall and many other heroic men have gone out to labor for Christ and humanity among the heathen. A better man for the position could not have been found and the doctor accepted it chiefly because of the opportunity it afforded him of speaking for Christ to men who being sick and poor were more likely to listen to Gospel talk than when they are well. Many such has he pointed to Christ as the Great Physician.

(Continued on next page.)

"YOU DON'T SEEM TO BELONG TO THIS NEIGHBORHOOD."

One afternoon about three weeks ago, the doctor was busy with the file of waiting patients. "Next," he said, as one poor sufferer went out with his medicine in his hand and a word of kindly Christian counsel from the doctor's lips in his heart. At the word, a young man scarcely twenty years old stepped into the consulting room. His dress and appearance was much like the others, but something in his manner and in the few words in which he described his complaint convinced the doctor that he was not a native of the Bowery. After prescribing for him, the doctor said: "You don't seem to belong to this neighborhood."

"No indeed," was the reply, uttered in a tone of regret.

"Where is your home?"

There was a long drawn sigh as he answered, "Three hundred miles away," and the lad seemed to be thinking that in another sense he was still farther off.

"Long since you left home?"

"Yes sir, many a long month. I've traveled over all these States and in Califor-

Have You Asthma or Hay Fever?

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma and Hay Fever in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new and ideal discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Goss, of Marlborough, West Va., writes that it cured him of Asthma of thirty years' standing, and Hon. T. G. Chiles, of Greeley, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair in Hay Fever season, being unable to lie down night or day. The Kola Plant cured him at once. Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, editor of the Farmer's Magazine was also cured when he could not lie down for fear of sneezing fits twice a week in Hay Fever season. Other of our readers give similar testimony, proving it truly a wonderful remedy. If you suffer from Asthma or Hay Fever we advise you to send your address to the Kola Importing Co., 110 Broadway, New York, who to prove its power will send a large C. case by mail free to every reader of The Christian Herald, who needs it. All they ask in return is that when cured you will tell our neighbors about it. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Poor Pilgarlic,

there is no need for you to contemplate a wig when you can enjoy the pleasure of sitting again under your own "thatch." You can begin to get your hair back as soon as you begin to use

Ayer's Hair Vigor.

HAY FEVER

and ASTHMA.

A Permanent Cure Guaranteed. Send for circular for home treatment. GEORGE J. WEST, M.D., 510 Fifth Avenue, New York.

FREE TO BALD HEADS. We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp diseases. Address, Altenheim Medical Dispensary, Dept. N. A., Box 779, Cincinnati, O.

THE GREEN BONE CUTTER
A WOMAN OR EVEN A CHILD CAN RUN UNBREAKABLE STEEL. KNIVES, NEW FEED SELF-CLEANER. PAWEBSTER, CAZENOVIA, N. Y.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC
BRADLEY New York.
BROOKLYN
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER
MISSOURI St. Louis.
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROSCOE Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

THERE is no getting away from the fact that Pure White Lead (see list of brands which are genuine) and Pure Linseed Oil make the best paint.

Properly applied, it will chip, chalk or scale off, but outwear any of the mixtures offered as substitutes. It is, therefore, by far the most economical.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tins, or any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet containing valuable information and card showing samples of colors, also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

The Greatest Good to the Greatest Number is a righteous end to be sought by a Life Insurance Company.

The Prudential

reaches every member of the family, male and female, children or adults.

THE PRUDENTIAL has

Assets,	-	$19,541,277
Income,	-	14,158,451
Surplus,	-	4,034,161

Write for descriptive literature.

The Prudential Insurance Company of America
Home Office, Newark, N. J.

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President.

AGATE Nickel-Steel Ware.

Our Booklet, "KITCHEN UTENSILS," tells about this ware. It tells just why it is better than any other enameled ware. It contains no arsenic, antimony or lead. It is perfectly safe to cook tomatoes or any other vegetable containing acids, in it. It isn't cumbersome, like iron. It doesn't get battered and leaky, like tin. It is double-coated and retains its polish as long as it lasts. It is handsomest, best wearing and an absolutely pure enameled ware. All careful dealers sell it. Notice the bottom of each utensil you buy, and see that it bears this trade-mark. Write for our free booklet containing guarantees of eminent chemists.

Calance & Grosjean Mfg. Co.

29 CLIFF STREET
NEW YORK

Golden yellow. Larger and sweeter than the best. Finest flower for winter. Hardy. In any window or garden. It blooms after planting, either in soil, sand, or peat. May be had in bloom by the Holiday producing several spikes, the exquisite fragrance of which will surpass everything sent by mail, postpaid, two five large (40¢) for only 10¢, or 6 bulbs for $1. MAYFLOWER Magazine for a year (a colored plate each month devoted to Flower gardening). Worth $1.50, but for trial, all 12 for $1.00.

Our Fall Catalogue, 64 Pages, 4 kinds of Plants and Bulbs, for Fall and Winter Blooming, also new Fruits, Shrubs, etc., mailed FREE to all who apply. Catalogues, Tulips, Narcissus, and other Bulbs, at reduced prices. Write for it at once. Address, JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Parlor, 8% MUNICIPAL WARRANTS Sold short-time paper, earning 8% interest. Write for details. Right E. Street, Equitable Building, Boston, Mass.

SACRED SONGS No. 1. No other New book equal to it. $25 per 100; 30 cts. each. If by mail. THE HIGLOW & MAIN CO. Lakeside Building Chicago. 14 E. Ninth St., New York.

The Prodigal Son.

(continued from preceding page.)

He sent home at once. All exould be defrayed and his aged par-ould give him a hearty welcome.
her especially was overcome with e prospect of clasping her wanto her heart.
days passed before the doctor
d the youth. He inquired among eat the mission, but none of them d him. At last on the third day aid in the consulting-room.
d you wanted to see me, Doc-said. "A man told me you were or me and he thought you had a me."
yes," said the Doctor. "I have ing to find you for three days.
ave you been?"
e to tell you the truth, Doctor, I've ng a bad time. I wanted to do d me, so I've been trying to get did not succeed, and I've been in wagons and on the piers, or e, and to-day I was so hungry to a restaurant and offered to do ree hours' work for a meal. They a meal and let me work it out. I ave got a job for me, Doctor."
words very wistfully.
e said the doctor. "Here is a let-
u. Do you know the writing?"
his my father's writing," said the ynging to a chair and tearing the en. As he read it, the tears ran face.
e its a good job, is it not?" the rked as the lad looked up.
e air, and thank God for it. They to go home at once, but I can't his day. I must get some work, so I eome better clothes. I would not o home in these dirty rags."
hs of your mother watching for you father going to meet the trains.
ould not like to keep them waiting earn the money for new clothes.
nt you badly, don't they? They are hard up."
e sir, I'll go, as I am. It would eught to wait.
s good. Now I want you to feel w about Christ. Don't wait to clean uo straight to him as you are."
e sir, I will. I think I can now."
ere was no need to humiliate the at his family by sending him home
s. The kind doctor took him to o and gave him a bath and a cheap clothes and put him on the train

A careful letter has come from the far describing the reception of the prod-and his second son met him at on and gave him welcome but that ing to the welcome he got from er when they reached the home.
ked him and wept over him and him and would not loose him, unighbors, who had been called in, share in the joy of the reunited y No such joyful meal had ever een in that home. The father wrote to doctor had laid them under an ain they would never forget and he on begged him to come and spend acion with them, that he might see h happiness his effort had brought small. The doctor is too busy among pains to take a vacation, but the u he takes in such work as this h good and he finds that "they on the Lord renew their strength."

He is rewarded for his trouble by the joy that it has brought in the hearts of mother and father and the repentant prodigal.
"Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

BOOKS RECEIVED.
Columbia Stories, by Albert Payson Terhune
(illustrated). A volume full of humor and good-natured adventure, which will be specially appreciated by college youths. Pp. 214, paper covers, price fifty cents. G. W. Dillingham & Co., New York, publishers.
Lectures on Ecclesiastical History, delivered in Norwich Cathedral, England, with preface by the Dean of Norwich. A book which all students of ecclesiastical and classical literature will find most valuable. Pp. 302, cloth covers, price $2.25. Thos.
Whittaker, New York, publisher.

In the SEPTEMBER

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

"When Henry Clay Said Farewell to the Senate"
(Illustrated)

Dwight L. Moody's
Bible Class

Mrs. Bottome's History of
The King's Daughters

One Dollar a Year Ten Cents a Copy

The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia

Home Study

YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN can easily acquire
A Thorough and Practical Business Education at their own homes by our system. That it is the most inexpensive and convenient method thousands of young men and women in all parts of the United States, will gladly testify.
Distance is no barrier as the work is accomplished entirely through correspondence.
A TRIAL LESSON costs only 10 cents and shows you how thorough is the system we employ. Interesting Catalogue free to all who write. Address:

BRYANT & STRATTON COLLEGE.
No. B-275 College Building, Buffalo, N. Y.

DRAWING AND DESIGNING

Mechanical & Architectural Drawing; Marine; Stationary or Locomotive Engineering; Mining;
Prospecting; Metal Pattern Cutting; Plumbing;
Railroad, Municipal, Hydraulic & Bridge
Engineering; Surveying and Mapping; Bookkeeping; Shorthand; English Branches; Architecture; Electricity; Machine Design.
All who GUARANTEE SUCCESS.
Fees Moderate, Advance or Installments.
Circular Free. State subject you wish to study.
International Correspondence Schools, Box 561
Scranton, Pa.

$200.00 IN GOLD GIVEN.
International News and Book Company, Baltimore, make a most liberal offer of $200.00 in gold, for selling 200 copies of "Talks to Children about Jesus." This book is among the most popular ever published. One agent sold 21 in 2 days, another 35 the first week.
Freight paid, credit given. They also publish Bibles, and other popular books, and a beautiful set of children's books for the Xmas Holidays. A few General Agents wanted on salary.

BLYMNER BELL'S
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING CHURCH BELLS, CHIMES & PEALS
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
MAHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair.
Promotes a luxuriant growth.
Never Fails to Restore Gray
Hair to its Youthful Color.
Cures scalp diseases & hair falling.
50c. and $1.00 at Druggists

An Exceptional Opportunity.

To Secure a Beautiful and Useful Book at a Bargain,
The Church at Home, By Bishop John H. Vincent,
D.D., LL.D.
Is the title of a magnificent manual for family worship and home teaching, and a book that should be in every Christian home in the land, and those who are fortunate enough to secure a copy of this book will find it a delightful companion. It contains 480 pages,

210 ILLUSTRATIONS,
TWO BEAUTIFUL COLORED PICTURES, THE LORD'S PRAYER AND THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.
LESSON, HYMN and PRAYER FOR EVERY DAY IN THE
YEAR, constituting a complete family worship for the whole year.
READINGS AND MEDITATIONS FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS:
NEW YEAR'S DAY, GOOD FRIDAY, EASTER, WHIT SUNDAY, INDEPENDENCE DAY, THANKSGIVING DAY, CHRISTMAS DAY, AND DAYS OF AFFLICTION.

- | | |
|--|--|
| Memory Texts for Every Day in the Year,
The Church Steps,
Home Lessons,
Special Collects,
Bible Biography. | Picture Lessons for Children,
Old and New Tunes,
Wisdom in Proverbs,
Blank Pages for Records
and Autographs. |
|--|--|

ALTOGETHER IT IS THE MOST COMPLETE HELP FOR FAMILY
WORSHIP
PUBLISHED.

By the purchase of the entire stock from the original publishers, we are enabled to offer the subscribers of "The Christian Herald" ONLY a remarkable bargain, provided the stock is not exhausted when your order is received, as follows:

Cloth, Illuminated Cover, former price $3.00. Special Price, $1.50
ONLY CLOTH BINDING LEFT
ALL OTHER STYLES SOLD OUT.
Remember this special price pays all express charges and delivers this magnificent book weighing 4 lbs. 7 ounces, size when closed 8 1-2 x 10 1-2 inches, absolutely free of expense.

If the stock is exhausted when your order is received, we will return the money at once, and as we have only sufficient copies to supply a small percentage of the subscribers of "The Christian Herald," we trust you will be fortunate enough to avail yourself of this exceptional offer.

Send money by money order or registered letter. Write name and address plainly, giving your nearest express office.
P. B. BROMFIELD & CO., Bible House, New York City.

Conservatory Life
is most healthful and delightful. The teachers are masters; the students are enthusiasts. Everything in the equipment and environment of the

New England
CONSERVATORY
OF MUSIC

tends to encourage high ideals and a devotion to art.
GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Musical Director.
Send for our catalogue to
FRANK W. HALE, Gen'l Mgr., Boston, Mass.

Careful Housewives Stop the Leaks—House-
Heating Allows Most
Leaks of All.

HEY'S PERFECTION HEATERS

effectually prevent waste in house warming by saving at least half the cost of fuel with half the trouble.
Heat a whole House with 1 Stove —drop us a postal and we will tell you how—information FREE.
Special discounts if ordered at once. Agents wanted.
LEVI HEY & CO., Dept. A,
who cause terror to the coal trust, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 PURE

"Men should be what they seem," and so should soaps, but Ivory is the only soap that is 99 44/100 per cent pure.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINTI.

A BUGGY, PHAETON or CARRIAGE

FREE

to any one who will do a little work for us. No money required. No expense for outfit. Some knowledge of carriages desirable but not absolutely necessary. Send 5 cents in stamps for postage on catalogue giving full details. PEERLESS CARRIAGE CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

1897 High Grade Bicycles

for Men, Women, Girls & Boys. Complete line at lowest prices ever quoted. $100 "Oakwood" for $45.00. $85 "Arlington" for $37.50. $75 "Bicycle" for $32.00. $65 "Bicycle" for $27.50. Fully guaranteed. Shipped anywhere C.O.D. with privilege to examine. No money in advance. Buy direct from manufacturers, save agents and dealers profits. Large illustrated catalogue free. Address (in full): Cash Buyers' Union, 162 W. Van Buren St. B 18 Chicago

$10 to $35. High Grade Bicycles. Largest stock. All makes and models. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. Write today for lists of bargains. T. BROWN LEWIS Cycle Co., Chicago, Ill.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power. Hay or Straw. 46 Inch Feed Opening. Bell. Power Leverage 64 to 1. STEEL. Largest line in the world. Send for Catalog. COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

Two Great EGG MAKERS
MANN'S GREEN BONE CUTTER.
MANN'S GRANITE CRYSTAL GRILL.
For Poultry. C. O. D. or on trial.
F. W. MANN CO., MILFORD, MASS.

20 BEAUTIFUL BULBS 25c.
For winter flowers.

For 25c. we will send postpaid the following collection of bulbs, which will give you flowers the entire winter. All large selected bulbs:
2 New Sweet Scented Tulips.
1 Beautiful Black Calla.
1 Bermuda Easter Lily.
2 Giant Golden Sacred Lilies.
2 Hyacinths, Separate Colors.
8 Freesias, white, scarlet, yellow.
2 Buttercup Oxalis.
2 Allium Neapolitanum.
8 Spanish Iris.
2 Grand Lilies.
20 bulbs in all 25c. postpaid.

Free with Each order for the above collection: 3 pkts. seeds for winter pot culture; 1 pkt. Butterfly Orchid (for pot culture); 1 pkt. Japanese Winter-blooming Morning Glories; 1 pkt. Scarlet Pansies, together with our Catalog of Winter and Spring bulbs. All for 25c.
J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N. Y.

Steel Wheels

Staggered Oval Spokes. BUY A SET TO FIT YOUR NEW OR OLD WAGON. CHEAPEST AND BEST way to get a low wagon. Any size wheel, any width tire. Catal. Free. ELECTRIC WHEEL CO., Quincy, Ill.

BOYS AND GIRLS

Watches, Clocks, Tea Sets and Toilet Sets. with $5, $7 and $10 orders. Now is your chance to get orders for our TEAS, COFFEES, Etc. Send for new Premium and Price List. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y. P. O. Box 259.

PEARS' is the best soap for the complexion, face and hand.

Established over 100 years. 20 additional awards. Be sure you get the genuine.

Our Little Book—mailed free—tells why, and will interest you in our line of: Art Metal Goods, 9. B. & H. Oil Heaters, and Gas Electric Fireplaces, Furniture, and W. Iron Grills, and R. Leading Dealers will supply Our Gas. Bradley & Hubbard Mfg. Co., Meric NEW YORK, BOSTON, CHICAGO, PHILADELPHIA. 800 SILK REMNANTS. Quilt 4 sq yds, 50c. Laces, floss & patterns, 10c, postpaid. Lemmire's Silk Mill, L.

1898 MODELS NOW READY

AN NECESSITY IN EVERY HOME

THANKSGIVING, CHRISTMAS, NEW-YEAR AND HOLIDAY OFFERS, USEFUL PRESENTS FOR PRACTICAL PEOPLE, AT THE RIGHT PRICE.

FOR A LIMITED PERIOD ONLY WE MAKE THE FOLLOWING SPECIAL OFFERS ON TWO OF OUR VERY LATEST AND BEST INSTRUMENTS.

SPECIAL OFFER

ON OUR ENTIRELY NEW CABINET REED ORGAN.

 STYLE NO 29,000. ***

CORNISH AMERICAN ORGAN

ALMOST INCREDIBLE BUT IT'S A FACT $35.00 BUYS THIS ORGAN.

Full Size. 5 Octaves. Double Reed Action. 122 Reeds. 10 Stops. 15 Combinations.

While this photo engraving is an exact picture of one of the handsomest Cabinet Reed Organs ever invented by us, the instrument is far better even than this looks.

The "SILVER CHIME" is the result of our efforts to bring a really first-class instrument within the reach of all our friends, and of all our barones it is decidedly the greatest. Last spring we manufactured two thousand of these popular parlor organs, and such was the demand for them that the sales exceeded by hundreds our most sanguine expectations. For our Fall and Winter Trade we are arranging to build Five Thousand Silver Chime Cornish American Organs. 1898 Models—and the first installment is now ready for shipment. Note then, that for a limited period only, we offer this beautiful instrument for the very small sum of $35.00 (thirty-five dollars), provided you send us all cash with your order. No agent or dealer could possibly sell you such an organ for twice as much money. Remember, also, that we are the only firm of actual makers of pianos and organs who sell exclusively to the public at first cost, and that it is practically impossible for you to buy upon the terms and prices we sell at from any other firm on earth. We will consider any special offer you may make us, if you prefer to purchase it on the installment plan.

A Detailed Description of this Beautiful Organ will be sent on application.

MONEY TALKS

Better send CASH WITH YOUR ORDER. Your pocket is richer, as you get the benefit of a handsome cash discount, and as for taking any risk in sending money in advance, you know our motto is to all: "No Satisfaction, No Pay." Your money and the forward freight charges will be immediately refunded if the instrument sent is not entirely satisfactory and as represented, after 30 days' trial in your own home. You take no risk; we have plant and property and hard cash, to the extent of over $1,000,000 to back up our contracts.

REMEMBER
that a prompt response to this advertisement will secure a DISCOUNT OF $10.00 on the list prices as quoted in our 1898 Catalogue on any Organ, or $20.00 on the list prices if you buy a Piano. Owing to the very close margin this leaves for manufacturing, we are obliged to reserve the right to withdraw this special discount at any time.

Note. We can supply this organ in low top case, elegantly finished front and back, suitable for Church, School or Lodge, at the same price.

Perhaps, however, you are more interested in a Piano, we therefore make you this

OF THE MOST DESIRABLE OF OUR

SPECIAL OFFER

$155.00 BUYS THIS PIANO.

HOUSEHOLD FAIRY

UPRIGHT CABINET GRAND CORNISH AMERICAN PIANO

STYLE NO 201 WARRANTED 2 YEARS

This beautiful Upright Cabinet Grand Piano, Style A, The "HOUSEHOLD FAIRY," the retail value of which is four hundred dollars. For only $155 (one hundred and fifty-five dollars), the actual cost to manufacture (our own small profit added). With this piano we present free, a handsome silk scarf, a solid-wood adjustable piano stool, and our celebrated piano instructor. THE WHOLE OUTFIT FOR $155. If a cash discount is not possible, we will sell this Piano on any terms to suit the convenience of our patrons. This beautiful every latest improvement, including Practice Stair, is unsurpassed in Touch, Tone and Finish. Equal in appearance. DIMENSIONS—Height, 52 inches; Width, 62 inches; Depth, 28 inches; Weight, boxed, 900 lbs.

ENTIRELY NEW CATALOGUE—1898 MODEL. AN ANCIENT EGYPTIAN CHAIR AT EARLY TEN. This is the subject of the exquisitely beautiful illustration of our catalogue and has been reproduced in the original colors for cost. Colored lithographs of our factories and offices are also included and our catalogue contains a complete description of over fifty styles and Organs, together with prices and terms of sale. The issue of this musical compendium commemorates our thirty-fifth year in business. sent to all intending purchasers FREE on application, postage paid. All you have to do is mention this paper and to write for it. Remember our vast business continues on the old basis. Pianos and Organs at wholesale cost, direct from factory to family—No agents, middlemen's profits to pay. The purchase of a Cornish American Piano or Organ just only for what he buys. CASH OR EASY INSTALLMENT. 30 DAYS' TRIAL IS YOUR OWN HOME. No Satisfaction, No Pay. Every instrument fully warranted for twenty-five years, and safe during destination insured and guaranteed. Send for Souvenir Art Catalogue, 1898 edition, to-day—FREE.

REFERENCE.—Our bank, your bank, any bank, or any of the multitude of patrons who have purchased millions of dollars worth of instruments during the past 36 years. Our new book "The Heart of the People" containing a thousand recent references, sent free. Don't fail to write at once.

ESTABLISHED 36 YEARS. CORNISH & CO., Makers of American Pianos and Organs. WASHINGTON, N.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

PRINTED AT THE BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

Copyright 1897, BY LOUIS KLOPFER.

VOLUME 20.—NUMBER 37.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 15, 1897.

PRICE FIVE CENTS.

UNDER THE "MIDNIGHT SUN."

Progress in Frozen Lapland—A People Among Whom Many Traits of Superstition Still Remain.

1. LAPP MOTHER AND BABY.

Slain in battle in 1161. Eric had left his capital in Sweden to wage war with the Danes and Lapps (the latter known as the Samis), who were ultimately brought to the outward forms of Christianity, al-

SEVEN hundred and forty years have passed since Christianity was introduced into that part of the northwest extremity of the European continent known as Lapland, by that vigorous promulgator of the Gospel among the Northmen, King Eric, surnamed "the Saint," who ruled over the greater part of Scandinavia.

2.

the real Christianization of their country did not begin until 1273, when a part of their territory was annexed to Sweden. For many years the only visible indication that the Laplanders had adopted the new religion was the introduction of Christian baptism and church service. Even as late as the sixteenth century, when Gustavus I. had established schools among them, the Laplanders still clung to their pagan customs and traditions. In the next century the remnants of paganism were extirpated by King Gustavus IV., and thereafter the religious progress of the country proceeded uninterruptedly. The first missionary was sent thither by Gustavus Vasa, and soon churches and schools sprang up, and books were published in the native language. At the beginning of the eighteenth century, Isaac Olofin was a poor man, but a

SCENES WITNESSED IN THE LAND OF THE "MIDNIGHT SUN."

1. A Family Group.
2. The "Midnight Sun" at North Cape.
3. Lapp Fishermen.
4. A Mountain Village and some of its People.

most devout and earnest Christian, labored fourteen years in Lapland teaching the Gospel and making such marked progress that the attention of Christian Europe was attracted to his work. Another zealous missionary was Pastor Stockfleth, who about the beginning of the present century joined the Lapps in their nomadic life and preached to them in their own tongue. In 1820 the people began an independent work of their own under native teachers. They have been greatly aided by the Danish Finland Missionary Society, the Swedish Free Church Missionary Union and other organizations. At the present time the Gospel is preached throughout Lapland, and services are held in three languages: the Swedish, Finnish, and Lappish. The first edition of the Lapp New Testament was published in 1755, and the entire Bible in 1811.

There are two great classes of Laplanders: the mountaineers and the lowlanders. In the summer months, those natives who depend chiefly on their herds of reindeer for subsistence, move further into the mountains and are visited by clergymen from southern Lapland. Though attentive to all the teachings of the Gospel, the mountaineers have still a few superstitious and pagan customs, which are difficult to overcome. Their deer—there are 363,000 in the country—dislike the warmth of the valleys, and cannot find satisfying food elsewhere than at great altitudes. Mountain families descend to the lowlands at intervals to sell articles carved out of the antlers of the deer and to make purchases. They are an odd-looking race, a majority of them showing traces of Mongol descent, with wiry, black hair, dark, round eyes set obliquely, flat noses and yellow skins, although here and there one finds among them fair hair, clear complexions and aquiline features—the latter due to Finnish alliances.

Very different are the lowlanders. Fair, clear-skinned, small but strong and well-knit frames, they are brave and hardy, excelling as sailors and fishermen.

Our illustrations afford a glimpse of the domestic life of these people, among their deer-herds and their babies. It is not always an easy matter to distinguish the men from the women by their dress alone. Many housewives wear as head-dress a conical cap, with dog fur or

(Continued on page 691.)

MOUNTAIN-TOP CONVENTION

The Christian and Missionary Alliance holds its first Annual Gathering in its New Settlement at Nyack-on-the-Hudson—A Notable Assemblage of Christian Workers.—

On the evening of Saturday, September 4, an unwonted sight was witnessed on the eastern slope of South Mountain, which overlooks the Hudson River at Nyack, twenty-nine miles from New York City. Brilliant lights illumined the hillside, and on a broad terrace near its crest could be seen a large imposing building, every window a stream of radiance, while two hundred feet to the north, in a grove of oaks, was another spacious structure, also aglow with light and densely crowded with hundreds of earnest and enthusiastic men and women. The mountain-side was dotted with tents, whose tent-roofs were now flocking to the public gathering. The occasion was the formal opening of the Christian and Missionary Alliance's New Settlement—an event coincident with the annual Convention of the Alliance.

For over a year past, bands of workmen had been busily employed clearing the forest from the mountain-side, and the result had been a complete transformation. Well-lighted roads were constructed, the foundation of a Training College for missionaries was laid and the rough ground cleared for an Auditorium, with a seating capacity of over 2,000 persons. The College, now complete, is a handsome building of five stories, some 275 feet in length and about sixty feet high. It commands a magnificent view of the Hudson River and the villages of Nyack, Sing Sing, Tarrytown and Irvington. It will accommodate 300 students and is excellently equipped for the training work it is designed to accomplish. The Auditorium is a large wooden building of simple, yet pleasing design, with a beamer, and chairs that are ranged in line with the natural slope of the hillside. Its acoustical qualities are perfect. These two great buildings are at an elevation of nearly 400 feet above the river level and overlook the greater part of the seventy acres purchased for the Alliance Settlement. Other buildings are projected, including an Orphanage and dormitories to be used in connection with the extensive work of the Alliance.

The daily programme of the Convention included morning prayer-meetings, classes for Bible Study, regular preaching services, testimony meetings, addresses, meetings for inquirers, for sanctification and for divine healing, missionary conferences, and song services. Many workers from other cities and from the foreign missionary field took part in the Convention, among them being the following:

Rev. John Robertson, D.D., Scotland; Rev. F. A. Chapell, D.D., Boston; Rev. F. A. Farr, Philadelphia; Rev. W. W. Clarke, Englewood, N. Y.; Rev. H. Wilson, D.D., New York; Rev. J. Warren, New York; Rev. H. C. McBride, Can Grove; Rev. F. H. Senft, Philadelphia; Rev. A. E. Funk, New York; Rev. Stephen Pitt, New York; Rev. J. W. Mosier, Brooklyn; Rev. Dr. Oerter, New York; Rev. M. K. Fuller and Mrs. Fuller, India; Rev. T. Cock, Japan; Mr. C. A. Mitchell, Soudan, Africa; Mr. I. H. Smith, Soudan; Mr. H. D. Campbell, Congo; Mr. Z. C. Beals, China; Mr. A. J. Forder, Arabia, and others.

Throughout, the services were characterized by deep spirituality and substantial financial contributions were made to the missionary cause.

There is much that is of interest to all Christian people in the story of the Christian Alliance movement and its remarkable growth. Zeal for Christ and complete surrender are its leading principles. No one can belong to the Alliance without being inspired with the passion for soul-saving and Christian service which possesses all its members. It is, at the present time, one of the greatest instruments for the spread of the Gospel the century has seen, and its field and potentialities are constantly expanding. Yet, less than fifteen years ago, the movement was represented by one man only—a Presbyterian pastor in Louisville, Ky. Although his ministry in that western city was fairly successful, Mr. Simpson felt that he had a distinct call to reach the missionaries laboring in India, China, Japan, South America, the West Indies, Africa, and Palestine. An orphanage was opened, and various other branches of Christian work were begun. Conventions are now held every year in different parts of the Union for the accommodation of distant members of the Alliance. The Alliance is not an ecclesiastical body or denomination, but is simply a society uniting in

MR. J. G. H. SIMPSON.
Alliance Secretary.

istry in that western city was fairly successful, Mr. Simpson felt that he had a distinct call to reach the missionaries laboring in India, China, Japan, South America, the West Indies, Africa, and Palestine. An orphanage was opened, and various other branches of Christian work were begun. Conventions are now held every year in different parts of the Union for the accommodation of distant members of the Alliance. The Alliance is not an ecclesiastical body or denomination, but is simply a society uniting in

REV. A. B. SIMPSON.
Founder of the Alliance.

missionaries laboring in India, China, Japan, South America, the West Indies, Africa, and Palestine. An orphanage was opened, and various other branches of Christian work were begun. Conventions are now held every year in different parts of the Union for the accommodation of distant members of the Alliance. The Alliance is not an ecclesiastical body or denomination, but is simply a society uniting in ermine for border. This is commonly worn by the Fisher and Forest Lapps.

REV. STEPHEN MERRITT.

Under the "Midnight Sun."

(Continued from First Page.)

For protection, the collarless tunic being open at the throat, the woman hangs round her neck and suspends over her bosom a piece of cloth which she calls Atsaleppe. On this she bestows much feminine care. It is embroidered in tinsel thread and powdered with small discs and studs of metal, often silver. Winter and summer, if poor, she wears the uniform tunic or mudda of deerskin, with the hair outside, pantaloons of deerskin or tanned hide; deerskin shoes, fastened on by long braided bands of gay colors, which are wound round ankle and calf, and, in cold weather, she wears the universal sheepskin for under-linen. The long Lapp gloves are always made of the skin that covers the deer's foot—the cleft hoof serving to provide the gap between fingers and thumb; the skin of the deer's hocks makes the man's leggings, and the shoe is made of the head of the deer.

In addition to the "true Lapps," there are included in the population considerable numbers of Finns, Swedes, Norwegians and Russians. A complete census shows less than 30,000 total population. As a people they are quiet and inoffensive and crimes of violence are almost unknown. The chief characteristic of their country is the Arctic climate and the peculiar distribution of daylight and darkness. In the north, the longest day and night last for three months each, and through the greater part of the country, the sun does not set at mid-summer nor rise at mid-winter. At the North Cape, the sun is first seen at full at midnight on May 13, at Hammerfest on the 16th, at Tromsø on the 20th and at Bodo—about 60 miles above the Arctic Circle—on June 4th. At the last named it continues as a midnight orb till July 8th at Tromsø until the 22d, and at North Cape until July 30th. On the other hand, the sun disappears at Bodo from Dec. 15 to 28, at the Cape from Nov. 18 to 24. Tourists by climbing the hills at certain points can get a glimpse of the sun a whole day sooner that it becomes visible to those on the lower lands. At one point north of the Gulf of Bothnia and just on the edge of the Arctic Circle, it shines all day and night on June 22; on Sept. 22 it seems to rest on the sky's rim, and then disappears altogether until March 22. These wondrous spectacles of "the midnight sun" in fellowship Christians who are connected with various churches in many cities. These groups each hold a weekly meeting in some convenient place for the mutual help of the members, by communion and prayer—their fellowship is their holding the doctrines of the four-fold Gospel. These are: Christ as Saviour; Christ as Sanctifier; Christ as Healer, and Christ as Coming Lord. Within the past year the Christian Alliance and International Missionary Alliance have been merged into the Christian and Missionary Alliance, of which Rev. Dr. Simpson is Superintendent. He is assisted by a full board of workers of wide experience. His son, J. Gordon H. Simpson, the Secretary of the Alliance, has had entire charge of the construction of the institutional buildings and the development of the new Settlement. Rev. Stephen Merritt, whose work as preacher and philanthropist is well known, was the spiritual Columbus who "discovered" South Mountain and first brought it before the Alliance as a fitting location for the new Settlement.

A CORNER OF "TENT AVENUE."

summer and of a sunless winter are among the sights most tourists desire to witness and which, once seen, are never forgotten.

THE NEW ALLIANCE TRAINING COLLEGE ON SOUTH MOUNTAIN, NYACK, N. Y.

ational relations, that he might be free to take up a work upon undenominational lines. His position at this juncture, is thus described by one who knew him well:

The work was commenced in a small hall on the corner of Eighth avenue and Thirteenth street, New York, where Mr. Simpson fully explained his plans. It was to be an undenominational work, to reach the people, neither antagonizing nor competing with any other church, but under no ecclesiastical control. Any of the Lord's people who were moved to join in such a work would be welcome, as volunteers. No one joining would be asked for a subscription. The pastor had determined to rely upon the Lord to send supplies for the needs of the work and his own temporal support. It was to be, throughout, a work of faith, and so it has continued to this day. After a few months the little hall became too small to hold the crowds who attended the services. The Academy of Music, and subsequently Steinway Hall and other large buildings were hired for Sunday evenings, and large numbers were gathered there and many conversions took place. A small church was organized on an Evangelical basis, and a church home was needed.

From that time forth, the work progressed with rapidity, and every upward step was attended with blessing. Larger buildings were secured, and congregations multiplied. The Gospel Tabernacle on

THE ALLIANCE AUDITORIUM.

A MOMENTOUS QUESTION.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., { "What is your life?" on the Text: James 4: 14.

IF we leave to the evolutionists to guess where we came from and to the theologians to prophesy where we are going to, we still have left for consideration the important fact that we are here. There may be some doubt about where the river rises, and some doubt about where the river empties, but there can be no doubt about the fact that we are sailing on it. So I am not surprised that everybody asks the question, "Is life worth living?"

A diversity of opinion in our time as well as in olden time. Here is a young man of light hair and blue eyes and sound digestion, and generous salary, and happily affianced, and on the way to become a partner in a commercial firm of which he is an important clerk. Ask him whether life is worth living. He will laugh in your face and say, "Yes, yes, yes!" Here is a man who has come to the forties. He is at the tip-top of the hill of life. Every step has been a stumble and a bruise. The people he trusted have turned out deserters, and the money he has honestly made he has been cheated out of. His nerves are out of tune. He has poor appetite, and the food he does eat does not assimilate. Forty miles climbing up the hill of life have been to him like climbing the Matterhorn, and there are forty miles yet to go down, and descent is always more dangerous than ascent. Ask him whether life is worth living, and he will draw out in shivering and lugubrious and appalling negative, "No, no, no!"

How are we to decide this matter righteously and intelligently? You will find the same man vacillating, oscillating in his opinion from dejection to exuberance, and if he be very mercurial in his temperament it will depend very much on which way the wind blows. If the wind blow from the north-west and you ask him, he will say, "Yes," and if it blow from the north-east and you ask him he will say, "No." How are we then to get the question righteously answered? Suppose we call all nations together in a great convention on Eastern or Western hemisphere, and let all those who are in the affirmative say "Aye," and all those who are in the negative say "No." While there would be hundreds of thousands who would answer in the affirmative, there would be more millions who would answer in the negative, and because of the greater number who have sorrow and misfortune and trouble, the "Noes" would have it. The answer I shall give will be different from either, and yet it will commend itself to all who hear me this day as the right answer. If you ask me, "Is life worth living?" I answer, It all depends upon the kind of life you live.

In the first place, I remark that a life of mere money getting is always a failure, because you will never get as much as you want. The poorest people in this country are the millionaires. There is not a scissor grinder on the street of New York or Brooklyn who is so anxious to make money as those men who have played up fortunes year after year in stock exchanges, in government securities, in tenement houses, in whole city blocks. You ought to see them jump when they hear the bell ring. You ought to see them in their excitement when a bank explodes. You ought to see their agitation when some proposed reformation in the tariff. Their nerves tremble like trap strings, and with no music in the vibration. The dream of accumulation has eaten into them—eaten into their heart, into their lungs, into their spleen, into their liver, into their love.

Chemists have sometimes analyzed the human body, and they say it is so much magnesia, so much lime, so much chlorate of potassium. If some Christian chemist would analyze one of these financial behemoths he would find he is made up of copper, and gold, and silver, and zinc, and lead, and coal, and iron. That is not a life worth living. There are too many earthquakes in it, too many agonies in it, too many perditions in it. They build their castles, and they open their picture galleries, and they summon prima donnas, and they offer every inducement for happiness to come and live there, but happiness will not come. They make their gateways triumphal arches; she will not ride under them. They set a golden throne before a golden plate; she turns away from the banquet. They call to her from upholstered balcony; she will not listen. Mark you, this is the failure of those who have had large accumulation.

And then you must take into consideration that the vast majority of those who make the dominant idea of life money-getting, fall far short of affluence. It is estimated that only about two out of a hundred business men have anything worthy the name of success. A man who spends his life with the one dominant idea of financial accumulation spends a life not worth living.

So the idea of worldly approval. If that be dominant in a man's life he is miserable. Every four years the two most unfortunate men in this country are the two men nominated for the Presidency. The reservoirs of abuse, and diatribe, and malediction gradually fill up, gallon above gallon, and they will be rolled in it and rolled over and over in it until they are choked, and submerged, and strangled, and at every sign of returning consciousness they will be barked at by all the hounds of political parties from ocean to ocean. And yet, there are a hundred men to-day struggling for that privilege, and there are thousands of men who are helping them in the struggle. Now, that is not a life worth living. You can get slandered and abused cheaper than that!

But what you see in the matter of high political preferment, you see in every community in the struggle for what is called social position. Tens of thousands of people trying to get into that realm, and they are under terrific tension. What is social position? It is a difficult thing to define, but we all know what it is. Good morals and intelligence are not necessary, but wealth, or a show of wealth, is absolutely indispensable. There are men to-day as notorious for their libertinism as the night is famous for its darkness who move in what is called high social position. There are hundreds of out-and-out rakes in American society whose names are mentioned among the distinguished guests at the great levees. They have annexed all the known vices, and are longing for other worlds of diabolism to conquer. Good morals are not necessary in many of the exalted circles of society.

Neither is intelligence necessary. You find in that realm men who would not know an adverb from an adjective if they met it a hundred times in a day, and who could not write a letter of acceptance or regrets without the aid of a secretary. The best way for you to get into social position is for you to buy a large amount of credit, then put your property in your wife's name have a few preferred creditors, and then make an assignment. Then disappear from the community until the breeze blows and come back and start in the same business. Do you not see how beautifully that will put out all the people who are in competition with you and trying to make an honest living? How quickly it will get you into high social position? What is the use of toiling with forty or fifty years of hard work when you can by two or three bright strokes make a great fortune? Ah! my friends, when you really lose your money how quickly they will let you drop, and the higher you get the harder you will drop.

There are thousands to-day in that realm who are anxious to keep in it. There are thousands in that realm who are nervous for fear they will fall out of it, and there are changes going on every year, and every month, and every hour which involve heartbreaks that are never reported. High social life is constantly in a flutter about the delicate question as to whom they shall let in and whom they shall push out, and the battle is going on—pier mirror against pier mirror, chandelier against chandelier, wine cellar against wine cellar, wardrobe against wardrobe, equipage against equipage. Uncertainty and insecurity dominant in that realm, wretchedness enthroned, torture at a premium, and a life not worth living.

A life of sin, a life of pride, a life of indulgence, a life of worldliness, a life devoted to the world, the flesh, and the devil is a failure, a dead failure, an infinite failure. I care not how many presents you send to that cradle, or how many garlands you send to that grave, you need to put right under the name on the tombstone this inscription: "Better for that man if he had never been born."

But I shall show you a life that is worth living. A young man says: "I am here. I am not responsible for my ancestry; others decided that. I am not responsible for my temperament; God gave me that. But here I am, in the evening of the nineteenth century, at twenty years of age. I am here, and I must take an account of stock. Here I have a body which is a divinely constructed engine. I must put it to the very best uses, and I must allow nothing to damage this rarest of machinery. Two feet, and they mean locomotion. Two eyes, and they mean capacity to pick out my own way. Two ears, and they are telephones of communication with all the outside world, and they mean capacity to catch sweetest music and the voices of friendship—the very best music. A tongue, with almost infinity of articulation. Yes, hands with which to welcome, or resist, or lift, or smite, or wave, or bless—hands to help myself and help others.

"Here is a world which after six thousand years of battling with tempest and accident is still grander than any architect, human or angelic, could have drafted. I have two lamps to light me—a golden lamp and a silver lamp—a golden lamp set on the sapphire mantel of the day, a silver lamp set on the jet mantel of the night. Yea, I have that at twenty years of age which defies all inventory of valuables—a soul, with capacity to choose or reject, to rejoice or to suffer. I must develop this body by all industries, by all gymnastics, by all sunshine, by all fresh air, by all good habits. And this soul I must have swept, and garnished, and illumined, and glorified by all that I can do for it and all that I can get God to do for it. It shall be a Luxembourg of fine pictures. It shall be an orchestra of grand harmonies. It shall be a palace for God and righteousness to reign in. I wonder how many kind words I can utter in the next sixty years? I will try. I wonder how many good deeds I can do in the next sixty years? I will try. God help me!"

That young man enters life. He is buffeted, he is tried, he is perplexed. A grave opens on this side and a grave opens on that side. He falls, but he rises again. He gets into a hard battle, but he gets the victory. The main course of his life is in the right direction. He blesses everybody he comes in contact with. God forgives his mistakes, and makes everlasting record of his holy endeavors, and at the close of it, God says to him: "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter into the joy of thy Lord." My brother, my sister, I do not care whether that man dies at thirty, forty, fifty, sixty, seventy or eighty years of age; you can chisel right under his name on the tombstone these words: "His life was worth living."

Amid the hills of New Hampshire in olden times, there sits a mother. There are six children in the household—four boys and two girls. Small farm. Very rough, hard work to coax a living out of it.

Mighty tug to make the two ends year meet. There is only one cal instrument in the house—the spinning wheel. The food is very plain, is always well provided. The winter very cold, but are kept out by the bl she quilted. On Sunday, when s appears in the village church, he cl around her, the minister looks down is reminded of the Bible description good housewife—"Her children at and call her blessed; her husband and he praiseth her."

Some years go by, and the t boys want a collegiate education household economies are severe, calculations are closer, and ur two boys get their education t hard battle for bread. One c boys enters the university, stands in pit widely influential, and preac ousness, judgment, and temperanc thousands during his ministry ar The other lad who got the collegiat cation goes into the law, and then legislative halls, and after awhile b mands listening Senates as he plea for the downtrodden and th One of the younger boys becomes chant, starting at the foot of th but climbing on up until his suc his philanthropies are recognize the land. The other son stays because he prefers farming life he thinks he will be able to tal c father and mother when they get ol

Of the two daughters: when the broke out one went through the hos of Pittsburg Landing and Fortress roe, cheering up the dying and the sick, and taking the last message t dred far away, so that every time thought of her he said, as of old, same is my sister and mother." The daughter has a bright home of her and in the afternoon—the forenoon been devoted to her household,—she forth to hunt up the sick and to enco the discouraged, leaving smiles and diction all along the way.

But one day there start five telegrams from the village for these five absent saying: "Come, mother is danger ill." But before they can be read start, they receive another telegram ing: "Come, mother is dead." The neighbors gather in the old farmhou do the last offices of respect. But as farming son, and the clergyman, and senator, and the merchant, and the daughters stand by the casket of the mother taking the last look, or lifting little children to see once more the fa dear old grandma, I want to ask group around the casket one questi "Do you really think her life was worth living?" A life for God, a life for oth a life of unselfishness, a useful lif Christian life is always worth living.

I would not find it hard to persuade that the poor lad, Peter Cooper, ma glue for a living, and then amassin great fortune until he could build a ph trophy which has had its echo in thousands philanthropies all over country—I would not find it hard to suade you that his life was worth liv Neither would I find it hard to persu you that the life of Susannah Wesley worth living. She sent out one son to ganize Methodism and the other son ring his anthems all through the ages.

But I know the thought in the mind hundreds of you to-day. You say: "W I know all these lived lives worth livin don't think my life amounts to muc Ah! my friends, whether you live a conspicuous or inconspicuous, it is w living, if you live aright. And I want next sentence to go down into the dep of all your souls. You are to be reward not according to the greatness of y work, but according to the holy indus with which you employed the talents y really possessed. The majority of crowns of heaven will not be given people with ten talents, for most them were tempted only to serve the selves. The vast majority of the crow of heaven will be given to people who h one talent, but gave it all to God. A remember that our life here is introdi tory to another. Your life if rightly liv is the first har of an eternal oratorio, a who despises the first note of Haydn symphonies? And the life you live no is all the more worth living because opens into a life that shall never end, at the last letter of the word "time" is th first letter of the word "eternity!"

FOUNDING AN EQUATORIAL EMPIRE.

de Leontieff's Mission to Abyssinia and its Probable outcome — Prince Henri's Friend and Fellow-Explorer.

RIS. Sept. 1.—In the general excitement caused by the Orleans-Turin duel and the various controversies that preceded it, the important fact has been lost sight of by the press and the public that a new empire had just been founded in the heart of the Dark Continent by two of the actors in the now famous drama, one a principal, the other a second. Perhaps this is putting the cart before the horse. The order should be

It is the second, Count Nicolas de Leontieff, newly appointed Governor of the equatorial province of Ethiopia, and Prince Henry, his first deputy, who comes second. These two men will rule a country more than France, broken up by ranges, intersected with rivers, and in minerals and blessed with a temperate climate. The climate is easily bearable, even near the equator, on account of the high altitude of the equatorial provinces of Ethiopia, from the Abyssinian kingdom to the second parallel north of the equator. On the east they are bounded by Harrar and the Somali and on the West by the great African Desert. These lines of demarcation were settled upon some time ago between the English and the French agent, Sir Rannell Rodd, and King Menelek of Abyssinia, the sovereign of the provinces. And the English realize when they lived their claims to this territory that it would be turned practically into a Franco-Russian buffer intended to call a halt to the advance of their own legions to the headquarters of the Nile. To realize the danger now, but it is late. The tall, muscular, wiry, bearded Russian, whom it has been my chance to meet while in his several occasions, and the young scion of the house of Orleans, are resolved that the Union Jack and England shall not wave further than Omdurman—even if it is necessary to unite the banner of the Coptic Church of Abyssinia with the flag of Islam to resist British claims. But it is rather Leontieff, Russian, of whom I would speak. We often heard his name mentioned in connection with Abyssinian affairs, but I doubt whether one can read out of a thousand the remotest conception of his position and personality. There is no exaggeration in saying, however, that this hitherto ill-defined person will probably before long become one of the destinies of all Central Africa and as such he commands himself our attention. We must feel all the more sympathetically disposed toward him on his declaration that the first condition of the civilization of a savage or barbarian country is its Christianization—this without sectarianism. A member of the Greek Orthodox Church, he has never imposed his religious beliefs upon others. He is opposed to English missionaries on the ground of their tendency, as he believes, to secession as a vehicle to further political ends. American missionaries in general with very different feelings, pay a high tribute to their zealous, self-sacrificing work for Christ all the world over. His active sympathy for America dates from the time when Yankee relief ships arrived in the Baltic laden with food and provisions for the starving millions of Russia. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S office among others being received with tokens of gratitude by every class of the population, from the Emperor down.

"We Russians may have our faults," remarked the Count while relating his thoughts on the subject, "but we are not ungrateful. Together with the French, we consider the Americans to be our best friends."

Nicholas de Leontieff, Count of the Abyssinian empire, Governor-General of the Equatorial Provinces of Ethiopia, was born at St. Petersburg in the year 1862—consequently he is only thirty-five years of age. His father was a colonel in the Horse Grenadiers of the Guard, a veteran of Sebastopol and many other campaigns. Probably because he had seen so many hardships himself, he determined to make a lawyer of the lad and for this purpose, after giving him a preliminary schooling in Geneva, Switzerland, sent him to the St. Petersburg law school. But this did not suit the boy. He worked hard enough, it is true, and received his diploma, but instead of drifting into a lawyer's office, decided to seek a commission in the army. This meant four years more study at the Emperor Nicholas School of cavalry, the branch of the service he preferred. At the end of this period young Nicholas received his appointment as sub-lieutenant in the lancers of the Guard and thereupon became a prominent figure at all reviews and parades, for he was six feet two in height, with shoulders to match, and held his seat on horseback like a centaur of old.

Two seasons of this kind of life proved an ample sufficiency for the young man. His was a restless spirit and he decided to see the world. Central Asia just united with the west by the rails of the Transcaspian road naturally suggested itself to him as a field of adventure and enterprise, so who boasted his direct descent from King Solomon. Menelek had come in contact with Russians or rather with a party of Cossacks led by an adventurer named Achinoff, and he had discovered that the tenets of the Russian orthodox church differed little in the main from the teachings of the Coptic Church of Abyssinia. Hence an expressed desire on his part to enter into hierarchical relations with his "brethren of the North," subjects of the little White Father.

Accompanied by Dr. Elyseieff, the Archimandrite Gabro, and a numerous escort bearing presents of value from the Czar, Nicholas de Leontieff started on this all important mission in the fall of 1894. The result surpassed all anticipation. Not only did the Negus receive him with open arms, but probably with a view of securing Russian aid against the encroachments of the Italians settled in Erythrea, he agreed to send a return mission to St. Petersburg composed of some of the highest dignitaries of the Abyssinian Empire. Among these was Prince Damto, afterwards killed at the bloody battle of Adowa.

I will not weary the reader with too many details of Leontieff's subsequent career in Abyssinia. Suffice it to say that his services both during the cam-pact of partisanship and before many moons are past the descendant of the early Tartar conquerors of Great Russia and the scion of the royal house which has given France her kings since the days of Hugh Capet, will have returned to their holding in Darkest Africa, there to spread the light of civilization and to lay the foundations of a mighty Empire.

The accompanying picture of Count Leontieff is from a photograph made specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on the day of his arrival in Paris. He is attired in the costume of an Abyssinian noble. The photograph of Prince Henry shows him seated in his study in the rue Jean Guyon, Paris. It was taken shortly after his return from Thibet.

V. GRIBAYEDOFF.

Russia's 129,211,113 Souls.

In February last, the Russian official census was completed. From the tables of population, it appears that European Russia contains 94,188,750 persons: Poland, 9,442,590; Caucasus, 9,723,553; Siberia and Saghalien, 5,731,732; the Steppes, 3,415,174; Turkestan and the Pamirs, 4,175,101; Finland, 2,527,801, and Khiva, 6,412—a total of 129,211,113 as against a total of 67,330,643 by the census of 1851. The population of towns which have more than a 100,000 inhabitants, among them being St. Petersburg, 1,627,023 (with suburbs); Moscow, 988,610; Warsaw, 614,752; Odessa, 404,651; Lodz, in Poland, 314,780; Riga, 282,943; Kieff, 248,750; Kharkoff, 170,652; Tiflis, 159,862. There are thirty-five towns having a population of over 50,000 inhabitants, and sixty-nine whose population is in excess of 25,000.

Assam's Great Earthquake.

While the recent earthquake was widely felt in India and adjoining countries, nowhere does it seem to have been so destructive as in Assam. A lady (the wife of an English official), writing from that country, says: "This horrible calamity has wrecked every building in Shillong, about one hundred buildings altogether, including the Government house, the secretariat, the post office, the telegraph office, the church, hotel, courts, government printing press (in which some twenty natives lost their lives), the club, the Dak Bungalow, and scores of private houses. All these are now unrecognizable heaps of rubble. Europeans are living in stables, coach-houses, and huts in the bazaar, only too thankful for any sort of shelter above their heads. The waters of the lake rose at the first shock like a solid black wall, and dashed down carrying away the breakwater. They rushed down the valley with a roar like thunder, sweeping away bridges and anything that came in their way."

"One hill village of about 5,000 inhabitants has slipped down into the valley, and many hills on the Chena Ponjee side have split, and the earth is constantly slipping into the valley. Everyone here is busy trying to rescue what they can from the ruins of their houses and endeavoring to make themselves some sort of shelter from the rain. To-morrow evening, Jubilee Day, Mr. Cotton, Chief Commissioner Assam, was to have given a Jubilee address, but alas! Government House is now but a huge heap of stones amid the fir and pine trees. The flag-staff alone remains."

PRINCE HENRI OF ORLEANS IN HIS STUDY IN PARIS.

obtaining a leave of absence he started off. He disappeared into the wilderness beyond the Oxus and for months was unheard of. When he did reappear, however, he brought a perfect museum along with him, consisting of mineral ore, ancient pottery, dried plants, photographs of hitherto unvisited regions, and last, but not least, a collection of skins of wild animals whom he had brought to earth with his unerring rifle. In St. Petersburg he was received with open arms by the leading scientists and his descriptions were listened to with avidity. In the following year, 1892, the military authorities gave him another leave of absence to prosecute further explorations in Asia. He selected Persia and Beluchistan this time and explored the unknown parts of these countries with remarkable success, although at the risk of his life. His efforts on behalf of science were rewarded by two gold medals from the Russian and French Societies respectively. A more substantial reward, however, fell to his share in 1894, when he was given the leadership of a government mission to Abyssinia.

Abyssinia, the only native Christian State in all Africa, Christian, it is true, almost in name only, was ruled by a Negus paign against the Italians and in connection with the peace negotiations, were such as to cement a bond of lasting friendship between him and the Negus, so that the announcement of his recent appointment to the Governorship of the Equatorial provinces with the title of Count, has created little surprise.

Leontieff fully comprehends the necessities of the situation created in Africa by the rivalries of the various continental powers. As a Russian patriot he has felt it his duty to oppose the African policy of Great Britain, and to render impossible the realization of Cecil Rhodes' dream which would mean the planting of the English flag on an uninterrupted stretch of territory reaching from Capetown to the Delta on the Nile. It is in pursuance of this programme that the young Russian explorer advised Menelek to insist on the present demarcation of the equatorial provinces during the negotiations with the Rannell Rodd mission, and also in pursuance thereof that he has welcomed to Abyssinian soil the various French missions sent there during the past year. With Henry of Orleans, who visited the country as correspondent of the Figaro, he has, as above stated, made a solemn

HER PRESUMPTUOUS VOW.

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

BY MRS. M. JEANIE MALLARY.

Author of "A New-Fashioned Woman," etc.

THREE girls sat in earnest conversation in the beautiful grounds of S— College. June had been ushered in with bright, blue skies, balmy breezes and a profusion of every side. To the trio this month of their dreams, when

"That sometimes is the case," Lottie answered, "but can we disobey a direct, plain injunction of our Heavenly Father, and then expect his blessing? Is this not tempting God?"

"I am so ignorant. I never saw it in this light before," said Leila, with deep thoughtfulness, and then so solemn a hush fell that, encouraged by the silence, a great, golden butterfly wafted itself so near that it fanned the curls upon her brow. Suddenly raising herself to her full height, in firm, deliberate tones she said:

"If God will help me to keep me from other sins, I promise to keep myself from that."

"Oh, Coz Leila, don't say that!" cried Cora, "it is wicked, is it not, Lottie?"

"It is, to say the least, self-sufficiency," and Lottie's face was aglow with deep feeling. "Take back those words, dear Leila, or you will be guilty of the sin of presumption."

"I do not want to say or do a thing wrong, girls," Leila replied, "but I have will in abundance, and I can and will keep myself from this sin. I will never marry an unbeliever."

The ringing of the supper bell put an end to the conversation.

Major Courtney was one of the wealthiest citizens of the city of A—, and his wife, a woman of culture and refinement, was a social leader among her circle of acquaintances. They were regarded as consistent members of the church, even though their parlors were often thrown open to a dance, and progressive euchre parties. That they were Christians, no one doubted, but there was no consecration, no hearts emptied of self that they might be infilled with the Holy Spirit, and if Christian work was done, it was prompted by a sense of stern, unrelenting duty, and not from overflowing love to God, for his glory and the salvation of souls.

Among the important lessons which Leila learned at college, was that many so-called "innocent diversions for the young" were positively sinful, and now that her parents proposed to give her a welcome home by a large party, she begged that these amusements be dispensed with.

"I cannot 'keep unspotted' if I dance and indulge in cards so neither shall I do this at home nor in the homes of my friends."

Her parents smiled, and consented to her plans, but felt the reproof keenly. Her young friends argued, told her she would be called "peculiar," "fanatical," said she should not interfere with the enjoyment of others, and would, by her persistence, be a standing reproof to her former friends. To all their arguments her reply was:

"As I see these things now, there is no argument that can be brought forward that can ever induce me ever to take a card in my hand again to play, or to join in any dance."

And so they let her alone, many a Christian conceding that she was right, and many who were not Christians, admiring her for her consistency and firmness. Among her most intimate friends were some who declined to have such amusements at their entertainments since Leila's conscience would not permit her to indulge in them. Major Courtney's home was the scene of many brilliant gatherings, and the conservatory was robbed of its palms and ferns and fragrant flowers to make the house a bower of beauty, but amidst it all, Leila walked the loveliest flower in all that wilderness of bloom.

At a lawn party on Major Courtney's spacious grounds, two young ladies slipped into the shadow of an electric light for a private chat.

"I really enjoy this," said one. "There is something select about Leila's receptions. There is plenty of money here to have things brilliant and beautiful; and when I leave Major Courtney's, I do not spend hours of wakefulness lest I may have sinned in something I may have done. When I leave this house," she added, "now that a new order of things has been instituted, I drop to sleep without a review of the night, fully conscious that for once my amusements have not been sinful. Leila Courtney, the Christian of a few months, is a standing rebuke to many of us whose names have been long upon our church-roll. If I had her wealth and position, I might afford to start some innovation, too, and show that there was a little spark of conscience left; but, no, I fear if I had it all, I would run in the same old rut still."

"I agree with you," replied the other, "that the evenings spent here, are the most delightful I spend anywhere, for this pleasure is refined and elevating, and the conscience is not forever harassed by thought of wrong-doing. Now I care nothing for cards, only play to be in the fashion, and it will be no cross to give up this pastime, and as to dancing, I am thinking seriously of quitting that, too."

"You!" was exclaimed in surprised tones. "You surely are not in earnest. Why, you are the finest, most graceful dancer in this city, whom all the young men seek as a partner to enhance their own skill. You cannot be serious."

"Indeed I am, though my mind is not fully made up. I am pivotal, ready to tip over to either side, but readier for the negative. I have been troubled upon this subject for some time, and I confess that Leila's course has unsettled me still more. I only wish I were as consistent as she, and had the same Christian influence. I took my doubts to that dear old saint, Mrs. Amos, and told her all my trouble, and in her sweet way, she said: 'Why, dearie, could you ask Jesus to bless you in the dance, or let you dance for his glory and the conversion of souls: and then think, if he were to come while you are upon the floor, are you sure you would hear his call in the fuss and din of the music?' How could I answer except with tears! I am weighing her words. I am weighing Leila's influence, but what the outcome will be, I cannot yet say, but when I tell you that I have taken it to my Saviour in prayer, you will scarcely doubt my decision."

Just here a voice from the parlor called for the song of "Auld Lang Syne," and our fugitives were found, and carried to the piano to swell the full chorus.

Two years had not passed over the Courtney mansion when a change came to Leila. Among her many admirers was one whom she favored above any other, and her parents smiled and felt that her choice was wise. Roy Lester was a noble man, a young lawyer, whose success in his chosen profession was phenomenal. He pleased Leila, he pleased her parents, and so it was decided that Roy and Leila should love and live for each other. At his urgent request, preparations for the marriage were begun at once, and arrangements were made for a trip to Europe, which would cover several months. At her cousin's request, Cora came to hurry forward the preparations for a speedy marriage. When she met Roy, she felt that Leila's love had been well bestowed, and yet, as day after day passed, she was not fully satisfied. She remembered a beautiful evening in June, when three friends sat in the gloaming, and she heard again, in memory, the solemn vow which then passed her cousin's lips. Unable to conceal her anxiety any longer, she said:

"Coz Leila, Mr. Lester suits me in every particular as far as physical manliness and mental culture are concerned; and then, he is so brilliant and strong, noble and good, and possesses so many excellent qualities, he must be a Christian?"

The half assertion ending with a rising inflection, troubled Leila, but, looking up, she answered brightly:

"Oh, yes, coz Cora—well, he is not a member of any church, and there comes in his beautiful humility, for he does not feel worthy. Why, yes, he is a Christian—that is—of course—I believe he is, though he does not own it. Oh, I tell you Roy is all right; he is a great deal better than I am."

Cora's question startled Leila, but she shook off the impression it had made, pushing all shadowy thoughts away, feeling that she was disloyal to her lover. Another dagger came in a letter from her friend, Lottie West. After asking her acceptance of a beautiful gift which accompanied the letter, and after telling the pleasant things she had heard of Mr. Lester, she added:

"But above all these qualities, he must possess one far exceeding all others, for of course, he is a Christian, or you would never have promised to marry him."

There was no time now to stop and think: things were rushing rapidly to a focus—the trunks were packed, the marriage over, and the happy pair in a palatial steamer, were soon ploughing the waters of the mighty Atlantic.

When Leila returned, she found an elegant home awaiting her, the gift of her parents. It was beautifully furnished, for naught that taste and wealth could contribute had been withheld. Amidst it all she lived an unhappy woman. When the glamour of her first love had passed, the truth dawned upon her that Roy was far from being a Christian. She did not utter a word of reproach: she felt he deserved none, and she tried to be even more loving than before, though her face grew pale and thin. When alone, she was much upon her knees, and the bitterest tears rained down her cheeks; but she kept her secret locked within her own breast. At last, in a gush from her surcharged heart, she wrote to her cousin:

"My broken vow! It was wicked, self-reliance, presumption! I did not need God: this I could do myself, and behold my work! I tried to be consistent in other things, depending upon my Saviour, and he gave me the needed strength; but when Roy came, his nobleness of character won my heart, and I was infatuated with the man who had offered me his individual heart, and, O God, forgive me, I did not think. I fear I did not care, whether he were a Christian or not. I have laid bare my repentant heart before God, and every hour of the day I beg for forgiveness; and while, to some extent, I have peace, still I am not happy, because with this peace there comes no assurance that Roy will become a Christian. I know you pray for me, but I ask more. I have written to Lottie, and now I beg that you will unite your prayers with ours in earnest wrestling, every evening for my dear husband's conversion, until the answer comes."

Will God graciously hear? Will the praying, earnest wife, repentant of her presumptuous sin, be yet made the instrument to lead her husband to the Cross?

What One Woman Did for Christ.

Mrs. Betsy Baker, a godly woman, in the first decade of the present century, lived at West Dedham, Mass. There she gathered the children of the neighborhood in an unfurnished chamber of her own house to give them religious instruction on the Lord's day. She had but few books except her Bible, and to teach that was from the first her chief object. From the proceeds of the sale of "straw braid," which she was the first to manufacture in this country, she purchased a few useful books, and for many years kept them in a small box which she could carry under her arm. That old chest is still preserved as a precious memento by her children. She continued her work for nearly fifty years, and saw it grow into a church, and it expanded into well-nigh a dozen other schools. Her little audience of young folks in 1814, was one of the very first Sunday Schools ever assembled in America. This simple woman's work, has been rich in blessing and has made her name to be everywhere honored.

LEILA'S SORROW FOR HER BROKEN VOW.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
T. DE WITT TALMAGE, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE. G. H. SANDISON.
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canada, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald will not be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post office at New York, as Second class Matter

Self-Immolation.

WHAT means this mighty increase of suicide? The papers are full of it. There seems no cessation to the bang of the pistol, and the glitter of the knife, and the gleam of the vial of strychnine by which men and women try to put an end to their earthly misery, and well they succeed, but they only shake off one misery to put on a million-fold heavier. When a man in his right mind takes his own life, he hurls himself into a wretchedness compared with which the worst earthly suffering is ambrosial. If a man be demented, he is not responsible for what he does, but if he be in his right mind and take away his own life, he will find no mercy at the judgment. There seems to be a growing impression that perhaps the old philosophers were right, when they suggested that it was lawful to terminate earthly existence when it became insupportable, and one of the most popular books of the day sets forth that same idea. You have no right, under any circumstances, to put yourself out of this world, and I go further and say you have no right to risk your life on the platform of the express train, or bending out of the window, or walking a tight rope, or standing on the edge of a precipice to see how far you can reach over. The most sacred thing ever entrusted to you is your life. Take care of it. In God's name, I command you, take care of it. If it be insupportable, ask God for help. Religion is the panacea for all ills; not an overdose of belladonna. Men stand on the stern of the ocean steamer, having laid off coat and hat for the fatal spring into the briny deep, and women lying down on the rail-track after the headlight of the locomotive had come around the curve, have in that awful crisis heard the comforting words of an all-compassionate God, and halted in their crime and been saved. Turn back, O desperate soul, from your fearful determination, and feel the omnipotent calm there is in the Gospel. Christ is ready now to put his foot on the neck of the wrathful Gennesaret.

Postponed Marriages.

MORE evil comes of late marriage than of early marriage. The reason there are so many unhappy households in this country is because men and women wait until their habits are all fixed and unyielding and inexorable. In most of the troubled houses of this country, had the twain married earlier, they would have assimilated in character, and their peculiarities would not have developed beyond all power of reconstruction. The modern notion that the establishment of a fortune is necessary before a man can set up a household of his own, is one of the destroying influences of society to-day. The happiest home is that in which the twain started life together. The oxen that pull the best in the yoke are those who are "broken" early; but attempt to yoke them after they are old and stubborn, and "whoa," and "haw," and "gee," emphasized with an ox goad are insufficient. The difference between Parisian society and American society is the difference between late marriage and no marriage at all compared with comparatively early affiance; but our cities are gradually moving toward Paris. I never read anything more beautifully pathetic than an incident which came under the observation of a missionary in London who, meeting two persons who had married very early in life and had come down to great destitution, said to the man: "Do you not regret now your early marriage?" The poor man looked at his wife and with tears in his eyes, said: "No, sir; she has been the same to me all through."

Carrying Firearms.

IF a man is going out among Bedouin savages, or to be on police duty in the Fourth Ward, let him have club, knife, derringier; but you have no right with firearms or other weapons of death to be moving amid the peaceful society of our civilized cities. Beside that, it is a mark of a contemptible coward. What a chicken liver instead of a heart you must have that you have to be armed in order to walk through Broadway. There is a certain kind of man who ought never to have a pistol in his pocket, or under his pillow, or anywhere in the house from garret to cellar, and that is the young man or the old man who has a violent temper. To say nothing of a revolver, it seems to me it is dangerous for you to have so much as a percussion cap or a ramrod. You carry a pistol, when suddenly, in a moment of insane fury, you may do something that you will feel sorry for through time and through eternity. With such a temper as you have, to carry a weapon of death is as unwise as to put gunpowder and lucifer matches in the same vest pocket. The ordinary citizen, in the next century, will need no firearms. It is an awful thing to take human life. Have nothing about you that in a moment of altercation, may become, under the impulse of sudden temper set on fire of the devil, the means of appalling crime.

The Sin of Indolence.

THERE are a great many sacrificed by indolence. In the hour of their conversion they looked off upon the world and said: "Oh, how much work to be done, how many harvests to be gathered, how many battles to be fought, how many tears to be wiped away, and how many wounds to be bound up!" And they looked with positive surprise upon those who could sit idle in the kingdom of God while there was so much work to do. After awhile they found their efforts were unappreciated, that some of their best work in behalf of Christ was caricatured and they were laughed at, and they began to relax their effort, and the question was no more "What can I do for Christ?" but "How can I take my ease? Where can I find my rest?" How many who, in the hour of consecration started out nobly, bravely and enthusiastically for the Saviour's kingdom, have fallen back into ease of body and ease of soul!

Why go down hunting for our old idols? We have found out they are insufficient for the soul. Eyes have they, but they see not; ears have they, but they hear not; and hands have they, but they handle not. There is only one God to worship, and he sits in the heavens.

PAYING THE PREACHER.

THIS is one of those duties which we find it easy to shirk, even to complain about; and among the disaffected of all classes, the salaries of ministers are a common topic of grievance, the stock argument being usually the well-worn comparison between the poverty of the Apostles and the luxury of modern preachers. "Why do not our clergy go back to the simplicity and poverty of the first Christian ministers?" is the stereotyped question.

Now ministers, with the utmost fairness, may return the question, "Why do not the laity go back to that estimable, primitive condition when the household of faith had all things in common?" When rich lay Christians sell all they have for the benefit of the commonwealth of the church, then also the clergy will be willing to minister freely at the altar, and like St. Paul, support themselves by the labor of their hands or brains. It would be easy to prove that a great many ministers do now so support themselves; but it is sufficient here to take the argument in its most obvious sense.

In the first place, the Apostles were not called upon to mingle with and influence the nobles and merchant-princes of Rome and Greece; they went generally, like Christ, among the common people. They did not have to prepare for their ministry, by a long and expensive course of training. They were not expected to be householders, and to exercise a graceful and generous hospitality. They did not feel compelled to take the lead in all charitable objects, giving freely of their time, money and efforts. The modern minister has not only to do these things, but he has also to marry a wife, whose culture and intelligence will make her an acceptable co-laborer with him, among the cultured and intelligent members of his congregation. Besides which, he is expected to bring up his family in a manner reflecting social credit on those with whom they have to associate.

Now, just as long as clergymen must fill this social and domestic position, so long they must of necessity be mindful of incomes. Spiritual duties will not support flesh and blood. They cannot renew clothing and pay grocer's bills by miracles. There has been no special creation of self-supporting wives and children for their relief. The ministerial office is certainly a mission, but in these days, it is also a liberal profession, and like other liberal professions, it demands generous recognition and liberal rewards for pre-eminent ability or merit.

Let us suppose that the apostolic rule were at this day prevalent; what would be the consequences? First, fanatical and ignorant persons would take possession of our pulpits; for how shall we be sure, when a man is enthusiastic and wants no money for his preaching, that he has honest evangelism and not self-inflation for his motive? And while we are slowly and carefully discovering his incentives, how much harm might have been accomplished?

Second, we should have crude, personal opinions and prejudices, instead of the settled views of learned scholars and ripe, thoughtful Christians. The years our ministers spend in college, studying the thoughts and systems of great souls passed beyond the skies, is our gain; and we could not afford to exchange them for the drifting ideas of an unlettered clergy. The gathered wisdom of nineteen centuries is funded in the clergy. Ought we not to be willing, and glad, to pay the men who assimilate and dispense it for our benefit?

Third, A clergy not paid in money will certainly pay themselves in power. Look at the orders of the Catholic priesthood. The more poverty they profess, the more spiritual power they claim. Many men would rather have power than money, and the bare-footed friar, holding the keys of heaven and hell, and remitting or retaining sins, as he sees fit, would not exchange places with the best-paid preacher, who only "ministers" to his flock, and does not rule them. We may choose between these alternatives; for it is not in human nature to spend its strength and time for naught.

The justice and propriety of paying the officers who manage our political and social government is readily acknowledged; yet the preacher's office has an authority past computing, for it is exercised day by day and year after year over the most influential, orderly, industrious, moral part of the community. It is the minister who leads this mighty force against sin and sorrow and poverty. He is its guide in all noble public and private good works. He is the director and organizer of its charities, and the leader of its thoughts and purposes. He earns his wages by the sweat of his heart, and his brain, and his brow.

If, then, we are to have an educated, reasonable, thoughtful ministry, we must consider that education, reason and thought come from long and careful and expensive training; and if we have any sense of justice and honesty we shall acknowledge and fulfil the evident duty of "Paying the Preacher."

Amelia E. Parr

BRIEF NOTES.

The American Board has medical aries in almost all of its twenty missions total of thirty-nine, of whom eleven are fifteen are ordained. It also has ten hospitals and thirty dispensaries.

Thirty-two years after the landing first missionaries in the Sandwich Islands were found in the schools and 21,000 in the and a foreign missionary society was composed more than $6,100 annually.

A Congregational pastor at River finding that there were three pastorless within seventy miles of him, is occupying pits in rotation, his wife in the meantime accepting to his own congregation.

According to letters received by the American Bible Society from Peru, four of the have been most prominent in obstructing culation in that country have died within year. One of these is the Bishop of Arequipa ordered the arrest of Mr. Penzotti in 1887.

Mr. S. C. K. Rutnam, M. A., sailed for Ceylon. An opportunity of reaching of labor having unexpectedly occurred, he expects to commence work as a Christian on his arrival, and his wife will practice cal missionary.

An analysis of the statistics of Presbyterian churches has been made by a journal of nomination. It states that there were which last year added over one hundred membership. One of these was in Brook one in New Mexico, one in China, thia, and four in Pennsylvania.

The Turkish Censor who is in charge imports of books complains of one Paul been writing to the people of Galata, a Constantinople. He considers the curious. Inquiry develops the fact that he across some Bible portions, one of which Epistle to the Galatians, and it is this he objects to.

Interesting services were held in Philadelphia recently in the Gospel Tabernacle, Leonard Weaver and Mr. W. S. Weeden revival services. One evening was Crosby night. Every hymn sung was the blind hymn-writer, and she was presented the circumstances under which each posed.

Dr. Colman, of Peking, writing Church at Home and Abroad, reports a professional visit recently to Li Hui he found the venerable statesman intent a Chinese New Testament, which had him by an English missionary. So engrossed he in his reading that he did not notice of his physician for some minutes.

The French Governor of Madagascar forced the London Missionary Society to their College and Normal School at a one-half their valuation. On the arrival first party of the French missionaries, undertaken to carry on the work, he them with the school on the condition Englishman should ever enter it.

An appeal for aid has reached Mass., from Monastir in Turkey. Over hundred Jews of that town are homeless; titute, their homes four hundred and fifty were burned on July 23d. The mis the American Board in that town describes condition as very pitiful, and would be tribute among them any funds contributed purpose.

The Christian League of Philadelphia posed of representatives of evangelical has done a valuable work for the moral of the city by ascertaining the names of of resorts in which the law is broken, and them of their liability under the law. A ber, fearing prosecution or exposure, have rily evicted their tenants who were rini bling or disorderly resorts.

A remarkable revival is reported in tal, in Southeastern Africa. The Missionary view says: "Such a work of grace as been witnessed in the Colony is now going ing to conviction of sin and conversion with every evidence that it is a work of Spirit. The year 1897 will hereafter be able among the churches of Natal as the among the churches of Africa."

Recent news from Persia is to the effect the new Shah has ordered that Jews there have religious liberty. Mohammedan people must cease. It is also announced numbers of Nestorians in Persia have been Russian Orthodox Church receiving. Jews is not encouraging. It probably means the Nestorians fear persecution, and feel selves safer in a church protected by the of Russia.

Complaint is made by the Turkish office of the effects of the American Mission schools in Armenia. Mehmed Nourky quoted as saying that the revolutionaries pupils of the American schools, and at schools are a curse to Turkey and Armenia. We can understand that the Sultan and his ciples ministers hate them. They are for tyranny and have shielded their victims cruelty.

A new Settlement has been incorporated in New York. It is situated at 163 Avenue is called the Young Woman's Settlement. ready three clubs have been organized with it, called respectively the Sangster Club, the Loyalty Club, and the Club. There are more than two hundred members of these clubs, the majority of whom within two blocks on each side the street. The Executive Committee is composed of women.

An effort is being made to induce David J. Brewer, Associate Justice of the States Supreme Court, to accept the Presidency of the American Board of Foreign Missions. Storrs persists in his determination to the approaching meeting at New Haven. If Justice Brewer accepts, the three great of the church will all have laymen as Presidents. The others are President Morrill E. Galt, herst, and Gen. O. O. Howard, who actively at the head of the Missionary Association and the Home Missionary Society.

Jews in Conference at Basle.

THIS century has not witnessed a scene more deeply interesting and significant than the Conference which has just closed its sessions in the quaint little Swiss town of Basle. Delegates from many lands assembled there, who for the time, made the difference in their nationality and the differences in their theological views remembering only that they were of one race, descended from a common ancestor. In recent numbers of this journal, events have been described, which Dr. Theodore Herzl, the brilliant journalist of Vienna, to summon this Conference. He had ascertained from influential statesmen in Constantinople that the Sultan of Turkey would consider favorably a proposition to acquire, by a species of lease, the whole or a part of Palestine for the purpose of founding a Jewish state. Believing that the Jews, scattered all over the world, still held their ancient land dear that they would contribute to the cause for such a purpose and that large numbers would flock to settle in the Holy Land and develop the land, if they were guaranteed civil and religious liberty and permanency of tenure, he called the conference to discuss the project. The Swiss town was a convenient place for the rendezvous because of its central situation and the advantages of travel, which have rendered it the point of the commerce between France, Switzerland, Germany and the Low Countries. It is a cosmopolitan town standing on both banks of the Rhine, its two parts connected by a bridge. Basle came more than a hundred prominent Jews in response to Dr. Herzl's invitation. Dr. Herzl informed them of the facts and the conditions of the situation, as far as he had been able to gather them and asked their opinions. His object was received with enthusiasm and a central committee of twenty-three was organized, to be located in Basle, with authority to raise a fund of ten million dollars to defray the expenses of the enterprise. It is proposed to make a thorough survey of the land, to establish telegraphic and telephonic communication, to send there a large contingent of skilled labor, to clear the land and prepare for agriculture and general occupation. Sites will be selected for new towns, new roads will be made, bridges will be built, the railroad system extended. Hereafter settlers may be expected to come from Jewish communities in every land. Sixty-five thousand Jews are already in the Holy Land and the reports which come from them indicate that the land is capable, under modern methods of cultivation, of supporting six millions. Dr. Herzl is convinced that manufactures could be established and that the country could soon become a centre of trade and industry. Judging from what the Jews have done in every country, in spite of the restrictions and burdens imposed upon them, it is not difficult to believe Dr. Herzl's prediction. The most doubtful question is as to the Sultan's attitude. At any hostility on his part Dr. Herzl is fearful. He believes that the Jews will render him such services in the management of the finances of his empire that his friendship would be secured. It is expected or desired that the Jews will go to Palestine from lands where they are contented and are well treated; that like the Germans and Englishmen and the Italians and Irishmen in this country, the Jews, wherever they may be, while loyal to the government under which they live, shall have a patriotic love of their own land and take an active interest in its welfare. The plan seems feasible. Christians everywhere will rejoice if it can be realized and will give their best wishes and their prayers for its success. So we may yet see the promise fulfilled which through centuries of cruel persecution has been the stay and hope of this brilliant and long suffering people:

I will bring again the captivity of my people, Israel, and they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them, and they shall plant vineyards and drink the wine thereof, and they shall also make gardens and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their lands and they shall no more be pulled out of their land, which I have given them. (Amos 9: 14.)

Wanton Mischief Thwarted.

Recent acts of wanton mischief by Brooklyn boys, who have been throwing stones at moving trains and otherwise injuring property, have necessitated a watch being kept on them by the police. On August 29 a policeman who had been assigned to this duty, noticed five tough-could feel the vibration of the rails, which told them that the train was coming. They struggled to escape, but their captor held them down. When the last stone was taken out, and the switch closed, the train was not a hundred yards away. As it thundered past, the boys turned sick with horror at the danger they had so narrowly escaped. It may be hoped that their terror may have a permanent effect on them, and that it may save them from a course which brings upon the evildoer a similar retribution:

He that pursueth evil, pursueth it to his own death. (Prov. 11: 19.)

Afraid of Diphtheria.

The proprietor of a hotel at a famous summer resort in New York State, declares that she has lost over five thousand dollars this season by the circulation of a false report among her guests. Two hundred rooms were vacated in one day and other guests who were coming stayed away. The scare was caused by the report that diphtheria had broken out in the hotel. The fact was that one lady and two children were ill with tonsillitis, which is pronounced non-infectious. The physician in attendance said that there was absolutely no danger in either case, and that he had tried to keep the sickness from becoming noised about. He was forced, however, to notify the health authorities, and somebody started the rumor that an epidemic was imminent. The news flew like wildfire and the next morning the trunk packing began and, despite forbid the naturalization of Chinese, but as to children born here of Chinese parents, the question as to their citizenship must depend upon whether the are to be deemed "subject to the jurisdiction" of the United States within the meaning of this article of the Constitution. The question, happily, can never be raised as to citizenship in the kingdom of heaven. Though children cannot be born into it, none who desire it and seek it in the prescribed way are excluded, whatsoever their race or color.

After this I beheld and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues, stood before the throne, clothed with white robes and palms in their hands. (Rev. 7: 9.)

A Stolen Child.

A sad accident is reported from Wyoming. A child has disappeared from a farm-house, and it is feared that it has met a terrible fate. Last year, the little one's mother died, and the father feeling himself unable to care for an infant little more than a year old, placed it in charge of a farmer's wife, who lives on Casper Mountain. A few days ago, the farmer rose early to go to a distant part of his farm, leaving his wife asleep and the child in a cot close to her bedside. He returned for breakfast three hours later, and found his wife still fast asleep, but the child was gone. It had evidently risen and gone out in its night-dress. The prints of its baby feet could be traced in the soft soil and they led along a level path from the door to a spring at some distance from the house. There they disappeared, and in place of them were the tracks of a mountain lion. There were no marks of a struggle, but there could be no doubt that the child had been suddenly seized and carried off by the ravenous beast. A search was made for it, but no trace of it could be found. The distress of the foster-parents is extreme. They naturally reproach themselves for the lack of vigilance which has had this terrible result. Very seldom in our land does so shocking a calamity occur; but there is abundant need for watchfulness in all who have the care of children, lest a far worse evil befall the little ones who may wander in forbidden paths.

Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour. (1. Peter 5: 8.)

A Tragedy at Niagara.

A distressing fatality occurred at Niagara Falls recently. A boat containing three men was carried over the Horse-shoe Falls and all on board were lost. The boat was noticed by people on both sides of the Falls as it floated slowly down the river below where such boats usually go. It was soon apparent that either the sail was not pulling with effect against the stream, or else those in the boat knew little about sailing. The boat was nearer the Canadian shore, and for that shore it seemed to be heading. When the first reef and first line of breakers were met those in the boat seemed to recognize their peril, for they got out their oars and pulled as hard as they could. But they had gone too far on the treacherous current, and as the boat plunged over another reef it capsized, and the three occupants were thrown into the white-capped waters. They were stout swimmers, and they struck out for dear life. One of them nearly reached the shore, but was drawn under and carried over the falls after his two companions. The broken boat was subsequently recovered, but the bodies have not yet been found. The disaster was due to the party not discovering their danger until too late. When they did discover it the current had them in its power, and their strength as rowers and swimmers could not save them. Many souls are lost in the same way. The sinner believes he can stop in his career of sin and reform when he decides to do so; but when he makes the effort he finds that he has overestimated his power:

Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. (1. Cor. 10: 12.)

BASLE, IN SWITZERLAND. THE SCENE OF THE RECENT ZIONIST CONFERENCE.

looking lads about sixteen years of age loitering beside the tracks of the Brighton Beach road near the entrance to the tunnel. After passing them, the policeman became suspicious and returned as speedily as possible to the place where he had seen them. They had disappeared but he saw them a little farther up the track, where there is an automatic switch. The policeman hurried to the spot and at sight of him they scattered. He succeeded in catching two of them and dragging them in spite of their struggles to the switch. He found, as he expected, that they had been in mischief. The switch had been forced open, and a number of stones had been wedged in, to prevent it closing. He realized in a moment that if those stones were not removed and the switch closed, the train then nearly due would be wrecked and, as it would probably be crowded with passengers returning from a day at the beach, many lives would be lost. His indignation at the wicked act grew as he thought of the consequences, and he determined that the boys he had in his clutches should learn a lesson. He forced them to lie down, on their stomachs, on the track and remove the stones. They knew, when they put them there, that the train would soon be there; now they realized that unless they got the stones out in time, it would pass over their bodies. They worked hard, but the stones had been wedged in so firmly that it was not easy to remove them. Their hands were cut and bleeding and they the assurances of the proprietress of the hotel, that there was no diphtheria in the house and no danger of an epidemic, the guests continued vacating their rooms, and by night there were only about thirty at supper. If there had really been an outbreak of diphtheria the panic might have been reasonable, for no one would voluntarily expose themselves unnecessarily to the danger of catching the terrible disease. It would be well if people were equally on the alert to avoid moral contagion but, unhappily, there is less care about that danger, though there is Apostolic warning of the peril:

Be not deceived; Evil company doth corrupt good manners. (1. Cor. 15: 33, R. V.)

Chinese Citizenship.

From a circular just issued by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General in respect to the enforcement of the Chinese Exclusion laws, it appears that a curious and important question concerning the status of the children of Chinese parents is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. When such children are born in this country, are they citizens of the United States, or does their Chinese parentage make them subjects of the Emperor of China? The Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution declares all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof to be citizens of the United States, and of the State wherein they reside. Our laws

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER.

Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 26. Golden Text Matt. 5: 16. Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in Heaven.

HE twelve lessons to be reviewed, bring the history of the early Church down to about the year 58. The period with which they deal is one of about eight years, beginning with the introduction of Christianity into Europe. It was a momentous epoch for the Church. Luke evidently realized the importance of the development.

He ceases to write about the work of the Twelve Apostles, and turns to the labors of Paul as the real matter of consequence to the Church. One reason for his doing so, of course, would be the fact that he appears to have been in close touch with Paul in his work; at some periods journeying with him and at others remaining behind to continue the work, while Paul went forward on his travels. So able an historian, however, would not have suffered his personal association with one sphere of the work to have monopolized his narrative, if he had not perceived that in this sphere was the real life and growth of the Church.

At the beginning of the period, the area in which the Gospel seed had been sown was very small. Some twenty years had elapsed since, at the ascension of Christ, the Apostles had received their commission to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. In spite of these instructions they did not appear to understand that the door was to be opened to the Gentiles. It is easy to see why such an idea was shocking to them. The countries outside of Judea were given up to idolatry and immorality of a degree which could not be described or even hinted at in decent modern society. In Rome itself, even among the high-born families, the most foul and disgusting practices were common. Not even Sodom and Gomorrah were so vile as Rome was in that day. From the palace of the Emperor down, vice of the most loathsome kind was prevalent. Very naturally the Jew had come to look upon the heathen world with contempt, and to see in the admission to the Jewish nation by the ancient rite, the one way of redemption from the corruption with which the Gentile world reeked. A few persons had taken that way. Men like the centurion to whom Peter preached and the Ethiopian whom Philip baptized, attracted by the purity of the Jewish faith and life, had been received as proselytes. These, of course, were eligible for membership in the Christian church, but that the Gospel should be offered to pagans who had taken no steps to enter the Jewish fold was revolting to the mind of a Jewish Christian. This feeling found expression when the news reached Jerusalem of such a movement at Antioch. This city stood on the north of Palestine, and was famous for its wealth and frivolity. It was one of the great highways of trade, attracted merchants of all nations, and among its half million inhabitants were representatives of all races. It was one of the most corrupt cities in all that region. When the news was reported to the Jewish Christians that a church had been organized there, that pagans, who had not previously been received into Judaism, were being admitted to church membership, there was an indignant protest. Paul knew that if admission to Judaism was made a condition of admission to the church, a barrier would be raised which would be fatal to the spread of Christianity, and therefore he and Barnabas went to Jerusalem to have the question settled once for all. The council that was summoned yielded, and the Gentiles were admitted to the church without being required to submit to the rite of initiation to Judaism. But there is reason to believe that the Council yielded reluctantly, and that many Jewish Christians, to the last, looked on the Gentile converts as aliens and interlopers.

The concession, however, was put to energetic use. Antioch became the pioneer church of missionary work. From it, already, Paul and Barnabas had gone forth preaching in Southern Asia Minor. After the unhappy quarrel between the two old friends, Paul continued to make it the starting-point for his journeys, and the place to which he went for rest on his return. He was now nearly fifty years old, and had been a Christian about thirteen years. He was definitely committed to missionary work—forced into it against his will. His own inclination was to preach to the Jews in Jerusalem, and as

This second journey occupied four years, during which he founded several churches and traveled hundreds of miles.

A brief visit to Jerusalem and a brief rest at Antioch followed, and then Paul set out again. He went apparently by the former route through Asia Minor, but more rapidly, being anxious to reach Ephesus, which was the metropolis of south-western Asia Minor. There Paul would meet travelers of all races and wide opportunities would be open to him. He had just touched at the city during his second journey and had seen how promising a field it was. On his third tour he stayed there three years and we know by his subsequent talk at Miletus (Acts 20: 18-21), with representatives of the Church, how those years were spent. Earnest preaching and teaching, "both publicly and from house to house" had occupied those three years. Thence he crossed the sea to revisit the Church at Corinth which after his former visit had been distracted by errors and the open backsliding of some of its members. He had written them two letters which happily have been preserved in the New Testament. Now he visited them in person and having set the church in order, he sailed for Jerusalem.

The period thus occupied with travel and labor was rich in results for the church. The churches Paul founded have passed away, but the letters he wrote them in the intervals of his labor, remain. From them an influence has gone forth which has imand went away. He understood that was to keep his lamp trimmed and light shining.

For whom Christ died (1. Cor. 15). An uneducated man whose address was in some of the lowest classes, applicant for a license to preach, minister who was conducting the nation said: "Now, brother, will you some of the evidences of the divinity of Christ?" The candidate was puzzled, remained silent. The examiner raised his question in another form: "What makes you think Christ was dead?" Tears filled the eyes of the candidate, raising his hand heavenwards, he said: "What makes me think he was dead? Why, bless him! he saved my soul!"

Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love (Rom. 12: 10). Men recognize in another the love of the same Lord, they see in it a brotherhood stronger than blood relationship. Drummond used to tell of a meeting on shipboard of two men who had served on opposite sides in the war. One of them, sitting alone one night, sang "Jesus, lover of men." Presently another voice, singularly joined in the singing. At the close of the hymn the first singer rose to find the man who had joined in the music. Finding him he said: "I have heard you sing before, the same hymn. Were you in the Confederate side. He had often that hymn in scenes of sorrow, and among the dead. One night, when he was doing sentry duty near the edge of a wood, and he was lonely and fearful, not knowing a bullet might come out of the darkness and end his life, he sang it and found comfort from it. The words of the stanza, "Cover my defenceless head with the shadow of thy wing," seemed especially appropriate to his circumstances. "I was there," replied the first man, "and you were nearer death than I knew. I was at the head of a Union scout, and we saw you just going to pick you off when you sing those words. I could not order to fire after that. I let the men lower their rifles, and we left your watch."

It is more blessed to give than to receive (Acts 20: 35). If it had not been for this, we should not have known that Jesus was this. None of the evangelists recorded this, but it is so like him that we once accept it. Experience proves it. An old gentleman speaking of the end of his life with his nephew said him if he would like a receipt for his depression. The young man would. "I found it out many years ago," said his uncle, "almost by accident. I was alone in the city one hot day. My mother and sisters had gone to the mountains and my father and brother were in Europe. The house was deserted. I went into it after business it was like a grave. I suppose I was a little down by the heat, for I grew depressed. I almost wept with sheer loneliness. I went to a concert, but the thought of that empty house afterwards kept me from enjoying it. The next day I was going home with a horrible misery on me, and saying to myself, 'I would give anything for company.' I went to a widow with a child in her arms, and another little one clinging to her skirt. I went into one of the streets on the evening. Her dress showed that she was poor, and her face was marked with weeping. I followed her and continued into conversation with her. I was a very sad one. I spent two days in food for her and her children. I paid another three dollars for the rent of her room. Her gratitude never forget. But that is not my point. My depression was gone. I was happy. I put my key in the door of my home, and I passed a pleasant night among my books. Apart from that to the woman, I considered my five dollars a good investment. I could not spend it in any other way so as to have the same change in my own spirit. I have tried the plan many times since, always with the same effect. The way to cure low spirits is to make one else happy, and you may so do it by a kind word or some little ray he pointed out when the call to the work came to him, there were obvious reasons for his doing so. He had become famous as a persecutor of the Christians; and the fact of his change of life might be expected to have weight, when he should preach in the city where his zeal was so well known. But he was not permitted to follow his own plans, and it is probably well that he was not. His life would have been cut short in the city "that killed the prophets and stoned them that were sent unto her. The Gentile churches might not have been founded for many years, and we should have missed the letters which form so important a part of the New Testament.

MAP OF THE MISSIONARY JOURNEYS OF THE APOSTLE PAUL.

Now that Paul's hands were set free by the decision of the council, and no one had authority to demand of his converts that they submit to the hated rite of admission to Judaism as a preliminary to becoming Christians, he went forward with new energy. The whole world was open to him. His next missionary journey extended farther into Asia Minor, and when he reached the Western coast, he crossed the sea and boldly preached the Gospel in Europe. At Philippi, at Berea, at Corinth, and even in Athens itself he proclaimed the Gospel and gathered converts from the Gentiles. The undaunted courage of the man, his persistence in spite of ill usage, his unflagging energy, his contempt for hardship and fatigue rendered him an ideal missionary.

pressed all Christendom. They show how this great man yearned over the churches and what were the blessings that he desired for them. His teaching has blessed every succeeding generation. Five specimen passages have been studied during the past quarter: His appeal based on the Second Coming of Christ; his doctrine of love as the mightiest power in society; his rule of self-denial for the benefit of the weak; and his injunction of the consecration of wealth. These passages show the character of this wonderful man and the intensity of the spiritual force which is still felt in all the churches.

Let your light so shine before men (Golden Text). The story is told of a Christian who was very despondent and gloomy who used to go to his pastor at frequent intervals to get encouragement. But after a time the pastor was shut up in prison in Christiania for preaching the Gospel. One evening as the pastor looked out of his barred window, which overlooked the market-place, he saw his sorrowful friend looking wistfully up. The pastor surmised that he had one of his fits of depression and was longing for comfort. The latter sought some way of giving him a word of counsel. Looking around, he noticed that the candle which gave light to his gloomy cell had burned so that the wick was long and little light came from it. He held it up for his friend to see, then cut the wick and the light rose to a clear flame. The man nodded his head

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE.

Our Family at Mont-Lawn.
Sole of the Staff at Our Children's Home—A Band of Christian Workers.

OUR readers are already so well acquainted with the character of the life-saving and health-giving work among the tenement children which for the last four summers, has been in progress at Mont-Lawn, that they will naturally be interested in the group of Christian women who for nearly three months have been conducting that work so ably and pleasantly. It is something loved by children. A child's own prompts it to quick recognition of friends, and it soon learns to distinguish between one who really loves children and one who merely tolerates them.

It is not an easy thing to assemble together under one roof a party of women who are all children's friends in this respect. The Christian Herald Children's Home has been unusually fortunate, however, from its experience, to add down to its staff member, is an exceptionally popular one with the youngsters, who may rely upon to make no mistake in such a matter. In the love of Christ, moved by an earnest desire to serve him, however humble the capacity, the young women—many of them talented and educated, and all exceptionally bright and capable—have taken their place among the tenement waifs and orphans. They have comforted them with the affection of elder sisters, and have soothed their sorrows and dried their tears. They have mended their rags, amused them, and have been their guides in exploring parks and woods, and their companions in merry sport on the lawn. They have sung to them the hymns of the Gospel, and have cheered their voices with their evening songs.

In these summer weeks, the little hearts have been cheered by the loving treatment they receive at the Home while waiting there, and an indelible impression has been made on countless little hearts. The staff-workers, themselves, have gained much from their contact with these children of the street, and the summer has been with benefit to all. Of the more than 100 children who have been sheltered and cared for at Mont-Lawn since June, it is safe to say that not one has carried away from the pleasantest recollections of our Home and its workers. Visitors to Mont-Lawn multiply during the weeks of the season, and all are welcomed. They never tire listening to the cheering of the children or watching their merry pranks on the lawn. Many are interested in certain children and know the youngsters about their home in the big city. Sometimes a mother who she sees in some wee tottler a likeness to some dear dead child of her own, greets the waif all the more tenderly. Many of our little guests, with much effort and no little spilling of ink on firm and paper, have written letters to the kind patrons who supplied the money to bring them to Mont-Lawn, and their naive expressions of gratitude and admiration brighten the recipients of the letters.

During the week the following contributions have been received for our Fresh-Air work:

Prevack's d. $1,239 36	Mrs Goodwin 100
M J Rogers 100	I H N. Hollenberg 100
Miss S K Walbert 300	C P. Balto 100
M E Hizar 400	In memory of dear Walter, Ellenboro 100
Mrs O Traylor 400	A B C. Providence 200
C E D. Westfield 100	Berdell J. C. 500
Friend, Sidney 200	L E A. Elmhurst 100
Violet Koch 300	Shut-in, Remington 100
M E G. Burlington 100	Annt Maria, Hempst 300
Des Brisay Campbell & bro. 300	Mrs E W Beach 300
E C S. Adrian 100	Mrs J B Rayfuse 300
Mrs M E L. Phila. 300	E. Berne 100
C B Glen 100	Mrs E J Chamberlin 250
Auburn 100	Z Z. Phila 100
Prim'y Dept of Christian Reid SS. Hackensack 150	Mrs T H. Bailliboro 100
Harriet Annie James 200	Viola C Hill 75
Friend, Balto 200	Lyman Cobb 300
Reader of C H. New Haven 100	J W Stocke 150
Mrs H R P Stafford 600	Geo Bollman 50
Jno Williams 500	N R Tannehill 300
Fred W Heal 300	S R Cowles 500
Pres ch. Janesville 300	Mrs STR. Cincinnati 250
Russell W Hargrave 300	Ida Felty 300
	K D Circle, Lebanon Springs 300
	M P R. Vassalboro 100

to note that the centenarian, though now very feeble, has not lost her interest in Christian work, and that her descendants are also active in the Church. This family history recalls the recent reunion in the Smith family of Tottenville, Staten Island, N. Y., where five generations were also represented. An account of the reunion was published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at the time.

A Boy's Ambition.

Every boy cannot become president of the United States, but he can get a job at lots of other things that are honorable and worth working for. Presidents Lincoln, Grant and Garfield started on the presidential race when they were in their teens. They somehow got the habit of hard work early, and worked for something definite; made use of their leisure time, didn't go to the theatre very much, nor did they quit work and forget all about it when the whistle blew at six o'clock.

If you want to get out of the crowd at the bottom of the ladder, says a writer in Men, you will have to work harder than they do. If there are no prospects ahead in the position you are in, fit yourself for some other line of business where there are some prospects

A MEMORY.

THE fire upon the hearth is low,
And there is stillness everywhere;
Like troubled spirits, here and there
The firelight shadows fluttering go.
And as the shadows round me creep,
A childish treble breaks the gloom,
And softly from a farther room
Comes: "Now I lay me down to sleep."

And somehow with that little prayer,
And that sweet treble in my ears,
My thought goes back to distant years
And lingers with a dear one there;
Again I hear the child's Amen,
My mother's face comes back to me;
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hand again.

Oh, for an hour in that dear place!
Oh, for the peace of that dear time!
Oh, for that childish trust sublime!
Oh, for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet as the shadows round me creep,
I do not seem to be alone—
Sweet magic of that treble tone—
And "Now I lay me down to sleep."

—EUGENE FIELD.

Where Thimbles Come From.

PROBABLY very few of our readers know that the thimble, which does such good service in every well-kept home, was originally known as a "thumb-bell," because it was worn on the thumb—where it is still worn by sailors and many sail-makers. It is said that the thimble is a Dutch invention; and in 1884, in Amsterdam, the bi-centennial of the thimble was celebrated with a great deal of formality. This very valuable addition to a lady's workbasket was first made by a goldsmith named Nicholas van Benschoten, the ancestor of the American family of Benschotens. The first thimble made was presented in 1684 to Anna Van Wedy, the second wife of Killeen van Rensselaer, the purchaser of Rensselaerwyck, and the first patroon. Madame van Rensselaer's memory was duly honored in Holland on the occasion of the thimble bi-centennial. In presenting this useful gift, Van Benschoten begged Madame van Rensselaer "to accept this new covering for the protection of her diligent fingers as a token of his esteem." It was not until 1696, just two hundred years ago, that the thimble was introduced into England by a Hollander named John Lofting, who opened a thimble manufactory at Islington. It is now used all over the world. Sail-makers use it as it is a flat metal disk with indentations, held by a strap on the ball of the thumb, and with which the needle is forced through the stiff canvas. But the thimble of commerce is that every-

Disagreeable Things.

One sometimes has disagreeable things to do, things which one would like to shirk, things which are among the penances and humiliations of life. If they are clearly in the order of duty, if they belong to the catalogue of must-be's, then the only escape from an accusing conscience is in getting them done with at the earliest practicable moment. They somehow come into the realm of that steady, self-repressing, self-forgetting routine of actions which may be described as hoeing one's row. Blessed be drudgery, a wise man has pithily said, and blessed be whoever accepts drudgery in a cheerful and contented and even thankful spirit. For after the hoeing of the row there follows the green leaf, the bloom, the fruit, the fragrance, and the glad abounding joy of harvest. These follow, but before these came the hoeing of the row.

MATRON COLLINS AND HER STAFF OF WORKERS AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOME.

- | | | | |
|--------------------------------|--------------------------------|----------------------------|-------------------------|
| 1. MISS HELEN COLLINS, Matron. | 4. MISS LILLIAN DRANE. | 7. MISS EMMA WEIDENKOPF. | 10. MISS MAY PIERSON. |
| 2. MISS JESSIE THOMAS. | 5. MISS ELIZABETH SILBERNAGEL. | 8. MISS CORA HOLMES. | 11. MISS ELLA V. JONES. |
| 3. MISS IVEAGH WHARTON. | 6. MISS CORA RUSSELL. | 9. MISS ISABEL TROWBRIDGE. | 12. MISS AGNES FISHER. |
- V.V. Visitors at the Home. Dr. Klopsch, who was also visiting Mont-Lawn when the photograph was taken, appears in the group standing beside the Matron. Some of the Home children are seen on the right.

M C Colegrove 200	K G W. N. Y. 300
Friend of Children, Middleboro 200	Cash, Nantucket 300
Lucile Davis 200	Mrs Dr. Wall 100
For one of Christ's little ones, Iowa City 300	X. Washington 500
I H N. Dudley 100	Mrs O Shanklin 250
C H Kent 500	Abin Wood 50
Eveline Hubbs 100	Lizzie Hawk 100
No St. Livingston 600	Friends of children, Middlebury 300
Friend, Broad Brook 100	Boys of L T. S. S. cl. 100
E M Hawk 300	Tangerine 100
Mrs S F Cox 100	Mrs E J C. Brooklyn 100
Grant & Laid, Grand Island 55	W I. Northwood 200
For the Master's sake, N. Hanson 200	I H N. Salina 100
From a Canada girl 100	H K. Marion 100
From a Scotch woman, Canada 100	H N. San Antonio 300
	Daniel Terry 100
	A A & SA Hoover 300
	Total $1,450 66

Five Generations.

In the little fishing village of Ferrydew, opposite Montrose, Scotland, lives an old widow named Watts, who was born in the same village in 1797. She has spent all her life there. Her descendants number 269 persons and are scattered in many parts of the world. They number 12 children, 80 grandchildren, 175 great-grandchildren, and also two great-great-grandchildren. Five generations were grouped together lately and photographed in the old Watts family home at Ferrydew. It is pleasant

"The Blessed Home-Land."

I am longing for the Home-land,
Blessed Home-land in the heavens;
Where the sufferings of this earth-life
Will be changed for endless rest.
For the greetings of the loved ones
Who have journeyed on before me,
And the sweeter, crowning welcome,
From the One who loveth best.
His dear love, so pure and boundless,
Far beyond my weak conception,
Will encircle me forever
In the Home-land of the blest.
New Haven, Conn. MRS. ANNIE B. HINE.

HEROIC PERSONALITIES

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

A WHITE RIBBON HEROINE.

NO society of modern times has done so much to develop American women and arouse in them the heroic qualities as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. I have just been having a conversation with Mary Clement Leavitt, who was the first messenger to carry the White Ribbon banner around the world, and proclaim its total abstinence gospel in far-away lands.

MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT.

During our conversation, Mrs. Leavitt told me a most interesting story of her visit to the King of Siam and I am sure her story will be interesting to every one.

Mrs. Leavitt had been in Siam for some time, but had had no opportunity to see the King, as his Majesty was absent from the city. Just before her departure, however, the King returned, and within six hours he sent her a messenger, saying that he would give her an audience at six o'clock next day, and ordering Mr. Bradley, the English interpreter, the son of an American missionary, to attend and interpret the conversation. Everything in Siam goes by order, and not by request. Mrs. Leavitt arrived at the exact moment, and was shown into an ante-room decorated with armor from many countries.

The new Italian Minister was with his Majesty, so they had to wait a few minutes. Presently they passed up into a room of pinkish tinge, ornamented with gold; a smiling young gentleman came toward the temperance orator, and taking her by the hand, led her to the centre of the room and into the immediate presence of the King of Siam.

The King spoke English well and understood it perfectly, but he would not converse in a language that his courtiers could not understand, so he talked in Siamese through an interpreter.

Their conversation immediately began on the purpose of her mission around the world. The King agreed with Mrs. Leavitt that it would be well for his kingdom if never a drop of liquor should enter it again. He was himself a total abstainer, but even his example had not been enough to keep his half brothers (there were about seventy of them), from following the bad example of the foreign diplomats.

When the White Ribboner suggested to him that he might make total abstinence a pre-requisite for promotion, His Majesty, with a smile and a peculiar look around upon the thirty-five or forty courtiers who were in attendance, said: "I have never thought of that. I will meditate upon it, and I think I will act upon it."

In reply to her query if he could not prohibit the introduction of liquor into his country, he said it would be easy enough with China, whence most of it came, but with regard to England and France, it would require deep thought and great diplomacy, or the greatest evils would be brought upon him.

Speaking of Christianity, the King turned to her and said: "But your Christian religion allows the use of intoxicating liquor, how then can you work for its entire suppression?" She explained the new line along which she was working and in which she thoroughly believed, to which His Majesty responded: "I am very glad to hear this, for I have often wondered why a religion so superior to all others except as to drink, should fall below ours (the Buddhist), and the Mohammedan, in that particular. It is much to be hoped that this new view will prevail, and that all missionaries will teach it, especially in Buddhistic countries."

The king had learned his English from the Bible as his text book, under the instruction of Mrs. Bradley, an American missionary.

It appeared to Mrs. Leavitt that he believed the Christian religion to be the true one, and that he wished to see it spread in his kingdom, for he said often to missionaries, "Teach as many women and children as you can. It is a good religion for women and children. He was far too astute a man not to know that the religion which was taught to women and children would permeate everywhere, but the tenure by which he held his throne was the vow he had taken on himself to support the religion of Buddha.

At the time of Mrs. Leavitt's visit the present king was only a lad of twelve years, and was said to be a very gifted boy. It is his opinion that if he inaugurates as many reforms as his father did, the kingdom will approach the status of a Christian country. Up till the time of his father's reign, no one ever came into the presence of the King of Siam, except creeping on hands and knees, but immediately after his coronation, when the people came before him in this way, he took the first one, who happened to be his uncle, by the hand and lifted him up, and forbade any one ever again to come before him in that manner. He said, "I am your king, and expect your obedience, but I am a man, and must not be worshipped."

As I looked into Mrs. Leavitt's spirituelle face and marked the earnest eyes in which shone the fire of an undying energy, I thought that the promise in the Book of Proverbs concerning the diligent soul, that such an one "shall stand before king," had in her case been fulfilled.

A GRAND WORK.

Helping Tired Mothers and Giving Rosy Cheeks to Children.

Thousands of tired, nervous, worried women have found strength, health and happiness in Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies their blood, strengthens their nerves and gives them good appetites. Pale and puny children are given rosy cheeks and vigorous appetites by the great blood enriching qualities of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is indeed the mother's friend and it may well have a place in thousands of families. Be sure to get Hood's.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

STAMPED ON THE TOE

Shawknit

TRADE MARK.

Remember that no Stocking will wear well or look well that does not fit well.

The SHAWKNIT is the Best-Fitting.

It is the only Stocking that is Knitted to the Shape of the Human Foot.

The Trade Mark Shawknit is stamped on the toe.

Shaw Stocking Co., Lowell, Mass.

MILLIONS NOW USE PEARLINE

CHRIST IN THE EPISTLES.

Paul's View of His Betrayal, Crucifixion and Resurrection. 1. Cor. 11: 23; 2: 2, 8; Gal. 2: 20, etc.

Paul applies the methods of the mystic to the facts of Christ's passion. He recognizes the history and fully appreciates the horrors of the sad story; but it is not on them that he dwells.

The lesson for him is that he must be crucified to the world; he must die to the things around him, that he may live a resurrection life. In this, as in other things, Christ is not to Paul so much a Person as a Representative of the race. His own life is hid with Christ; the Cross is the symbol of his own sacrifice; the Resurrection is the pledge of his own rising out of the death he has endured. He dies daily; the things which once affected him move him no longer. The motives that influenced him, the objects which allured him, the attainments of which he was once proud exist still, but they affect him no longer; he is dead to them. As Augustine after his conversion met a companion of his dissipated days and passed her without recognition, she said in accents of reproach, "August, it is I." Turning upon her a look of pity, the great teacher said, "But it is not August you see; he is dead. I am a new man whom you do not know." So Paul had risen after having laid down his life and all he once held dear. He did not dwell on Christ's sufferings and death, as Roman Catholics and some modern evangelists dwell on them that they may arouse sorrow and pity; he meditated on them that he might identify himself with them, that he might live the new life.

Voyage to Europe.

To make it possible for people to visit Europe without the extravagant cost of the old methods has been an unsolved problem until now. Americans will not travel second-class, and to go first-class by the fast steamers, means a cost of $200.00 to $300.00 for the steamer ticket alone to begin with. The subject has been very carefully investigated and some new methods brought to bear, so that now the ocean voyage can be paid for at the rate of $6.00 per month, for the round tour to the Paris Exposition, and $15.00 for English and Mediterranean voyage next season, on monthly payments. No second-class and no steerage carried on the steamers. This is an opportunity for the School teacher, Physician, Minister, Merchant, etc., etc., to take a trip to Europe, which thus far has been an impossibility with many.

The cultivated and intelligent classes in America, are perhaps better qualified to understand and appreciate the scenes and historical spots in Europe, than any other class in the world.

The details of how the plan has been worked out, are interesting, and the handsomely illustrated pamphlet of particulars, containing over 100 fine half-tone engravings, is sent free on application to the Postum Cereal Co., Limited, of Battle Creek Mich.

Two or three customers can compel any dealer to keep Macbeth's lamp-chimneys.

Does he want your chimneys to break?
Get the Index.

Write Macbeth Pittsburgh Pa

The Royal is the highest grade baking known. Actual tests show it goes third further than any other brand.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

The Treatment of Rheumatism or Uric Acid Poisoning

GOVERNOR STEPHENS of Missouri recently informed one of our representatives that Tartar was the only remedy which gave him relief in uric acid poisoning. The governor speaks of the result in the highest terms.

Pamphlet on the treatment of Rheumatism by Tartar sent free by McKesson & Robbins, 91 Fulton St. N. Y.

SOLE AGENTS FOR

The Tartaralithine Co.

Who Reads a Book?

Might as well be asked in this age of newspapers and magazines. The Tauqua Reading Circle helps people to make the acquaintance of books.

The GERMAN-ROMAN YEAR

offers an interesting plan. Send full information to JOHN H. V. 25 Genesee St., Buffalo, N. Y.

HOME STUDY

keeping, business, penmanship, calligraphy, writing, arithmetic, etc., thoroughly by MAIL at your own HOME. Success guaranteed every earnest student. We give a useful, money-making position, a life-long success. Highly endorsed. It will pay you. Try it. Catalog free. HURRY & START. Trial lesson 10c. 275 College Bldg., B. O.

CHRISTMAS SOLICITORS IS COMING

Four books from 50c to $2.25. Just right for the young folks. Ours largest and handsomest. To sell. Full lovely pictures, many of them in new. Bonanza for agents. Every buyer gets a present. enormous. Commissions 50 per cent. Credit given. paid. Outfit free. Write quick for outfit and 50c. Dominion Co. Dept. J, 356 Dearborn St. Ch.

WALL PAPER

SACRED SONGS No. 1. No other New book equal to it. $25 per 1000 etc. each. If by mail. THE HIGLOW & M. O. Lakeside Building, Chicago, 76 E. Ninth St., York Missions in Germany.*

Germany, City Mission work in general is not dependent on the Church. As such it has slight influence, their beliefs are scarcely considered in order to save the people from moral ruin; nor is it for a moment that they are permanently saved and have become Christians. There are attempts to allure them by games and by the promise of temporal gain; the effort is made at once usually to bring them back into the fold, to persuade them to attend services, prize its ordinances, and accept its blessings. The temporal gifts they bring, they bring as Christians present them in a Christian spirit, the hope of winning those who are lost to the Master whom they Missions in Hamburg, Berlin, Bremen, Dresden, Stuttgart, Frankfurt, Magdeburg, Carlsruhe, and many other places are under the care of a pastor who is thoroughly conversant with the work he has in charge. In Berlin, Dr. Stoecker, the eloquent pastor, member of parliament, and lecturer, is Superintendent of the mission. Every Sunday, sermons are thronged, are held in the church which is known as the Johannessen, from which all the work of the mission proceeds. Dr. Stoecker's sermons on other Christian literature, are throughout the city and the speaking world, chiefly by the aid of the mission for the purpose.

In the House like the one in Berlin which everything connected with the work may gather, a place where aid can come for temporal aid and advice, is indispensable. Often the mission is simply the Inner Mission of the city in which it is located. It is to do for the people within the city all that the larger body of people throughout the Empire. A bureau of statistics is at the service of those who care to consult it. The come who are hungry, out of the discouraged, or in trouble of any kind connected with the Mission show their charities wisely, to rebuke professional beggars, to industry and frugality, to create of hope and courage in all that aid. Without a House, or in which the superintendent and his assistants may live, an assembly room in which committees and societies may meet, successful work is well-nigh impossible. The House becomes at once the center of the reaching, ever-widening Christian work through its influence those who Christian Life in Germany, as seen in the Church, by Edward F. Williams, 32nd St. covers; price $1. Fleming H. Young, New York, publishers.

Readers.—The New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

In the last issue the new botanical discovery is proving a wonderful curative in cases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disordered of the Kidneys and urinary organs. The World publishes the remarkable story of C. Darling, minister of the gospel in Colombia, New York, cured by Alkavits. He himself, he had lost faith in man and was preparing himself for certain death. Similar testimony to this wonderful remedy comes from others, including many from disorders peculiar to women. The Church Kidney Cure Co., of No. 418 Avenue, New York, who so far are its only agents, are anxious to prove its value that for introduction they will send a free treatise prepaid by mail to every reader of the Christian Herald who is a sufferer from any kind of Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Gonorrhea, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Constipation, or other affliction due to impurities of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. Send as utterers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavits free. Its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to furnish money for its erection and support, and those who occupy it, seek to meet and supply the varied needs of those who are to be saved for the kingdom of God.

It is one of the most insidious of health enemies. Hood's Sarsaparilla effectually cures the deadly poison, prevents the fever and the system.

Each Church, to a greater or less extent, carries on missionary work among its own people. Yet in parishes which number from 80,000 to 100,000 persons it is well-nigh impossible, even where three or four pastors are grouped together, and trained assistants are employed, to do satisfactory pastoral work, though every year shows an improvement in this direction. As new churches are built, parishes are made smaller, and the number of assistants is increased to meet the demands of the rapidly-growing city populations. In doing this, the aid of the City Mission, and especially that of deaconesses, the crown and glory of whose work is service in the Church, has been of inestimable value. It need hardly be said that the deaconesses employed in this service must enjoy the confidence and recognition of the pastor and authorities of the church with which they are connected, whose sick they visit, whose needy children they instruct, whose wandering ones they seek.

Profitable Employment

We want to engage the services of energetic men and women to represent THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL—to look after renewals and to secure new subscriptions.

The Curtis Publishing Company
Philadelphia

Dresses and Cloaks.

We have recently made some exquisite Autumn and Winter Dresses and Jackets for leading New York society ladies who are famed for the good taste which they display in the selection of their toilettes. Photographs of these ladies and the garments which we made for them are shown in our new Fall Catalogue, which is now ready.

To the lady who wishes to dress well at moderate cost we will mail free this attractive Catalogue of Suits and Cloaks and a complete line of samples of new materials to select from.

Our Catalogue Illustrates:
Tailor-Made Suits, $5.00 up.
New Paris Costumes, $5.00 up.
Bicycle Suits, $6.00 up.
New Winter Jackets, $3.00 up.
Cloth and Velour Gapes.

Our line of samples includes the newest fabrics in Suits and Cloakings, many of them being exclusive novelties not shown elsewhere. We also have special lines of black goods. We make every garment to order, thus giving that style, fit and exclusiveness for which our costumes and wraps are famed. Express charges paid by us to any part of the world. Write to-day for catalogue and samples; you will get them by return mail.

THE NATIONAL CLOAK CO.,
119 and 121 West 23d St., New York.

CONSECRATED WOMEN
whose mind and heart have been turned in love and sympathy towards erring girls, and feel called to work among them and capable of being matrons in a Home for such girls, communicate with MRS. K. W. BARNETT, General Superintendent of the National Florence Crittenton Mission, 218 Third St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

WOMEN Make $2 to $10 a Day selling our Mackintosh Dress Skirts, new dress shields, etc. Cat. Free, Ladies' Supply Co., 3115 Forest Ave., Chicago

The Wing Piano

STYLE 7. CONCERT GRAND UPRIGHT.

No other piano made equals this in style and design of case.

You do not have to pay an extravagant price for a first-class piano. In justice to yourself write for prices of the Wing Piano before you buy.

THE INSTRUMENTAL ATTACHMENT

imitates perfectly the tone of the Mandolin, Guitar, Harp, Zither and Banjo. The sounds of these different instruments may be heard alone or in concert with the piano.

Every Wing Piano is guaranteed for NINE YEARS against any defect in tone, action, workmanship or material :: :: ::

SENT ON TRIAL We will send this piano, or your choice of four other styles, to any part of the United States on trial (all freights paid by us), allow ample time for a thorough examination and trial in the home, and, if the instrument is in any particular unsatisfactory, we will take it back at our own expense. No conditions are attached to this trial. We ask for no advance payment; no deposit. We pay all freights in advance.

Over 18,000 Wing Pianos manufactured and sold in 29 years (since 1868).

OLD INSTRUMENTS EXCHANGED EASY PAYMENTS

Our beautiful, handsomely illustrated catalogue, and a book of information about pianos sent free on request.

Wing & Son,
West 13th & Washington Sts., New York.
... ESTABLISHED 1868 ...

CORRECT STYLES

Highest class workmanship, best material. These phenomenal prices will astonish all the ladies of the land.

No. 81.—CLOTH CAPE, Extra Quality, Black Kersey; with broad around front and bottom, edged with silk, stitched strap seams, scalloped storm collar, 24 inches long, very full sweep. Is sold by others at far more. Our Special Price, $4.98 prepaid.
No. 90.—FINE SILK SEAL PLOSH CAPE; extremely full sweep, 24 in. long, double box pleated Empire back, trimmed with Thibet fur, braided and beaded all over, exactly as illustrated. Most stylish garment of the season. The greatest value that was ever put on the market. Well worth $12.00. Our Special Price, $7.98 prepaid.
No. 147X.—ENGLISH KERSEY, CLOTH JACKET, tailor made, lined throughout with changeable silk taffeta, inlaid velvet collar, fly front, strapped seams; colors, tan, black or navy. Very well, serviceable garment; well worth double. Our Special Price, $9.98 prepaid.
No. 43.—PERSIAN CLOTH CAPE; our great leader, made of good quality material throughout, fully 30 in. long, very full sweep; collar edged with Thibet fur, lined throughout with Rhadame. An excellent garment, warm, serviceable. Our Special Price, $5.98 prepaid.

Good Enough for any one at prices within reach of all.

Our reputation is sustained by the finest that the best skill and artists can produce. Order one of the above garments. You take no risk. Money returned for the asking, or goods sent.

C. O. D. allowing examination, Express Prepaid,

Write for our FASHION CATALOGUE C. of Capes, Jackets, Skirts, Etc.

OUT SEPT. 15th. A Souvenir to Show to Your Friends.
SIMMONS, STATE & ADAMS ST. CHICAGO, ILL. for Styles and Bargains

Home Talks with Mothers and Daughters.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

The Little Church on the Prairie

FRIEND showed me the other night a picture which touched me very deeply, and the memory of which has haunted me ever since I looked at it. In the midst of a great prairie, a seemingly boundless sea of level waving grass, stands, all by itself, a lone little church, with its spire pointing heavenward. On the very edge, the outermost rim of the photograph, are a few small houses clustered together like palms on an oasis, but they are not discernible at the first glance, and are the merest suggestion of a Kansas village. The church in the foreground, the billowy prairies around it, the far line of the horizon, and the vast cloudless sky catch your eye and stamp themselves on your thought with a clearness and distinctness seldom effected by a picture.

As I gazed at this lonesome church in the wilderness, knowing how much it represented to the worshippers, who Sabbath after Sabbath gathered within its walls; as I reflected that it was an outpost on the frontier for the Lord of Hosts; as I considered the heroism of our home missionary band, I began to wonder whether you and I are doing all we can to sustain those who are toiling for Christ in the desolate places of the land. Poor and oppressed by their poverty, faring hardly because of scanty support often missing the comforts of life, and never dreaming of its luxuries, our home missionaries and their wives have a claim on the loyalty and love of the Church in older places, which is too often ignored. They lay us under an obligation which is grudgingly paid.

"There," I hear somebody say, "are the home missionary boxes and barrels. Our church packs one or more every fall, and we all contribute what we can." Do we? Do we not mend up our old gowns and father's last year's shabby overcoat, and Jenny's cloak, which is out of fashion, and Robbie's jacket which he has outgrown, and proudly bring them and lay them down, with a sense of relief tempered by pity that we have no more old clothes to dispose of, on the altar of the Lord, which, for the time being, is set up in the chapel where we are packing a missionary box? I have seen tarnished party dresses, and undared stockings, and bonnets fit for the dust heap, brought at such times and tranquilly offered. And when it has been intimated that a few toys and books would not come amiss to the home missionary's children, I have known the top shelves to be cleared of the library's rubbish, and the tops that wouldn't spin, the balls that wouldn't bounce, the engines that wouldn't go, and the dolls that had lost their arms and legs in nursery battles, to be again brought and offered on the altar of the Lord. Not good enough for our darlings, but they will amuse the children of the prairies who know nothing better!

I thought, looking with eyes which grew misty as tears sprang in them, at the sight of the wilderness church, that we all might do far better than this. Into the next home missionary barrel let us put our old toys and real self-denial. Our dear missionaries and their wives will enjoy the new coat, and every body is talking, they will be more zealous for a subscription at first hand to our favorite paper or magazine, than if we will be the better for just such literature as we provide for our own use.

If we send clothing let it be fresh, as fine in material as every particular is good as that we wear ourselves, and let us see our pastor and his family wearing. Sometimes let us send money. For people like the feeling of crisp new coins, and bright silver in their pockets, and our home missionaries and their wives know what they would like to buy if they had the money in hand. And if, as heaven help them they may be in debt, they will be glad to have cash to settle their obligations.

tions with. When we are planning for our children's future, for their education at school and college, let our planning stretch a little, and, half a dozen friends or families combining, let us give our missionary's son or daughter a lift in that direction.

Better still, to the cause of home missions, looking at it in a large, impersonal way, let us pledge hereafter a heartier and more cordial support. We must remember that for Christ's sake a number of Christian ministers and their wives are cheerfully enduring hardship and privation, if not outright dying daily, yet losing health, youth and the spring and elasticity of life, there on our frontier, where Satan, too, is busy. Patriotism, Christianity, and the thought of our own duty to the Master, should lead us to greater consideration, and to a more earnest comprehension of our privilege in being allowed to help the Home Mission cause. There are hundreds of lone little churches on the wide prairies, and we must not let them fail of support.

Margaret E. Sangster

GOOD CAUSES HELPED.

The following sums have been contributed by the readers of this journal to the various worthy causes mentioned below:

Bella Cooke's Work.	For The Christian Herald S. S. Missionary.
Prev. ackd. $3.50	Prev. ackd. $168.85
Reader, Peotone. 2.00	A H P Jamieson 1.00
Total $5.50	R W Jones 1.00
For Any Good Cause.	MDS, Balto. 1.00
Prev. ackd. $126.01	Anon, So Branch 2.00
Miss H Topping 2.00	National Home. 2.00
Mrs F A Bentley 1.00	L A Dow 1.00
Total $129.01	Mite, Erie 1.00
For the Mayesville Institute.	A R G Edwards 1.00
Prev. ackd. $95.00	Total $175.95
H H Pritchard 1.00	De Broen Mission.
One of the thousands wanted, New York. 1.00	R W Jones 1.00
Mrs CH Kiskaddon 1.00	John McFarland.
MAH, Iklv. 1.00	P F Cutting 36
Mrs Ed Maule 1.00	Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.
E G Mansfield 2.00	Miss L. Kate Lewis. 2.00
Miss E J Meade 1.00	Mrs. Selden for Cuba's Hapless Children.
Mrs J Clark 2.00	A R G Edwards 50
S T Boynton 1.00
Mrs F W Fetter 2.00
R W Jones 5.00
Total $83.00

A HARVEST OF KINDNESS.

I saw a bright and peaceful scene;
I saw the ripening grain
Which I in faith and hope had sown,
Replendent on the plain.

I heard a voice—a tender voice
Which through the years have rolled;
"I bring you back the words you spoke
With all their treasured gold."

The fields beneath November's sky,
Lie cold and drear and bare,
Whilst words of cheer which once I dropped
A constant harvest bear.

Holes in Your Health.

What does that mean? Suppose you are taking in money all day, and drop it into a pocket with holes; you will find yourself a loser instead of a gainer by the day's business. Same with your health. You eat and drink and sleep, yet lose instead of gain strength. There's a hole in your health. Some blood disease, probably, sapping your vitality. You can't begin, too soon, to take the great blood purifier,

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

THIS SKIRT

(If sent by mail 32 cents extra.)

BARGAINS equally as great can be obtained through our

ILLUSTRATED FASHION CATALOGUE

(Fall and Winter number ready Sept. 10.)

MAILED FREE UPON REQUEST

Contains over 2,000 illustrations of articles for home and personal need.

Your money refunded for any goods not proving satisfactory, and expressage paid to all parts of the U. S. (when orders amount to stated sum). Send postal at once for Catalogue D (ready Sept. 10), with Special Bargain Sheet.

H. C. F. KOCH & CO.

IMPORTERS AND RETAILERS,
West 125th St. bet. Lenox 7th Avenues New York

Is the verdict of men and women in all parts of the world who speak from actual experience, and freely testify to the merits of this wonderful remedy that others similarly afflicted may find relief.

Write for Free Book on diseases of the heart and nerves.
Dr. Miles' Remedies are sold by all druggists on the guarantee first bottle benefits or money refunded.
Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

ASTHMA
and HAY FEVER.
A Permanent Cure Guaranteed. Send for circular for home treatment.
GEORGE J. WEST, M.D., 510 Fifth Avenue, New York

$12 3000 BICYCLES
must be closed out at once.
Standard '97 Models, guaranteed, $14 to $30. '94 models to $20. 24 hand wheels $5 to $12. Shipped to anyone on approval without advance deposit. Great factory clearing sale. EARN A BICYCLE by helping advertise us. We will give out agent in each town FREE USE of a sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our Special Offer. D. T. Reed Cycle Co., Wabash ave. Chicago, Ill.

$200.00 IN GOLD GIVEN.
International News and Book Company, Baltimore, make a most liberal offer of $200.00 in gold, for selling 200 copies of "Talks to Children about Jesus." This book is among the most popular ever published. One agent sold 21 in 2 days, another 55 the first week. Freight paid, credit given. They also publish Bibles, and other popular books, and a beautiful set of children's books for the Xmas Holidays. A few General Agents wanted on salary.

Stamped Steel Ceilings
Most Durable and Decorative.
Suitable for all buildings. Numerous designs. Send for Catalogue.
H. S. NORTHROP. 33 Cherry St. New York
FREE TO BALD HEADS. We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp diseases. Address, Attenhelm Medical Dispensary, Dept. N. A., Box 774, Cincinnati, O.

ART BROUHER and free Tells how to make Solar Prints, free hand (rayon and Pencil Portraits, Sketches from Nature and Life, New wonderful art. Anyone can learn by mail. Pupils make $10 to $30 weekly home. Write once to EUGENE PRATT, Artist, E. 22 Union Sq., N. Y.

PUBLIC SPEAKERS AND SINCERS use Prof. DeGroot's treatment to strengthen lungs, throat, and voice, and cure hoarseness and roughness of voice. A reliable and sure method. Breathing tube, atomizer, and remedy for $2.00. 655 Leonard St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

What Consumption Really is and How It Arises.

In my letter of Sept. 1st I showed by the overwhelming testimony of the leading medical authorities of the profession that consumption is not a contagious disease; that it is not communicable from the well; and that it can neither be cured by shutting people up in pest-houses as recommended by the New York Health Department, nor by the statist disease, to be steadily on the decline, and from it over 40 per cent. lower now than 50 years ago. Improved knowledge of the cause and the success of the local treatment of consumption by zealous and conscientious lung throughout the world have effected this change.

For the New York Health Department a time and under such circumstances, to Boggy of Contagion upon the public to frighten and obtain coercive control over all times, was an outrage against the publication of such enormity I can find no word in the English tongue too strong to characterize it. On what does it found its authority? It is based upon a report made by its own hired employees, who were plagiarized almost bodily from a Neapolitan law, enacted more than a hundred years ago, before the germ origin and true nature of consumption was even known. They dug out of ignorance and barbarism out of the discarded delusions, copied all its delusions and put this forth upon the people of our great metropolis as something which they had just found out!

I shall have something more to say on this subject later, but prefer now to leave to judgment of my medical brethren the further exposing the real purpose of the Department in proclaiming this false delusion.

Consumption is always a local disease of its seat in the lungs, and all the damage it causes is caused by its progress in that it is local and confined to the lungs it causes only by local treatment of the lungs.

No case of lung disease begins as a general disease. It always results from colds, grippe, or influenza, which creates an inflammation, becomes chronic, and produces bronchitis, asthma, or catarrh. If these conditions are cured as they always can be by proper local antiseptic treatment, the patient returns to health and no further treatment follows. If they are not so treated, the local inflammation abrades the epithelium from the mucous membrane of the lungs, exposing a raw surface upon which germs of consumption in the air fasten and transform a case of simple bronchitis into a confirmed consumption.

In the light of our present knowledge of the disease, who treat bronchitis and other lung diseases with stomach medicines and hypodermic injections, always fail to cure lung disease, but succeed in conducting the patient by the most direct route to consumption.

I have before me the records of over 100 cases of lung disease, treated by the method of the past six years, and find that 96 per cent. attribute their lung sickness to colds, congestion which became chronic, left the chest, and gradually developed into lung disease. If such facts do not teach people the importance of treating the lungs through the stomach, and the danger of the general system, nothing that can be said to them from consumption.

Another delusion that people have is that they can run away from lung disease by going to other climates. The truth is no known elevation in the world will prevent consumption. It is as common among the people of the Adirondacks, Colorado, Florida, and California as it is among those of any other part of the country. The fad of sending weak and sore lungs to the Adirondacks, Colorado, comes from ignorance of the requirements of the lungs, and of the requirements of the high altitudes lower the nutrition and diminish the purification of the blood, and the danger of hemorrhage, and expose the patient to the danger of death by heart failure. The scientific facts, which every lung specialist and every intelligent patient ought to understand.

(To be continued.)

ROBERT HUNTER, M.D.
117 West Forty-fifth Street
New York.

Sept. 6th, 1897.

NOTE.—Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who are interested in Dr. Hunter's letter, receive his books explaining the causes of lung complaints free, by addressing him at the above address.

SAVE 1/2 YOUR FUEL
By using our (stove) plan. With its 120 Cross Doors. ONE stove or furnace does the work of TWO. Drop postal for the names of prominent men.
TO INTRODUCE OUR FURNACE the first order from each city filled at WHOLESALE price and sent by an agency. Write at once to
ROCHESTER RADIATOR CO.
15 Furnace St., ROCHESTER, N. Y.
BIG PAY selling Red Springs. Our first bed. P. B. S. Mfg. Co., 1711 E. 1st St., St. Paul, Minn.

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

Those who think that imported soaps must be the finest, do not know that the materials for Ivory Soap are the best to be found anywhere. The vegetable oil of which Ivory Soap is made, is imported, almost in ship loads, from the other side of the world.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI.

From the Land of the Kangaroo

Where Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption are Unknown.

"HYOMEI"

Nature's Own Remedy

It creates the same conditions in the atmosphere of your home as found in that distant land. The first and only treatment for diseases of the respiratory organs ever endorsed by the medical profession.

Physicians have found "Hyomei" the only germicide which kills the bacilli of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption. They have also discovered that the Australian Dry Air Treatment is the only way by which all the diseased parts of the head, throat and lungs can be reached and cured. So positive of this have they become that not one physician in good standing in medical society can be found to-day who will advertise to treat these diseases by the old methods—sprays, douches, atomizers or steam vapors—all such treatments being considered worthless, as moisture of any kind can not enter the bronchial tubes or lungs. Not only this, they have proved positively dangerous, as nine out of every ten persons who suffer from deafness and loss of sense of taste and smell, can trace the beginning of these afflictions to the time when they commenced the use of such barbarous methods of treating the delicate air passages.

"HYOMEI" Cures by Inhalation.

It is the one treatment indorsed by the physicians. It is the one treatment which does not require the use of sprays and atomizers. It is the one treatment which the manufacturers have enough confidence in to guarantee.

It is Nature's own remedy. Taken with the air you breathe, it reaches all the parts affected, killing the disease germs of Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Rose Cold and Hay Fever at once, and bringing such relief to the sufferer as can be obtained in no other way.

There is no danger, no risk. Your money is refunded if it fails to relieve.

"Hyomei" Inhaler Outfit $1.00. Extra Bottles "Hyomei" 50c. "Hyomei" Balm, a wonderful healer, 25c. Sold by all druggists or sent by mail.

R. T. BOOTH & CO., 23 East 20th St., New York.

$25.00
and up.

INCORPORATED FOR 50 YEARS

We have the largest manufacturing factory in the world from which we sell direct to the consumer at wholesale prices, thus saving the profits of the dealer and the commissions of the agents. No money required until instrument has been thoroughly tested. In your own house. Shipped on 30 days' trial.

FREE

Sold on installments. Easy payment. Send for catalogue at once if you want to obtain the greatest bargain ever offered. Write your name and address plainly, and we will send by mail same day letter is received. Positively guarantee every Organ and Piano twenty-five years.

PIANO

$160.00
and up.

ADDRESS
BEETHOVEN
PIANO & ORGAN CO.

P. O. Box 741
Washington, N. J.

ORGAN

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD OF CHURCH FURNISHINGS.
SCHOOL FURNITURE COMPANY
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

AGENTS

Send 20 cents for sample of "Perfection Cake Tins," catalog of new household goods, and sample for all our new specially priced sets. RICHARDSON MFG. CO., 6th St., Bath, N. Y.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite WHITE BRONZE till you investigate.

More artistic and enduring. Less expensive. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

NO MORE GROWING. NO CRUMBLING. CLEANING. NO CRACKING. THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

8%

Securely Safe as Government Bonds. Your money can surely earn it. Can prove it by best Eastern banks. Rob't B. Strathorn & Co., Equitable Building, Boston.

O'NEILL'S

Sixth Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, N. Y.

The Most Popular Department Store in America.

NEW YORK
is the
CENTER OF FASHION.

A Postal Card will bring you the Profusely Illustrated
Fashion Catalogue FREE

Ready September 10th.

SEND FOR IT!

FREE UPON REQUEST.

...The

Giant Lily Violet of California

(Erythronium Giganteum.)

Beautiful Winter Bloomer, also Hardy Outset

Large Golden Lily-like flowers. Foliage like Velvet Robe, beautifully mottled.

Three for 12 Cents; Each 5 Cents

1 New Giant Sweet-Scented Sacred Lily.

1 Bermuda Easter Lily, 5 to 8 flowers.

1 Black Calla of Palestine.

1 Roman or Christmas Hyacinth, white.

Or 1 each of the above Lily Collection of 5 Bulbs.

When 4 Collections are ordered, 1 send FREE 3 Little Golden

"SUCCESS WITH BULBS" is printed with my Catalogue—7 pages

most explicit directions for growing Bulbs ever published—every order and on application. "J.A. DOO," a new magic growing Plants and Bulbs, 10c., large trial package.

Miss Mary E. Martin, Floral Park, New York.

14 Years Cured:
MRS. J. E. SINCLAIR,
3 Boynton St., Worcester, Mass.

13 Years Cured:
MRS. J. L. MUNROE,
Rutland, Mass.

12 Years Cured:
REV. GEO. W. FITCH,
Fruitvale, Cal.

12 Years Cured:
W. H. WHITCOMB,
Poyntette, Wis.

12 Years Cured:
GEO. BALMAIN,
40 Chill Ave., Rochester, N. Y.

TO ASTHMA SUFFERERS

WE OFFER

A CURE THAT STAYS

Our constitutional treatment not only gives but eradicates the cause of the disease and cures. Particulars and blank for free information mailed on application.

DR. HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

BOYS AND GIRLS

Watches, Clocks, Ten Sets and Toilet Sets, FREE with $5, $7 and $10 orders. Now is your chance to get orders for our TEAS, COFFEES, Etc. Send for new Premium and Price List.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 & 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y. P. O. Box 240

You work right around home. A brand new thing. No trouble to make $18 a week easy. Write to us quick, you will be surprised at how easy it can be done. Send to your address any way. It will be for your interest to investigate. Write today. You can positively make $18 a week easy. ROYAL HANUFACTURING CO., Box A-F, Detroit, Mich.

$18 a Week Easy.

Parker's Arctic Sock, Best for Runners.

Absorb perspiration. Recommended by Physicians for house, chamber and sick-room. Made in Men's, Women's and Children's. Ask shoe dealers and send 25c. with size to J.H. PARKER, 103 Bedford St., Boston, Mass.

Room K. Take no substitute. Parker's Arctic Sock.

ASTHMA CURED

Dr. Hail's cure has brought relief to sufferers. A $1.00 valuable treatise sent free, by expressage. Address, Dept. 10, DR. E. W. HAIL, Cincinnati, O.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

THE BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK. COPYR GHT 1897. BY LOUIS KLOPSCH. VOLUME 20.—NUMBER 38. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor. NEW YORK. SEPTEMBER 22, 1897. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

CEYLON COMING TO CHRIST.

Island Paradise of the Indian Ocean, its People and its Attractions.—Missionary Work among the Tamils and Singhalese.

THE TEA VINES.

ONE may search the whole world around without finding a lovelier spot than the island of Ceylon. Poets have sung its praises, travelers have become enraptured with its tropical beauty, naturalists have stood still with admiration at the splendors of its flora and fauna, and antiquarians have explored its coasts and interior, its mountains and valleys, in the quest for light upon the history of its cities, long since gone to ruin and whose prime was probably past ages before the Christian era. In Oriental legend, this fair island is indicated as the site of Eden, and certainly the tropic splendor of its vegetation, its balmy, spicy airs and the natural beauties that are disclosed in the landscape at every turn, might afford apparent reason for the claim, if such attractions were the essential qualifications. On one of its lofty mounted by the Portuguese, Pico de Adam, (Peak), is a rocky depression to which even yet fondly points as the imprint of our first ancestor, after his expulsion from Eden. Though the island is a comparatively small one, 270 miles in length, with a width from 40 to 137 miles, it has a population of 2,250,000, of whom probably less than one-third are Europeans. At the height of its population was doubtless many times as great as at present. It was the Taprobane of the ancient Romans, and the Serendib of the Arabs, and its known history covers a period of nearly 2500 years and includes the reigns of more than 165 kings, from one of whom the Singhalese, who constitute the prinproper, the Moormen, the Veddahs, (a race of wild mountaineers), and the Hindus who speak the Tamil tongue. Buddhism is the prevalent religion. Gautama Buddha, the founder of the faith, is said to have visited the island thrice to preach his doctrines and at Anarajapoor, a bo-tree is still shown which is said to have been planted 288 years B. C., and beneath whose spreading limbs Buddha sat immovable in contemplation for many days and nights. The religion of the island, however pure it may have been originally, greatly degenerated and became intermingled with gross superstition and idolatry. Such was the condition when the first Christian missionaries settled there. Nearly a century ago, the Dutch claimed to have baptised in five years, 12,387 children, and to have altogether 65,000 converts to Christianity. In 1804, the London Missionary Society sent Messrs. Vos, Ehrhardt, Palm and Reid to labor there, and the English Missionary Baptist Society followed in 1812, sending out Mr. Chater, whose efforts among the Singhalese were very greatly blessed. Rev. Samuel Newell of the American Board, entered the field in 1813, at which time there were 200,000 native Christians and 100 schools. The Board's work on the island rapidly grew, more missionaries were detailed to the new field and versions of the Bible in Tamil were published. At the present time it has nearly a score of American laborers in Ceylon, with a steadily increasing number of stations and out-stations, and a growing force of native helpers. The Church Missionary Society, Wesleyan Methodists, Salvation Army, and Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, each has a prosperous missionary work on the island, of which in the pioneer days of Gospel effort the celebrated Bishop Heber wrote:

"Every prospect pleases and only man is vile."

Ceylon is surely being captured for Christ. Steadily the old faiths and heathen superstitions are yielding before the light of the glorious Gospel of Jesus. It is true that in comparison with either Hinduism and Buddhism, Christianity is still very weak, but its growth must not be counted by numbers alone. There are thousands who are Christian at heart, but are prevented from openly declaring their allegiance by the fact that were they to do so, they would have to sacrifice all social and business relations, lose their inheritance and be disowned by their kindred. Still, even in the face of such an ordeal, there are many who have no hesitation in openly accepting Christianity. The editor of the leading Christian paper on the island, says of its spiritual condition:

In Ceylon ten per cent. of the children of a school-going age are being educated. From our island many of the Singhalese and Tamils are going out as teachers, magistrates, and lawyers to Madras, and some are find-

Buddhist Priests Reading the Holy Bible.—A Singhalese Tea Picker.—The Temple of "Buddha's Tooth," at Kandy, Ceylon.

CEYLON, THE BEAUTIFUL, ITS PEOPLE AND ITS TEMPLES.

of the population, derive their name. In the north of the island, the ruins, buried for ages in the depths of the forests, have been discovered, revealing monuments which in dimensions and interest, may almost compare with the pyramids of Egypt. Gigantic statues of Buddha, great rock-hewn temples, relic-shrines and a dagobas, hundreds of feet in height, ruined aqueducts that vie with those of Rome, and many other wondrous remains of a once powerful, rich, civil- ized and intensely religious people are still to be seen in various parts of the island. The population is divided into four classes: the Singhalese or Ceylone ing their way to Singapore and on to China. Most of these young men have been educated in mission schools under the influence of Christianity. I have astonished friends by telling them of villages in Ceylon where Tamils and Singhalese have their own pastors of their own race and locally supported, their Sunday Schools and day-schools. I believe that the progress of Christianity here will not be in arithmetical but a geometrical progression before long, so that we may see Christianity permeate the whole island.

Our illustrations in this issue present some scenes characteristic of Ceylon. Tea culture is one of the growing industries of the island paradise, and furnishes

(Continued on page 710.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

H. D., Hackettstown, N. J. Where can I get a piece of ore assayed? Does it cost anything to have it assayed? How small a piece can be assayed?

There is an ore sampling works in Jersey City, near the Erie Depot, or you might send to the government assay office, New York, where all information will be supplied.

M. D., Granite, Oreg. I am a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but I have recently been led to believe that immersion is the only Scriptural baptism. Do you think that I should change my membership to some church that view and to be baptized by immersion?

Yes, you should obey your conscience in this as in other matters. If you told us that you were a Baptist and had been led to believe that sprinkling was the Scriptural mode of baptism, we would advise you to become a member of some church holding that view. Conscience is everything in such matters. The really important question for you is to get the baptism of the Holy Spirit, to live near to God and to use every opportunity you have to lead souls to Christ. Sometimes a Christian gets the feeling that he is not doing his duty as to the rite of baptism, and he is crippled in his work by the consciousness of negligence. His first duty in such circumstances is to get right in that matter, that he may rid himself of the reproaches of his conscience and be able to work without embarrassment. But do not forget that the same thing may be said of baptism as was said of circumcision: neither circumcision availeth anything nor uncircumcision, but a new creature (Gal. 6: 15).

Theodore S., Port de Paix, Hayti. What was the origin of the Apostle's Creed?

It is said to have been composed by the apostles themselves, during their stay at Jerusalem after Christ's ascension, and accepted by unanimous agreement as a rule of faith and preaching, and a guide by which they might know friends from foes.

W. A. P., Neponset, Mass. Christ said that the last days should be as the days of Noah (Matt. 24: 37). If the days of Noah were 120 years, and it can be proved that the sun was darkened one day in 1780, as I have heard, may we not expect the second coming of Christ in 1900?

According to the record in Genesis 9: 29, the days of Noah were 950 years. But even if they had been 120 years, there would be no basis for the calculation. The last years of the dispensation were to be as the days of Noah in the characteristics of social life, not in duration. The people are to be occupied with eating and drinking and marrying, heedless, like those of Noah's time, of the impending event, and sceptical about any such event occurring. They will be taken by surprise as Noah's contemporaries were.

Constant Reader, Germantown, Pa. Why did Jesus forbid people whom he healed to make it known as in Matt. 9: 36, and also prohibit his disciples declaring his Messiahship?

He probably feared that there would be a popular rising which might lead to slaughter. The people were expecting the Messiah to be a king and, if they had recognized Christ, and still held that notion they would probably have risen in rebellion against Rome. On one occasion (John 6: 15), he hid himself to prevent such a rising. It was safe after his death to preach him as the Christ, because then the spiritual nature of his kingdom would be understood; but while he lived, it was necessary to avoid publicity. Even the disciples expected that he would make himself king and did not understand his real purpose until after the resurrection.

Student, Brooklyn, N. Y. Is it possible to find out the exact date of Christ's birth and death?

As to his birth there are several data, the most valuable being the fact of Herod being king and the decree for taxing or the census, as it appears to have been, which is mentioned by Luke (2: 1). Prof. Samuel J. Andrews has written an exhaustive work on the chronology of Christ's life, (published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York), in which he reviews all these data and he arrives at the conclusion that Jesus was born in the fifth year before our era and probably in December. As to his death there is more accurate evidence as it occurred at the Passover. There is some doubt as to the year, but Prof. Andrews after a thorough and careful examination of all the data believes that the crucifixion took place on April 7, A. D. 30.

M. E. S., Newburg, N. Y. I was surprised to hear a minister state positively that Moses was not the author of the first five books of the Bible. Is it true?

The question has been argued now for many years. The present tendency is to a belief that Moses left records which, after his death, were woven into the continuous narrative we now possess. The references of Christ and his Apostles to "Moses and the prophets," imply that the belief that Moses was the author of the books that bear his name was prevalent at that day. There are, however, expressions scattered through the five books

(Rev. A. R. Fausett), gives the freer translation: "I am whole only with the skin of my teeth" (i. e., my gums alone are whole, the rest of my body is broken with sores. See 7: 5). The rendering quoted by our correspondent is a variation of the same idea.

Honest Inquirer, Hazleton, Pa. 1. I see in your number of Aug. 5, 1896, that you advertised your "World-Wide Encyclopedia" at $30 per set; in your number of Sept. 1, 1897, the same work is advertised at $26 or $13 to your subscribers. Are these works the same? Why is there such a difference in price? 2. Will "The World-Wide Encyclopedia" do the same service as Chambers, and while it is not as large as the Britannica, can the same information be found in "The World-Wide Encyclopedia" in condensed form, as it is found in the Britannica elaborated? 3. Would you advise a minister of the Gospel, who is just starting out in life and trying to buy the best books possible, to take hold of your generous offer, or wait until he is able to buy a more extensive work?

1. Yes, the works are identical. The reduction in price is for the purpose of closing them out. 2. Yes, to both questions. 3. By all means take advantage of our offer now.

A. & M., Glen Sandfield, Can. 1. Would you consider it wrong for two Christian girls, accompanied by a brother, to go to the Klondike mines? Brother intends to work in the mines, and we do what we can to assist him. Would you think it inadvisable for us to go and risk difficulties? 2. How much money would each require?

1. It would certainly be very courageous but might be exceedingly ill-advised. If you have a comfortable home, pleasant surroundings, and reasonably good prospects, you acquaintanceship, excite passion, and every way detrimental to character, a tinct obstacle to "spiritual growth." room has proved the road to ruin to thousands.

Saved by Grace, Philadelphia, Pa. I have a great sinner but by grace am now a sinner. I have a friend who is leading me. I have talked to her and pray for her conversion ever since I came to this. I feel very anxious for her as she was the cause of my being converted about nine months ago, but she does not know this. I that my prayers will be answered. Can I do towards getting her to leave she is walking in?

Strive to bring her, as far as possible, the same surroundings and influence yourself found so helpful. Pray for her but with her. In a kind spirit persuade her to accompany you to the gatherings and be sure she is cordial; there and not frigidly avoided. You summon reinforcements also, in the godly men and women of long experience in the Christian life, and they will give the greatest aid in persuading her to accept and accept the offer of forgiveness, first step toward the Cross that is the way for the sinner to take.

Constant Reader, Athens, O. If two young men are engaged, but find that they cannot agree on religious matters, do you think they should sever their engagement?

Their own hearts must tell them. Love each other so well that either will render the religious preference there is no necessity to sever engagement. We cannot see that a Methodist should not work with a Campbellite Church, or that a Methodist should not preach in a Methodist Church. The differences between two churches may seem so to some persons that they are uncomfortable in the denomination which they do not now belong to. The two persons you describe that temperament, they would not wish to marry. Their love for each other cannot be so strong as the religious state requires and they probably quarrel about other things as well as about religion. We never advise a marriage between a Mohammedan and a Christian, or a Roman Catholic and a Protestant, but it seems to us that the objection to a marriage between a Methodist and a Methodist consists in position to lay undue stress on essential differences of creed.

Mrs. L. G. V., Ridgway, Colo. In what way in which the starving could be helped? Many of them are on the verge of death and they are at the threshold.

We believe the Red Cross department of looking up the starving in the Cuban field, though we have nothing of it lately.

Reader. Is it wrong to study the Bible? I think God made the Sabbath, but after church or religious meeting it may be more of a nothing than to study. It is Your Sundays are not wasted if you find time hang heavy on your hands, as your letter would imply. It is a day on which all our duties, study included, are set aside, and no work done that which is of necessity. There are thousands of fascinating helpful books all suitable for reading, that will interest you.

ter way to spend your unoccupied time the Lord's Day would be to become a member of a Sunday School or mission, or to work that the Sabbath would be a brief. Try it.

John S. Hamilton. In your issue of Sept. 1, 1897, I saw an answer to a question in the Second Book of the Maccabees (2: 23) which has become of it. I mentioned there is Mount Nebo, where the Ark is hidden in a cave and in it will be found again.

Our correspondent refers to the place of the Ark of the Covenant.

Enily D. B., Dane, Wis. Yes, but not Mrs. M. C. S., Clearfield, Pa. We have the information asked.—A. B., Okla. condones the offence by such a course use his act as a cause for separation. A. B., Fryburg, Centre, Me. The poem in our issue of May 9, 1894, is addressed to us. The Child's Prayer is addressed to the German.—Inquirer, Burlington, Vt. are excellent intellectual exercise. Not about them if honestly conducted, and there is in class competition.—M. V. D., Jackson, Ga. Address is Poonia, N. Y. cents.—M. V. D., Pateron, N. Y. Rev. Dr. Forrey, N. Y. Institute, Chicago, Ill. Beware, Use borax and powder. May 1, 1897. The best popular Encyclopedia "World-Wide Encyclopedia," issued by CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mrs. Sherwood probably the highest authority.—M. V. D., L. I. The question as to Cain has been answered in this department so we have no later information as to her

BANANA GATHERERS IN JAMAICA, WEST INDIES.

At this season of the year, when our markets are almost glutted with fruits of every description, this photographic scene will interest all who are lovers of the luscious West Indian banana, whose golden-yellow clusters form a pleasing variety in the general assortment. In The Fruitman's Guide, a correspondent writes of this Jamaican industry: "Dusky people are met leisurely sauntering along, always talking, for no one appears to hurry in this land of spontaneous growth; men, women and children, usually with loads of fruit upon their heads, bananas, plantains and yams, bread fruit and coconuts; on their way to the nearest village to market. Almost every black man constantly carries in his hand the indispensable and ever-present machete, a long knife which is used for almost every purpose for which a knife or axe can be used—for cutting bananas, plantains and cane, and for clearing land of underbrush."

which were certainly not written by Moses. A specimen instance is Genesis 36: 31: "These are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom before there reigned any king over the children of Israel." That verse was evidently written after there had been kings in Israel. Whether these passages indicate that the books were not written by Moses, or whether they were inserted after his death, is a disputed question. There is, however, good reason to believe that the work of Moses formed the basis of the books, even if he did not actually write them in their present form.

A. U., Wausau, Neb. The text of Dr. Palmgren's last sermon (Job 19: 29), seems to have a different meaning in the German Bible than it has in the English. The English says: "I am escaped with the skin of my teeth." Where the German Bible reads: "I cannot cover my teeth with my skin." The latter indicates that his lips were so shrunk from pain and disease that his teeth were uncovered? Which of the two is correct?

Both the Authorized and Revised Versions have the same rendering, but another reading would be making a very doubtful change, as all accounts agree that of those who go gold-seeking, not one in ten—probably not more than one in a hundred—reaps anything but disappointment. Still, if you have considered the difficulties and hardships ahead and are prepared to meet them, you may succeed. There is nothing objectionable about such a venture in a moral sense; it is wholly a question of expediency. 2. Not less than $700 to $1,000 apiece, to pay for traveling expenses and a year's supplies.

Minnie G., Cedar Bayou, Tex. I have noticed several times you replied that dancing retarded spiritual growth. Please explain how the moving of the body in time to music could be such a drawback. Job speaks of the children being saved by being sent forth to dance, and the Prodigal's return was celebrated with music and dancing.

Dancing was at one time more or less of a religious ceremonial, but it has totally changed its character. The dances of to-day, are, in the main, immodest. This especially applies to round dances. They provoke promiscuous

A RIDGE OF HOPE.

th Salvation Army is Trying to do or tl Poor by its Farm Colonies.

EVERY one who has come in contact with the poverty in our great cities will give a hearty God-speed to the effort the Salvation Army is making to lift the burden from the shoulders of the su-

PI FREE POTATO PATCH.

ely cultivate and eventuhis own. That is a good —a kindly thing for the a beneficent thing for
ary. There is no mon-much work and if any man its being done by a re-ganization, all that is is for him to organize a gency that will do the wk and produce similar ssioner Booth-Tucker is in this country, with cerfications, the principles salvation Army is adopt-ther lands. Unhappily a here, as everywhere else,

bers of men whose lives
ually on the borders of
n. men who in the best en barely enough to sup-selves and their families are unable to lay up anya rainy day. The rainy se to come, either by loss of ness in the family, or by some the ills to which human flesh is hen the honest worker feels the unger and the dishonest worker, hardship, steals and gets into

The State spends a much larger op him while there, than would sured if intelligently spent to have re him from temptation to crime.
ty ven after an experience of six years, has not been able to avoid lder. It is a shame that while nds to be done, while there are g uncultivated, there are workers physically and morally for lack
To bring the worker and the to ther is what the Salvation Army no do.
undred institutions have already blished by the Army in the dif-untries in which it works. The ct nly inaugurated at a meeting ancisco will show how the plans
e rmy are conducted. Commisoth-Tucker organized a commit-een leading citizens to raise a f twenty-five thousand dollars.
he proposed to secure a tract of two or three thousand acres ch could be divided into lots of from e to n acres. On each lot three hund dollars would be spent in building a uagend buying implements and seed.
ts, th the cost of a lot of say five acres at forty dollars an acre, would make a total expenditure on each lot of five hundred dollars. Each occupier would have to pay one dollar a week, which would yield ten per cent. return on the investment. Of this one-half would be applied to interest and one-half to the repayment of the capital invested. In order to secure the payment of the one dollar a week the Commissioner proposed that the colony should be located sufficiently near to the large ranches to enable the occupants to get occasional work, and in other cases to put on the land men who had partial employment in the cities and could give one or two days a week to supplementing the work which could be done by their families. In the Salvation Army's farm near Seattle, Wash., this system has been applied with good success. Commissioner Booth-

Tucker's theory is that there is "a trinity of waste" in society, which consists of "Waste Labor, Waste Land and Waste Capital." So long as these are separated, there must be misery, destitution and loss to the community, while in co-operation of the three, by putting the waste labor on the waste land and applying a sufficiency of idle capital, there is the result of prosperity for all. It only needs supervision and intelligent direction. These, the officers of the Salvation Army, are prepared to give, taking nothing therefor but food and clothing. This is a most important feature of the work. The Commissioner has doubtless had in view the successful "potato-patch" experiment of Mayor Pingree, in Detroit, Mich., where great benefit resulted from the cultivation by the poor of the waste land near the city. Commissioner Booth says that his officers who are picked men capable of advising and directing the colonist in the management of his lot, are receiving five dollars a week, though many of them could easily earn from ten to twenty dollars a week if they worked for themselves. They are toiling with the colonists and are as eager as they for the success of the project. The experiment is interesting, and deserves the support of every Christian philanthopist.

ON THE SALVATION ARMY'S COLONY FARM AT TORONTO, CANADA.

IN A VILLAGE OF GIRLS.

A Visit to a Novel "Barnardo Home" Settlement at Ilfort, England.

THE English sun was doing its best to shine encouragingly on the morning of the day when three ladies, all interested in work among waifand stray children, were to start for a visit to Dr. Barnardo's Home for Girls, at Ilfort. But the London variety of sunshine is so largely adulterated with fog, that it was no surprise to find the rain-drops pattering down as we made our way to Liverpool street station. A ride of about half an quary, we were told that it lay three miles beyond. Another half hour's ride, this time in an open village-cart and "between showers" brought us to the gates. What a sight that was! A large, well-kept oval in the centre, with broad paths all around and narrower ones winding through it, while the broad paths were bounded on the outside by rows upon rows of picturesque little cottages. The first clear impression produced was that of beauty combined with simplicity. It was the only impression there was time for then. Our village-cart stopped in front of one of the larger houses.

READY FOR A RUN AT THE "GIRLS' VILLAGE."

The fundamental principle of this village settlement for girls is that of emphasizing the idea of home life and home training. Dr. Barnardo would like to carry out the same principle with his large family of boys, but it is somewhat more expensive than the dormitory system, and the boys must wait.

The little cottages are charming. Clean through the combination of soap and water and hard work, pretty by reason of pots of flowers on the window-sills and bright texts on the walls. Some of the cottages accommodate sixteen children, others twenty-five, but the larger number is the outside limit, the institutional idea being lost sight of in the home life.

Every cottage has a "mother," who lives with the children and cares for them, has oversight of the housework and keeps them clean, or rather, sees to it that they do that for themselves. All the cottages were spotlessly neat, and so were the girls themselves. As for the cupboards in which the clothes were put away, and the cubby-holes for the toys of the younger girls,—well, we three visitors wished we had been able to bring all our little girl friends to look at them!

The three largest buildings are the laundry (in which the washing is done for all the Homes under Dr. Barnardo's care) the church, and the school house. The church is an ideal one for children, with its bright glass, its appropriate texts on the walls and, best of all, its low seats. Equally well adapted for its purpose is the school-

THE GIRLS' VILLAGE AT ILFORT, ENGLAND.

then there were no signs of the children's Village we had come to see, and on in-

Homes, which have been homes in more than name. ELIZABETH M. CLARK.

LIKE THE STARS.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., } They that turn many to righteousness on the Text: Daniel 12: 3. } shall shine as the stars forever and ever.

EVERY man has a thousand roots and a thousand branches. His roots reach down through all the earth; his branches spread through all the heavens. He speaks with voice, with eye, with hand, with foot. His silence often is loud as thunder, and his life is a dirge or a doxology. There is no such thing as negative influence. We are all positive in the place we occupy, making the world better or making it worse, on the Lord's side or on the devil's, making up reasons for our blessedness or banishment; and we have already done work in peopling heaven or hell. I hear people tell of what they are going to do. A man who has burned down a city might as well talk of some evil that he expects to do, or a man who has saved an empire might as well talk of some good that he expects to do. By the force of your evil influence you have already consumed infinite values; or you have by the power of a right influence, won whole kingdoms for God.

It would be absurd for me, by elaborate argument, to prove that the world is off the track. You might as well stand at the foot of an embankment, amid the wreck of a capsized rail-train, proving by elaborate argument that something is out of order. Adam tumbled over the embankment sixty centuries ago, and the whole race, in one long train, has gone on tumbling in the same direction. Crash! crash! The only question now is, by what leverage can the crushed thing be lifted? By what hammer may the fragments be reconstructed? I want to show you how we may turn many to righteousness, and what will be our future pay for so doing.

First. We may turn them by the charm of a right example. A child coming from a filthy home was taught at school to wash its face. It went home so much improved in appearance that its mother washed her face. And when the father of the household came home and saw the improvement in domestic appearance, he washed his face. The neighbors, happening in, saw the change, and tried the same experiment, until all that street was purified, and the next street copied its example, and the whole city felt the result of one schoolboy washing his face. That is a fable, by which we set forth that the best way to get the world washed of its sins and pollution is to have our own heart and life cleansed and purified. A man with grace in his heart and Christian cheerfulness in his face and holy consistency in his behavior is a perpetual sermon; and the sermon differs from others in that it has but one head, and the longer it runs the better.

There are honest men who walk down Wall Street, making the teeth of iniquity chatter. There are happy men who go into a sick room, and by a look, help the broken bone to knit, and the excited nerves drop to a calm beating. There are pure men whose presence silences the tongue of uncleanness. The mightiest agent of good on earth is a consistent Christian. I like the Bible folded between lids of cloth, of calf skin, or noocco, but I like it better when, in the shape of a man, it goes out into the world—Bible illustrated.

Again: We may turn many to righteousness by prayer. There is no such defective as prayer, for to one can hide away from it. It puts its hand on the shoulder of a man ten thousand miles off. It alights on a ship mid-Atlantic. The little child cannot understand the law of electricity, or how the telegraph operator, by touching the instrument here, may dart a message under the sea to another continuent; nor can we, with our small intellect, understand how the touch of a Christian's prayer shall instantly strike a soul on the other side of the earth. You take ship and go to some other country, and get there at eleven o'clock in the morning. You telegraph to America and the message gets here at six o'clock the same morning. In other words it seems to arrive here five hours before it started. Like that is prayer. God says: "Before they call, I will hear." To overtake a loved one on the road, you may spur up a lathered steed until he shall outrace the one that brought the news to Ghent; but a prayer shall catch it at one gallop. A boy running away from home may take the midnight train from the country village and reach the seaport in time to gain the ship that sails on the morrow; but a mother's prayer will be on the deck to meet him, and in the hammock before he swings into it, and at the capstan before he winds the rope around, and on the sea, against the sky, as the vessel ploughs on toward it. There is a mightiness in prayer. George Muller prayed a company of poor boys together, and then he prayed up an asylum in which they might be sheltered. He turned his face toward Edinburgh and prayed and there came a thousand pounds. He turned his face toward London and prayed, and there came a thousand pounds. He turned his face toward Dublin and prayed, and there came a thousand pounds. The breath of Elijah's prayer blew all the clouds off the sky, and it was dry weather. The breath of Elijah's prayer blew all the clouds together, and it was wet weather. Prayer, in Daniel's time, walked the cave as a lion-tamer. It reached up, and took the sun by its golden bit, and stopped it, and the moon by its silver bit, and stopped it.

We have all yet to try the full power of prayer. The time will come when the American Church will pray with its face toward the West and all the prairies and inland cities will surrender to God; and will pray with face toward the sea, and all the islands and ships will become Christian. Parents who have wayward sons will get down on their knees and say: "Lord, send my boy home," and the boy in Canton shall get right up from the gaming-table, and go down to find out which ship starts first for America.

Not one of us yet knows how to pray. All we have done as yet has only been pottering. A boy gets hold of his father's saw and hammer, and tries to make something, but it is a poor affair that he makes. The father comes and takes the same saw and hammer, and builds the house or the ship. In the childhood of our Christian faith, we make but poor work with these weapons of prayer, but when we come to the stature of men in Christ Jesus, then, under these implements, the temple of God will rise, and the world's redemption will be launched. Believing prayer soars higher than the lark ever sang; plunges deeper than diving-bell ever sank; darts quicker than lightning ever flashed. Though we have used only the back of this weapon instead of the edge, what marvels have been wrought! If saved, we are all the captives of some earnest prayer. Would God that, in desire for the rescue of souls, we might in prayer lay hold of the resources of the Lord Omnipotent!

We may turn many to righteousness by Christian admonition. Do not wait until you can make a formal speech. Address the one next to you. You will not go home alone to-day. Between this and your place of stopping you may decide the eternal destiny of an immortal spirit. Just one sentence may do the work. Just one question. Just one look. The formal talk that begins with a sigh, and ends with a canting snuffle, is not what is wanted, but the heart throb of a man in dead earnest. There is not a soul on earth that you may not bring to God if you rightly go at it. They said Gibraltar could not be taken. It is a rock, sixteen hundred feet high, and three miles long. But the English and Dutch did take it. Artillery, and sappers and miners, and fleets pouring out volleys of death, and thousands of men reckless of danger, can do anything. The stoutest heart of sin, though it be rock, and surrounded by an ocean of transgression, under Christian bombardment may hoist the flag of redemption.

But is all this admonition and prayer and Christian work for nothing? My text promises to all the faithful eternal lustre. "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever." As stars the redeemed have a borrowed light. What makes Mars and Venus and Jupiter so luminous? When the sun throws down his torch in the heavens, the stars pick up the scattered brands, and hold them in procession as the queen of the night advances; so all Christian workers, standing around the throne, will shine in the light borrowed from the Sun of Righteousness—Jesus in their faces, Jesus in their songs, Jesus in their triumph.

Again: Christian workers shall be like the stars in the fact that they have a light independent of each other. Look up at the night, and see each world show its distinct glory. It is not like the conflagration, in which you cannot tell where one flame stops and another begins. Neptune, Herschel, and Mercury are as distinct as if each one of them were the only star; so our individualism will not be lost in heaven. A great multitude—yet each one as observable, as distinctly recognized, as greatly celebrated, as if in all the space, from gate to gate, and from hill to hill, he were the only inhabitant; no mixing up—no mob—no indiscriminate rush; each Christian worker standing out illustrious—all the story of earthly achievement adhering to each one; his self-denials and pains and services and victories published. Before men went out to the last war, the orators told them that they would all be remembered by their country, and their names be commemorated in poetry and in song; but go to the graveyard in Richmond, and you will find there six thousand graves, over each of which is the inscription, "Unknown." The world does not remember its heroes; but there will be no unrecognized Christian worker in heaven. Each one known by all; grandly known; known by acclamation; all the past story of work for God gleaming in cheek and brow and foot and palm.

Again: Christian workers shall shine like the stars in clusters. In looking up, you find the worlds in family circles. Brothers and sisters—they take hold of each other's hands and dance in groups. Orion in a group. The Pleiades in a group. The solar system is only a company of children, with bright faces, gathered around one great fireplace. The worlds do not straggle off. They go in squadrons and fleets, sailing through immensity. So Christian workers in heaven will dwell in neighborhoods and clusters.

I am sure that some people I will like in heaven a great deal better than others. Yonder is a constellation of stately Christians. They lived on earth by rigid rule. They never laughed. They walked every hour anxious lest they should lose their dignity. But they loved God, and yonder they shine in brilliant constellation. Yet I shall not long to get into that particular group. Yonder is a constellation of small-hearted Christians—asteroids in the eternal astronomy. While some souls go up from Christian battle, and blaze like Mars, these asteroids dart a feeble ray like Vesta. Yonder is a constellation of martyrs, of apostles, of patriarchs. Our souls, as they go up to heaven, will seek out the most congenial society.

Yonder is a constellation almost merry with the play of light. On earth they were full of sympathies and songs and tears and raptures and congratulations. When they prayed, their words took fire; when they sang, the tune could not hold them; when they wept over a world's woes, they sobbed as if heart-broken; when they worked for Christ, they flamed with enthusiasm. Yonder they are—circle of light! constellation of joy! galaxy of fire! Oh, that you and I, by that grace which can transform the worst into the best, might at last sail in the wake of that fleet, and wheel in that glorious group, a hero for ever and ever!

Again: Christian workers, like the stars, shine in magnitude. The most man knows that these things are of matter. To weigh them, think that it would require so many pillar hundreds of thousands high, and chains hundreds of miles long; and at the bottom chains basins on either side hundreds of miles wide, and Omnipotence alone could put tains into the scales and the balance. But puny man has taken to the undertaking, and has balance on his geometry, and world against world. Yea, he out his measuring line, and that Herschel is thirty-six thousand in diameter, Saturn seventy-seven thousand miles in diameter, and Jupiter nine thousand miles in diameter, the smallest pearl on the beach is immense beyond all imagination all they who have toiled for earth shall rise up to a magnitude illegitimate, and a magnitude of stern magnitude of holiness, and a joy; and the weakest saint I come greater than all that we could of an archangel.

Brethren, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." Wisdom that shall everything; wealth that shall everything; strength that shall thing; glory that shall circumcise thing! We shall not be like in a sick man's window, or a sticks kindled on the beach a shivering crew; but you must diameter and the circumference a if you would get any idea of the of our estate when we shall stars forever and ever.

Lastly—and coming to this mind almost breaks down under temptation—like the stars, all workers shall shine in duration same stars that look down upon down upon the Chaldean. The meteor that I saw flashing sky the other night, I wonder if the same one that pointed down Jesus lay in the manger, and pointed out his birthplace, it since been wandering through the watching to see how the world him! When Adam awoke in in the cool of the day, he saw through the dusk of the evening worlds that greeted us last night.

In Independence Hall is an bell that sounded the signature Declaration of Independence, not ring it now; but this great silver bells that strike in the night, ring out with as sweet when God swung them at the Look up at night, and know that lilies that bloom in all the haunts of our King are century blooming once in a hundred through all the centuries. T which the mariner looks to-night light by which the ships of Tar guided across the Mediterranean Venetian flotilla found its way panto. Their armor is as night as when, in ancient battle in their courses fought against

To the ancients the stars were of eternity. But here the figure text breaks down—not in definition the majesties of the judgment, he shall not shine forever. The they shall fall like autumnal leaves, when the connecting factory-bells nightfall from the main-wheel smaller wheels slacken their speed with slower and slower motion until they come to a full stop, so machinery of the universe, which wheel, making revolution of speed, shall, by the touch of God's slip the band of present law, and stop. That is what will be the with the mountains. The on which they ride shall halt so that the kings shall be thrown after star shall be carried out amid funeral torches of burnt Constellations shall throw ash heads, and all up and down the of space there shall be mourning, mourning, because the dead. But the Christian workers never quit their thrones—they shine forever and ever.

GOSPEL WORK AMONG THE RANCHERS.

the Great Cattle Ranges of the Southwest, as Home Missionaries see it—
"Roughing it" on the Mexican Border.

HERDERS of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are already familiar with the fact that the great home missionary organization, the American Sunday School Union, within the last few years has been greatly extending its field of operations in the Southwest, and especially in our territory adjoining the Mexican border. This is a most promising section for Gospel effort. Recent letters from missionaries of the Union report substantial progress in church planting, the founding of Sunday Schools, and a most encouraging condition of affairs generally.

This work is conducted in the ranching country of Texas and New Mexico. When Mexico gained her independence, the vast domain of Texas was unsettled, with the exception of a few Mission Stations that had been established for the benefit of the tribes of Indians that roamed over the prairies, fighting each other as well as the white men who disturbed their "hunt-

The rule among stockmen is to "round up" their stock, and mark and brand the calves and colts every spring. During the late war a great many cattle were not branded; they were known as "Mavericks." At first, every stockman claimed a share of them in proportion to the number of cattle he rounded, but unprincipled men took advantage of the opportunity and branded and sold a great many that did not belong to them.

Of late years the grass lands have been bought or leased from the State or railroads, and fenced with barbed wire. Some men have several thousand acres, and a great many hands to look after the fences and herds. When they start out on a "round up" they have a wagon loaded with provisions and blankets for bedding. The men sleep on the ground unless the weather is very bad. The cook drives the wagon and prepares the meals.

"Late one afternoon," writes Rev. A. B. Norrell, American Sunday School Union missionary at Brownwood, West Texas, "I stopped at a ranch, the nearest settlement being fifteen miles distant. There is an unwritten law among stockmen to divide bread, and blanket with anyone who comes along. There were only three young men there that night. I told them who I was and what I was doing; they gave me many tokens of appreciation. Two of them had been church members but they had been away from religious association so long that they were rather indifferent. We sang some Gospel songs and had prayers. The next morning I gave them some reading matter and bade them good-bye. Some time afterwards I met a man who asked me if I stayed at the Ranchhook ranch at a certain time. I told him I had; he said those boys told him they wished I would visit them again. "Twenty years ago the cow-boys were considered a wild set of men, but since the country has been fenced, only the better class are employed. Many are educated and have been raised in Christian homes." Every sheep man is supposed to have a permanent ranch, but they all travel a great deal. They have a provision wagon and one or more herders who are frequently Mexicans. Cow men have a dislike to sheep and say they damage the range. The sheep herder is exposed to all kinds of weather and has a lonely time. Mexicans work cheaper than white men, and are very often employed as herders in shearing time. A large majority of the Mexican people are poor and without aspiration. It is said they will all gamble at "monte." So far as morals are concerned they are of a low grade. Most of them belong to the Catholic church, and very few can read or write. Being ignorant they are naturally superstitious. They sometimes marry among the negroes, but seldom among white people. They take contracts for clearing land, or chopping wood; they camp out all winter, and live in mean huts or dug-outs. Some of them have large families, most of them are slovenly and careless in their habits. In some parts of West Texas there has been considerable missionary work done among them.

"Like every other class of people," Mr. Norrell explains, "when taught the true principles of Christianity and personal faith in Jesus Christ, the Mexican herders make zealous Christians. They should be looked after, especially the children. Many of them could be saved with proper effort. Those who can read would appreciate Bibles, Testaments or any kind of reading matter printed in the Spanish language. I am willing and anxious to do something for them. I have never found a place too hard to hold a successful religious meeting of some kind. All sorts of people have received me kindly. The cow-boys and ranchmen are generous-hearted. They never turn a man off hungry. I love this work and hope to give my life to it."

REV. A. B. NORRELL, MISSIONARY.

SHEEP-SHEARING AT A TEXAS RANCH.

Mr. Norrell lies, and delivered 1,827 sermons and addresses, besides distributing 1,533 Bibles, 2,297 Testaments, and a great quantity of other religious reading matter. In the district there are many places wholly destute of Gospel privileges, and these are searched out and visited by the missionaries; opportunities are sought to save the little children by the establishment of Sunday Schools, sometimes in a shed, or a room, or even a barn, and wherever possible an arrangement is made to have preaching services at frequent intervals. "The best meetings to me are the children's services," Mr. Norrell writes. "Their little trustful eyes and sweet faces are truly a joy beyond measure. One great need in this State is good reading matter for the children and young people." Some of the reports made to the American Sunday School Union by its missionaries in the border stations of the Southwest, disclose a condition of spiritual need which ought to awake the active sympathies of all who are interested in Christ's kingdom. One missionary, Rev. Geo. R. Stewart, writes that in one district in Southern Arkansas, there are "4,000 children and young people who do not go to Sunday School, but who fish, hunt, and spend the day in other sinful sports. Can't you help us?" he asks appealingly. Very hopeful reports of Gospel progress and soul-saving are made by missionaries S. C. Johnson, Central Texas, and J. M. Stockson, Southeast Texas. Rev. W. H. Gill, Arizona, has a district of mountain ranges and valleys, difficult of access, with a population of 105,000, comprising whites, Indians, and Mexicans. He has established two growing missions, but the field is vast and needs many more laborers.

All the work of the American Sunday School Union is undenominational and it appeals to every Christian Church and home in the land. $25 will start a new Sunday School, $1 represents the average cost of a single scholar, and $10 will buy a complete Sunday School library. All contributions for this excellent work sent to this journal will be duly acknowledged in these columns.

Mr. Norrell, the missionary spoken of, ground." The Mexican government, anxious to encourage immigration, contracts with Moses Austin and others to whom they gave large grants of land, on which they were to locate immigrants from the United States. At that time Texas was not considered a good country, and each family was entered "a league and labor" of land; the league, 444 acres) was for stock raising, and the labor (177 acres) for farming. They were located together or separately as the settlers wished. The rich lands soon attracted a great many settlers and adventurers. The stock was abundant, and with but little attention stock would thrive well without a herder; there was abundant along the many miles leading to the Gulf of Mexico.

A HERDER'S CABIN NEAR SAN ANGELO, ON THE MEXICAN BORDER.

them good-bye. Some time afterwards I met a man who asked me if I stayed at the Ranchhook ranch at a certain time. I told him I had; he said those boys told him they wished I would visit them again.

"Twenty years ago the cow-boys were considered a wild set of men, but since the country has been fenced, only the better class are employed. Many are educated and have been raised in Christian homes."

Every sheep man is supposed to have a permanent ranch, but they all travel a great deal. They have a provision wagon and one or more herders who are frequently Mexicans. Cow men have a dislike to sheep and say they damage the range. The sheep herder is exposed to all kinds

SAVING THE CHILDREN IN INDIA.

How the Helpless Girls, Orphaned and Widowed in their Childhood, have been Sheltered by the Missionaries Aided by "Christian Herald" Funds and Kept from Ruin.

AMONG the sufferers by the famine in India the saddest cases are those of the girls, many of whom, married in their early years after the custom of the country, have become widows while still under twelve years of age. Some of these are orphans, too, and are utterly destitute. It has been one of the most delightful results of the generous gifts of the readers of this journal that so large a number of these poor creatures have been saved through the aid rendered from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Famine Fund. On this page we reproduce a photograph of a group of these girls whom Mrs. Hume of Byculla, Bombay, was enabled to receive and feed and clothe through the funds supplied by our readers. Mrs. Hume gathered them in the garden of the Mission and had them photographed in order that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD might see how bright and intelligent were the girls who are being kept alive by their bounty. This means in many cases far more than physical life. Designing persons of both sexes too often take advantage of distress, such as these girls were enduring, to lead them to lives of shame—a fate worse even than death by hunger. Instead of having to choose between those dreadful alternatives they have been taken into a Christian home where they will receive Christian training. The missionaries are very thankful to have such an opportunity of winning for Christ girls who will in the future, either in the home, the school or mission work, be able to speak for Christ as the foreigner cannot do. That the missionaries have been able to do this to so large an extent is due to the liberality of our readers, who have supplied them with the funds without which the opportunity must have been allowed to pass unused. Mrs. Hume has also a group of boys who were brought to the mission either by their parents or by charitable persons who found them orphaned by the roadside. These, too, the kindly lady and her devoted husband, who is a missionary of the American Board, have been enabled to shelter and feed and teach.

Like Pandita Ramabai, whose grateful thanks for the help of our readers, we published in a former number of this journal, other ladies have devoted themselves specially to this promising work. Miss Lillian Deitrich, who is laboring at Cawnpore, under the auspices of the Women's Union Missionary Society, writes that the money sent her from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund has already enabled her to take in over one hundred of these little famine-suffering orphan girls. "Some of the stories they have to tell us," writes Miss Deitrich, "make one's heart ache for them; how, driven by hunger from their once happy home, the whole family have gone out to seek food, which they could not obtain, in any place and these children have seen one member of their family after another, father, mother, brothers, sisters lie down by the roadside and die. Sometimes they are the sole survivors of the family, and were rescued when they, too, had given up hope and expected no fate but that of dying as their relatives had died. On behalf of our orphan girls, as well as of the starving men and women of India, whom through your means we have been enabled to save, I thank you most heartily, and through you the contributors to the fund."

A similar work is being done by Rev. Henry Fairbank, of Wadale, in the Ahmednagar District. Among the beneficiaries in which Mr. Fairbank has used the money sent to him by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund, he mentions particularly the children. In a letter just received from him, he writes: "There are about one hundred and twenty-five children under my care (or rather there were, for another detachment, just arrived, brings the number up to one hundred and fifty). All these I am now enabled to provide with food and clothing. Some of these are orphans, and of the others the parents are at relief camps. There are others, too, for whom I have not sufficient accommodation. They were in danger of starving, so I have placed them in charge of a near relative in one of the villages, who supplies them with food and clothing. It costs more than four hundred rupees (about $133) a month to do this, so that I shall need a large sum to continue the work. I think I could not have had the courage to face all the distress by which we are surrounded, if I had had no means of relieving it. I am very grateful to you for making it possible for me to give help to such large numbers. Please pass on my thanks to those who have contributed so generously to this Famine Fund."

From Rev. James Smith of Ahmednagar comes the following grateful letter: "At a recent special meeting of the American Marathi Mission held at Ahmednagar, to organize more fully measures for famine relief in our district, and to distribute the funds for such relief that have been placed in our hands by Christian friends in America, it was voted that I express to you on behalf of our Mission our very deep sense of the obligation under which you have placed us personally at this time of deep distress, by your more than we have received. The rains have been delayed, however, abnormally and are not expected now in the Deccan until September, when seed grain will be urgently needed. In the meantime the distress continues to increase in the Ahmednagar and the Sholapur Districts.

"The above are but examples of the ways in which your charity has been administered. With all this the Gospel of Jesus Christ has been preached as the only way of salvation and Jesus as the Bread of Life. May the Spirit bless what has been done in his name! In the meantime will you assure your subscribers that these 'dumb millions' are not incapable of gratitude, and every day we hear their thanks to those who, though so far away, have proved the Good Samaritan."

Writing from Ellichpur, Miss Murray thanks God for the contributions to the Ceylon Coming to (rist

(Continued from First Page)

employment to many natives. In plantations near Colombo, it is the finest tea in the world is growing.

SINGHALESE CHILDREN IN A CEYLON FRUIT GARDEN.

fragrant shrub thrives everywhere, the lowland next to the coast, up to a altitude of 1500 feet on the mountain slopes. Tea bushes are planted at regular intervals apart, in land which is carefully drained and weeded. The bushes are pruned at the proper season and within two months after pruning the first young shoots appear. These are picked. Every ten days or so a new, tender growth comes out, and the fresh and delicate leaves are carefully gathered. The tea is then dried and rolled, sorted, weighed, packed and shipped. In Ceylon 150,000 acres of land are now under tea cultivation, the labor employed being chiefly Indians and Malays.

In Ceylon, betrothals and marriages frequently take place at a very early age. These are arranged by the parents and grooms—mere children—without for life without any choice on their own part. Maternal uncles play an important part in these miniature marriages, and the senior uncle always the major-domo of such occasions.

One of our photographs presents a group of three Buddhist monks, dressed in their traditional robes, sitting on a rock. They are carefully studying the Bible in English, and let us hope they will be able to do so in their own language. Another photograph shows a view of one of the many heathen shrines of Ceylon, the temple of Maligawa (or "the Tooth") near Kandy. The "sacred tooth of Buddha" is preserved nearly 1500 years in this shrine. In other lands the gifts to the priests who cup the famous temple, and many are attributed to this relic of such monstrous size that it is said to be the molar of a mammoth, the largest of a human being.

THE BETHESDA HOME

For Homeless Girls.

No. 79 Fort Greene Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

(Conducted under the auspices of The Christian Herald.)

A much needed rescue work in Greater New York.

Matron in charge, 30 beds, laundry, sewing rooms; regular religious services. Many friendless girls helped and rescued to their homes, and others helped to secure employment and better lives.

The following contributions to this Samaritan work have been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Previously acknowledged Osceola
Friend, Paterson
Invalid, Me
Anon, Millheim
Jennie P. Smith
The Lord's money, Dudley
S. A. Wing
Mrs. E. Morley
Susie L. and Jos. Winter
111 N. Schenectady
In His Name, Ellenville
Total

"CHRISTIAN HERALD" FAMINE GIRLS RECEIVED BY MRS. E. S. HUME, BYCULLA, BOMBAY.

early and often repeated donations for famine relief. We have received directly by cable $8,000, and through Bishop Thoburn's Committee Rs. 10,500, say $3,000 more. This money has enabled us to relieve many thousands of necessitous people whom Government Relief measures could not reach. We have endeavored to work in co-operation with Government officers, they on their part offering labor to all able-bodied persons, and providing more especially for children, aged and infirm persons, giving clothing, distributing grain, in some cases gratis where it seemed necessary, and in other cases selling the grain at reduced rates at a loss so as to put it within the reach of the industrious poor. We have also found employment for people who, for sufficient reasons, could not live at the Government Relief works. Other sums have been spent upon digging or deepening irrigation wells. Since the rain began to fall in some parts of our district, we have given large sums to the farmers to purchase seed grain. If the rains had been general, we could have spent for seed grain thousands of rupees

Famine Relief Fund, adding: "We shall need it all for this month, with Relief Works going on besides the mud wall of Kothara." Relief camps are carried on at Duni, Ghatang, and several other centres. At Bhaidehi several hundred men are working who have to be fed daily, as well as hundreds of children who get a free meal, besides the orphans. Then there are the Khamla Relief Works, where there are from 900 to 1,000 employed, 400 of whom are busy road-making, the others helping as they are able. These also are fed. These men need teaching how to work, and God is thus bringing the wild hill tribes under unwonted discipline. By the sale of cheap grain several thousand people are being fed who would otherwise be in a state of whole or partial starvation. This relief covers a large area of villages in the jungle.

Last, but by no means least, there is the large family of 140 orphans to be daily provided for in three separate orphanages. The older of these are learning weaving, carpentering, sewing, farm work, and household service.

HAWAIIAN TREATY.

RECENT news from Hawaii indicates that by this time the Senate of the Republic has ratified the treaty of annexation. It was convoked on September 8th, for the express purpose of considering the treaty and no doubt was entered to the decision it would reach. Mr. Thurston, the representative from Hawaii at Washington, says that the treaty was practically unanimous for the first time previous to its adjournment. With the lower house in a resolution declaring that the interests of Hawaii and her annexation to the United States are the complexion of the Senate changed since that resolution was passed there is no reason to doubt that the treaty has been ratified on the Hawaiian States Senate. It is believed that prompt ratification in Hawaii will incline its favor some of our Senators are now hesitating. It is a rebuff at this time to draw Hawaii into the arms of no Senator would willingly contribute to that result. The United States have been eager to gain possession of these islands and have fully realized the responsibility that acquisition would involve, they could not suit with equanimity to seeing the possession of any other country. The attitude of Japan both pressing to our Government annexation and in protracting the bullying way the disputes in Hawaii, indicates that it has a covetous eye on the islands. It is probably aware of the doubting its ability to maintain independence is the more reason for the protection of the United States. It is doubtful, however, whether our Senate will ratify the treaty without a struggle. Conservative Senators are averse to so sudden a departure from our traditional policy and anticipate trouble following a dependency more than a thousand miles away. Besides, it is admitted that the treaty of the Pacific commerce renders possession of these islands, which have been aptly called the islands of the Pacific, exceedingly valuable and as we do not acquire them by conquest but on the petition of their people, there can be no serious scruples about accepting it. It will be for the Senate to decide whether the advantages of securing them are greater than the trouble and danger their possession will involve. Happily for the human race, such considerations do not weigh when men decide to reign over them. Neither in ill condition, nor the risk of disapproval causes him to reject any who desire to come under his sway.

...at cometh unto me I will in no wise cast him out (John 6: 37).

Light on Garbage.

During his recent visit to this country at the Congress of Scientists, Lord Kelvin gave an interesting description of a system of disposing of the garbage of a great city so as to extract electric energy from it, and to supply hot water to public baths and laundries. Briefly, the system provides for the employment of a conveyor street, trade, and refuse to be conveyed to the works, where motor-driven fans, and electric elevators distribute it on platforms; from these it is shot through a series of mechanical feeders into a series of the destructor. A forced draft, supplied by motor-driven fans, feeds the intense fire in which the refuse is consumed. The fire gives the heat to steam generators and boilers driving the engines and dynamos and the water furnished to the baths and laundries. By means of this arrangement, it is expected that not less than twenty thousand tons of refuse—which has formerly been carried out to sea at great expense—will be consumed annually in this plant. Experts in engineering are united in pronouncing this project an extremely unique union of scientific knowledge and mechanical skill—one that will doubtless be imitated by many municipalities. Thus from the refuse comes light and the means of cleansing. Our rescue missions are engaged in similar work. From the human refuse that they gather, through the Holy Spirit comes light and usefulness:

God hath chosen the foolish things of the world... and the base things of the world and the things which are despised... That no flesh should glory. (1. Cor. 1: 27)

Why the Clock Varied.

A curious explanation is given of the variations of the great clock which is on the front of the Grand Central depot in New York. Although the mechanism of short time, would be sufficient to hasten it or retard it, according to whether it was ascending or descending. It was useless to do anything to the works while the pigeons perched on the hands. It is so in life. The reason that some Christians are not showing a good example is often not to be found in their intentions or desires, but that they suffer some temptation or some association to hamper them in their conduct. The Scriptural advice should never be forgotten:

Let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us and let us run with patience the race that is set before us. (Heb. 12: 1)

Attacked by Raccoons.

A Brooklyn lawyer who has been spending a few weeks with his family at their sea-beach home, returned one day last week to attend to some business. In the evening he went to his deserted home to see that everything was safe. As he opened the front door he was viciously attacked by some wild animal. He could not see at first what it was, but he defended himself as well as he could until another leaped at his throat. Then he shouted lustily for help. Two passers-by ran to his assistance, and one of them fortunately had a revolver with which he shot one of the animals. His companion seized the other animal which was holding viciously to the lawyer's hand. The animal let go his hold and turned savagely on the new comer, who startled by ing in the hospital in that city is a man suffering from an incurable disease. Tenderly watching over him, and anticipating all his wants, and nursing him with the gentleness of a woman, is a strong rough man who, for his sake, turned his back on an enormous fortune. The two men were born in Scotland, and came to this country about eleven years ago. They had been school-fellows in the old country, their homes had been only a mile apart, and they had grown up with a warm affection for each other. They lived for a time in Chicago, working at their trade as carpenters; then at St. Paul, and afterwards at Seattle. While there they heard it whispered that there was gold in Alaska. They went there together, and worked hard with fair success. Then came the news of the Klondike discovery, and they promptly made their way across the frontier to the new field. They bought a claim for five hundred dollars, and were beginning to take out gold in large quantities, when one of the friends fell sick. He grew worse, and became unable to leave his bed. He suffered much and at last the other realized that the only hope of saving his life was to get him to Seattle where he could have proper medical attention. The sick man, too, wanted to go, but it was impossible to go alone. His friend never hesitated. He made his arrangements as quickly as possible, left his claim with all the wealth it promised to yield, put his friend on a horse and walked beside him to steady him, all the way to Dawson City. Eventually they reached Seattle, only to learn that the sick man could never recover. His friend is staying with him to the last, anxious only to comfort and cheer him. It was a noble thing to do. Few men would have done it, yet all admire such sacrifice; but how few think of what Christ resigned and suffered that he might save them, or feel any gratitude to him!

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. (John 15: 13)

A New Race.

One of the most remarkable papers read at the recent Medical Congress at Montreal, was that of Dr. R. M. Bucke, dealing with psychological problems. Classing together spiritualism, telepathy, clairvoyance and other mysterious phenomena, he was disinclined to regard them as charlatanism, though unscrupulous people had often used them in that way. Neither did he believe that the phenomena were the results of outside agents, such as spirits or demons, acting through human beings. He had personally investigated many of these phenomena, and was acquainted with several persons whose cases could not be explained by medical science, but who were evidently sincere in their words and actions. He mentioned Mollie Fancher, of Brooklyn, and Stainton Moses, as cases in which there was no hypocrisy or deceit. His own conviction is that a new form of consciousness is appearing in the human race and that a higher order of faculties and senses is developing and becoming more and more common. The new order obeys the laws to which every nascent faculty is subject, and its presence is clearly marked. Many more or less perfect examples of this higher consciousness Dr. Bucke has studied and has witnessed exhibitions of their powers. He is convinced that there are persons endowed with senses and faculties not possessed by ordinary people, and that the number of such persons is increasing. Whether these faculties will grow, become common and finally universal, or whether they will wither and disappear, it is too early to predict; but Dr. Bucke expressed the hope that they were indications of the birth of a new race, a higher type of man, which would possess this higher consciousness and would be far superior to the present race. The doctor's hope seems to rest on substantial grounds. Christians have long indulged it, though it was not expected that it would be fulfilled in this world, but in the presence of our Lord.

It doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. (1. John 3: 2)

THE BURIAL PLACE IN HAWAII OF CAPTAIN COOK.

the clock is without defect and has been kept in perfect order, it has of late been seldom exactly right. It was noticed that sometimes it would gain and sometimes lose considerably. The variations, it appears, have been caused by the pigeons perching on the hands of the clock. The hour hand is thirty inches long and the minute hand forty-two inches long. A gentleman who noticed recently a speck on the face of the clock, procured an opera glass to ascertain what it was. The glass showed him a blue pigeon perched on the hour hand, calmly pruning its feathers. The time was nearly twenty minutes past four, and the great minute hand was descending with the fair probability of crushing or decapitating the pigeon as it overtook the other hand in its descent. The bird did not seem in the least alarmed, though in comparison with itself, the bar of metal must have seemed a huge arm. As the minute hand approached, the bird flew lightly upward and alighted upon it until it glided past the danger point. Then it fluttered to the hour hand again, as the more steady and permanent foothold, and sat pruning its feathers as before. It was not difficult, after that, to understand why the clock, in spite of the excellence of its works, did not keep accurate time. The weight of the pigeon on the minute hand, for a the suddenness of the attack, loosed his grip and the animal bounded away and disappeared. Examining the dead beast, they found it was a raccoon. It and its mate had evidently made the lawyer's house their home for several days. They had escaped from the cage of a student of natural history who lives on the next street, and they had lived on chickens which they had stolen from the henneries of the neighborhood. How they gained an entrance to the house is not known, but it was in some way that permitted easy ingress and egress. They had been lost for some time and though they could not be found, it was known by their depredations that they were in the neighborhood. If the owner of the house had been at home they could not have made it their refuge. The human heart is liable to the same danger. When Christ is not there, evil passions make it their abode, which destroy the man and injure all about him. There is need for all to offer the prayer of the Prophet:

O the hope of Israel, the Saviour thereof in time of trouble, why shouldest thou be as a stranger in the land and as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night... we are called by thy name; leave us not. (Jer. 14: 9)

His Friend or Gold.

A touching story of the love of two friends comes from Seattle, Wash. Ly-

SEPT.

If you are on a railroad train, and stop at the depot, and a boy comes in with a telegram, all the passengers lean forward and wonder if it is for them. It may be news from home. It must be urgent or it would not be brought there. Now, if while we are rushing on in the whirl of everyday excitement, a message of God meets us, it must be an urgent and important message. If God speaks to us in a meeting mid-week, it is because there is something that needs to be said before next Sunday.

A handsome gold medal has been awarded Engineer Underdown of Raton, New Mexico, by the Christian Endeavorers as a token of his remarkable heroism in a recent rescue.

Mr. Underdown, who is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Raton, of which Thomas C. Moffett is pastor, had charged carrying Christian Endeavorers from Sacramento. When near Raton, the main-rope of motive snapped short, and the fragment with inconceivable force and speed started at every revolution. Engineer Underdown missed his firm grasp of the scolding handle, and his forehead, whose dead body was frequently found beside the track, and the engine rapidly demolished. The brave engineer remained at his post struggling manfully with disarranged brakes to work, and ultimately the train to a standstill. The Christian passengers learning how terrible a catastrophe had escaped, took up a subscription of fifty dollars to defray the expenses of even twenty dollars were spent in appreciation for Engineer Underdown as a memorial of heroic devotion to duty.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Paul's Journey to Jerusalem.

Lesson for Oct. 3. Acts 18:1-15. Golden Text Acts 21:13.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE biography of Paul in the Acts of the Apostles gives a wonderful sample of God's workmanship. Side by side with his unparalleled ministry runs the growth of Christ in him, as he continually learned Christ in the Word, and in the dealing of his God with him. In early days of following Christ Paul was guided as a little child—"Go" or "Go there," and he went without shadow of a desire to choose his own way. But in the later part of his life and there came a change. He had followed people or circumstances, with any regard for his own will, or his weakness or incapacity, to have a voice in what he took; he had his orders from men and he carried them out. But now, no longer a little child, who has to obey without understanding, there comes a new power; now Paul can purpose to go to Jerusalem, and also to see Rome (Acts 19:21). There was a purpose in the Spirit who is our guide into all truth, and Paul did not follow the guidance he had in his childhood, but accepted the responsibility which God put upon him to find out to know the way of the Spirit of the tactics of the enemy changed; in the journey of Christ up to Jerusalem when "He steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem, his disciples could not understand why he would have hindered him, so it was with Paul, and apparently the Holy Ghost showed the disciples one way and Paul another. Neither Peter, nor any of the apostles could accept the idea that Christ must suffer: for the Lord said, 'this shall not be unto thee.' (Matt. 16:22.) The Holy Spirit witnessed in every city that bonds of afflictions awaited Paul (Acts 19:23). The very first place on his journey up to Jerusalem where he found disciples, was at Tyre, they said to him through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem. How perplexing this would be to a young and inexperienced Christian who did not know how to place all before him, and to wait for him! Paul does not say that the disciples have their light, but more of the plan of God which they see has been revealed to him. He knows and accepts from God's hand all trials and afflictions which are awaiting him; he knows that his way lies to Jerusalem and later on to Rome, and he is not troubled by the difficulty of direction as one who knows all things which work together for good to them that love God.

Paul spent seven days with the disciples at Tyre, Paul departed and another day's farewell took place. The whole household, wives and children included, turned out and accompanied him to the seashore, where they had a last parting together before he took ship for Ptolemais, where he spent only one day with the brethren. But what days of spiritual intercourse with God and with men! Other must those have been! Their meeting place was Caesarea. There he met the same Philip, "one of the seven" (Acts 4:35), who had been so blessed of God in Samaria. Not only so, Philip an evangelist, he had also four daughters which prophesied, i. e., spoke to men "to edification and exhortation and comfort" (1 Cor. 14:3). Here Paul's journey is more prolonged, and here again a new trial awaited him. Agabus, a prophet from Jerusalem, had come down to Caesarea. "And when he was come he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Lord, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles." In this case, the Holy Spirit did not say that Paul should not go up to Jerusalem, but spoke of the consequences if he should go. How should the work of God in his hands go on if Paul were bound? Would he rashly put an end to his precious ministry? It looked like foolhardiness and obstinacy if he persisted in his purpose in spite of these warnings. It was a severe test, a difficult lesson. But perhaps now, as never before, this man learned to hide in his God; to lay all before him and wait for a confirmation of his own purpose, not in his own self-will but in the Spirit. God had shown him Jerusalem, and later on Rome, and in the future he saw nothing but the will of his God in connection with these two cities. All consequences were alike to him. He would trust God with his ministry, with the care of the churches, with the misunderstanding of those who honestly believed he was taking a wrong step. But he could not afford to let even God's leading of others come between him and what he saw to be the will of his God. He was not responsible for God's leading of others, but he was responsible for God's leading of him, and he knew his God too well to fear that he would allow him to make a mistake. While our Lord shews us in his Word, and prayed in his high-priestly prayer for the unity of his children, he nevertheless teaches us not to be servants of men.

Paul weathered the storm, remained unmoved even when his companion in travel joined the disciples at Caesarea in beseeching him not to go up to Jerusalem. His answer was characteristic. "What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem in the name of the Lord Jesus." The disciples had also their lesson to learn. Luke, who writes the account, had seen many signs of a coming storm: the disaffection of the unconverted Jews on account of Paul's ministry, and the knowledge that many of these Jews would be at Jerusalem, as well as their own distinct guidance by the Spirit, made it hard for them to hold their peace. Their lesson was to learn to trust Paul with God, and his lesson was to trust them with Him. "When he would not be persuaded we ceased, saying, The will of the Lord be done."

Now the last stage of this eventful journey was come. After three days "we made ready our baggage" (R.V., margin) and went up to Jerusalem. Loving hearts cared for their beloved teacher, and one, Mnason, an old disciple, went with them for no other purpose than to provide hospitality for the party. All should be done to make things as easy as could be for the man who had been God's instrument to bring them near to their Lord. They arrived at Jerusalem and the brethren received them gladly. There were loyal hearts in Jerusalem, but much was stirring both within the church and outside of it. "The day following Paul went in with us unto James: and all the elders were present. And when we had saluted them he declared particularly [rehearsed one by one, R.V.] the things which God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry. And when they had heard it they glorified the Lord. They would not but recognize that the work was of God, the knowledge of Christ spread abroad throughout Asia, the planting of churches throughout Asia Minor and a large part of Macedonia and Achaia: they were wondrous things which God had wrought.

But the elders of the church knew that a storm was brewing and all that they had heard of the mighty power of God did not prevent their adopting, and calling upon Paul to adopt, politic methods to prevent the coming storm. They think of an expedient which they expect to succeed, and they persuade Paul to adopt it, and the man of God who has safely passed through test after test which might have drawn him back from the path of close obedience, the obedience of faith, in this instance, under the pressure of the powers that be, comes down from his high standard and does that which is politic rather than that which is of faith.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

LUKE'S characteristic attention to detail enables us to trace Paul's journey from place to place. He appears to have sailed on a merchant vessel, as mention is made of the unloading of her cargo. In those days the habit was to hug the coast, having no compass, it was dangerous to go out of sight of land. It seems probable, too, from the narrative, that they did not sail in the night; the various stopping-places look like a day's sail apart and we infer that arriving at a port the ship would wait until dawn. The voyage would be full of interest to an ordinary traveler, but to Paul and his companions all the usual sights, like the Colossus of Rhodes, a gigantic statue adorning the harbor and accounted one of the seven wonders of the world, were matters of no concern. They are not from him would be their presentments that he was going into danger and probably death. Thence Paul went to Ptolemais, the modern Acre, where his voyage terminated. Caesarea was only forty-two miles away and this distance was covered by land either on foot or on horseback. Here Paul and his friends were entertained by Philip—not the apostle, but the deacon—who had founded the church at Samaria and had baptized the Ethiopian eunuch. As was stated in the latter narrative he went to Caesarea (Acts 8:40), and probably had remained there, his four daughters helping him in his Christian work. Here again Paul was warned of the consequences of going forward. Agabus, who was called a prophet, having predicted a famine, which took place, arrived at Caesarea from Jerusalem, and could give authoritative account of the state of Jewish feeling in the metropolis. After the Old Testament manner, he gave a vivid object lesson of the treatment Paul might expect. The comparison of his prophecy with the event, is an illustration of the folly of the verbal and literal interpretation of the prophecies. It was practically fulfilled, but was wrong in details. It was not the Jews, but the Gentiles who bound Paul (Acts 22:25), and so far from the Jews delivering him to the Gentiles, as Agabus said, the Gentiles took him by force out of the hands of the Jews to prevent his being lynched (Acts 24:7). Even Luke appears to have been moved by the prediction of Agabus and joined the other friends in begging Paul not to go forward. Paul was evidently distressed by their pleading, but he had no hesitation about his course.

He must do his duty at any cost and he would not be deterred by the knowledge that it involved danger to him self. His friends recognizing the sacredness of the dictates of conscience, forbore to press their protests further and bowed to the will of the Lord. They understood that Paul was going under the belief that God had appointed him to the mission, and there was no course in that case but acquiescence. So Paul and his party took their baggage (called here by the old-fashioned word, "carriages"), and went to Jerusalem, the city of God, which was in the habit of killing the messengers he sent to it.

I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die. A device found on an ancient medal, which has become the motto of a missionary society, is that of a bullock standing between a plough and an altar.

Underneath is the inscription, "Ready for either,—for toil or for sacrifice." That was Paul's constant attitude. This is the attitude of the true hero.

Four daughters who did prophecy. Paul is often quoted by those who would prevent women engaging prominently in Christian work, yet here we find him the guest for "many days" of a man who had four daughters who prophesied. It is doubtful whether the word prophecy in this case means prediction. In other places, Paul uses the word in a sense that implies inspired preaching of the Gospel, which is probably its meaning here. Many a lad has been influenced for life by some gentle Christian woman who was his teacher in Sunday School. In heathen lands women are working with all the courage and devotion of men as missionaries of the Cross. During the Armenian troubles, Dr. Grace Kimball braved the wrath of the brutal Turkish soldiery and protected her charges with all the intrepidity of a man. Any man who disparages woman's work for Christ is guilty of something worse than ungallantry.

He would not be persuaded. It is remarkable that Christ, whose teaching of non-resistance has often been stigmatized as cowardly, should have had so many followers conspicuous for their courage. Chrysostom the eloquent preacher was threatened by the Roman Emperor with banishment. "I defy thee," he replied, "Thou canst not banish me, for the world is my Father's house." "I will slay thee," said the Emperor, his exasperation growing. "Nay," was the reply, "I fear thee not, for my life is hid with Christ in God."

PRESENT CONDITION OF ANCIENT TYRE.

THE YIELDED WILL.

Christ's demand on His Followers Reasonable and Beneficial to Themselves and Others. Phil. 2: 1-13.

When a man is without spiritual discernment the doctrines and requirements of Christianity often appear to him as a species of degradation. He hears Christians talk of surrendering themselves, of giving up their own will and of doing everything for the glory of God. He knows that in many instances this is only religious slang, mere cant, without any substantial, practical meaning; but there are few men who do not number among their religious friends, some who really mean these things and conduct their lives on these principles. These are the men who seem to the worldling to have abdicated their manliness and who have made themselves automats or slaves. But is this really so? Does a man degrade himself by making the will of God the supreme consideration which shapes his life?

The objection to this principle, as to so many others, is applied to it only in religious matters. In social life the principle seems reasonable and necessary. The individual will, about which there is so much tenacity when we are asked to surrender it to God, ceases to be sacred when we are asked to surrender it to men. We surrender it and we expect others to surrender it, in several relations of life. When in our Presidential years the name of the nominee of the Party, with which we are affiliated, is announced, there is commonly a widespread disappointment. It is rare indeed that the candidate is the man whom we should have chosen if we could have had our way. Yet how seldom is there a bolt from a Party! We work and argue and vote for the man whom the National Convention is made the standard-bearer. Our own will is given up, and we are content to give it up, because that is the only way to victory in November. Still more conspicuous is the surrender of the will in the army. The soldier and the subordinate officer often do their work blindly. They advance, or retreat, occupy this position and retire from that stronghold, at the word of command. They know that the Commander-in-chief is working for victory over the enemy and they obey him because that is their desire, too. They know that nothing would be accomplished if before every movement the rank and file had to be convinced that the movement was wise and had to understand and approve the reasons for it. They know, too, that when the war is over, it will be the Commander-in-chief whose name will be honored and that he will have the glory. The newspapers will say, and future historians will say, that he won the battle or captured the town, and the names of the soldiers will not be mentioned. The glory will be his. It is so in the family. The boy cannot see why he should learn Latin and mathematics. But he must surrender his will to his father and when he becomes a father in his turn, he exacts the same surrender from his son.

Now this principle is all that is asked of the Christian and he is no more degraded by yielding than are these others we have mentioned. As it is with the boy, the soldier and the politician, there is reason and wisdom in the Christian's surrender. It is better for himself and better for the world that he make the will of God the rule of his life.

But how to discover it, is the difficulty with some. How are we to know what is the will of God? The orders do not come to us as they come to the soldier. God deals with us on a higher plane. He expects us to be not only ready to yield but to be eager to learn his will. To those who have this desire indications are given. They may be slight, but they are sufficient when the desire for them is active—when the man is on the alert. Sometimes it is only the presentation of an opportunity; sometimes it is in the revelation of a need, but those who are ready and eager for service of any kind that will please God, will never be idle. Those only may be kept waiting who have chosen for themselves and are not willing for drudgery.

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

Build Ye on the Rock.

"The rock of salvation."—Ps. 89: 26.

Mrs. C. E. BRECK.

J. H. BURKE.

1. Build ye on the Rock foun-da-tion, And thy house shall sure-ly stand
2. Build ye on the Rock foun-da-tion, Build with pur- pose true and brave;
3. Build ye on the Rock foun-da-tion, Cor-ner stone of wou-drous love;

When the storm brings des-o-la-tion To the house built on the sand.
Build a glo-rious hab-it-a-tion, Stroug to shel-ter, strong to save.
In thy day of ex-alt-a-tion, Thou shalt dwell with Christ-a-bove.

CHORUS.
Build ye on the Rock foun-da-tion, On the Rock that standeth sure—on the Rock foun-da-tion, Rock that stand-eth sure—

On the Rock of God's sal-va-tion, That for-ev-er shall eu-dure.
That for-ev-er shall en-dure.

Copyright, 1896, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From the new book "SACRED SONGS NO. 1." By per. of The Biglow & Main Co.

THE MISSION OF LIFE.

LIFE is a battle. If we choose the right,
The powers of darkness then stalk forth to fight.

But if we make the evil our one choice,
We know no conflict, strife, or thwarting voice,
Save that still voice with which God warns the soul

While on its course it hastens toward the goal.

With ease we glide away from truth and good;
E'en without effort carried by the flood.

But war we must and work with God-lent might,
Face the fierce foes and keep our armor bright,
If we the foes would slay, the battle win,
Out-soldier and o'ercome the hosts of sin.

This is man's mission while on earth he stays:
Fight, struggle, suffer, die, and end his days.
This is God's plan. These curses blessings are:
To toil to fight, and die is better far
Than without these to reach the home above.
Man's heritage is from the God of love.

—ORVILLE T. FLETCHER.

Altamont, Albany Co., N. Y.

"NOT AS I WILL."

BLINDFOLDED and alone I stand,
With unknown thresholds on each hand.
The darkness deepens as I grope,
Afraid to fear, afraid to hope;
Yet this one thing I learn to know
Each day more surely as I go,
That doors are opened, ways are made,
Burdens are lifted or are laid,
By some great law unseen and still,
Unfathomed purpose to fulfil,
"Not as I will"

Blindfolded and alone I wait;
Loss seems too bitter, gain too late;
Too heavy burdens in the load;
And too few helpers on the road;
And joy is weak and grief is strong,
And years and days so long, so long!
Yet this one thing I learn to know
Each day more surely as I go,
That I am glad the good and ill
By changeless law are ordered still,
"Not as I will."

"Not as I will"—the sound grows sweet
Each time my lips the words repeat.
"Not as I will!" The darkness feels
More safe than light, when this thought steals
Like whispered voice to calm and bless
All unrest and all loneliness.
"Not as I will," because the One
Who loved us first and best has gone
Before us on the road, and still
For us must all his love fulfil,
"Not as we will."

—HELEN HUNT JACKSON.

FRET NOT!

FRET not, my soul,
For things beyond thy small control.
Do thou thy best and thou shalt see
Heaven will have care of thine and thee.
Sow thou thy seed, and wait in peace
The Lord's increase.

So many shrines, so many creeds,
So many paths that wind and wind,
While just the art of being kind,
Is what the sad world needs.

Erie, Pa.

—LAURA G. SANFORD.

ISRAEL'S RESTORATION.

The Prophetic Significance of the Zionist Movement for the Reconstitution of a Jewish State in Palestine.

ANY Christians will confess less be turning to the Bibles to find out the significance of the Zionist Conference, which took place last month at St. Gallen in Switzerland. They may find it difficult to understand the varied images which the return of the Jews to their land is prefigured in the sacred Scriptures. Some of the prophecies appear to indicate that the Jews will go in a time of national turmoil and that they will fight for the possession of their land; others indicate that their return will be peaceful and unopposed. How these varied predictions be reconciled? Is this return projected by Dr. Max Nordau, and their friends? Is it predicted by the prophets?

A careful examination of the prophecies shows that there will be two stages to the return. The first stage will be peaceful, and will be accomplished before the Lord's second coming. A people will return in unbelief. The second stage will be at the Lord's coming, when there will be a great and fearful slaughter, and the Jews will recognize in Christ their Messiah and will mourn.

The earlier restoration is described in several passages, notably Zechariah 14. It represents an era of revival and prosperity. There had been a time of desolation, when there was no man there for man or beast, nor any place for the man who went out or came in. But all this was to be changed and there would be plenty of employment. The land, which had been idle, kept the Sabbaths, would be ready for the return. It would spring into fertility and cultivation as Isaiah predicts, "precisely the result Dr. Herzl calculates. With the capital, that he is sure will pour into the land from the Jewish coffers, the land will develop. All the men will be needed to clear away the stones, to build bridges, to construct railroads and to prepare the land for occupation. Towns will be built, and factories will be erected. The works of many kinds will be required. As there will be no lack of funds, the Jewish capitalists of Europe, interested, so there will be no lack of labor. The hatred of the Jew which is fostered in Russia in all ranks from the throne to the cabin, is driving the Empire strong men by the millions who are capable of just the kind of work that is required and to which work would be so congenial as labor on the land of their fathers.

This is precisely a fulfillment of prophecy. God said: (Ezek. 20: 35) "I will plead with thee face to face like a man, and I will plead with your fathers in the land of Egypt." How did he plead with the Israelites in Egypt? By making their life unbearable, by making them so miserable that they were glad to follow Moses. So now in Russia they are subject to persecution, and in Germany they are ostracized. A race without a home, their discomforts were to force them to look for one, and where could they turn so naturally as to the land which gave them and where they had once a powerful nation. Those among the Jews who still retain their ancient faith but remember the promises (Ezek. 37: 26) "It is true that Dr. Herzl and his followers place no reliance on these promises, but they explicitly declare that this is not a religious movement, but God has often promised about a fulfillment of his purposes to the instruments who were unconscious that they were serving him. All the prophecies indicate that the Jews will return in unbelief, and that afterward in their own land they will turn to the Lord and acknowledge his Son. Christ at his coming will find the Jews established in the land and the devoted city once more surrounded by besiegers. In that day they will appear as their deliverer and then they will hail him as their Messiah. Then they will re-establish the kingdom and seek to restore the lost Ten Tribes to re-unite them with the Jews as in the time of David and Solomon. Then will occur the great restoration of the second stage of Israel's redemption."

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE.

Good-Bye to the Children.
Our fourth Season Ended at Our Home at Mont-Lawn—Touching Farewell Scenes—The Blessed Work of a Golden Summer.

MONT-LAWN, lately so full of fun and frolic and noisy merriment, is now silent. One bright morning last week the early sun awoke the birds and the flowers, and all were intensely interested in something that was taking place at our Children's Home. It was really the morning of Farewell Day, though neither the flowers nor the birds knew it; but as the hours wore on and the groups of little rompers came out on the lawn for their morning scamper, it was soon noticed that something unusual was afoot. At last it all came out, and the little red songsters sat silent in the trees, and the pretty yellow and white and crimson and pink blossoms drooped their heads as the children, all dressed for the day, marched for the last time to the great marquee tent for their breakfast. Leaving the beautiful country home for the big, crowded city. There were many moist eyes in the juvenile processions; the little lads and lasses looked about at the place that had grown so dear, and which they were so soon to leave.

After breakfast, the children—over two hundred in all—were put into stages, and became the farewell scene which ended the fourth summer season at Mont-Lawn. The little guests sang their parting songs and waved their handkerchiefs from the stages to the people on the edge of the lawn, where Captain Collins and his staff were gathered. He took a note, from all the bees and the ushers, and piped a chorus, so loudly that it seemed as though the adjudicators were cutting their way into the note. At last the signal was given and on the stages they went down the hill.

At Nyack, round the bend of the road, the Home was shut out from the children's view.

The last of the little guests being safely returned to New York, the Home was set up for the season on September 11, a time when, fortunately, one of the hottest weeks of the year had been succeeded by a cool wave that deprived the tenement life of much of its terrors. In all 2,219 children have been cared for, fed, sheltered, and clothed at our Children's Home this season, being the largest number received there in any year since the Home was first opened four summers ago. From the establishment of the Home up to date, the total number of children who have come to Mont-Lawn has been 7,773. The largest single party of children who ever went to the Home at one time was on June 23d last, when 179 wee guests were taken up by the Hudson on the steamer Chrystenah for ten days' outing among the Mont-Lawn woods and fields.

There are very many of our friends in distant States who have every season experienced a deeper interest in our

Fresh Air work among the children of the tenements, and have already aided us with their gifts and their prayers. As this is a continuous work, from summer to summer, we desire to interest others in it. It is, moreover, a work rich in blessing, reaching out among the poorest class in the great metropolis. Not a season passes in which there are not numerous evidences among the children who come to us that the tender, little hearts have been helped by the sweet Christian atmosphere of Mont-Lawn and the simple Gospel lessons taught there to our little guests.

The Reward of Giving.
No good deed is ever forgotten. An incident is related of a little girl whose mother was a sick widow, and who stopped a young man on the street and begged him to buy her chestnuts. He was poor, but could not withstand her pitiful look. He handed her a coin and said, "I cannot use your chestnuts, but you are welcome to this." She thanked him and then hurried away 20 years passed. The little girl grew to womanhood and became the wife of a banker. Passing the library one evening, she saw a man with her husband whom she recognized as the man who years before had been kind to her. When he had gone she inquired his errand. "He came to see if I would give him a vacant position in the bank." "Will you?" "I don't know." "I wish you would," she said, and then told him the story of her poverty and the man's generosity. The young man sat that same evening beside his sick wife's bed, when a liveried servant brought him a note. "We shall not starve," he exclaimed; "I have the position." He opened the note and found inclosed a $250 check, with the words, "In grateful remembrance of the little silver piece a kind stranger gave the little chestnut girl twenty years ago."

A LAST TURN AT THE SWINGS.

Mother's Thoughts.
Who shall tell the inmost thoughts of a mother's heart? Her children—be they in heaven or yet on earth—are her first care and her deepest solicitude. Her earliest waking thought goes out to them; they are in her mind all day long and at night, when she tucks them snugly in bed, she feels all the responsibility of one who has to guide the footsteps, train the minds and hearts, and influence the lives of the young immortals whom God has placed in her keeping for a time. An aged woman, whose youngest child had been dead twenty years, lay dying in her home. It was midnight when she aroused from a stupor and inquired, "Is it night?" "Oh, yes, it is midnight," was the reply. "Are the children all in?" was her anxious inquiry. Then she closed her eyes and died. In her last thoughts she had gone back to the days when her children were young, and the mother instinct asserted itself in the question, "Are the children in?"

A Great Man's Politeness.
Whether one's position in life be high or low, he will find it of the greatest advantage to cultivate the habit of politeness. It "is worth much and costs little," says the old, but true proverb. "Politeness pays," is the more direct modern way of stating the same thing. In a child it is a charming accomplishment; to man or woman, however humble their station, it gives the stamp of a breeding and gentility beyond their fellows, and to a person of social position, it adds a lustre and attractiveness of character that would otherwise be wholly wanting.

It is related of John Quincy Adams, that when he was eighty years old, he one day met on the streets of Boston an old friend, who shook his trembling hand and said: "Good morning! And how is John Quincy Adams to-day?" "Thank you," was the ex-president's answer, "John Quincy Adams himself is well, sir: quite well, I thank you. But the house in which he lives at present is becoming dilapidated. It is tottering upon its foundation. Time and the seasons have nearly destroyed it. Its roof is pretty well worn out. Its walls are much shattered, and it trembles with every wind. The old tenement is becoming almost uninhabitable, and I think John Quincy Adams will have to move out of it soon; but he himself is quite well, sir, quite well." With that the venerable sixth President of the United States moved on, with the aid of his staff. It was not long afterward that he had his second and fatal stroke of paralysis in the Capitol at Washington. "This is the last of earth," he said. "I am content."

OUR CHILDREN AT THE STEAMBOAT WHARF.

What I Would Do.
In yonder attic so cold and bare,
There's a woman that sits and sews
For her children's shelter and scanty fare
Till the weary midnight goes.
She is stitching her life in those seams for me,
Am I giving her back her due?
If I knew that my Saviour was keeping account,
I wonder what I would do?

I have home and friends, and silver and gold,
Far more than I daily need;
And I clothe myself in a costly garb,
While these for a pittance plead.
My house is full of beautiful things
That are only for taste and show;
If I knew that my Lord had need of these
I wonder what I would do?

I have prided myself on my godly deeds,
And my name's on the church's roll;
But I waste in some needless things, perchance
The price of a deathless soul.
I have told the world of my love for God,
And my love for his children, too;
If the Lord should ask me to prove my word,
I wonder what I would do?

AT PARTING.
WE must never call it parting,
When the spirit hovers near;
We are on a journey starting,
And a smile recalls the tear.
The journey may be lengthened
From a day into a year,
Yet affection's ever strengthened,
When the Spirit hovers near.
Let there be no haunting sadness,
Only smiles replace each tear;
Nay, there is a sense of gladness,
When the spirit hovers near.
When apart fond friends are grieving
And long for those most dear,
There's a pleasure in believing
That the spirit hovers near.
So, we're on our journey starting,
You are there and we are here;
Yet, oh never call it parting,
While the spirit hovers near.
—B. MADELINE EVANS.

A Boy Who Rose in Life.
A FEW weeks ago, there died in England, a man who had a remarkable history. Isaac Holden was born in 1807, at a little hamlet called Hurlet, and was the son of a miner. He received a scant education and learned the trade of a weaver, working in the mill by day, and going to school evenings. At twenty he became a teacher, and being a devout Methodist, had some thought of entering the Church. His energies, however, were directed toward mechanical pursuits. While working in a mill from 6 A. M. often till 10 P. M., he devised many valuable labor-saving machines, and ultimately became partner in one of the largest wool manufacturing businesses in the world, with 4,000 employees and a capacity of 31,000,000 fleeces yearly.

Honors flowed in upon the successful manufacturer. Isaac Holden, the poor unknown boy, became a member of Parliament, and was made a Baronet by Queen Victoria. He loved to tell the secret of his successful life and to speak of his early struggles. It was his inflexible rule never to work on the Sabbath, and he affirmed that, but for that rule, he would have lost his reason, so heavy had the strain upon him become. He was a Methodist and a most consistent Christian, liberal to his employees and kind and just in all his dealings. Temperate, and even abstemious, fruit was his principal food, and he never ate more than three ounces of meat in a day, and sometimes went without it for days. He walked from eight to ten miles daily for many years, Sundays excepted.

The career of the mill-worker lad, half-educated, and beginning life under so many disadvantages, should be an inspiration to others. Sturdy Christian character, a strong conscientiousness and a resolute determination to persevere in whatever he attempted, were what made Isaac Holden's life so successful.

Bees Interrupt the Mail.
Many of our rural readers are bee-keepers, and they as well as others will be interested in learning of an incident where a swarm of bees delayed the delivery of letters sent through the mail. At Cranford, Kent, England, one day last July, a swarm of bees settled on a postal pillar-box, and soon afterwards a second swarm located themselves inside the box, the whole colony following the queen through the aperture provided for letters. Every preparation was made for the capture of the swarm upon the arrival of the rural postman to clear the letters, but owing to the awkward position of the winged visitors it was found impossible to hive the bees until night, when they were smoked and safely housed. Owing to this unusual incident the letters posted were delayed for several hours.

Child-Likeness.
Soldier, statesman, scholar, divine: every man is a child to his mother, to the last; and it is the best that is in a man that keeps him always in this child-likeness toward his loving mother. Were it not for the power of a mother's love, writes Rev. H. C. Trumbull, that best and truest side of a man's nature would never be developed, for the man's good and for the mother's reward. It costs something to be a good mother; but there is no reward which earth can give like the love a mother receives.

"AUNT MARTHA."

A Story From Life—Written Specially for "The Christian Herald."

BY NETTIE C.

In the city of "Brotherly Love" great preparations were being made. The great chamber had been put in order, the quaint old china which had been in the family for generations past was arrayed in all its splendor on the handsome mahogany side-board, and Mary, the cook, had called forth all her wits to have a supper such as would suit the most fastidious, for Mrs. Renfrew had said the week before that on this very Thursday they could expect a we will find out that it is not always the young who are agreeable, but frequently those whose bitter experience has taught them to bear and forbear, and to make the most of all the sunshine, for there are some bright spots in all our lives if we but try to find them; and Aunt Martha was not long in winning the hearts of all in the house. Both she and her husband were educated and refined people, well gifted in the art of conversation, besides having that finer innate goodness of soul which after all is the only quality that makes people truly lovable.

Mr. and Mrs. Renfrew were highly entertained with the descriptions of their visitors' trip, and the messages from the girls at home. Then there were the funniest stories for Paul and his sister of the things the children used to say and do in school, for Aunt Martha had taught a school of very little people years before; then there were dolls to be dressed, which no one could do so well, and

"YOU, MARTHA, TAUGHT ME TO PLAY CARDS," SAID THE DYING MAN.

bride and groom, who were taking an extended wedding trip, and would reach Philadelphia to-day. The eager, expectant faces of Paul and his little sister Marguerite were pressed close to the window pane long before the train was due, for they longed to see a real bride, such as mamma was when the pretty picture that hung in the library was taken. It was indeed beautiful to look at, for Mrs. Renfrew was just twenty the day of her marriage, and the people had said as they passed out of the little stone church after the ceremony: "Was there ever a handsomer bride than Ruth Alston?" Her dress of white silk fell in rich folds about her graceful figure, her hair was arranged in a graceful psyche-knot on the top of her head, while her great brown eyes never shone more brightly, and her cheeks never looked rosier than on her wedding-day, and it was not to be wondered at that Mr. Renfrew had said that he must have a painting just as she looked then, so that he could admire it always. And well it was, for already, although only six years had passed since then, the brown locks were streaked with grey, and sickness had hollowed the cheeks and dimmed the eyes, but the sweet, patient expression had never changed. It was just five by the clock when the carriage stopped at the door and out stepped a gentleman of stately bearing, who was at least seventy years of age, and a woman of about fifty. Mrs. Renfrew welcomed her guests, all unmindful of the comments going on among servants and children. She had not seen Aunt Martha for years, in fact, not since she had grown to womanhood, and had never thought to tell the children that she was her aunt, and necessarily older than their own Aunt Nettie, her youngest sister, of whom they were so fond.

"Guess they must be different kinds of ladies," said little Paul, as a look of keen disappointment settled upon his face.

Marguerite seemed to think so, too, but sat quietly with her face to the window, expressing an opinion. She was a cooed, and Mary's chatter was even louder than that of the children, and she declared that she really believed that Mrs. Renfrew had fooled her just to see what nice biscuits she could make when she tried her best.

"I wish they'd got so sad they couldn't eat them, then maybe they'd leave to-night yet, but now I 'spose we'll have two cranks on hand mayhap a week," she said to herself, as she peeped through the door while Ellen, the waitress, carried in the plate of flaky cakes. But if we live long enough the visit of three days was over all too soon, and Aunt Martha and Uncle Lew were quietly settled in the New England village where both were well-known. Aunt Martha's husband had lost his first wife when quite a young man, and had come to make his home with a daughter in Philadelphia. He was well educated and was so highly respected that he was prevailed upon to accept a public office of profit and trust.

Aunt Martha (for everyone called her aunt) had been left an orphan when still in her teens, and her father having failed in business, he could leave his young daughter little more than the home, and she must do something by which to gain a livelihood. First she taught, but the work was very trying to her nerves, and she decided she would be a milliner, so she invested the small sum she had saved, and her genial, sunny disposition soon won to her hosts of customers. She had all she could do, and her little sitting-room back of the shop was a great rendezvous for the young people of the town. She had been early taught by her loving parents that our first duty is to God, and so while still young she joined the Presbyterian Church, of which her father for years had been an elder. No party or social is a long and hard one.

(Continued on next page.)

The Road to Klondike

It's much easier to get

GOLD DUST

from your grocer. Sold everywhere and cleans everything. Made only by

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,
Chicago. St. Louis. New York. Boston. Philadelphia

Thousands Tell

Of marvellous cures of scrofula, hip disease, sores, humors, ulcers, dyspepsia, rheumatism, catarrh and other diseases, by Hood's Sarsaparilla. This great medicine has done a world of good by making pure blood, restoring appetite and digestion, giving rosy cheeks, and clear healthy complexions to old and young.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier. Sold by all druggists. $1, six for $5.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, reliable, beneficial. 25c.

STEAM ENGINEERING

(Stationary, Locomotive, Marine), Mechanical Drawing; Architectural Drawing; Machine Design; Electricity; Architecture; Plumbing; Railroad; Municipal & Bridges Engineering; Surveying and Mapping; Metal Pattern Cutting; Bookkeeping; Short-hand; English Branches, Mining; Metal Prospecting. All who study GUARANTEED SUCCESS. Fees Moderate, Advance or Installments. Circular Free. State subject you wish to study. International Correspondence Schools, Box 861 Scranton, Pa.

$12 3000 BICYCLES

must be closed out at once. Standard '97 Models, guaranteed, $11 to $30 '95 models to $20. 24 hand wheels $5. $12 shipped to anyone on approval without advance deposit. Great factory clearing sale. EARN A BICYCLE by helping advertise us. We will give one agent in each town FREE USE of a sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our Special Offer. D.T. Wood Cycle Co., Wabash ave., Chicago, Ill.

Lake Erie Mfg. Co., 119 E. 13 St., Erie, Pa.

$200.00 IN GOLD GIVEN. International News and Book Company, Baltimore, Md., make a most liberal offer of $200.00 in gold, for selling 200 copies of "Bible to Children about Jesus." This book is among the most popular ever published. One copy sent you in 2 days, another 55 the first week, and so on, until you have given. They also publish Bibles, and a large number of books, and a beautiful set of child and a book for the Anna Holidays. A few General Agents will be named.

FOOD FOR BABY.

If mother can't nourish it; if it is pale and thin, try

SOMATOSE.

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC Founded 1853. Unsurpassed advantages in composition, vocal and instrumental music, and elocution. George W. Chadwick, Musical Director. Pupils received at any time. For prospectus address FRANK W. HALE, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS, 102 Fulton St., New York, sell all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Largest house in the world. Dealers supplied. 62-page illus. cat. free.

THE HUMAN HAIR.

Why it falls off, turns grey, and the Remedy. By Prof. HALEY PARKER, F.R.A.S., London. D. G. LONG & CO., 103 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa. "Read it and you should read this little book."—Athenaeum.

OLYMYER BELL CHURCH BELLS. Unlike other bells sweeter, more durable, lower price. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O. THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING CHIMES & PEALS in the World. PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN). MCHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

ENTERTAINMENTS Church and Sunday School. Illustrated Sermons and Sunday School Lessons, Stereotypes, Magic Lanterns, Views. Prices and full information in 24 page catalog—free. McALLISTER, Mfg. Optician, 40 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Royal is the highest grade baking powder known. Actual tests show it goes one-third further than any other brand.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

The Treatment of Rheumatism or Uric Acid Poisoning.

GOVERNOR STEPHENS of Missouri recently informed one of our representatives that Tartaric was the only remedy which gave him relief in uric acid poisoning. The governor speaks of the remedy in the highest terms.

Pamphlet on the treatment of Rheumatism by Tartaric sent free by McKesson & Robbins, 91 Fulton St., N. Y.

SOLE AGENTS FOR

The Tartaric

NEW DRESS SET, 11c.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED Our INVISIBLE TUBE Cures help when all other glasses help. NO PAIN. Whispers heard. Send to F. Hillebrand, 605 Broadway, N. Y., for Book and Free Trial.

800 SILK REMNANTS. Quilt 4 sq. yds. 50c. Embroider 2 sq. yds. 10c. pattern, 10c. postpaid. Lemarie's Silk Mill, Littleton, Colo.

Aunt Martha.

(Continued from preceding page.)

...ing was complete without her, and the minister was a liberal man who de-...ed that "young folks must have their... the old-fashioned blue-stocking doc-... were not regarded. Inheriting a... insight to things from her brilliant... and the naturally graceful move-... of her mother, Martha was a so-... favorite. Her hand was eagerly sought... me dance, and all were pleased to have... as a partner at cards. Her friends... threatened with the utmost courtesy, but... eined "heart whole and fancy free."... any proposal of marriage would be... with. "No, not yet." A school friend... mther who was a widow, had late-... oved to town with her son, a young... of about twenty-two, who had obtain-... the position of book-keeper in the only... in the village. It was a lucrative... responsible position and the young... were glad to welcome Rob Lee to... social gatherings. Having spent... of his life working hard at college, he... immediately after graduating, being... ed to make his way in the world, he... ad little time for pleasure and knew... ing of cards and dancing; but now... he was drawing a good salary and... plenty of leisure time, it was easy to... both, and indeed he proved himself... ot pupil.

...e months flew quickly by and Rob... Martha were often found in each... it society. Martha declared it was... platonic friendship, but her looks be-... d her, and Rob, happy, light-hearted... took no pains to conceal the fact that... eferred Martha to anyone else. Two... e passed and a change was apparent... job that could not be mistaken. In... uidst of pleasure there was often an... ous, worried expression on his hand-... face, but no one knew the cause;... even to Martha's eager questioning... he could say, "only a headache," or give... other equally evasive answer.

...e morning late in October, Martha... ved a note from Mrs. Lee, saying that... on was very ill and wished to see her... Hly throwing a cape about her shoul-... she hurried off and to her dismay... Mrs. Lee in tears and the doctor... ing sad and anxious. The door of the... r bed-room stood ajar and Mrs. Lee... ned to Martha to enter.

... the bed lay Rob, his face burning... fever and a far-away look in his eyes... Martha approached the bed-side, he... ll her to close the door, as he had... thing to say to her. Then, as if by... human strength.

...ou remember, Martha," he said, "I... ou I had bought this home for moth-... and you. For one year I made my... payments; for two years I have not even... the interest, I have borrowed money... isfy my craving for gain. Not a cent... re to my credit in the bank; I have... led my home, my life, my soul away."... ointing his finger as if in condemna-... he added, "You, Martha, taught me to... ards!"

...d the earth suddenly opened beneath... heret the poor girl could not have been... o stunned, but hastily collecting her-... eil he cried:

...h, Rob, don't worry: I have saved a... I will work hard and help you pay... Live for your mother and for me."... if given strength only to tell of his... ne eyelids drooped, he lost consciousthma and Hay-Fever Cure.—Free.

... were glad to inform the readers that a sure... cure for Asthma and Hay-fever is found in... la Plant, a new botanical discovery from the... n River, West Africa. Many sufferers report... marvelous cures from its use. Among others... r, Fred C. Lewis, Editor of the Farmer's Mag-... and Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, West... are completely cured by the Kola Plant after... r years' suffering. Mr. Lewis could not lie... t night in Hay-fever season for fear of chok-... g, and Mr. Combs was a life-long sufferer from... t a. Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, ...nt that for eighteen years he slept propped up... air, being much worse in Hay-fever season... d: Kola Plant cured him at once. It is truly... wonderful remedy. If you are a sufferer... advise you to send your address to the Kola... ing Co., 1161 Broadway, New York, who to... its power will send a Large Case by mail free... e reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who... ees it. All they ask in return is that when cured... if you will tell your neighbors about it. It... o nothing, and you should surely try it.

...T earlier symptoms of dyspepsia, such as dis-... ter eating, heartburn, and occasional head-... e should not be neglected. Take Hood's Sarsa-... pari if you wish to be cured of dyspepsia.

ness and two days later, his spirit went to meet its God.

Crushed and conscience-stricken, Martha returned to her little home the day of the funeral, a sad, heart-broken girl. Bitterly she reproached herself, but it was too late; she meant no wrong, never thought of sin. Alas for natures weaker than our own, that we may be influencing for good or evil. Harder than ever she worked, for that home should not be lost. In vain her young friends pleaded with her to take some rest lest her health would give way.
Late into the night her tired fingers stitch-away at dainty hats and bonnets. "His mother must not know," she said, and when two years later all had been paid Martha looked pale and worn when she went to thank the kind bank president who loaned her the money and kept her secret. Mrs. Lee lived on a small allowance her son had left, the people said, and when three years after his death, she too passed away, no wonder that the will read,
"I bequeath home, and all I have to my little friend, Martha," for she had no near relatives and these two had been more like mother and daughter than mere friends.

Bravely and patiently Martha lived on,
and as time in a measure healed all wounds, so at fifty years Aunt Martha had tried to bury her sorrow and be cheerful, thus making herself a general favorite with old and young. Ever ready to lend a helping hand, sympathizing with any in distress, in short, "weeping with those who wept, and rejoicing with those who rejoiced," was it any wonder that herself, subdued and purified by suffering, she had grown to be a most attractive woman? She loved the stately gentleman, whose tastes were so congenial and chose him for her life companion.

These two as they settled in their new home were very happy. Both had gone through severe trials, and bore patiently

Light Pocket Books.

A voyage to Europe is a very sensible object for anyone's ambition, but heretofore it has remained quite out of reach of the average brain worker.

It has been made possible and easy of accomplishment by the plan of paying $5.00 to $15.00 per month beginning now, and whether the desired voyage be for England next summer, for Algiers, Italy and the Mediterranean the following autumn or Paris Exposition in 1900, the monthly payment will cover the ocean passage by the time one is ready to sail.

Americans as a rule will not sail second class, on ocean lines because of the various indignities put upon passengers in that class, and they quite naturally will not allow themselves to be herded into the steerage, while to go first class under the ordinary methods of ocean travel is beyond the reach of any but plethoric pocket books. This condition of affairs has attracted the attention of some American thinkers who believed there was a way to give brainy Americans the advantages of a voyage to Europe, and in a thoroughly comfortable, sensible and satisfactory manner, at reasonable cost, payments so arranged that they could be made, and no second class or steerage passengers carried on the steamers.

The problem required a considerable amount of time and money in its solution.

The details will interest any intelligent person who is fond of travel.

They are told in a book handsomely illustrated with over 150 half-tone engravings sent free to en-quirers, by the Postum Cereal Co. Lim., of Battle Creek, Mich.

"My Mama says the
Clinton Safety Pin
Has so many good points. I can only find one, and that don't ever hurt me."
THE CLINTON has the largest sale of any Safety Pin in the world, because of its snrpassing excellence.

FREE! To convince you, we will send, for stamp, samples of the CLINTON, also our SOVRAN pin and a pretty colored booklet for the children.
THE OAKVILLE CO., - - Waterbury, Conn.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite until you investigate WHITE BRONZE

More artistic and enduring, less expensive.
Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere.
Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

NO MOSS GROWING. NO CRUMBLING.
CLEANING. CRACKING.
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

the ups and downs of life. Gathering about them the young folk of the town they sought to amuse and brighten their lives by social intercourse which was both entertaining and elevating. Ten years passed most happily, when her husband was called home, and Aunt Martha was again left alone, but although her grief was deep, she felt she had not long to wait and tried to be cheerful for others' sake. Ten years longer she lived and never a first of April passed without some joke on Aunt Martha; never a Christmas without loving remembrances and when her strength gradually tailed and one bright May day the blue eyes closed forever and the white curls lay on the cold, white brow, we felt that Aunt Martha's work on earth was done.

Armenian Aid.

The following contributions to the Armenian relief work have been received:

Prev. ack.	$8,550 04	John E Smith	3 00
M J Rogers	1 00	FMH, Minden	1 00
Mrs M Frazier	50	Mrs C Smith	1 00
E M Hawk	5 00	Lambert Bewkes	5 00
X, Washington	5 00	May L Finch	2 00
Given by children at Berry Mills Camp Meeting	4 70	I HN, Hastings	2 00
Total	$8,580 24

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR Cincinnati.
ECESTEIN }
ATLANTIC } BRADLEY }
BROOKLYN } New York.
JEWETT }
ULSTER }
UNION }
SOUTHERN } Chicago.
SHIPMAN }
COLLIER }
MISSOURI } St. Louis.
RED SEAL }
SOUTHERN }
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL DuSain.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

DON'T

be penny wise and pound foolish by buying the "just-as-good mixtures," "so called White Lead," or other substitutes for Pure White Lead.

In painting, the cost of labor so far exceeds the cost of material that the best only should be used. The best is Pure White Lead (see list of brands which are genuine) and Pure Linseed Oil.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free:
also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

WE SELL GOODS CHEAPER THAN ANY OTHER HOUSE.

O'NEILL'S

Sixth Avenue, 20th to 21st Streets, New York.

Buy your goods here, you'll Save Money.—Here's an Unusual Opportunity.

A RICH SILK WAIST for 4.98

The Waists advertised here are made of the best quality of Taffeta Silk, six clusters of hand tucks in full gathered front and four clusters from yoke on back; new sleeves, linen or self-crushed collar, black and colors. It's the greatest silk shirtwaist bargain we ever offered.

Send for our Illustrated
Fashion Catalogue.

Mailed free, you'll find there a thousand other bargains just as attractive.

All purchases (except bicycles) delivered free to any point within 100 miles of New York City.

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th Ave., 20th to 21st Street, New York.

That Pleasing Paralyzing Pie!

How good it looks! How good it is!..... And how it hurts. Why not look into the question of Pill after Pie?
Eat your pie and take Ayer's Pills after, and pie will please and not paralyze.

AYER'S Cathartic Pills

CURE DYSPEPSIA.

8% Do you want your money to earn it safely? If so write for highest bank testimonials. Robt. E. Strahorn & Co., Equitable Building, Boston.

Home Talks with Mothers and Daughters.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

WILFUL DAUGHTERS.

THE mothers need not read this talk. It isn't meant for them. The daughters may have it all to themselves.

How old are you, my dears? For I have readers who are in their teens, anywhere from thirteen to nineteen, and they write to me and tell me some of their bothers and problems, and I've had a good many thoughts about them lately. I've concluded that from thirteen to sixteen is a very trying age for the girls who are just along there. They are not little girls any longer and they are not young women. They are considered too old for some things they used to like and too young for other things which look rather inviting, and they find their older sisters, and sometimes, it must be confessed, their mothers, disposed to be a little unreasonable.

"I dislike being told what I must not do. I hate being reproved and snubbed. I would be perfectly happy if I were let alone," says pretty Kate, tossing her head, and putting down her foot quite firmly.

"For my part," adds Elizabeth, "I think it's about time that I should be allowed to come and go as I choose. If I stay out a half hour later than usual, mamma has a conniption fit, and scolds, and papa looks grave, and things are unpleasant generally. Then, there's such a fuss made if I walk down the street with a boy. The boys are not going to eat me!"

Kate and Elizabeth have their grievances, as you see. They do not dream that their mothers are having a hard time, too; that is mother-love and mother-care and mother-wisdom which would guard a young girl from making mistakes, which would make her appear well in other eyes, which would keep her safe from the tempter, and lead to her best development and her true happiness.

We older ones look back to the years when we had mothers and fathers and grandmothers to give us counsel, and our later experience and knowledge of life confirm their judgment. We comprehend much that once puzzled us. We see why our parents hedged us about with advice and, perhaps, with prohibitions, and we are sorry that we often made it hard instead of easy for them to do what needed to be done in our up-bringing.

Do you remember Katy in "Stepping Heavenward"? She was very rebellious sometimes against her mother's precautions and expressed wishes, but she discovered after awhile how blessed that mother's care had been.

There are many such girls, and they are dear and precious, even if they are often difficult to guide and restrain.

Girls, let me tell you that there is a great difference between being strong of will, which is a good thing in character, a grand thing, indeed, and being merely wilful, which is a childish trait, not worthy of sensible young women. Just wanting to have one's own way, because it is one's own way, is not womanly; it is babyish. And when this peculiarly immature characteristic is carried into our grown-up life, it often comes to pass that we get the desire of our heart, and it does not satisfy us, and we are disappointed, and grow hard and bitter. The best thing for a human being is not clinging to his own way; it is giving up his own way. The first step in the Christian life is full surrender, yielding the will to the Divine will. Some of us have to struggle before we do this, but when we do it, we have great peace. You may not think so, dear girls, but there is a sense of joy and delight when one has unselfishly given up her own way, and given some one else pleasure by a sacrifice of inclination, which far surpasses the pleasure the first little triumph would have brought. This is the more marked where, as it often happens, the young girl can see no sense in the mother's opposition, or in the attitude of the teacher's mind, or the opinion of the older friend. "What difference does it make?" cries the younger woman, impatiently, "such a fuss over a trifle!" Yet the trifle is much more, if yielding or not yielding about it will make or mar a day in a home. In the light of God's love, nothing is a trifle.

We need strong principles, girls, and will to hold us firmly to them. Having decided that a course of action is proper, and that conscience will be satisfied if you adopt it, then hold fast to that love. But most of the flurries and worries and tempers and trials of our daily lives come from wilfulness and caprice, rather than from making a stand about important matters.

Girls, whatever else they are, should be lovely and lovable. They should be nice;

TO CURE DYSPEPSIA.

A New Remedy Which Will Do It.

Chronic dyspepsia is considered by many people to be nearly if not quite incurable. No good reason can be given why they think so except that perhaps they have tried various remedies without much, if any benefit. But the progress in every branch of medicine has been such that among other things a lasting cure for indigestion in its chronic form as well as temporary has been discovered and is now placed before the public strictly on its merits as a permanent cure for all stomach troubles or difficulties with the digestive organs.

This new treatment is called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, being put up in tablet form so as to be easily taken and also to preserve its good qualities for an indefinite length of time.

This remedy has produced surprising effects in the worst forms of indigestion, and in many cases where ordinary remedies failed to give even relief, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have fully cured.

The splendid results from using this preparation are owing to the fact that it is prepared and intended for Dyspepsia and stomach troubles only. It is not a cure-all like so many advertised remedies, claiming to cure everything under the sun, but it is claimed that it is a certain cure for Dyspepsia and anyone suffering from any form of indigestion cannot fail to get permanent relief and cure from its use.

It is so prepared and the ingredients are of such a nature that when the tablets are taken into the stomach they digest the food no matter whether the stomach is in good working order or not. You get sustenance and strength to mind and body by reason of the food being properly digested and at the same time the much abused stomach is allowed to rest and recuperate.

Notwithstanding the great benefits to be derived from Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, the price is but so for full sized package and all druggists sell them.

A little book on Stomach Diseases mailed free by addressing the Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS 6 CTS

To introduce our 1898 catalogue we will send upon receipt of six cents to pay postage any one of these beautiful carved miniature musical instruments, or all four for twenty cents. Catalogue FREE. CURTIS JEWELRY CO., Attleboro, Mass.

you know what one means when she says that Sadie or Majorie is "a nice girl." It implies a certain all-round symmetry and satisfactoryness; you can "tie to a nice girl," and she'll never disappoint your expectations. Girls have the great advantage of youth, and they must use it for the joy and uplifting, and for the help and consolation of the older people around them.

Margaret E. Sangster

HIS BANNER.

SURROUNDED by unnumbered foes,
Against my soul the battle goes;
Yet, tho' I weary, sore distressed,
I know that I shall reach my rest.
I lift my tearful eyes above;
His banner over me is love.

Its sword my spirit will not yield,
Tho' flesh may faint upon the field;
He waves before my fading sight
The branch of palm, the crown of light,
I lift my brightening eyes above;
His banner over me is love.

My cloud of battle-dust may dim,
His veil of splendor curtain him,
And in the midnight of my fear
I may not feel him standing near;
But, as I lift mine eyes above,
His banner over me is love.

—GERALD MASSEY

Enameline
The Modern STOVE POLISH
DUSTLESS, ODORLESS,
BRILLIANT, LABOR SAVING.
Try it on your Cycle Chain.
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.
SACRED SONGS No. 1.
No other New book equal to it. $25 per 100.
each, if by mail. THE BIGLOW & MAIN Lakeside Building, Chicago. 76 E. Ninth St., N.

$5.00 A MINUTE!!
The minute you send us this slip you make $5.00

$50.00

SAVED IF YOU READ AND ACT ON THIS AD $50.00

$55.00

A Dollar saved is a Dollar earned. Total Saved $55.00

$100 wheels will cost $75 next year.
$75 wheels will cost $50 next year.

There will be no difference in wearing quality between this year's machine and next.

MORAL: Get your wheel this fall, NOW!

This offer will cost you $2,000 or more to make!

HOW CAN WE AFFORD IT?

Simple facts are these: We have already made and sold Ten Thousand Bicycles this season, on which we have realized a profit. While there are three of the best riding months still left, the selling season will soon be over. We now have left only 1000 High Grade Bicycles, which we must carry through or sacrifice. The sale of these bicycles at less than cost will make us 1000 new friends. We are making the price so low that it will be to everybody's interest to BUY NOW!

$100 Model A Syrian

'97 model, made by the Brown-Lewis Cycle Co., Chicago, U. S. superb mount, guaranteed to be the equal of any $100 wheel. All parts drop forged, doubly reinforced; bearings all ball, finest quality tool steel, accurately ground, polished and lapped in oil; handsome royal arch fork crown, extra strong crank drop forged, tempered in oil; sprockets new style forged, detachable front and rear; new patent keyless cranks. Handle bars—Rams horn, raised or adjustable steel. Saddle if desired but not guaranteed; tires M. & W. Quick Repair, Vim or Hartford single tube; saddle Sager hygienic, finish very handsome; wheel rims, guards, etc., enameled if desired. Closing Price, $37.50

$90 Model B Syrian

'97 model—Same general specifications as above, a slight swing cutter pin cranks in place of keyless. Closing Price, $32.50

$100 Northfield

'97 model, made by the Brown-Lewis Cycle Co., Chicago, one of the handsomest machines made, 1 1/4 in. tubing, patent keyless cranks, flush joints, patent detachable dust protectors over bearings. Specifications—frame 22 and 24 in., ladies' 22 and 24 in., ladies' 22 and 24 in., handle bar—drop, raised, ram's horn, steel or adjustable wood; saddle—gent's Garford or B. & W. ladies' regular equipment; fork oval Nickel; wheels 28 in. best single piece wood rims; tires—Morgan & Wright, Indiana or single tube; pedals choice of rattan or rubber. The finish of the Northfield is superb, consists of four coats finest enamel baked separately, hand rubbed and polished, beautifully decorated. Closing Price, $30.00

$80 Winfield

'97 models, made by the Brown-Lewis Cycle Co., 1 1/4 in. tubing, same sizes and equipment as Northfield, but having regular key cranks, $27.50

$70 Emerson

'97 model, made by Brown-Lewis Cycle Co., Chicago, same specifications as the field, except tires, which are Indiana single tube or Royal single tube, $25.00 to which we have practically the difference in cost between the Winfield and Emerson. Closing Price, $20.00

We also have some cheaper lines, but as we do not recommend cheap articles and cannot guarantee them, we mention same on this list. All machines fully guaranteed for one year, and every machine warranted to be exactly as represented. Money refunded on any wheel not found satisfactory.

HOW TO ORDER.—We agree to accept this advertisement for the amount of $5.00 as part payment on the above machine at these prices. Mark plainly the machine you wish out this slip and send together with cent cash or money order to cover express charges in case wheel is not taken, or have your express agent fill out the form and we will forward the machine C. O. D. for the balance, subject to full examination and approval before paying same. We are responsible and refer to leading banks of Chicago or any of the large express companies.

This Certifies That.....has deposited with me sufficient to cover express charges on.....Bicycles.....from Chicago.....and return, said deposit to apply as part payment on Bicycles when accepted. In case said Bicycles are not accepted, I agree to return them, express paid, to the Brown-Lewis Cycle Co., Chicago. Signed,.....Agent for.....Express Co. at.....

THE BROWN-LEWIS CYCLE CO., Chicago, U. S. A.

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC

The best cure for Cough, Weak Lungs, Indigestion, Inward Pains and the Ills of the Female and Aged. Combining the most active medicines with Ginger, it exerts a curative power over disease unknown to other remedies, and is in fact the most revitalizing, life-giving combination ever discovered. Weak Lungs, Rheumatism, Female Debility, and the distressing Ills of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys and Bowels are dragging many to the grave who would recover health by its timely use.

A BUGGY, PHAETON or CARRIAGE

FREE

"If at first you don't succeed," Try to any one who will do a little work for us. No money required. No expense for outfit. Some knowledge of carriages desirable but not absolutely necessary. Send 6 cents in stamps for postage on catalogue giving full details.

SAPOLIO

PERLISS CARRIAGE CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Strange New Shrub that Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc. Free.

We have previously described the new botanic discovery, Alkavis, which proves a specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disorder of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is now stated that Alkavis is a product of the well known Kava-Kava Shrub, and is a specific cure for these diseases just as quinine is for malaria. Hon. R. C. Wood, of Lowell, Ind., writes that in four weeks Alkavis cured him of Kidney and Bladder disease of ten years' standing, and Rev. Thomas M. Owen, of West Pawlet, Vt., gives similar testimony. Many ladies also testify to its wonderful curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. The only importers of Alkavis so far are the Church Kidney Cure Co., of 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or urinary organs. We advise all sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative power.

An Eminent Orientalist Dead.
The late Theodore Bent, who died recently in England, will be remembered as the traveler and investigator who discovered and explored the famous ruins at Zimbabwe, in Southeast Africa, which were believed by Mr. Bent and many other scholars to be identical with the ancient

THEODORE BENT.

...the land from which Solomon procured much gold for the adornment of the Temple. Mr. Bent's report of his discovery and the singularly complete description of the ruins, as well as his judicious conclusions relative to the purpose and character of the mysterious city, excited the admiration of the learned societies. He showed that the walled and fortified city had evidently been built by a stranger nation, then sojourning there temporarily, and that the series of defenses were for the purpose of checking incursions by the native tribes, who were presumably Semitic. He found abundant evidences of long-seeking at some remote period, and as if a high state of civilization existing probably for centuries in the midst of ignorance and superstition.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

T Ancient Hebrew Tradition, as illustrated by monuments. A protest against the modern proof of Old Testament criticism, by Dr. Fritz Hommel, Professor of Semitic Languages at the University of Munich. Translated from the German by Edmund McClure, M.A., and Leonard Croly, pp. 350. Published by E. & J. B. Young, New York, Union, New York.

Be at Evening, and other Verses, by Fannie J. Croly, with biographical sketch by Robert Lowry. This little volume should be in the hands of every lover of sacred song who is familiar with the beautiful hymns Fanny Crosby has written during a long lifetime of Christian service. Pp. 192, cloth cover, price fifty cents. Biglow & Main, New York and Chicago, publishers.

Use Plants and How to Succeed with Them; Practical Handbook for Lizzie Page Hillhouse. This little volume tells in plain terms what house plant has been successful with the author, and furnishes many hints to those who contemplate a house garden. Illustrated; 220 pages; cloth covers; price $1. A. T. De La Mare, Printing and Publishing Company, New York, publishers.

Notice the shape of the sleeves...
A POSTAL will bring you a little book on the merits of the...
"Little Princess"

Baby Wrapper.
The ideal garment for baby. Made in all sizes, of all grades. For sale by first-class dealers everywhere. Book will tell you all about it. Send for it.
W. S. MILLS, Bridgeport, Conn.

FREE TO BALD HEADS.
We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp diseases. Address,
Altenheim Medical Dispensary,
Dep't N. A., Box 779, Cincinnati, O.

You Can Pay Off Your Mortgage

This winter by working evenings for THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. We want good agents and offer good pay.

The Curtis Publishing Company
Philadelphia

A Whole House.....

Heated by One Stove, if equipped with Hey's Perfection Heater, Adjustable to Any Kind of Stove.

It saves 50 per cent in cost of fuel with one half the trouble and pays for itself in six months. Special discounts if ordered at once. Agents wanted. Full information FREE, a postal brings it.

LEVI HEY & CO., who cause terror to the coal trust, Dept. A, Rochester, N. Y.

Wurlitzer Beats the Band

Instruments of all competitors in quality and price. Clarinets, Trumpets, Drums, Fifes and all known instruments at prices you can't afford to miss. Band Catalogue 128-p. and sample parts band and orchestra music free. Specify Catalogue "B."

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., Manufacturers, Established 1858. 126 E. Fourth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

More light from your lamp, whatever lamp you use; and almost no chimney expense, no breaking. Use the chimney we make for it. Index.

Write Macbeth Pittsburgh Pa

FACIAL SOAP! FACIAL CREAM!

Will soften, whiten, beautify and preserve the skin from its natural enemies, wind, dust, and every kind of irritation. These articles exceed in sale any similar preparations, and are sold everywhere. A sample of either Woodbury's Facial Soap or Cream sent on receipt of 10c.
JOHN H. WOODBURY, 127 W. 42nd St., New York.

CHRISTMAS SOLICITORS IS COMING

Four books from 50c to $2.25. Just right for the woe ones to grown up folks. Ours largest and handsomest. Easiest to sell. Full lovely pictures, many of them in rich colors. Bonanza for agents. Every buyer gets a present. Demand enormous. Commissions 50 per cent. Credit given. Freight paid. Outfits free. Write quick for outfit and territory.
Domination Co., Dept. J, 356 Dearborn St., Chicago.

"Common Sense Ear Drum" Relieve all conditions of Deafness and Head Noise, where Medical skill fails. The only Scientific Aural Sound Conductor in the world. Safe to wear, comfortable, invisible, no dangerous wire or metal attachment. Recommended by physicians. Write for book, free.
WILSON EAR DRUM CO., 223 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky. Offices: 1122 Broadway, New York.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Most Durable and Decorative. Suitable for all buildings. Numerous designs. Send for Catalogue.
H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., New York

BABIES THRIVE ON IT.

GAIL BORDEN EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK.

OUR ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET ENTITLED "BABIES" SHOULD BE IN EVERY HOUSEHOLD. SENT ON APPLICATION.
NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO. NEW YORK

$200.00 for CORRECT ANSWERS!

Most Unique Contest of the Age — $200.00 Paid for Correct Lists made by Supplying Missing Letters in Places of Dashes — No Lottery — Popular Plan of Education — Read All the Particulars.

In the United States four times as much money is expended for education as for the military. Brain is better than brawn. By our educational facilities we have become a great nation. We, the publishers of Woman's World and Jenness Miller Monthly, have done much toward the cause of education in many ways, but now we offer you an opportunity to display your knowledge and receive most generous payment for a little study. The object of this contest is to give an impetus to many dormant minds to awaken and think; also we expect by this competition of brains to extend the circulation of Woman's World and Jenness Miller Monthly to such a size that we shall be able to charge double the present rate for advertising in our columns. By this plan of increasing the number of subscriptions and receiving more money from advertisers of soaps, pianos, medicines, books, baking powders, jewelry, etc., we shall add $50,000 a year to our income, and with this mathematical deduction before us, we have decided to operate this most remarkable "missing letters" contest.

HERE'S WHAT YOU ARE TO DO.

There are thirty words in this schedule, from each of which letters have been omitted and their places have been supplied by dashes. To fill in the blank spaces and get the names properly you must have some knowledge of geography and history. We want you to spell out as many words as you can, then send to us with 25 cents to pay for a three months' subscription to WOMAN'S WORLD. For correct lists we shall give $200.00 in cash. If more than one person sends a full, correct list, the money will be awarded to the fifty best lists in appearance. Also, if your list contains twenty or more correct words, we shall send you a beautiful Egeria Diamond Scarf Pin (for lady or gentleman), the regular price of which is $2.25. Therefore, by sending your list, you are positively certain of the $2.25 prize, and by being careful to send a correct list you have an opportunity of the $200.00 cash award. The distance that you may live from New York makes no difference. All have equal opportunity for winning.

PRIZES WILL BE SENT PROMPTLY.

Prizes will be honestly awarded and promptly sent. We publish the list of words to be studied out. In making your list of answers, be sure to give the number of each word:

- | | |
|---|--|
| 1. - R A - I - A country of South America. | 16. B - S M - - K A noted ruler. |
| 2. - A - I - I - Name of the largest body of water. | 17. - - C T O - I - Another noted ruler. |
| 3. M - D - - E - - A - E - - A sea. | 18. P - R - U - A - Country of Europe. |
| 4. - M - - O - A large river. | 19. A - S T - A - I - A big island. |
| 5. T - A - - S Well known river of Europe. | 20. M - - I N - E - Name of the most prominent American |
| 6. S - - A N - A - A city in one of the Southern States. | 21. T - - A - One of the United States. |
| 7. H - - - - X A city of Canada. | 22. J - F - - R - - N Once President of the United States. |
| 8. N - A - A - A Noted for display of water. | 23. - U - - N A large lake. |
| 9. - E - - E - - E - One of the United States. | 24. E - E - S - N A noted poet. |
| 10. - A - R I - A city of Spain. | 25. C - R - A A foreign country, same size as Kansas. |
| 11. H - V - - A A city on a well known island. | 26. B - R - - O A large island. |
| 12. S - M - E - A well known old fort of the United States. | 27. W - M - - S W - R D Popular family magazine. |
| 13. G - - R - L - A - Greatest fortification in the world. | 28. B - H - I - G A sea. |
| 14. S - A - L E - A great explorer. | 29. A - L - N - I - An ocean. |
| 15. C - L - F - - - I - One of the United States. | 30. M - D - G - S - A - An island near Africa. |

In sending your list of words, mention whether you want prize money sent by bank draft, money order or registered mail; we will send any way that winners require. The Egeria Diamond is a perfect imitation of a Real Diamond of large size. We defy experts to distinguish it from real except by microscopic test. In every respect it serves the purpose of Genuine Diamond of Purest Quality. It is artistically mounted in a fine gold-plated pin, warranted to wear forever. This piece of jewelry will make a most desirable gift to a friend if you do not need it yourself. At present our supply of these gifts is limited, and if they are all gone when your set of answers comes in, we shall send you $2.25 in money instead of the Scarf or Shawl Pin, so you shall either receive the piece of jewelry or the equivalent in cash, in addition to your participative interest in the $200.00 cash prize. This entire offer is an honest one, made by a responsible publishing house. We refer to mercantile agencies and any bank in New York. We will promptly refund money to you if you are dissatisfied. What more can we do? Now study, and exchange slight brain work for cash. With your list of answers send 25 cents to pay for three months' subscription to our great family magazine, Woman's World. If you have already subscribed, mention that fact in your letter, and we will extend your subscription from the time the present one expires. To avoid loss in sending silver, wrap money very carefully in paper before inclosing in your letter. Address:

JAMES H. PLUMMER, Publisher,
22 & 24 North William Street, - New York City, N. Y.

48 CHOICE FLOWERING BULBS for 25c.

In silver or 27 one-c. stamps to introduce our nurseries into new families. Our offers are famous for their liberality, have made ours the largest mail order bulb and seed house in New England. This offer surpasses every other made by us in the past.

Hyacinth, Crocus, yellow, Tulip, early, Narcissus, Iris, mixed, and thirty-three other bulbs.
Ranunculus, Crocus, white, Tulip, late, Jonquil, Spanish Iris, other bulbs.
Fritillaria, Hyacinth, Grape, Scilla, Allium, Sparaxis,
All the above bulbs, forty-eight in all, sent neatly packed and postpaid, also catalogue of full line of choicest bulbs if you send only 25c. In silver or 27 one-c. stamps. Bulbs guaranteed true to name and color. 5 full collections or $1.00. Club with friends and get yours FREE with extra. We treat you liberally. Address OAKDALE NURSERIES, WALNUT HILL, MASS.

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

Plenty of sleep, fresh air, careful diet and the daily use of a good soap like the Ivory will purify the complexion as no cosmetic can.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO. CANTON, OHIO

TWO DOLLARS FOR ONE DOLLAR.

The subscription price of DEMOREST'S is reduced to $1.00 a Year.

$1.00 A YEAR FOR DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE.

Demorest's Family Magazine is more than a Fashion Magazine, although it gives the very latest home and foreign fashions each month; this is only one of its many valuable features. It has something for each member of the family, for every department of the household, and its varied contents are of the highest grade, making it, pre-eminently, The Family Magazine of the World. It furnishes the best thoughts of the most interesting and most progressive writers of the day, and is abreast of the times in everything—Art, Literature, Science, Society Affairs, Fiction, Household Matters, Sports, etc.—a single number frequently containing from 200 to 300 fine engravings, making it the MOST COMPLETE AND MOST PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED of the GREAT MONTHLIES.

Demorest's Magazine Fashion Department is in every way far ahead of that contained in any other publication.

Subscribers are entitled each month to patterns of the latest fashions in woman's attire, at no cost to them other than that necessary for postage and wrapping.

NO BETTER CHRISTMAS GIFT

than a year's subscription to Demorest's Magazine can be made. By subscribing AT ONCE you can get the magazine at the reduced price, and will also receive the handsome 25-cent Xmas Number with its beautiful panel picture supplement.

Remit $1.00 by money order, registered letter or check to the DEMOREST PUBLISHING CO., 110 Fifth Ave., New York City.

AN IMPORTANT OFFER.

We will send Demorest's Magazine and either of the following publications at these reduced prices:

	Pub. Our price	price, for both.		Pub. Our price	price, for both.
Cosmopolitan.....	$1.00	$1.75	Scribner's	$3.00	$3.75
Munsey's.....	1.00	1.75	Housewife	.50	1.25
McClure's.....	1.00	1.75	Woman's Home Companion.....	.50	1.25
Golden Rule.....	2.00	2.75	Harper's Magazine.....	4.00	4.00

$300.00 IN CASH FOR RECIPES.

To be distributed Jan. 1, 1898, as follows:

- 50.00 for best cup of cocoa made from Hasty Lunch Chocolate.
- 50.00 for best icing made from Hasty Lunch Chocolate.
- 50.00 for best chocolate cake made from Hasty Lunch Chocolate.
- 50.00 for best dessert made from Hasty Lunch Chocolate.
- 100.00 for 5 best reasons why Hasty Lunch Chocolate is Superior in Cooking to all other forms of Chocolate.

A label from a pound can or two labels from half-pound cans must accompany each competing recipe. The names of successful competitors will be published.

Pounds, 20 cents; half-pounds, 16 cents. If your grocer will not supply you, send us the amount in stamps, and we will mail you a can as a sample, postage prepaid.

At the State Fair, Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 23 to 28, the first prize for Chocolate Cake was awarded to Mrs. J. A. Henry, Canandaigua, N. Y., and the second prize to Mrs. W. H. Pillow, Reid's Corners, N. Y. Both ladies used Hasty Lunch Chocolate.

J. H. BARKER & CO., 91 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn—New York.

First in Improvements.

Honest Construction

And all.....

High Grade Typewriter Essentials.

Write for Our New Art Catalogue, Free.

Best Value Writing Machine.

The Smith Premier Typewriter Co., Syracuse, N. Y., U. S. H. BRANCH OFFICES in 42 Principal Cities in the United States and England.

It's a trying time for delicate plants when they are transferred from the fresh air, dew and the natural stimulants of the soil to the window garden of the house. At this season of the year an application of Essex Flower Food will stimulate the plant to quick foliage and early flowering. Don't starve your plants.

Ask your dealer for the ten cent package that feeds 10 plants one year—if he does not have it, send eight 2 cent stamps to the RUSSIA CEMENT CO., Gloucester, Mass., and get a full size package by return mail.

For Men, Women, Girls & Boys. "Complete line at lowest prices ever quoted $100 'Oakwood' for $15.00 $85 'Arlington' for $17.50 $75 ' ' ' $25.00 $50 Bicycle ' $10.75 $75 'Maywood' Simplest, Strongest Bicycle on Earth ' $32.00 Fully guaranteed. Shipped anywhere C.O.D. with privilege to examine. No money in advance. Buy direct from manufacturers, save agents and dealers profits. Large Illustrated Catalogue free. Address (in full) Cash Buyers' Union, 162 W. Van Buren St. B 18 Chicago

20 BEAUTIFUL BULBS 25c.

For winter Flowers. For 25c. we will send postpaid the following collection of bulbs, which will give you flowers the entire winter. All large selected bulbs:

- 2 New Sweet Scented Tulips.
- 1 Beautiful Black Calla.
- 1 Bermuda Easter Lily.
- 2 Giant Golden Sacred Lilies.
- 2 Hyacinths, separate colors.
- 3 Freesias, white, scarlet, yellow.
- 2 Buttercup Oxalis.
- 2 Allium Neapolitanum.
- 8 Spanish Iris.
- 2 Grand Lilies.

20 Bulbs in all 25c. postpaid.

Free with Each order for the above collection: 3 pkts. seeds for winter pot culture; 1 pkt. Butterfly Orchid (for pot culture); 1 pkt. Japanese Winter-blooming Morning Glories; 1 pkt. Scarlet Pansies, together with our Catalog of Winter and Spring bulbs. All for 25c.

J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N. Y.

Agate Nickel-Steel Ware

does not impart a coppery, tinny, or iron taste to food, as in the case of utensils made of other materials. It is double-coated, and retains its polish as long as it lasts. It contains no arsenic, antimony or lead, and tomatoes or other acidulous vegetables may be cooked in it absolutely without danger. It is the handsomest, best wearing and purest enamel ware made. Always notice the bottom of each utensil you buy, and see that it bears this trade-mark—

For sale by all careful dealers. Write for our booklet, "KITCHEN UTENSILS," containing guarantees of eminent chemists. Lalanc & Grosjean Mfg. Co. 29 Cliff Street, New York

THE B & H LAMP

BEST IN THE WORLD. GAS and ELECTRIC FIXTURES. Fenders, Andirons, Fire Sets, etc., Art Metal Goods. B & H Oil Heaters, Brass & Wrought Iron Grille Work & Railings. LEADING DEALERS WILL SUPPLY OUR GOODS. BRADLEY & HUBBARD MFG. CO. Meriden, Conn. NEW YORK, BOSTON, CHICAGO, PHILADELPHIA.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power. Hay or Straw. 46 inch Feed Opening. Bell. Power Leverage 64 to 1. STEEL. Largest line in the world. Send for Catalog. COLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

METAL WHEELS

in all sizes and varieties, to fit any axle. They last forever. Either direct or stagger spoke. Can't break down, can't dry out, no resetting of tires. Good in dry weather as in wet weather. Send for catalog & prices. ELECTRIC WHEEL CO., QUINCY - ILLINOIS.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY. or Watch, Clock, or Toilet Set, High grade, 44 pieces and 1 handsome present with every pound. Send for new illustrated premium and price list. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY, 21 and 23 Vesey Street, New York, P. O. Box 29.

$10 to $35. High Grade Bicycles. Largest stock of all makes and models. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. Write today for lists of bargains. T. BROWN LEWIS Cycle Co., Chicago, Ill.

SPECTACLES for sale. Send for catalog. Agents wanted. COLLIER OPTICAL CO., Chicago, Ill.

PEARS' is the best soap for the complexion face and hands

Established over 100 years. 20 additional awards. Be sure you get the genuine.

"Silver Plate that Wears."

Made in artistic and original patterns only. Your silver will be correct in every way it is

"1847" Rogers Bros

Made only by THE MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO., Meriden, 208 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Sold by leading dealers everywhere

COMFORTABLE clothing is absolutely essential to a good health and development. For reason FERRIS' WAIST, supporting body healthfully and comfortably allowing the muscles entire freedom, perfect for little girls and boys. Recommended by physicians.

Ferris' GOOD SENIORS CORSET WAIST is made high and low bust, long and short to suit all figures. Children's, 25c. to 50c. to $1. Ladies', $1 to $2. Always superior quality and workmanship. For sale by all

"Mizpah" Valve Nipples WILL NOT COLLAPSE and therefore prevent much trouble. The valve prevents a vacuum being collapsed them. The valve holds the child in the bottle. The rim is such that they cannot pull off the bottle. Sample Free by Mail. WALTER F. WARE, 512 Arch St., Philadelphia.

Two Great EGG MAKERS. MANN'S GREEN BONE CRAY. For Poultry. Cash or Installment. F. W. MANN CO., MILFORD, N. J.

$9.50 BUYS A HEN VICTOR. ADAPTED TO LIGHT AND HEAVY WORK. AND FINELY FINISHED GUARANTEED FOR 1 YEAR. ATTACHMENTS FREE. 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL. VICTOR MFG. CO., 90 to 98 Market St., Phila., Ill.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICE: BIBLE HOUSE NEW YORK.

COPYRIGHT '87. BY LOUIS KLOPSCHE

VOLUME 20.—NUMBER 39.

De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 29, 1897.

PRICE FIVE CENTS.

The photograph on this page will add to the hearts of thousands of readers of this journal who interested in gathering the corn which the steamer City of Everett has carried to the starving millions of India. The photograph was taken in Calcutta after the arrival of the ship. It shows a scene when the corn was being brought on board the hold to be carried ashore. The natives, whose care and devotion are praiseworthy, is seen at the left of the superintending the hoisting of the corn and their transportation to the dock, after hurriedly written to catch the ship which left soon after the arrival of the steamer. Dr. Hobbs says: "The corn is now nearly out of the ship. The corn is as sweet and fresh as when I left. On the long voyage I kept a close watch of the hatches and had them open every four that they could be with safety. This had much to do with the soundness of the cargo. From every part of the famine districts have come most urgent appeals for a share of the corn.

NATIVES CARRYING THEIR ALLOWANCES OF FOOD TO THEIR VILLAGES.

the attention of thousands who might never have heard of the money being sent. It is everywhere said, that the good which must result from this generous gift of American Christians, in showing the compassion and brotherly love of Christ's followers, will be seen in the gratitude of the natives and the impression produced on them by this practical object lesson must be great and lasting.

"A distinguished party of American missionaries and high Government officials came down the River Hooghly on a launch to meet the relief ship and give us cordial welcome. The leader of the party was the Hon. H. E. M. James, a member of the Viceroy's cabinet and the representative of the Government in Calcutta during the Viceroy's absence at Simla. He welcomed us in the name of the Viceroy, and was exceedingly courteous. He invited Mrs. Hobbs and myself to dinner, and brought to meet us some of the most distinguished people in India, including the Chief Justice, Bishop Thoburn, the Archdeacon of the English Church, and INDOO COOLIES UNLOADING THE CORN FROM OUR RELIEF SHIP "CITY OF EVERETT," AT CALCUTTA.

The coming of the ship has produced a very profound impression both among the English speaking people and the natives. The impression is much greater in proportion to the money involved than even that of the cash remittances. It has arrested other influential personages in ecclesiastical, military and political circles. To-morrow the Lieutenant-Governor and his staff will go on board the ship to express

(Continued on page 723.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

H. H. W., Philadelphia, Pa. Did Christ imply a reproach in his remark (John 5: 39) "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life"?

His meaning appears to have been that as the Jews professed so great a veneration for the Scriptures they should search them, and then they would find that the books testified of him. The Revised Version gives a better rendering: "Ye search the scriptures because ye think that in them ye have eternal life and these are they which bear witness of me."

N. Patches, Elkhorn, Mont. 1. How was the commencement of the day reckoned by the Jews? 2. What is meant by the mark of the beast? 3. What is the image mentioned, Rev. 13: 14?

1. The Jews originally reckoned from sunset to sunset. Later in their history they appear to have followed the Roman custom of reckoning from midnight to midnight. There are traces of that mode of reckoning in the Gospel of John. (See John 19: 14), where the evangelist writes of an event occurring about the sixth hour which, as we know from the other evangelists, was 6 A. M. 2. It is a regulation to be made by Antichrist, probably by a badge of some kind, permitting all to trade who acknowledge his authority. Any person refusing to wear it would not be able to buy or sell. (See Rev. 13: 17). The badge, if badge it will be, will bear the name of Antichrist, or a number which will be the sum of the arithmetical values of the letters composing his name. 3. The image will probably be a statue of Antichrist which by the demoniac power conferred upon him by Satan, whose incarnation he is, he will cause to utter sounds.

L. R. H., Canova, So. Dak. What are the facts connected with the death of St. Paul? 2. What does the language of Jesus to his mother John 2: 4 mean? 3. How many were the children of Israel whom Moses led out of Egypt?

1. The widely accepted tradition is that he was imprisoned in Rome and put to death simultaneously with Peter under Nero. (See concluding paragraph of 4th chapter II. Timothy.) Abdias, who wrote a "History of the Apostles," asserts that Paul's imprisonment ended with his execution. There was another tradition, however, to the effect that he was released from his Roman prison and made several apostolic journeys afterwards. Nicephorus and Cyril of Jerusalem, both notable writers, adopt this version, and the latter specifically mentions that Paul visited Spain after his release. Many authors hold that Paul was imprisoned a second time, although the evidence in support of that idea is by no means conclusive. Eusebius writes of the martyrdom of Peter and Paul as in the fourteenth year of Nero's reign. Origen and Dionysius, bishop of Corinth, declare that both suffered martyrdom together. Eusebius adds that the graves of both apostles were pointed out together in Rome in the second century. 2. It was meant in no disrespectful sense, but was simply a gentle reminder that she should not urge him, as in his own time he would do whatever was fitting. It is evident that he so understood him. 3. See Exodus 12: 37. There were 600,000 men and the usual mode of reckoning families at an average of 5 persons would bring the total up to 3,000,000, but 2,000,000 would be a conservative estimate.

I. W. A., Marysville, O., writes:

Under "Our Questions and Answers," in a recent issue, we read of a lady trying to bring:

Best power of our human genital day, What power of our life is in this ray.

These words are from Lin Moore's "I Am a Book," in "The Christian Herald" and Co.'s edition they are found in page 44.

Reader S. H. H. N. V. Please explain the origin of the term "H. V. T. Union."

It appears to indicate the beginning of the autumnal equinox. At that season the moon, while above the horizon, is nearly the same hour on successive evenings, and the long, illuminated nights give the age of the earth, of our human life, and of our earthly career. This custom, being very generally resorted to by certain communities, gave rise to the phrase "Harvest Moon." Prof. C. A. Young thus explains the lunar's phenomenal appearance: "The moon rises later on consecutive evenings because she herself revolves around the earth in the same direction in which the earth rotates, and, having changed place during the rotation of the earth, it must rotate a little further to overtake her. In September the full moon travels in her orbit not directly east, but northeast. A path or line directly east from the horizon would be perpendicular to the horizon; a northeast line must be oblique to the horizon. The September full moon is traveling on the part of her orbit most oblique to the horizon."

Rev. F. W. Abicht, Pastor of Trinity Lutheran Church, Marysville, O., writes in criticism of our answer to S. R., Stephenville, Tex., in this journal of Sept. 15, who asked what was the difference between the Lutherans and the Calvinists. We said that "Luther's contention to the last was that the bread and wine of the sacrament were transformed into the actual body and blood of Christ." Mr. Abicht says "that statement is historically totally incorrect and furthermore . . . I can safely say that no Lutheran body of to-day teach that doctrine as stated by you . . . I consider it sufficient simply to quote Johnson's Cyclopaedia: 'Luther maintained that the body and blood of Christ are really though in a manner far beyond human comprehension present in the Eucharist.'"

The difference appears to be in our use of the word "transformed." From various sources we gather that Luther's theory was that "the bread and wine remained" and were not transformed into the body and blood of Christ, but that the real "body and blood of Christ are mysteriously and supernaturally status of woman there was the lowest imaginable. Paul had this condition of affairs specially in view when he advised, for the sake of the Gospel, and to avoid provocation to scandal and disorder, that Christian women should not undertake a public ministry in Corinth at that time. Their public appearance would have been the signal for insult and possibly riot. Under different conditions, however, we find the apostle not only not opposing, but evidently approving of the public ministry of women, as seems to have been the case on his visit to the more peaceful and moral city of Cesarea, where he stopped for many days at the house of Philip, whose four daughters were public speakers. (See Acts 21: 9, 10.) Had his opposition been based on general principles instead of local expediency, he would soon have quitted a home whose inmates were doing the very thing he had expressly condemned. The cause of Christianity would suffer much if it lost the fruits of woman's work.

J. W. P., Kappa, Ill. What were the greater works to which Christ referred (John 14: 12) that his disciples would do?

Christ always objected to be regarded as a mere wonder-worker. He wanted the people to look upon his miracles merely as his credentials, and to argue from them that he who could do such things was sent from God. The miracles were intended to lead them to trust in him for eternal life. Consequently when, as he said, he went to the Father and the Holy Spirit was given to his disciples, they were enabled to do those greater works, such as the conversions at Pentecost, which Christ held to be of a far higher order than miracles.

Reader. If a man is married to a woman with a violent temper, and he wants to do what is right and honorable, what would be his duty? Should he bear her outbursts and live in misery, or separate from her?

Separation should be the last resort, to be applied only after every other means to remedy the evil has failed. Many a husband has succeeded in curing his wife of bad temper. Firmness and patience and kindness will gen-

In explaining the Gospel to others you get light and help yourself. Also take of your own life, that sin does not control you and that it is of the kind in your business that will recommend itself to others. You will find this so difficult you will be driven to Christ for help. You will get to know him better every day. His peace and joy will come, but you must seek them, but rather to do your duty to serve God.

A reader in Gem, Idaho, writes us of a singular coincidence. He was greatly interested in the article recently published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, entitled: "Converted and while planning how he could do seasonal work for Christ among the class in his own section, he received from his son in Spokane. The latter several other lads, all members of the Y. M. C. A., have been in the habit of visiting the hotels and lodging-houses of every Saturday night and inviting all to attend divine service on the following day. These lads also have included visiting rounds both the jails and the hospitals. His son's letter related the story of a man in whose behalf he had successfully intervened, and who had promised, with apparent sincerity, to try with divine help, to lead a better life. The receipt of such a letter gave great joy to the father, whose own was bent on doing work similar to which his son had been engaged.

J. F. B., Mercersburg, Pa. A sceptic shrank the other day, a contradiction in the Bible should like to have explained. In II Kings 6: 23 it is said that Michal, David's no child, while in 21: 8 of the same book said to have had five children.

The peculiarity of the expression in the passage indicates that they were children. In the same verse you will find contrast. In referring to the child, the mother the historian uses the common expression: "which she bare unto him." A child, the words are: "whom she brought forth." We know from I. Samuel that Adriel married Merab, the daughter of Michal. It is possible that Merab and her sister Michal brought forth their motherless children. Or be that the name Michal was substituted for Merab by a copyist's mistake, the former is the more probable name. The Targum gives the name thus: "The five sons of Merab, Michal, Saul's daughter, brought forth which she bare," etc.

J. I., Paterson, N. J. What is the meaning of the Turkish crescent?

The legend is that Philip of Macedon approached by night with his scale the walls of Byzantium, and the crescent moon shone out clearly, indicating the movement of his troops besieged, who were enabled to escape. The crescent was adopted as a favorite emblem of the city, and the Turks afterward took the crescent and found the crescent in all the places. They supposed it to be a sign of some magical power and it themselves.

Old Subscriber, Galveston, Tex. If a man converted many years ago, after enduring anxiety, and was full of joy and peace, and baptized, is he justified in believing safe, although he has since then committed great sins?

God's mercy to the repentant sinner is infinite. Such a man as you described need not rest his hopes of salvation on his experience, but should go to God confidently and pleading for pardon for his sins. Do you not see that it was much more for him to sin after being converted than for another, whose sins had not been forgiven? His sins brought reproach upon the name of Christ. The object of Christianity was to save his people from their sins. It seems to have failed in this case. It is not safe, and he must seek pardon and penitently before he can be safe.

Mrs. I. E. C., Write to American Telegram, Reade Street, New York. The Deland, Ill. 1. Don't know. 2. The stories on the subject are unreliable. 3. At Washington, D. C. 4. We are publishing correspondence in the current volume we are directed to pray for our enemies. E. K., Peck's Run, W. Va. 1, 2, and 3. Three questions. 4. In a few weeks. N. C., Haddonfield, N. J. 1. We published years ago, a sketch of Amasa Smith's work. 2. Money sent to us for India will destination safely. 3. K. G., Oliver's. It is not, under ordinary circumstances, but ready conceive of conditions under which he entirely proper to do so. E. W., Yale and Oxford. 2. The editorial "we" tended to convey a personal or individual but rather the sentiment or judgment of the tele the journal represents. J. T., Pedenboro, N. C. We believe them to be reliable.

Mrs. P. T., Brooklyn, N. Y. He cannot God's blessing to rest upon a business which cause of ruin to thousands. If he means right, he must abandon the man traffic. I serve two masters. E. K., Brooklyn, I pro. 1. C. B. F., Mokena. She is still Write to her at 402 Second Avenue, New York. J. T. G., Pomona, Kan. We have published his biography.—Mrs. S. W. E., R. L. He was doubtless mistaken. S. T. Yrone, O. We know of none. S. of your contribution to Mount-Lawn Fresh acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Sept. 1 issue.

THE LEPER SETTLEMENT AT MOLOKAI, SANDWICH ISLANDS.

This gloomy exile of the hopelessly diseased was completely transformed by the heroic Damien, who devoted his life to the spiritual enlightenment of the lepers.

united with the bread and wine." Another mode of defining the doctrine is: "that the body and blood of Christ are received in, with, and under the bread and wine of the sacrament." The distinction involves the difference between consubstantiation and transubstantiation.

Student, Topeka, Kans. Does the image which Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream, as interpreted by Daniel refer to specific nations?

The various parts of the image, as Daniel said, typified different governments in the following order: Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. Prophecy expositors are generally agreed that the ten toes of the image typify ten kings or Presidents of Republics, whose dominions will coincide with the old Roman empire. These will become confederate and will agree to make a new ruler their federal head, who will wield then power and constitute himself ruler of the nations surrounding the Mediterranean Sea. This man will be he who is described in the New Testament as Antichrist.

E. E. K., Pa. Is it out of place for ladies to lead a prayer meeting? Is there any place in the Bible giving women the privilege of speaking as much in public on religious subjects as they do? If not what are the women to do who are placed in fields where they might say much to aid the cause of Christ?

There can be no reasonable objection to any lady leading a prayer meeting, provided (1) she be a true, sincere Christian woman, and (2) she have the ability to lead. The prohibition emphasized by Paul against women speaking in the churches, was doubtless never intended by the apostle to be of universal application. The Corinthians, for whom he was writing, were a "wealthy and luxurious community, prone to impurity of morals." The inhabitants of Corinth were notoriously vicious and profane, and their worship of Venus was attended with shameless orgies. The social erally succeed, if the husband, himself, will not be goaded into a temper. An ill-tempered woman requires fuel for her passion, and this she usually gets from her husband's retorts. If he is cool and quiet, and will not accept provocation from her, she learns to respect him and he gains control of her. Separation is a confession of failure. In extreme cases it may be advisable, but it is better to win her by love and kindness to a better disposition. In this way, he promotes her happiness as well as his own. By all means he should pray for her unceasingly, and with a strong faith that Christ is able and willing to change her heart.

Mrs. E. O. Stombaugh of the Dauphin Island Mission, Mobile, Ala., writes encouragingly of the progress of her evangelistic work. She is striving earnestly to get a little mission house in the island at a cost of $70, as a centre of the work. She also needs Sunday School literature and good religious reading for the work generally.

Anxious Believer, Philadelphia, Pa. I have lost the joy I had when I was first converted, and am fearful that my conversion was not genuine. Can you tell me how I may know whether I am safe or not?

Your experience is a common one. It is the reaction which naturally follows any ecstatic experience. If you are earnest in prayer, and if you steadily endeavor to follow Christ and resist temptation, there will come to you a deeper peace and happiness than you experienced at your conversion. From what you tell us of the facts, which, as you request, we do not print, we believe that your conversion is genuine. We would advise you doing some distinctive Christian work, teaching in Sunday School, visiting poor people who do not go to church, and telling them about Christ, or in some other way trying to bring souls into the kingdom.

Our Corn Ship in India.

(Continued from first page.)

formal way the public and official appreciation of America's generous gift could not have been done by the people here to show their gratitude and consideration of the expedition.

CAPTAIN LAVERGE, Commander of the "City of Everett."

Arrangements for distribution are almost complete. Already several large loads of grain have been dispatched, without waiting for the complete unloading of the cargo. I cannot send you a complete list by this mail of the missionaries to whom it will be sent, but hope to do so next week. Much of it is to be carried free over the railroads. The committee which administers the London Mansion House Fund appropriated twenty thousand rupees for any expenses that may be incurred in transporting the corn to the various distributing centres. This is to cover charges for freight as are not included in the concessions of the railroads. It shows you how generously they have received us, and how cordially they are co-operating with us. I go to night to the mine districts to personally help in the distribution of the corn and to see with my own eyes the suffering which the gifts we bring are destined to relieve.

The arrival of the City of Everett is thus announced by the Englishman, the chief journal of Calcutta:

"The steamer City of Everett, with a cargo of corn consigned by the American nation for the famine-stricken India, arrived in port on Saturday evening, and was berthed at the Kidderpore Docks. A steam launch Enchantress from Prince's Ghat in the morning to meet the steamer. A large party on board, including the Port Officer, Bishop Thoburn, Dr. T. S. Johnson, of Jubbulpore; Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Warne, Miss May; Mr. H. E. M. James, Secretary to the Indian Charity Relief Famine Fund; Mr. Constance, Under-Secretary to Government; Mr. Briscoe; Rev. J. E. Robinson, Mr. Booth, and others. Our correspondent, who formed part of the party, writes: We left Prince's Ghat shortly after six, and in half an hour sighted the City of Everett near Garden Reach. The vessel was flying on the foremast a large red flag with a white cross in the centre (this was informed by one of the missionaries on the Enchantress, was especially worked out for the City of Everett by the ladies of San Francisco). The flag is that of the religious paper of New money, that their gifts should reach the natives by such channels as would impress upon them the compassionate character of the Christian religion. We wanted them to understand that it was not political or commercial motives that had prompted the gift, but the love for humanity which is the product of the love of Christ. We had, too, the hope that the natives who went to the missionary for "the bread that perisheth" might go to him afterwards to hear of "the Bread of Life, which came down from heaven," whereof if a man eat, he shall never hunger. This, as we have previously explained, and not any distrust of the secular relief boards, was our reason for wishing the gifts of Christian people to be distributed by distinctively Christian hands.

"The cargo." The Englishman goes on to say, "is not consigned, as was generally supposed, to either the Government of India or to the Famine Relief Fund, but to Bishop Thoburn and Dr. Hobbs. The former is Chairman of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Committee, which has its head office at Bombay, with the Rev. Mr. Hume as Secretary. Bishop Thoburn has organized a local Committee at Calcutta to arrange for the distribution of the corn, of which Committee Mr. Lambert and Dr. Hobbs are members.

"It is not to be supposed that this consignment of corn is all the help that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have rendered to India. Dr. Talmage's stirring appeals resulted in very liberal contributions in cash, as well as in kind, and it is estimated that the total value to India of America's response is $250,000, in addition to the sums acknowledged by the Famine Fund Secretary. This money is being the generous help of his countrymen, and is full of hope of future good to come from the benefaction:

"Dear Dr. Klopsch: You will have heard of the graceful and gracious reception which was given to the City of Everett, at Calcutta. The Viceroy at this season is in Simla, the summer capital of the Empire. The Lieutenant-Governor was absent on a tour, but he sent instructions to have the vessel treated with all the courtesies due to a foreign man-of-war. He also sent a secretary to meet the vessel on her approach to Calcutta. The Hon. H. E. M. James, the secretary appointed by Government to have charge of the whole relief operations, also met the vessel, as did the chief Port Officer of the city and other representative men. Everything which could be done was done to facilitate the unloading of the vessel and the dispatch of the corn. A little trouble arose owing to the fact that the Government committee had received an impression that the distribution of the corn would be committed to them, but on cordial terms the services which had been rendered by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and those associated with yourself in the great work of sending relief to India.

"The railway officials granted us every possible facility to hasten the dispatch of the grain. The vessel arrived on Saturday night, and on Monday morning the hatches were opened and the cargo found in good condition. The unloading began immediately. It was thought best to send the grain to as many points as possible.

"A very marked impression has been made upon India by the sending out of this ship-load of grain. Although I think you acted wisely in selling the grain which you had collected in New York, yet the arrival of the ship has had a moral effect over which we all rejoice. It is an object lesson which even the poorest native can see and appreciate. I believe it has done much to create a good feeling among all classes, and I am glad for the sake of our dear native land that this noble harbinger of peace, good-will, and unalloyed kindness has come to our shores. May God bless you for all you have done in stimulating and directing this movement, and may his blessing also abide upon every one who has aided you in the noble undertaking.

Yours very truly,
J. M. THOBURN.

The Indian Witness publishes, from Dr. R. C. Hobbs, the following details: The lists for the distribution of the ship-load of grain are now practically completed; these lists have been made out with the greatest care. Bishop Thoburn, Dr. Johnson, and members of the Calcutta Committee have rendered every assistance. The distribution has been made on wholly denominational lines and as widely as possible.

A FREE Souvenir to All!

Beautiful "Lilies of the Field" From Palestine.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will send, free of charge, a very fine specimen Lily of the Field to any person sending in the names and full post-office addresses of 25 adult Protestant church members, each representing a different household—no two living in the same house.

The Lily of the Field is frequently referred to in the Bible and was used as a type by our Saviour in his teachings. It reaches perfection in Galilee, where Rev. Harvey B. Greene, the famous botanist, reverently gathered the perfect blossoms which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD now offers. They have been handsomely mounted, each mount bearing a perfect flower, the actual blossom itself.

All the 25 names must be of adult church members, and have the full post-office address after each one. Write legibly on only one side of the paper, and on the lower left hand corner of the envelope write the words,—"For the Mission Edition." Address your letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

No other business of whatever nature must be referred to in the letters which contain these names.

No Names mailed after October 10th, can be received under this offer.

OUR RELIEF SHIP "CITY OF EVERETT" UNLOADING AT HER DOCK IN CALCUTTA.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. On the mast floated an enormous flag with the name of the steamer, and on the mizzen the Stars and Stripes. On sighting the launch there was much excitement on board. The steamer slowed down and the fluttering handkerchiefs. The Englishman then narrates the history of the corn movement in the United States, and describes the liberal response by the Christian farmers to the appeal of Dr. Talmage and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which it characterizes as "the most influential religious paper in America." It then calls attention to the sacred religious character of the distribution, the object of which, as our readers are aware, was to impress the natives with a sense of the true motive of the gift. We felt that it was due to our readers who contributed the corn and the distributed, not through the Government, but by the agency of the American missionaries scattered throughout India, to whom the money is forwarded by the Bombay Committee referred to above. It was only the other day that Dr. Klopsch, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, cabled $50,000 to the Committee. The above facts will show the public of India how very generously the people of America have responded to the appeal on behalf of her Majesty's subjects, and will, perhaps, result in a better appreciation of the efforts of the self-denying mission-workers whom the United States annually send to this country.

The following letter will, we are sure, delight the heart of every one who contributed to send this messenger of mercy to the starving people of India. Bishop Thoburn is evidently deeply gratified by the arrival of the vessel it appeared that this must be done by missionaries alone. This difficulty was surmounted in a moment by the appointment of myself as a member of the Government committee, a very graceful act on the part of the officials concerned. The same committee voted Rs. 20,000 towards paying the cost of transportation from Calcutta to the various stations to which the corn was sent. The Viceroy on the very day that we began to unload, sent a dispatch stating that one of the leading railway lines would carry the grain free, while others would take it at a greatly reduced cost. Lastly, Mr. James tendered Dr. Hobbs and wife a public dinner, at which the Chief Justice and nearly all the other members of the Government committee were present. At this dinner Mr. James gave an address in which he acknowledged in the most

MUSIC IN CHURCHES.

A Sermon by

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: II.Chron. 5:13. ---

It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord.

THE Temple was done. It was the very chorus of all magnificence and pomp. Splendor crowded against splendor. It was the diamond necklace of the earth. From the huge pillars crowned with leaves and flowers and rows of pomegranate wrought out in burnished metal, down even to the tongs and snuffers made out of pure gold, everything was as complete as the God-directed architect could make it. It seemed as if a vision from heaven had alighted on the mountains. The day for dedication came. Tradition says that there were in and around about the Temple on that day two hundred thousand silver trumpets, forty thousand harps, forty thousand timbrels, and two hundred thousand singers: so that all modern demonstrations at Dusseldorf or Boston seem nothing compared with that. As this great sound surged up amid the precious stones of the Temple, it must have seemed like the River of Life dashing against the amethyst of the wall of heaven. The sound arose, and God, as if to show that he was well pleased with the music which his children make in all ages, dropped into the midst of the Temple a cloud of glory so overpowering that the officiating priests were obliged to stop in the midst of the services.

There has been much discussion as to where music was born. I think that at the beginning, "when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy," that the earth heard the echo. The cloud on which the angels stood to celebrate the creation was the birthplace of song. The stars that glitter at night are only so many keys of celestial pearl, on which God's fingers play the music of the spheres. Inanimate nature is full of God's stringed and wind instruments. Silence itself—perfect silence—is only a musical rest in God's great anthem of worship. Wind among the leaves, insect humming in the summer air, the rush of billow upon beach, the ocean far out sounding its everlasting psalm, the bobolink on the edge of the forest, the quail whistling up from the grass, are music. While visiting Blackwell's Island, I heard, coming from a window of the lunatic asylum, a very sweet song. It was sung by one who had lost her reason, and I have come to believe that even the deranged and disordered elements of nature would make music to our ear, if we only had keenness enough to listen. I suppose that even the sounds in nature that are so often so repulsive make harmony in God's ear. You know that you will come to hear to an orchestra that the sounds are perfect music of pleasurable, and I also have heard so near devastating storm and frightful whirlwind, we cannot hear that which makes to God's ear the music of the spirits above us a most harmonious and tremulous.

I propose to speak about sacred music, first showing you its importance and then stating some of the obstacles to its advancement.

I draw the first obstacle for the importance of sacred music from the fact that God commands it. I wish I had told us to sing, as we have in our psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, through David our king, as it is written, "Sing unto the Lord, all ye kingdoms of the earth; ye that are subject unto him; ye that are called by his name, proving that it is the Lord from man's duty to sing to him with praise." Indeed, I think there are too many in the Bible to sing that there are signs

God not only asks for the human voice, but for the instruments of music. He asks for the cymbal and the harp and the trumpet. And I suppose that in the last days of the Church the harp, the lute, the trumpet, and all the instruments of music that have given their chief aid to the theatre and bacchanal, will be brought by their masters and laid down at the feet of Christ, and then sounded in the Church's triumph on her way from suffering into glory. "Praise ye the Lord!" Praise him with your voices. Praise him with stringed instruments and with organs.

I draw another argument for the importance of this exercise from the impressiveness of the exercise. You know something of what secular music has achieved. You know it has made its impression upon governments, upon laws, upon literature, upon whole generations. One inspiring national air is worth thirty thousand men as a standing army. There comes a time in the battle when one bugle is worth a thousand muskets. In the earlier part of our civil war the Government proposed to economize in bands of music, and many of them were sent home; but the generals in the army sent word to Washington: "You are making a very great mistake. We are falling back and falling back. We have not enough music."

I have to tell you that no nation or Church can afford to severely economize in music. Why should we rob the programmes of worldly gaiety when we have so many appropriate songs and tunes composed in our own day, as well as that magnificent inheritance of Church psalmody which has come down fragrant with the devotions of other generations—tunes no more worn out than when our great-grandfathers climbed up on them from the church pew to glory? Dear old souls, how they used to sing! And in those days there were certain tunes married to certain hymns, and they have lived in peace a great while, these two old people, and we have no right to divorce them. Born as we have been amid this great wealth of church music, augmented by the compositions of artists in our day, we ought not to be tempted out of the sphere of Christian harmony, and try to seek unconsecrated sounds. It is absurd for a millionaire to steal.

Many of you are illustrations of what a sacred song can do. Through it you were brought into the kingdom of Jesus Christ. You stood out against the warning and the argument of the pulpit, but when, in the sweet words of Charles Wesley or John Newton or Toplady, the love of Jesus was sung to your soul, then you surrendered, as an armed castle that could not be taken by a host, lifts its window to listen to a harp's trill.

There was a Scotch soldier dying in New Orleans, and a Scotch minister came in to give him the consolations of the Gospel. The man turned over on his pillow and said, "Don't talk to me about religion." Then the minister began to sing a familiar hymn that was composed by David Dickenson, beginning with the words:

Oh, mother dear, Jerusalem,
When shall I come to thee?

He sang it to the tune of Dundee, and everybody in Scotland knows that; and, as he began to sing, the dying soldier turned over on his pillow and said to the minister, "Where did you learn that?" "Why," replied the minister, "my mother taught me that." "So did mine," said the dying soldier, and the very foundation of his heart was upturned, and then and there he yielded himself to Christ. Oh, it has an irresistible power! Luther's sermons have been forgotten, but his Judgment Hour runs on through the ages, and will keep on singing until the blast of the archangel's trumpet shall bring about that very day which the hymn celebrates. I would to God that you would take these songs of salvation as messages from heaven; for just as certainly as the birds brought food to Elijah by the brook Cherith, so these winged harmonies, God-sent, are flying to your soul with the bread of life. Open your mouth and take it, O hungry Elijah!

I have also noticed the power of sacred song to soothe perturbation. You may have come in here with a great many worriments and anxieties, yet perhaps in the singing of the first hymn you lost them all. You have read in the Bible of Saul, and how he was sad and angry, and how the boy David came in and played the evil spirit out of him. A Spanish king was melancholy. The windows were all closed. He sat in the darkness. Nothing could bring him forth until Franeli came and discoursed music for three or four days to him. On the fourth day he looked up and wept and rejoiced, and the windows were thrown open, and that which all the splendors of the court could not do, the power of song accomplished. If you have anxieties and worriments try this heavenly charm upon them. Do not sit down on the bank of the hymn, but plunge in, that the devil of care may be brought out of you.

It also arouses to action. Do you not know that a singing church is always a triumphant church? If a congregation is silent during the exercise or partially silent, it is the silence of death. If when the hymn is given out you hear the faint hum of here and there a father and mother in Israel, while the vast majority are silent, that minister of Christ who is presiding needs to have a very strong constitution if he does not get the chills. He needs not only the grace of God but nerves like whalebone. It is amazing how some people with voice enough to discharge all their duties in the world, when they come into the house of God have no voice to discharge this duty. I really believe that if the Church of Christ could rise up and sing as it ought to sing, where we have a hundred souls brought into the kingdom of Christ there would be a thousand. How was it in olden time? Cajetan said, "Luther conquered us by his songs."

But I must now speak of some of the obstacles in the way of the advancement of this sacred music, and the first is that it has been impressed into the service of Satan. I am far from believing that music ought always to be positively religious. Refined art has opened places where music has been secularized, and lawfully so. The drawing-room, the concert, by the gratification of pure taste and the production of harmless amusement and the improvement of talent, have become very forces in the advancement of our civilization. Music has as much right to laugh in Surrey Gardens as it has to pray in St. Paul's. In the kingdom of nature we have the glad tiding of the wind as well as the long-metre psalm of the thunder. But, while all this is so, every observer has noticed that this art, which God intended for the improvement of the ear, and the voice, and the head, and the heart, has often been impressed into the service of error. Tartini, the musical composer, dreamed one night that Satan snatched from his hand an instrument and played upon it something very sweet—a dream that has often been fulfilled in our day, the voice and the instruments that ought to have been devoted to Christ, captured from the Church and applied to the purposes of sin.

Another obstacle has been an inordinate fear of criticism. The vast majority of people singing in church never want anybody else to hear them sing. Everybody is waiting for somebody else to do his duty. If we all sang then the inaccuracies that are evident when only a few sing would be drowned out. God asks you to do as well as you can, and then if you get the wrong pitch or keep wrong time he will forgive any deficiency of the ear and imperfection of the voices. Angels will not laugh if you should lose your place in the musical scale or come in at the close a bar behind. There are three schools of singing, I am told—the German school, the Italian school, and the French school of singing. Now, I would like to add a fourth school, and that is the school of Christ. The voice of a contrite, broken heart, although it may not be able to stand human criticism, makes better music to God's ear than the most artistic performance when the heart is wanting. God calls on the beasts, on the cattle, on the dragons, to praise him, and we ought not to be behind the cattle and the dragons.

Another obstacle in the advancement of this art has been the erroneous notion of this part of the service could be conducted by delegation. Churches have "O, what an easy time we shall have, the minister will do the preaching, and the choir will do the singing, and we will have nothing to do." And you know as well as I that there are a great multitude of churches all through this land where the people are not expected to sing, and the whole work is done by delegation of six or ten persons, and the audience are silent. In such a church in Syria an old elder persisted in singing, and the choir appointed a committee to go and ask the elder if he would not stop. They know that in many churches the choir is expected to do all the singing, and a great mass of the people are expected to be silent, and if you utter your voice, you are interfering. In that church they have the four, with opera-glasses dangle their side, singing "Rock of Ages, for me," with the same spirit that night before on the stage, they their part in the Grand Duchesse of Giovanni.

My Christian friends, have we a right to delegate to others the discharge of duty which God demands of us? Suppose that four wood-thrushes propose to do the singing some bright day, when the woods are ringing with bird voices, and they decide that four wood-thrushes shall all the singing of the forest. Let all the other voices keep silent. How beautiful! How four warble! It is really fine music, how long will you keep the forest silent? Why, Christ would come into that land and look up, as he looked through the ivies, and he would wave his hand and say, "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord," and, keeping time with the stroke of innumerable wings, there would be a thousand bird voices leaping into harmony. Suppose this delegation of musical performers were tried in heaven, suppose that four choice spirits should try to do the singing of the upper world. Hush now! thrones and dominions and principalities. David, be still, if you were the "sweet singer of Israel," keep quiet, though you have come to that crown of rejoicing. Richard Baxter, keep still, though this is the "Sweet Everlasting Rest." Four spirits no more all the singing. But how long will heaven be quiet? How long? "Hallelujah!" would cry some glorified Methuselah from under the altar. "Praise the Lord who sing the martyrs from among thrones." "Thanks be unto God who hath us the victory!" a great multitude of redeemed spirits would cry—myriads of voices coming into the harmony of one hundred and forty and four thousand breaking forth into one acclamation. Stop that loud singing! Stop! Oh, they cannot hear me. You might as well try to drown the thunder of the sea or beat back the roar of the sea, every soul in heaven has resolved on its own singing. Alas! that we should have tried on earth that which they do not do in heaven, and, instead of joining all our voices in the praise of the High God, delegating perhaps to unsanctified men and women this most solemn and most delightful service.

Music ought to rush from the audience like the water from a rock—clear, sparkling. If all the other part of the church service is dull, do not have the music dull. With so many thrilling tunes to sing about, away with all drawing-room stupidity! There is nothing more nervous as to sit in a pulpit and look off on an audience with their eyes like fourths closed and their lips almost dumb, mumbling the praises of God. Do my recent absence I preached to an audience, and all the music they made together did not equal one skylark. I do not sleep at a coronation. Do not us sleep when we come to a Savoy coronation. In order to a proper discharge of this duty, let us stand up, save our weakness or fatigue excuses us, and stand in an easy pew we cannot do this half so well as when, upright, we take our whole body into it. Let our song be like an acclamation of victory. You have a right to sing. Do not surrender the prerogative.

We want to rouse all our families

Rev. S. Baring-Gould gives this interesting description of the ancient building recently discovered in Rome, and to which tradition points as the house of the martyrs John and Paul, on the Caelian Hill: After the martyrdom and the influx of devout visitors, the decorations were greatly damaged; as far as the hands could reach the visitors picked off bits of the plaster, perhaps to preserve as relics. The original house and its decorations belong to two periods; part of it is of the second, and part of the third century. The principal apartment is also that which has its ornamentation best preserved. There are no specially pagan figures in the decorations. There is the tree of life, with two goats running to it; a man reading a volume; another with a long scroll, standing between two pilasters, one supporting a vase; and a woman in the attitude of prayer, with arms extended to form a cross. There can be no doubt that these frescoes belong to the third, or early part of the fourth century, and that they are Christian. In another part of the house is a very significant painting. It represents the vessel containing the pure milk of the Word, and one lamb is approaching to drink of it, whilst another resolutely turns away its head. The cellar was excavated and found to contain ranges of jars with sharp points. One of these, broken, has on it an undecipherable inscription in Greek and the monogram of Christ between the Alpha and the Omega. Another, quite perfect, is sealed with the sacred monogram. The whole find is exceedingly interesting to Biblical students.

PERSIA'S BENIGHTED MILLIONS.

Dr. Yoseph Tells of some Strange Superstitions—Sickness and "Evil Spirits"—Miracle-Working Shrines—Converts to Christianity.

ALL nations from primitive times to the present day have had their doctors and their herbs, from the lowest African tribe with its witch-doctor and boiling oil pan, to the Grecian doctor with his ointments and lotions, in his temple hospital. Medical science among the modern Persians is a combination of the methods practiced in Egypt and Greece in the days of Cyrus Darius who brought their physicians from Greece. Medicine and surgery are practiced by men and women. Diseases of the eye and midwifery are practiced almost exclusively by women, while other branches are practiced by both sexes alike.

You know, we Eastern people are very slow, and behind the Europeans in many things, but in medicine we get on very much faster. Let me give you a few facts. A man with a sore leg went to a native physician and remained under treatment twenty-nine days, at the end of which time he came back and began the practice of medicine, no one doubting his qualifications! A woman afflicted with an affection of the eye-lids goes to a doctor and remains under treatment ten or fifteen days, and comes back a full-fledged M.D. As a rule, the profession of a man has descended to him from his ancestors for many hundred years, and he is known by his profession. If you want to see a man named "Maashy," you will be asked, "Who? The carpenter?" or "the silver-smith?" or "John, the shepherd?" etc.

To make you acquainted with medical science in Persia as it is now and always has been, I will try to give you a few prescriptions and treatments. Come with me and we will go to a few native specialists. Ben Israel is a dark, thick-set man. Jaundice is his specialty. His patient is a little girl of fourteen. He is sitting in his darkly curtained room and is smoking. Between times he looks at the patient, and she becomes frightened and cries, keeping close to her mother. The doctor lays his pipe aside, looks the girl in the eyes and says to his wife, "Khala K'ay (daughter of my aunt), give me a knife." The patient, of course, screams and starts to run away, but her mother holds her, and the doctor takes hold of one of her ears, and examining the back part near the lobe says: "Here is the tendon; I will remove it and the jaundice with it." Then he says to the patient: "Daughter of a doctor, why did you come to me to be cured? I will cut your throat if you dare to cry out aloud." He makes a small incision and removes the tendon and predicts that the patient will get well in a few days.

In the hot, dusty season, every tenth person you meet is an ophthalmia patient. We are going to one of the best doctors, a Mashady Khani, a woman who has visited one of the Mohammedan shrines, and the name is given in honor of the king journey. Her yard is larger than a New York City block, no trees of fruit and ornamental trees. It is enclosed by streams of running water supplied from the river, which keeps the garden cool. Her sama zar (tea kettle), is steaming on a stove, on the other side of the rocks. We could not see Mashady Khani, because she was surrounded by her patients who were standing on their feet, the doctor, in Eastern fashion, sitting on beautiful carpets and cushions of many colors, each patient in turn lying down and putting her hand on the doctor's left knee. The doctor had a folded paper, from which she took a little pinch of medicine and sprinkled it between the eye-lids. After a few seconds, the patient is up and another down until all have been attended to. Here comes a woman with inverted lids. The doctor takes hold of a portion of the loose skin on the upper lid and ties a portion, one-sixth or one-quarter inch, between two sticks. The result is that the part becomes withered in a few days, and the desired effect, shortening of the lid, is produced.

Then there are shrines which cure certain ailments. A few days ago, with some friends, I visited the shrine of St. Sargius a few miles from the city. After a short ride on our horses we reached a small walled village. We were invited to dinner with the village priest. One side of the interior there were the cooking and heating utensils for the house and family (they have a day-school of sixteen pupils.) After our dinner we went to see the church. It was built 600 A. D. in honor of St. Sargius, who is said to have cast out devils in his lifetime, and those supposed to be possessed by devils are brought to this not one room where the insane can be sheltered and provided for.

Nursing women, Mohammedans, as well as Christians and Jews, bring their tender infants to the church of St. Mary in the city of Urmi. This is supposed to have been built by the "wise men from the East." If rich, visitors bring with them offerings of sheep, candles, olive oil, incense, etc., to be used in the church. It is a strange sight to see Mohammedan women entering a Christian church with great reverence and placing their infants before the cross. Then your soul is filled with sadness. "Ya Mart marum" they cry, as they pray for strength for themselves and their children.

There are more than 1400 towns in Persia, and only ten of them have educated physicians. These doctors are all in the northwest part of the country. Long distances are traveled by sick persons to reach a European doctor. If the patient is rich he takes a train of servants with a loaded caravan. If he is poor, and even a donkey cannot be bought or hired, he is brought on the backs of his relatives, who beg their daily needs from passing travelers and the villagers on the way. Often, the nearer he approaches help the weaker he grows. Sometimes he dies from privation and the difficulties of a long journey, and is buried by the wayside, or makes his lonely grave with strangers. Others reach the "Inglus" has cursed me all the days of my life, and she sobs and cries like a child.

PAUL SHIMMON, A NESTORIAN STUDENT, in Persian Shepherd Costume.

Have you ever seen one who has been blind, with his sight restored after of blindness? Have you ever seen a person enabled to walk, and the heart filled with gladness? If you are a Christian, will you not give your services, if they are most needed? There are between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000 people in eastern Persia without a single priest or physician. Can you find a darker spot on the globe, where about ten per cent of the whole population are blind, the result of ignorance and unhygienic living? There are more physicians on 7th and 4th Street, New York City, between Sixth and Seventh Avenues, than in Persia. There are more hospitals and dispensaries on that street than in all Persia.

In the mountains of Kurdistan, eight or nine years ago, there lived a Kurdish shepherd boy. From his infancy he had been brought up to look upon killing and pillaging as the most honorable pursuits for man. The more cruel the man, the more he is honored and admired and regarded as a hero. A man's life is, how many lives he has destroyed, how many villages and homes he has helped to plunder and burn. The boy's name was Derboo, and the wealth of his tribe consisted of firearms, knives, oxen, goats, etc., etc. From childhood he had helped his father with their sheep and had grown to love the very pasture that his lambs grazed on, and the woods where he carried the weak ones in his arms, giving them pasture. One dark night, after feeding his sheep, he suddenly heard the noise of horses and the clashing of fire-arms. He was the enemy numbered many. He was wounded and left for dead, and his body was carried away. In the morning he was found, nearly dead from loss of blood, and was carried to the only hospital in that part of the country—the American hospital in Urmi. For days his life was despaired of, but careful and tender nursing pulled him through. He used to plan to revenge himself on his enemy when he became a little stronger. In the Cochrane, the mother of the doctor in charge, would come and read to him the Bible, and he would drink in the words of the thirsty man. One day she read to him the tenth chapter of St. John. She spoke the great love of the Good Shepherd who gave himself up on the cross for our sakes. Over and over he asked if the story could be true, and it loved us as much as he. Derboo, loved his lambs. He could not understand, why a good man gave himself for others. He was finally converted and baptized, but when his fierce relatives of his conversion, they came down to his mountains decked with knives and fire-arms to wipe out the stain of apostasy in their family and tribe. He could not safely stay in Persia, but he was grateful to Europe. There are many cases where medical work and words have won souls for Christ.

Urmi, Persia. HANNAH G. YOSHIDA.

PERSIAN GIRLS AT THE LOOM, WEAVING CARPET.

shrine. The "House of Crazy," as it is called, is situated on the north-west side of the church proper. There are two rooms, one above the other, the underground one being used for the patient. The stairs leading to the room above were three inches thick with ice, as it had rained the day before and the water had rushed through the room and frozen. We were assisted down the stairs to a very small door, so small that I could hardly enter in a crouching position. The room was as dark as night, as no light is brought into "the room of the crazy." The highest point is below six feet. Stretched upon the mat on the floor, the tips of my fingers touched the walls on either side, and my head and feet very nearly touched either end. A pretty little grave for the dead, but no hospital for the living; no place for ventilation, heat or light. I had them roll the stones against the door, but soon felt the need of air, and called out to them to roll away the stone because I was already cured. In all Persia there is doctor in time, and are helped or cured. Their joy and gratitude cannot be expressed, and they go back with glowing accounts of the wonderful cures the doctor has wrought. At our gate we see an old Mohammedan woman on a donkey, her son, a young man, standing near her. He is knocking at our gate, and we inquire of him what they want. The mother says, "Bagy, Hakim, Hakim," in Turkish, meaning "Sister, doctor, doctor." "What can the doctor do for you?" She gets very angry, as she is tired and weary of looking for us, and says, "Why do you tempt me to curse myself?"

"What do you want with me?" "We want to see the new hakim who has come from Yengalanga." Then her son says, "Nana, (mother) that is the doctor." She begins piteously to plead for sight, as though sight were in the doctor's power to give. We tell her we cannot help her, and she hopelessly turns to her son and says, "My son, come; if this new hakim cannot help my eyes, no one can. Come! Allah

PERSIAN CHILDREN OF THE POOREST CLASS.

THREE GREAT CONVENTIONS.

Delegates of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union from all Lands to Assemble Next Month in Conference in Toronto, Ont., and Buffalo, N. Y.

TOBER will be a memorable month in the great organizations which have done so much not only in the case of Temperance, but for the moral tone of the community. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Canada will hold its annual convention in Toronto, October 20. The annual convention of the United States will open in Buffalo, N. Y., on Oct. 29. The World's Convention in Toronto Oct. 23. Our readers will be glad to see the portraits we publish on this page of the prominent workers in connection with these great meetings. The five ladies in the group are the officers of the W. C. T. U. The four ladies whose portraits are at the head of this article are the officers of the United States National Union. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Vice-President; Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. C. C. Hoffman, Recording Secretary, and Mrs. Helen M. Barker, Treasurer.

THE WORLD'S CONVENTION, held in Toronto, October 23 to 26, 1897, is a mass convention, but a delegated membership of each national union being delegate for every thousand members. These representatives, the biennial meeting is composed of the general officers, presidents of affiliated national unions, now numbering forty-six; thirty superintendents of departments, a specialist in her line of work, and the under-the-world missionaries, whose heroic efforts have made possible such a meeting of the world's womanhood. The total membership of the World's Union, including honoraries and children, is estimated to be five hundred and

The Toronto Convention will be the most international as well as the largest yet held. The following are some of the distinguished delegates who will be present. General officers: Frances E. Willard, LL.D., President, Evanston, Ill.; Lady Henry Somerset, Vice-President, Eastnor, Leicestershire, England; Miss Agnes E. Ripley, Derbyshire, England; Miss Anna A. Gordon, Assistant Secretary, Evanston, Ill.; Mrs. Mary E. Sanderson, Treasurer, Danville, Quebec. From the British Woman's Temperance Association: Mrs. Lile and Miss London; "Sister Lily," of Hugh Hughes' West London Mission; Miss Hughes, Manchester; Miss Sarah J. Lile and Miss H. B. Cotterell, Somerset; Miss Reid, Miss Bleley, Penarth, South Wales; Miss Pearce, Kent; and Mrs. Sh. London. From the National W. C. T. U. of the United States: Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, World's Superintendent Peace and Arbitration, Winthrop Centre, Me.; Dr. Mary Wood-Allen, Sup't Purity Department, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Mrs. Elizabeth W. Greenwood, World's Superintendent Evangelistic Department, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, World's Superintendent Young Woman's Work, Skaneateles, N. Y.; Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, World's Superintendent Scientific Temperance Instruction, Boston, Mass.; Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, National Vice-President, Portland, Me.; Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, National Corresponding Secretary, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, World's Organizer and National Recording Secretary,

MISS AGNES SLACK, MISS ANNA A. GORDON, MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MRS. MARY E. SANDERSON OFFICERS OF THE WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

Kansas City, Mo.; Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, Assistant Recording Secretary, Lexington, Ky.; Mrs. Helen M. Barker, National Treasurer, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, President Illinois W. C. T. U., Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Booker T. Washington, Tuskegee, Ala.; Mrs. Lucy Thurman, Jackson, Mich., and many others. Australia will be represented by Miss Vincent and Miss Cummings, Sydney; Lady Windeyer, Superintendent of Franchise, New South Wales; Mrs. Kirk and Miss Ware, Victoria; Miss Waldeck, Tasmania, and Mrs. Ardell, New South Wales. Other foreign countries will be represented as follows: Syria, by Miss Layah

Barakat; Armenia, by Miss Rebecca Krikorian; Finland, by Miss Ericsson; Iceland, by Miss Olafia Johannsdottir; Egypt, by Miss McDowell and Mrs. Franc Griffin; Madagascar, by Miss Clark; Chile, South America, by Miss Marion Milks; Hawaii, by Miss Mary E. Green, Honolulu; Japan, by Mrs. Kaji Yajinia.

Toronto W. C. T. U. has had most generous co-operation of the City Council and citizens in preparations to entertain the Convention in a royal manner. The City Council has made a grant of $500 for the expenses, and granted the gratuitous use of the Pavilion of the Horticultural Gardens for the day meetings. The four evening meetings will be held in Massey Music Hall, which has a seating capacity of 4,000.

On Friday, October 22, a banquet will be tendered the delegates by the Toronto Committee. On one evening a demonstration will be given by children of Toronto to represent the world-wide movement of the W. C. T. U. On Sunday, distinguished speakers will occupy many of the pulpits, and Lady Henry Somerset will preach the annual sermon to the delegates on Sunday afternoon in Massey Music Hall.

One of the interesting sights of the Convention will be THE GREAT POLYGLOT PETITION, with its seven miles of signatures from fifty different nations, praying the governments of the world for the protection of the home from the alcoholic and opium traffics. The petition has already been presented to the President of the United States (then President Cleveland), and to Queen Victoria, and at the close of the Convention will be presented to the Dominion Government. On the day following the Convention, October 27, a Purity Conference will be held, presided over by Dr. Mary Wood-Allen, Superintendent Purity Department for the United States.

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION. Miss Frances E. Willard writes us as follows: "It is probably no exaggeration to say that the annual gatherings of the National W. C. T. U. are the most interesting conventions of women that have ever been held in this country in the interest of philanthropy. The delegates usually number about 400, and aside from the official members each delegate has a thousand women back of her who have paid their dues in the same year that the convention meets. Every State and Territory has its regular officers, and nearly all are well organized. I often happens that after a woman from Indian Territory or some distant State has spoken in the National Convention, one will follow from the State of New York; then we may hear a voice piping up from Idaho and another from Louisiana or Oregon, from Connecticut or Ohio, so that the charm of the convention is the widely varying personalities that result from wide differences of environment. Each evening there is a mass meeting and we try to have something of the dramatic on these occasions. Last year at St. Louis we represented nearly all of our sixty different lines of work by object lesson. For instance the department of mercy was given, and consisted of a group of children with a St. Bernard dog; that of "Work for Lumbermen" by a man dressed in the exact garb worn in the northern forests, with a big axe over his shoulder labeled 'Prohibition,' (which was being 'laid at the roots of the tree,') and so on, while the audience became constantly more interested and enthusiastic.

THE WORLD'S POLYGLOT PETITION.

"We always have one evening when the young women furnish the programme led by Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, the head of the department, and they are good students of the picturesque. At our twenty-fourth annual convention we expect that Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Superintendent of the Scientific Temperance Instruction in our Public Schools, will have a drill of school children in the temperance textbooks, while Mrs. Helen G. Rice will on another evening present a procession of the Loyal Temperance Legion, our juvenile society which is under her care throughout the United States.

"Our State Presidents are women of remarkable individuality, bright, energetic and rich in experience; nearly every one of them will speak. This year our platform will be if possible more explicit than usual in favor of the total prohibition of the liquor traffic and social vice. It will also give no uncertain sound in opposition to the barbarity of lynching and in favor of a universal treaty of arbitration.

"Lady Henry Somerset, President of the British Women's Temperance Association, and Vice-President-at-Large of the World's W. C. T. U., is expected to be with us, also Lady Windeyer, and several other chief workers who are the chosen delegates from Australia. A dear little woman has already arrived from Iceland, the niece of the Prime Minister and the leading woman on the island. She has traveled all over it in her energetic determination to organize our society and to make it at home in that most northern of all inhabited countries, Armenians, Syrians, and other Orientals will be with us, among them Rebecca Krikorian, whose address last year was a memorable event."

The officers of the National W. C. T. U. are, Frances E. Willard, President; Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Vice-President-at-Large and President of the W. C. T. U. of the State of Maine. It is perhaps enough to know of Mrs. Stevens that she has been for seventeen years President of one of the strongest state auxiliaries of the National Society and has never had a dissenting vote from the noble temperance women of Maine.

Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, Corresponding Secretary, is a minister's daughter, and a graduate of the theological department of the Boston University, wife of a business man in Newton, Mass., a remarkably capable speaker, and organizer, a woman in whose nature strength and gentleness are mingled in the proportions that make a true Christian.

Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman of Missouri, the Recording Secretary, is a good organizer—a woman who always arouses warm affection in those who are associated with her and who know her great good heart. Mrs. Hoffman's husband was a physician; she is a widow and makes her home in her son's family at Kansas City.

Mrs. Helen M. Barker, Treasurer, (formerly President of the Dakota W. C. T. U.) is the wife of a Baptist minister, and has a pleasant home in Chicago, her daughter, Mrs. Horning, being associated with her in our work as National Superintendent of the Press department and Vice Secretary,

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON.
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadas, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals.—It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by early renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald will not be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

Entered as Second-Class Matter, October 3, 1879, at New York, N. Y.

Heart and Head.

WHAT does the capacity of a man to read amount to if he reads bad books? What does a man's capacity to write amount to if he writes bad sentiments? Better not be able to read or write at all. Knowledge is power for good if sanctified. Knowledge is power for evil if unsanctified. Robespierre, and Rousseau and Byron were illustrations of what men with magnificent mental endowments will do when they have no moral restraint. Those men might better have been born, and lived, and died on the lowest round of ignorance, than to have risen and cursed the world with their cruelties and nastiness. The youth of this country need something besides reading and writing and arithmetic in order that they may be prepared for good citizenship. The great pest of this country today is the educated villains. They know enough. They know too much.

There is no machine more useful than a locomotive. Here I see one standing. Piston-rods, cranks, axles, cylinders, driving wheels, throttle-valve, all perfect. A good engineer gets on that locomotive, fastens it to a long train of cars, drags an immense value of freightage or life across the continent. He does well. A reckless engineer comes up to that same locomotive, gets on, and puts it at the rate of fifty miles an hour; comes near a dangerous curve, leaps off, while the train goes on into shrieking and death. That is just the difference between educated mind without moral principle, and educated mind with moral principle. In either case it is a powerful engine. In the one case it draws a long line of good influence across the earth. In the other case, Christian principle jumps off, and moral restraint jumps off, leaving the train to go into terrible demolition. Ignorance is bad, but intelligence is worse if immoral. Almost everybody talks about the days of Greece and Rome. They had no such intelligence, so many artists, and painters, and poets, and thinkers. No doubt about it. But how about the morals of Greece and Rome? Why is it that when a gentleman is traveling with his family in Europe, and he comes to the museum containing the relics of ancient art, the painter taps him on the shoulder and says, "Only gentlemen will pass in there." Why? It is because the paintings and the sculpture of ancient Greece and Rome were abhorrent to all decency, and splendid Gouth and magnificent Pompeii were worse than the Five Points in the worst days of the Five Points. Intelligence, art, eloquence, without without the Christian religion, are defamation, ruin, disaster, woe.

Looking After One's Descendants.

IN looking over the genealogical table of a certain American family that I need not mention by name, I discovered this record: Benjamin, according to the provision of his grandfather, was educated at Harvard, and graduated in 1803. He studied law with his uncle in Groton, Mass., and then removed to Bath, Maine, where, a distinguished lawyer and politician, he died in 1833.

That grandfather settled the standing and destiny of his grandson and many of his descendants. Of course, all young men do not have such opportunities; do not improve them. "According to the provision of his grandfather." There is a great deal of virtue in the provision of a grandfather. The same amount of money, given as money, would not have gone so far. The grandfather not only provided the means, but he also provided how they should be laid out. Let grandparents make provision for the proper, and, if need be, the superior education of their grandchildren. Let them not only give their grandchildren wise counsels and earnest prayers, but make provision for their large Christian culture. This is the way to help the family, and to help the State, and to help the Kingdom of God.

It is an agreeable outcome of the present study of genealogical tables to find, as some of us do, that we had an ancestor who landed at Jamestown or on Plymouth Rock, or stood at Bunker Hill, or at the Battle of Bennington, or at some obscure post of civilization, when the nation was going through the birththroes of freedom. It makes a man better able to act a noble part in his own day and generation, to discover that his ancestors were not wanting in theirs. The English are proud of bearing a great name, and ingeniously prepare coats of arms with mottoes to keep alive the deeds of those who have gone before them. Americans are coming more and more to feel their need of the same conservative force. We want to anchor to what is noble and heroic in the past; we want to be inspired by what has inspired our sires. So we say, Let the sons of the American Revolution and the Daughters of the Colonial Dames make the most of their ancestors. It will insure a longer and better life to the republic.

Boy Desperadoes.

IT is said that two boys, not yet in their teens, the other day resisted a posse of men with revolvers, and after firing several shots at them, escaped to the woods. These boys two months before, ran away from their home because they were punished for disobedience. They have since been with a band of robbers who have infested the neighborhood. The boys are severally eight and ten years old. It would be interesting but sad to learn upon what food these babes and sucklings of Cherry Creek, N. Y., have become outlaws. Who wrote the books they have read? What companions have they been allowed to select?

We boast of our Christian civilization, but scarcely a day occurs in which the newspaper press does not reveal and send all over the land in print deeds of strange and awful violence. And they are not only strange and awful, but they are often perpetrated on persons in the nearest and most tender relations with the perpetrator. The Bible phrase, "without natural affection," is applicable to their authors. Here are two lads who not only resist parental control, but defy the officers of the law, join a band of desperadoes and make a common cause with them. It takes no prophet's glance to anticipate what will be their destiny. Meantime let us give our boys to read the lives of heroes, and not desperadoes.

Interesting Peculiarities Of Great Men.

THE first peculiarity I shall notice is, that the masters of the intellectual world are, as a rule, of small stature; the divine afflatus is not lodged in an ample tenement of clay. Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, was very small; and Newton, like Plato, was stout, short and compact. Pope was both small and weak; Moore, "a very little man." It is true that Johnson and Scott were burly fellows, but Johnson shook and rolled like a jelly fish, and Scott was paralyzed from childhood. However, though "little bodies" generally "lodge a mighty mind," there seems to be some preserving quality in mental labor. Men of great promise have died young, but true genius is of better stuff; and the long lives of men of great mental power is, and has long been, proverbial. It must, however, be noticed, that eminent thinkers seldom leave behind them children. There was a line of Plantagenets, but not of Shakespeares. Who can declare the generation of Milton, Dryden, Ben Jonson, Pope, Gray, Swift, Goldsmith, Johnson, etc. Moore outlived his family, and Scott has not now a grandchild alive. As Mr. Greg says, "the fittest do not survive."

One of the most remarkable chapters in the history of great men could be written on the tools with which they have worked. Ferguson made the most marvellous things with a common penknife. A pan of water and two thermometers were the tools by which Dr. Black discovered latent heat. A prism, a lens and a sheet of pasteboard enabled Newton to unfold the composition of light, and the origin of color. An eminent scientist once asked Dr. Wollaston, to allow him to see the laboratories in which he had enriched science by so many grand discoveries. And the doctor took him to a small room, and pointing to an old tea-tray containing a few water-glasses, some test-papers, a little balance, and a blow-pipe, said "there is all the laboratory I have." Stohard learned how to combine colors by studying butterflies' wings. A burnt stick and a barn door served Wilkie for pencil and canvas, and Benjamin West made his first brushes out of the cat's tail. Ferguson drew his map of the heavenly bodies by means of a thread with small beads on it, stretched between his eyes and the stars; Franklin robbed the thunder-cloud of its lightning by the help of two sticks and a silk handkerchief; while Rittenhouse first calculated eclipses on his plow-handle. My readers can entertain themselves by continuing the list up to the present day.

I will notice next curious facts concerning the circumstances under which great works have been composed. Bossuet wrote his grand sermons on his knees. Bentham always played the organ before writing. St. Bernard composed in the woods. Luther liked to have his dog at his feet. Calvin always wrote in bed; so did the poet Thomson; and Pope could not write till he had roused his nervous system by loud and rapid declamation. Yet some of the books most of all admired were never intended for publication, such as Fenelon's Telemachus; the charming letters of Madame de Sevigne; and the delicious diary of Samuel Pepys.

The attachment of great men to children and animals is another prominent characteristic. Cato, however busy he was, would never leave his house until he had seen his wife wash the baby. Cicero, after finishing an oration, called in the children and had a romp with them. With the exception of the old bachelor, Charles Lamb, I do not recall an eminent thinker of the last two hundred years who has not been noticeable for the love of children. Some had attachments equally strong for animals. All have heard of the butterfly of Virgil; the dove of Mahomet; the live snake which Goethe kept in his chimney corner; Rembrandt, next to money, loved his monkey; Mazarin employed his leisure time with his pet ape; Richelieu kept squadrons of cats; Cowper was never more happy than when feeding his hares, and the dogs of Scott were a very important element of his life.

One of the most honorable and remarkable facts about literary men is that they are almost free from crime. Here and there an incurable spendthrift like Savage appears, or a free-handed insolvent like Steele; or a maddler in money matters like dear old Goldsmith; or even a mean coward like Rousseau. But as a class they are above crime, and also innocent of that debauchery so mistakenly ascribed to them.

The last words of great writers and thinkers make the best commentaries of their lives, and some of these are very beautiful. Thus, Dr. Adams, of Edinburgh, as great a teacher and thinker in Scotland as Arnold was in England, said as he passed away, "It grows dark, boys; you must go home." "Draw back the curtains," said Goethe, "and let in more light." Humboldt died in brilliant sunshine, and his last words were: "How grand these rays; they seem to beckon earth to heaven." "God bless you, my dear," were Dr. Johnson's last words, and "God bless you; is that you, Dora?" were Wordsworth's. Sir James Mackintosh, the historian, and Mrs. Hannah More, died with one word on their lips, but both breathed the same spirit. "Happy" was the utterance of the former, and "joy" that of the latter. The last sound that escaped the poet Campbell was an exclamation of delight and surprise; and Etty, the great painter, gaily watching the progress of dissolution go within his frame, exclaimed as he expired, "Wonderful! wonderful! This is death!" The last utterance of Douglas Jerrold was quick and terse as his conversation always was. He was asked how he felt and answered calmly, "As one who is waiting and waited for." Are not such utterances as these the fitting farewell of great hearts and great minds, who, being dead, yet speak to us?

Amelia E. M.

BRIEF NOTES.

We have on hand a number of copies of Dr. Talmage's famous book, From Man to Throne, which have been very slightly damaged in packing, and which we will dispose of at almost nominal price of 65 cents per copy. As the number is limited, our readers will do well to avail themselves promptly of this extraordinary offer, and to secure copies. From Man to Throne is a work where acknowledged to be the grandest of Dr. Talmage's pen. It describes his sayings to, through and from the Holy Scriptures. There are about 200 illustrations, many of them remarkably fine Oriental views, have never appeared in any other publication. The book was originally published at which was the lowest price at which a copy could be procured. These copies are new, but we require all the available space for our Shipping Department for the tremendous stock of Premiums which it is necessary to store there, to meet the requirements of a holiday season. We prepay express charges.

Rev. Thomas Lewis, the well-known Baptist missionary in the Congo country, reports baptism of seven native converts at San Sal, the oldest mission station on the Congo.

We are asked to remind our readers: the annual meeting of the Baptist Young People's Union of New York State, will be held at Buffalo, N. Y., October 28 and 29.

Dr. A. J. Diaz, the famous Cuban Evangelist, is having wonderful success in Mexico. The result of meetings already held, one hundred thirty-four persons have made profession of and have received baptism.

Rev. R. Ashley Cake, of Port Republic, N. J., evangelist of the Life Saving station, has been busy during the summer going from station along the Atlantic coast preaching times five or six times a day. The work has most encouraging and several remarkable conversions are reported.

A sensible remark addressed to workers, men, but equally useful to employers, is credited to the Pope. Addressing a French deputation recently, he said: "We consider it our duty to remind you to-day of the principles of equity and justice which alone can furnish a solution to social questions."

Rev. A. B. Simpson's appeal for funds to complete the erection of the buildings of the national Christian and Missionary Alliance, South Nyack, N. Y., has resulted in the raising of sixteen thousand dollars. Several well-known friends of the Alliance bought lots on the hill intended to erect cottages near the Alliance building.

Rev. William E. Needham has been holding interesting meetings during the summer on the banks of the historic Brandywine on Sunday noons. On a recent Sunday, preaching near Leesville, Pa., using for his pulpit the old covered wagon that has served in so many revivals, an audience of nearly twelve hundred persons gathered. Among them were a large number of men who had come several miles to attend service.

The Fulton Street Daily Noon Prayer Meeting celebrated the fortieth anniversary of its foundation on Thursday, September 23rd, at rooms, 113 Fulton Street, New York. Rev. Ward B. Coe, D.D., presided. An interesting feature of the celebration was the presentation of a Meeting of a handsome portrait of the founder, Mr. J. C. Laphier. This has been hung up in room in which the prayer-meeting is held. Laphier is still living, and is in his eighty-year.

Miss Emma C. Nason asks us to thank those of our readers who have contributed to support of her work among the lumbermen. Work during the past year has been wonderfully blessed, and Miss Nason is looking forward fully to another year's labor. Although it is specially a King's Daughters' work, she says Miss Nason is rendering to Christ and humanity by reaching the wanderers and the victims of crime and cruelty, deserves the sympathy and help of Christians. Her address is Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell P. Johnstone have been holding open-air services on the streets of New York several evenings in the week during summer under a permit from the Mayor. They have had large audiences, usually very attentive and have often had the gratification of directing inquirers to Christ at the close of their meetings. They give away tracts and Gospel portions, for their means will allow. They receive no salary for this work and when friends, who know of laborers, give them money, it is spent in a supply of the Bible portions for distribution.

An interesting proclamation has been issued by a prominent Chinese governor warning people under his sway against molesting the missionaries. The Governor states his conviction that if the Chinese knew the real character of the missionaries they would not be disposed to injure them and he therefore describes them and their work in such a way as to interest and attract them. He assures them that their object is to induce people to lead virtuous lives. His proclamation concludes with a warning to any evil disposed men who disregard his proclamation that he will punish the full extent of the law any person found molesting the missionaries or their property.

MOUNTAIN FIGHTING.

Away from civilization, in that wonderful mountain land lying between British India and Afghanistan, a few scattered garrisons are now surrounded by ruthless and fanatical foes. At intervals of only a few days, telegrams from the American press, of this or that having been attacked by an enormous horde of wild, fierce mountaineers, sometimes holding their own with great loss at fearful odds, and at other times being obliged to fly for their lives. The Afridis, the Orakzais and other tribes along the border, have all manifested symptoms of rebellion. Perceiving that the garrisons of the outlying forts were insignificant numbers compared with their own forces, the tribes have attacked them with confidence, and have seized important mountain passes which give them access to Punjab and Kashmir. The Government of India is preparing a strong expedition to relieve the besieged forts and recapture those which have fallen, but it is doubtful whether it can reach the mountains in time to save several of the most distant garrisons. The difficulties in the way of such an expedition can be understood from the fact that a force under General Jeffreys, which was sent out early in the month to drive the Mohmands back, was surrounded and suffered severely; the general was wounded and narrowly escaped capture. A strong suspicion is entertained that the Ameer of Afghanistan is secretly supporting the movement, and that he is assured of the protection of Russia. Some of his correspondence which was intercepted, confirms the suspicion. The chief cause of the rising, however, appears to have been that exaggerated reports of the Turkish successes in Greece have reached the tribesmen. To the ignorant men, the war was not so much between Turks and Greeks as between Mohammedans and Christians. They are fanatical Mohammedans, and led by the Moslem leader, known as the Mahad Mullah, they have come to believe that they have only to attack the Christians near them, to win like victories. It is reported that emissaries from the Sultan of Turkey have reached the scene of the disturbance, bearing messages from him. This may be the fulfilment of the threat which the Sultan made during the negotiations on the Cretan difficulty, that if England continued to show hostility to him, he would retaliate in a way she little expected. The Mohammedans regard him as their sovereign head and there is little doubt that they are obeying him in these outbreaks. But like the man who serves Satan, they are working to their own destruction.

Leaders of this people cause them to err; and they are led of them as they are destroyed. (Isa. 9:16.)

A Debt to Be Paid by Death.

A protracted trial which has just been concluded in Vienna reveals an unnatural speculation on the part of a brother, which has received appropriate condemnation. It appears that rather more than two years ago a young spendthrift who was a roue and a gambler was completely at the end of his resources. He appealed to his brother for a large sum of money which he must have to save himself and an honored name from disgrace. His brother had frequently helped him before, and was tired of appeals which seemed to have no end. He refused to furnish any more money, but under continued pressure, he finally agreed to advance the sum needed on certain conditions. These were that within two years from the date of the loan, the borrower should either marry the daughter of a millionaire and repay with the money he received as his wife's dowry, or would commit suicide. Believing that his brother would not succeed in the latter alternative, he immediately made arrangements to recover on his taking the latter alternative. He insured his brother's life with several insurance companies, stipulating in every case for the insertion of a clause in the policy, binding the insurance company to pay without regard to the manner in which the insured met his death. As he had anticipated, his brother's efforts to marry a wealthy lady within the stipulated time, failed. Thereupon the man shot himself and his brother demanded payment of the policies. But the insurance companies had in some way learned the terms of the unnatural bargain and caused his arrest for fraudulent dealing. In the course of the trial it was disclosed that another brother of the deceased and a sister had heard of the terms of the bargain, and each had taken out policies of the famous charge, telling of the leisurely ride into the valley of death, which was lined on both banks with Russian cannon, while the guns at the head of the valley poured a destructive fire directly into the faces of the advancing column. He told of the mad charge which rose from a trot to a gallop as it neared the guns, of the hand-to-hand fight and then the retreat between the two lines of guns—a thrilling story of heroic daring. After writing the reminiscences, he went out and got drunk as, unhappily, he was in the habit of doing. While he was on the street he saw his wife, who, harassed by his drunken habits, had been obliged to leave him and had not lived with him for several years. He tried to follow her into a store and when he was prevented, he became angry and tried to strike her with a stick. She escaped the blow by drawing back into a doorway, and as he charged at her again, turning half around in raising his stick, his wife, who is lame and carries a cane, struck him with the cane on the back of the head. He staggered a few steps and fell down dead with a fractured skull. His wife gave herself up to the police, but there were so many wit-putting on the Justice's desk the baby she carried in her arms, turned and quitted the court, and her husband followed her. The Justice stared in amazement, when the interpreter, who had held a whispered conversation with the defendants, explained that they expected the man would be sent to prison and had left the baby as security or bail for his reappearance. The Justice took the child home, and his wife cared for it until morning, when the Hungarians returned, and throwing down bills to the amount of the claim and costs, reclaimed their child. They had borrowed the money from some of their fellow countrymen. They evidently considered their baby the most valuable piece of property they owned, and had no doubt of its being accepted as sufficient security. It may be hoped they will never have cause to lower their estimate of its value. They will not, if they act on the scriptural view of their responsibility.

Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord. (Psalm 127: 3.)

Unique Church Material.

The strange story of the building of a church at Waterloo, Ia., is told in a scientific journal. It appears that a number of Presbyterians at that place determined to erect a house of worship. Their chief difficulty consisted in the distance from which they would have to bring the stone, as there were no quarries anywhere in the neighborhood. There was, however, a large boulder in the middle of a plain near the town, which it was decided to use as far as it would go. It projected from the earth for about eight feet, but no one knew how much of it was under ground. The work of excavation was commenced, and to the astonishment of the workers, it was found that the boulder extended a long distance. When completely uncovered, a rock was disclosed twenty-eight feet high, thirty feet long and twenty wide, weighing at a rough estimate, twenty-five hundred tons. Work was begun on the gigantic monolith with drills and dynamite. The pieces as they were broken off were carried to a mason's yard and shaped into building stones. The transformation is now complete, and this huge boulder which had lain undisturbed for countless years and been covered with the deposits of ages, is now turned into a beautiful church. The living Church is built in the same way, only that the transformation in that case is not by human skill but by the Spirit of the Lord.

Ye also as living stones are built up a spiritual house. (1. Peter 2: 5.)

Paid Twice for Liberty.

A suit now before the Supreme Court in Boston, Mass., for adjudication under a disputed will brings to light a remarkable story. The will in dispute is that of a colored man who was born in slavery in Virginia in 1812. He was an active, industrious intelligent youth and his master consented to his learning a trade. He was apprenticed to a blacksmith and succeeded so well in his business that he made his owner an offer to purchase his freedom. The owner valued him at eight hundred dollars and this the young fellow agreed to pay. By hard work and frugality he managed to accumulate the required sum and paid it over, but his owner repudiated the bargain. He took the money but postponed giving the young man his freedom. Soon afterwards he died and the young man was sold with the other slaves on the estate. Undeterred by his disappointment he bargained with his new owner to buy his freedom for four hundred dollars. A second time he earned the money and again he was cheated. His owner retained both slave and money. Then he was exasperated and determined to run away. He was, by this time thirty-five years old and had many friends whom he had faithfully served in his business. They helped him to escape and shortly afterwards, his wife who had made a friend of her mistress, was given her freedom and followed him. After the war he settled in Boston and built up a large business. When he died in December last, he left property worth forty-thousand dollars. Many a man who has been in the service of the enemy of souls, looking back at the cost of his service, has felt as this man did and, hopeless of buying his freedom, has fled for deliverance to him who can make him free.

What fruit had ye in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? But now being made free from sin and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness and the end everlasting life. (Rom. 6:21) on their brother's life. The trial has resulted in the conviction of the accused and his sentence to two years' imprisonment. His brother's death for which he is morally responsible, has not benefited him. He has missed the benefit it was intended to bring, not through his own negligence, but by the interposition of the law, which justly treats his revolting act as a crime. Not so is it with the sinner who fails to secure the prize, to gain which for him, the Divine Elder Brother of our race died on the Cross. The sinner's crime consists in neglecting to secure the prize.

THE KHYBER PASS BETWEEN AFGHANISTAN AND BRITISH INDIA.

How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation. (Heb. 2: 3.)

A Hero's Shameful End.

The Montreal papers record the disgraceful death of a trooper, who was one of the famous six hundred immortalized in Tennyson's well-known poem describing the heroic cavalry charge at Balaklava. There were only two survivors of the charge on this continent. One of them lived at Montreal. He wore two medals with four clasps showing that he had fought at Alma, Balaklava, Inkermann, and Sebastopol. The day before his death he wrote for publication an account nesses to prove that she struck the fatal blow only in self-defence, that she was promptly released. It was an ignominious end to a heroic life: but when a man yields himself a slave to his own appetites he knows not what shame may be in store for him.

Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contentions? Who hath wounds without cause? They that tarry long at the wine. (Prov. 23: 29.)

An Infant Bail.

A Justice of Haverstraw, N. Y., was placed in an embarrassing position a few days ago, by the strange bail left on his hands by two Hungarian immigrants. They had been summoned before him at the suit of a woman who had supplied them with furniture. They had paid one-half the cost of the furniture, and agreed to pay the other half in weekly installments, but had moved to another town, five miles away, without notifying their creditor. She had spent a considerable sum of money in trying to trace them, and when she did find them, she charged them with fraud. The case was proved, but the Hungarians, through an interpreter, declared they had no means of payment. Suddenly the female defendant rose, and

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

PAUL A PRISONER.

Sunday School Lesson for Oct. 10. Acts 22: 17-30. Golden Text, 1. Pet. 4: 16.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

PAUL must go the way his Lord had gone before him. Peter had said, when quite ignorant of his ability to perform it, "Lord, I am ready to follow thee to prison and to death." (Luke 22: 33). The Lord had not then carried human nature to the cross, and purchased the right and power to impart his own nature in its place, which his own life on earth proved capable of enduring prison and death. The Apostle Paul had learned the great secret of the true power of a Christian life. "Christ in you the hope of glory." He did not, and could not shrink the "bonds and imprisonments" which he knew awaited him; he only sought how, in the things which befell him, he could be true to his calling, and might witness faithfully for his Lord. When he was being borne by the soldiers into the castle because of the violence of the multitude, far from having any fear for his own safety, his only care was to use the opportunity afforded him of getting the ear of the excited people to bear his testimony for Christ.

Just at the entrance of the castle, he asked the captain permission to speak to the people. The captain gave him leave, and standing on the stairs, and beckoning with his hand he obtained silence, and spoke to them in the Hebrew tongue. Speaking of his antecedents, his birth in Tarsus, and education in Jerusalem at the feet of Gamaliel, he went on to describe his zeal for the law in persecuting the Christians to the death, and the sudden, unexpected stop to this procedure when, from heaven itself, the Lord Jesus was revealed to him. He told of his blindness for three days, his healing through the laying on of the hands of Ananias, and the renewed message from God through him, "The God of our fathers hath appointed thee to know his will, and to see the righteous One, and to hear a voice from his mouth. For thou shalt be a witness for him unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. And now, why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on his name."

Paul made no apology or explanation; he simply made his statement and left the result with God. And then he related what is told in no other place. "And it came to pass when I had returned to Jerusalem [after his bold testimony in the synagogue at Damascus], and while I prayed in the temple, I fell into a trance and saw him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: because they will not receive of thee testimony concerning me." The old apostle was treading on dangerous ground. Men who have not the spirit of the Lamb of God cannot tolerate anything which convicts them; it is like touching an open sore to tell them of anything in which they are in the wrong, and it stirs up the most bitter enmity. They are so convinced of their own goodness that they are indignant with any one who does not justify them in their good opinion of themselves.

Oh the miserable deceitfulness of the human heart! Grace makes us humble; a God-filled heart shrinks from no discovery of its own treachery and evil. The light of Christ within is too strong for the darkness to take refuge in any corner; all must come to the light. Paul had had enough experience in his dealings with the Jews to be quite aware that he was treading upon their national conceits, and that the audience would be exasperated at what they would regard his presumption in asserting that a revelation from heaven would be vouchsafed to him which would be sufficient to prove them guilty of being murderers of their Messiah. But it might be his only chance, and he would not be guilty of the blood of those souls, he would, as God gave him the opportunity, bear his testimony, and leave the results with God.

"And I said," he continued, "Lord, they themselves know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on thee: and when the blood of Stephen, thy martyr, was shed, I also was standing by and consenting, and keeping the garments of them that slew him." Others besides Paul had seen that wondrous face of Stephen "as it had been the face of an angel," and heard him say how he saw heaven open and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. Perhaps some of the very multitude now present had heard the prayer, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." But they had gone on resisting the Holy Ghost, and to be reminded of their sin led to no sorrow, but only greater fury. And when Paul asserted that the Lord who appeared to him in the temple and said to him, "Depart, for I will send thee forth far hence unto the Gentiles," they broke all bounds and an angry cry arose from many voices, "Away with such them, and a great clamor arose, so that the chief captain commanded the soldiers to seize Paul by force from among them and bring him into the castle. There he met with God. The night following the Lord stood by him—not a vision of Christ, but his very presence—and said, "Be of good cheer, for as thou hast testified of me at Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome."

"God is faithful." Against the persuasion, and against the messages of his friends which purported to be from the Holy Ghost, Paul had come to Jerusalem, sure that he was in the will of God, and that in the future a journey to Rome lay before him. It was indeed like the Lord to give him this confirmation of his previous leading.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

OUR last week's lesson left Paul on his way to Jerusalem, bearing the gifts of his Gentile churches to the poor Christians in that city. In this week's lesson we find him a prisoner in the hands of the Roman garrison. The events which led to his arrest need a brief explanation. On his arrival he secured a lodging, and the next day had an interview with James, the brother of our Lord, and the leaders of the Church. They appear to have given him a more cordial welcome than on his previous visits. The money he brought may have had its influence. It had probably been badly needed, and, in any case, it was a fellow from the earth, for it is not fit that he should live."

TEMPLE AREA AND THE CASTLE OF ANTONIA, WHERE PAUL WAS IMPRISONED.

The chief captain was a Roman, and he was at a loss to understand this bitter enmity of the Jews against Paul, but he delivered over his prisoner to the centurion to be examined by scourging. To this Paul objected on the ground that he was a Roman citizen. Then Paul was unbound, on the morrow the council were called to sit in judgment upon him. His first words were, "Brethren, I have lived before God in all good conscience until this day." Few men could dare to make such an assertion. And few men believe in the possibility of such a life. The high priest was so infuriated that he commanded them that stood by to smite him on the mouth. Why? Because he did not believe that a man could live in all good conscience. And when Paul objected that this was unlawful and spoke a word of judgment against Ananias, he at once acknowledged when he found it was the high priest that he had been in the wrong to speak against a ruler.

But, seeing that the council was composed of Pharisees and Sadducees, Paul took advantage of it and said, "Brethren, I am a Pharisee, a son of Pharisees, of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question." Jesus and the resurrection, the resurrection proved by the fact that Christ had risen from the dead, was the foundation of all his teaching. This word caused a dissension in the council some of the Pharisees saying they found no evil in him, his story might be true. A spirit or an angel might have spoken to him, while Sadducees denied practical evidence of the brotherly feeling which Paul must have inculcated in his recent teaching. The subject of Paul's safety was considered at this meeting. The Jewish Christians were aware of the hostility of the Jews toward him. They told him of the reports of his teaching which had been brought to Jerusalem. He had been accused not only of preaching Christ, but of teaching the Jews in heathen lands to disregard the commands of Moses. We do not know if this was true, but we do know that he had taught that circumcision did not avail anything, and that observance of the ceremonial law was no longer obligatory on the Jews. The difference between teaching that any course was useless and unnecessary, and that it should not be followed, was not so very great. However, it seemed to be important to Paul and the Jewish Christians. They advised that Paul do conspicuously an act which would show his personal respect for the law. An opportunity was then within reach. There were four men who were fulfilling the Nazirite vow. Paul might join them in its performance and bear a share of the expense, which, as may be seen by a reference to Numbers 6: 13-18, was considerable. It was a common form of benefaction in that day for some wealthy man to defray the expenses of poor Nazirites. Agrippa did it extensively in order to show his respect for the law. Paul being anxious to conciliate his friends, consented, though to him, the whole proceeding was worthless. The concession, however, had an effect opposite to the one intended. It precipitated Paul's arrest. Going into the temple with the four men, with their heads, they would be the observed observers. The city at that time swarmed with Jews who had come from many lands to keep the Feast of Tabernacles. Among them were from the province known as Asia. These knew Trophimus, one of the Gentile converts who had come to Jerusalem with him. Hearing that Paul was in the Jews' court of the temple with companions, the men who were fulfilling the Nazirite vow, they leaped to the conclusion that Trophimus was one of the Gentiles, and Paul, of course, had taken Trophimus beyond that court as a pretext to seize Paul was needed. This false charge served the purpose. A uproar was stirred up, and if it had been for the prompt action of the Captain, whose duty it was to keep order in the temple, Paul would have been killed. The Captain rescued him, was taking him into the castle for when Paul asked permission to address the mob and remove their misapprehension. It was a bold step, showing a brave man Paul was. His address was a masterly plea, but it could not effect the impossible. The Jews were too prejudiced against him to be pacified by words. Their violence was so much that he was taken into the prison to him from being lynched.

He said unto me, Depart. We may not have known of this vision of Jesus if he had not referred to it in this address. Nothing is said of it in the history. It fell into the error that men often feel. When the Lord told him to depart, he regarded the matter with him reciting why it was better to remain. Some men fret and worry when they leave a town, or a work where it seems to them they are specially qualified to do. It shows a lack of faith. We are sure that God's way for us is best. The story is told by a famous writer, of a father whose son was in business at a place of great service to him in a conflict of capacity, decided to send him into the employ of a firm in another city. The son objected, said he liked his work, and was no one to take his place and do his work. The father said he liked the city where his father prospered to send him. His mother protested, was sure her son would fall sick with one to look after him. But the father was firm and the boy went. When he came home on a visit at the end of a year, he was a changed youth. He had acquired a manly bearing, had learned new methods, and had improved in the discipline of strangers. In one place he had learned more than he would have learned at home in five.

The Chief Captain also was a Roman. after he knew that he was a Roman. We do not know how Roman citizenship came into Paul's family. It was an honor, coveted by all men of that time. Wherever the Roman citizen was he was treated with consideration, was dangerous to do him an injustice, show him an indignity, or to injure him in any way. He had the right to appeal to Caesar himself if any wrong was done him, and if he could get justice in any other way. Probably Paul's father rendered the empire some distinguished service, or he may have been an emancipated captive and so gained Roman citizenship; we are not told; but he was a Roman citizen, and Paul inherited the privilege. Every one who has traveled in foreign lands knows how great a protection it is to be the citizen of some powerful nation. In 1869 a man was arrested in Cuba on some frivolous charge, and hurried through a perfunctory trial, condemned to death. He was by birth an Englishman, and by naturalization a citizen of the United States. The consuls of both nations interfered on his behalf, but the Spanish officials were so determined, and they decided to go on with the execution. The consuls then wrapped the flags of their respective countries around the man and dared the shooting company to proceed. These ignorant men realized that the consequences might result from the flags of the United States, England, and like the men who were to scourge Paul (or examine him, as it is pleasantly phrased), they did him violence. The citizens of Christ's dominion cannot be injured or neglected with impunity. (See Matt. 18: 6.)

LITTLE GOLDEN-HEAD.

A STORY OF CHILD-LIFE.

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

By R. D. L.

ONG the children who were sent from New York, to a town where I was staying, on the Housatonic for many years since, was a bright girl called Lillian. The long-continued drought had produced sickness in the overcrowded cities, water suffering than ever before among the poor and afflicted. They were gathered assembled at the station on a bright July afternoon, to see the train, heavily laden with children. The creature attracted much interest by her spiritless and unchildlike. She crept noiselessly down the car. We had heard of her gayety. She had been likened to a dream—all mirth and joy. Her mother had died a few months previous, and some kind-hearted city people had especially pleaded to have loving care of this little one, for she was very sensible. Everybody seemed to want this peculiar child. Entire devotion would be given to her in many homes, so being was she in looks and actions, so evident that she, of all the number, most needed care. It was decided to send her where there were several children, the hope that their cheerfulness would win her back to brightness. She was sent to some good people on a farm, near the station, a land really "flowing with milk and honey."

She slept from exhaustion, soon after her journey to bed that night. The next day she awoke, and the hens were clucking, and the cocks were crowing, and the sun was shining, and she felt a sense of duty. She got up, and on her listless face, and her sickly and feeble form, she saw the firm, healthy-looking children, and she felt a foreboding that to her, nearly the tonic of pure country life, of oatmeal, real cream, butter, fresh bread and wild eggs was tempting. This time the children started for a romp, and she did justice to their meal. She went with them, but only gazed at their sport.

"said Agatha, the oldest of the children, and one who felt a mother's care for the flock of city birds.

Lillian sighed and sat down to watch the kittens. A kitten crept into her lap, as if to comfort her. She stroked the little creature, and they became fast friends. The old cat, and her three other kittens, found their way to the mission, and Lillian found them as if by a magnet. Lillian had been silent until now. She was with a cooing, tender, voice to sing to the kittens. The children found some of the clothes to dress her kitten in, and she whiled away part of the forenoon. Her interest in the little animal, the kitten, folks bethought themselves of a rag doll, cast-off doll in the attic. It was large enough to seem like a "real" one. Henceforth, Lillian and her pretty rag doll were inseparable. Day after day she played with the kittens and the rag doll, but seldom joined in the frolic of the other children. They humored her, and let her have her own way for it seemed to her that to do anything that wasn't her own, as she didn't stray away, they were so mindful of her as time went on. One afternoon they played and romped, utterly forgetful of Lillian. Suddenly she was missed. They could find no trace of her whereabouts. The grass was closely cropped where she had been playing, and beyond it was a little taller, but if she had gone through it, her gentle step had left no mark. The doll's bonnet was in the grass where Lillian had been sitting. That was the only thing left to indicate her playground.

Long and carefully they searched in every direction. Dark night settled over the landscape, and yet no trace of her was found. Early the next morning the "hands" on the place renewed the search. They went hither and thither, over fields and down dales, while the master of the place drove in his wagon along the country road, hoping to meet the runaway. He drove far into the open country, and after awhile espied a little pigmy at the roadside, almost concealed by iron-weed, golden-rod and tall grass. His heart gave a leap, for the tangled locks that floated in the wind he knew belonged to "Little Golden-head." Just such another little head he had doted on, but he laid it under the buttercups and daisies some years ago.

"Lillian!" he cried. She turned slowly, seeming to be stupefied. The man's eyes had searched for the wanderer with such loving intensity that they felt scorched and burned. Now that he had found her, with the relief came a sudden flood of blinding tears. Lillian seemed hardly to know him. He descended from the carriage and gently approached her, but she shrank away, hugging her dolly tightly to her heart. Little by little he coaxed her to him, and soon he knew by her burning fever and hot breath that the night had done bad work. He took her in his arms and held her inside his coat. When he reached home, his kind wife put her to bed, and the nearest physician was called.

HE KNEW IT WAS "LITTLE GOLDEN-HEAD."

They could gain no information from Lillian as to where she had wandered. For several days the fever raged, and when it abated her memory came back. Little by little she coaxed her to tell.

"Where did you go, my dear?" asked the kind hostess.

"Well, dolly and I saw some daisies in the tall grass, and such beautiful butterflies kissing them, that we walked along and along, until we came to a fence near a road. Then we got frightened and called to Minnie and Lucy, but they didn't hear us; and a queer little man came along just then and picked us up. We were so frightened that we cried and cried, but he gave us some candy and cakes, and told us a story. He was awful queer, and so black we didn't dare to stir. His pony was Madge and his dog was Fido."

"O, I guess I know who Fido's master is," cried the farmer's wife. "Did he have a hump on his back?"

"Yes, a great bunch on it."

"O," said the woman, "he's a poor, silly fellow, Lillian. If he hadn't been silly he would have asked you where you lived and brought you back to us. But tell us, child, where he took you?"

"Well, I don't know, but we went on and on, and I cried so he said he couldn't do anything with me and he would put me out. So he stopped on the road and took me out, but left dolly in the wagon. I screamed for her to come, and then he gave her to me."

"Well, then, where did you and Dolly go?"

"We didn't see any more daisies, but we saw some yellow flowers and some black and yellow birds, and we went over to talk to them. Then it got very dark, and the stars came out, and we couldn't see any more, so I wrapped dolly up in her skirt for her hat was gone, and I took her cloak for me; then we were so tired we laid down in the grass near a big tree."

"The stars were so bright," continued the child, earnestly, "and there were so many of them; they seemed to be winking to each other. I thought one great bright star was the one they told me was my mamma; so I called to her, but she didn't hear. Then some one seemed to tell me of a little baby, as she used to do. They called him Jesus; he was born in a stable and laid in a cradle of straw near the cows. Mamma told me he grew to be a man, and he took care of her, and me. I never saw him, though; but I thought if he used to take care of mamma and me, he would see dolly and me now, and so we fell asleep."

"I woke up once, so cold! Then I felt very hot. Next time I woke up I saw the sun come up, and I didn't think of anything but my mamma 'till I was in a buggy, and then I went to sleep again," and she smiled weakly.

"Lillian," said the motherly dame, "the kitties have missed you, and I will bring them in for you to see."

But Lillian had already dropped into a deep slumber, the dolly still nestling in her poor, little, tired arms.

That night a sudden change came. Lillian lingered a day or two and then passed beyond the stars, where no fever comes, nor death, nor tears.

My former friend has had other Fresh Air children at his beautiful place since that summer, but one thing is always understood: that no golden-haired child must come his way since his heart lies with the two that rest in the churchyard—his own darling and little, golden-haired Lillian.

Great Men's Love of Music.

It appears that painters have little musical taste, (writes Signor Graf, a famous authority), and less inclination for that art than sculptors and architects; but many literary men have neither inclination nor taste. Dante had exquisite mental sensibility.

Shakespeare was a lover of music. Goethe, while not passionately fond of music, enjoyed the art of Mendelssohn and admired Beethoven. Klopstock had a nice ear, and music threw him into ecstasy. Byron was not able to hear music without weeping. Moore and Shelley both wrote poems on music. Hugo, in one of his poems, asks his friends, "Who among you, feeling oppressed by sadness, does not find comfort and consolation in music?"

Then, in marvelous verse, not to be found in any other literature, he describes the grand, varied, powerful music of the orchestra, the multifarious miracle of the symphony. Leopardi, passionately fond of music, does not speak of musical instruments; but apparently held that the human voice was superior to any instrument. A hundred modern instances might be cited to show the influence of music upon some of the greatest works of literature and art, and how the strains of voice or instrument have helped to create noble ideals.

MEMORIES OF MONT-LAWN.

One of the Teachers Tells of the Last Week at Our Children's Home.

ALTHOUGH our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn is closed for the summer and the pretty dormitories and play-rooms are tenantless, the follow-

THESE TOTS REMEMBER MONT-LAWN.

"Last night as I lay on my pillow, I dreamed of the good times I had."

ing letter from a member of the Matron's staff will interest all who have read the articles on the subject that have lately appeared in these pages:

"The last week before the closing of the Home was one full of happiness for the little guests who were then at Mont-Lawn. There was not a cloud in the sky all week long, and the bright, sunny hours were filled with the sound of the merry laughter of children from morning until night. The very hot weather of the last few days made the swimming-pool especially attractive, and at all times during the day one could hear the screams of delight as the youngsters floundered about in the cool water."

"Then the teachers used to take parties of girls and boys for long walks through the wood, where they gathered ferns and wild-flowers. Especially did they love the bunches of golden rod, which grows so abundantly on every hill and in every valley. When tired of gathering nosegays, they would stretch themselves on the grass, or sit with hands about knees to listen to a wonderful fairy story which of course, began with "Once upon a time."

"When grown men and women, I wonder if they will not often lovingly remember the good times of Mont-Lawn. And will they ever forget the stories they listened to with such childish delight when there? They have taken great pleasure, too, in their tramps across fields to deserted orchards, for apples, pears and grapes; and every bag, basket, coat and cap has been filled to overflowing, that they might be able to carry some of the precious fruit home and share it with a less fortunate brother or sister who has not been for a summer outing."

"But the crowning feature of the whole week was the farewell service in the chapel. The patron of the Home, Dr. Klopsch, spent the day among the children, and a number of friends visited the Home to hear them sing, on this, their last day at Mont-Lawn."

"Dr. Jewett, who so kindly gives the use of this beautiful place with its broad acres for the benefit of the poor children, was present, and as he came upon the platform, and looked down on the two hundred little faces, everyone could see that he regretted their departure."

"I think we may safely say that every child who has been at Mont-Lawn has gone home happier, healthier and better in every way for having been there."

C. RUSSELL.

All contributions for the Mont-Lawn Home are promptly acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

THE MODERN JEW IN HIS ANCESTRAL HOME

BY HON. SELAH MERRILL D.D. L.L.D.

STREET LIFE IN JERUSALEM.

Oriental Tardiness and the Telegraph—A Dancing Bear—Snake-Charmers—An Eastern Wedding Procession.

THE WATCHMAN AT THE GATE.

and in our stroll about the streets of the Holy City, it is the unfamiliar in both scene and object that we shall meet with everywhere. It need hardly be stated that, from the life of a large city, only incidental pictures can be given.

Approaching us is the telegraph messenger. About such a wonderful convenience of civilization as the telegraph there is to Americans nothing strange; but it becomes so in many respects the moment we pass into the dominions of the Sultan of Turkey. We think of it as a means for annihilating time and space. It is our most rapid method of communicating our thoughts to those at a distance from us. In Turkey all this is reversed. Our message will go when the operator gets ready to send it. The message that comes to us will be delivered when the operator has spelled it out in his bungling fashion, copied it, taken a smoke, and gets the messenger started. I think that Americans need more patience in dealing with telegraph officers in Turkey than with any other class. They have a printed list of places to which messages can be sent, but with difficulty that they can read the names, and it takes them an hour or more to find the one desired. If you take the list and point out the name to them, they will not believe you, but will continue their slow and tedious search. The message must be written, they insist, so that they can understand it; in itself a formidable task. Should it contain what they call "code words" the message would be rejected. I have known a prominent officer of the United States Army to send, or attempt to send, an important message to America. It passed muster in Jerusalem and was forwarded via Constantinople. There the officials declared that it contained code words and it was returned. This two days had elapsed, and the message had in fact not yet started towards the land of freedom.

ACROWDED street in any city in any part of the world is a place of wonderful interest. Our fellow-men who, in any given instance, represent its life or activities, may neither look nor act like ourselves, hence our curiosity is excited by all that is seen and done. Novelty is something that all are fond of, and in our stroll about the streets of the Holy City, it is the unfamiliar in both scene and object that we shall meet with everywhere. It need hardly be stated that, from the life of a large city, only incidental pictures can be given.

No arguments availed to convince the officials that they were in the wrong. Moreover, the message had been prepaid; (indeed, the Turks are very prompt and business like in looking after that part, and always requiring payment in advance and "in good money.") and the officials promised to refund the amount. As United States Consul, I had correspondence about this case with the Turkish authorities, with our Minister at Constantinople, and with the State Department at Washington, but nothing came of it; the message was never sent from Jerusalem, and the money that had been paid for it was never refunded. But our army officer was disgusted, chagrined, and angry; no language was adequate to express his contempt for those officials.

"What is to be done in such cases?" my readers inquire. Nothing whatever. Choke down your feelings, that is all. But you may remember, if you choose, that this is only one of a score or two of ways in which Turkey annoys the citizens of the United States of America.

Our telegraph messenger who has been walking very leisurely is close to us now, and we notice a loose scarf about his neck. This he wears summer and winter. He carries a cane, but why he puts this extra burden upon himself I do not know. His little side bag is supported by a strap over his shoulder. He has something for us, and he demands a present for bringing us what he calls "good news." There are two messages, one from Egypt, and the other from Beirut. The former, is thirty-six hours old, the latter forty-eight. Surely Oriental lightning is slow. A message from either Egypt or Beirut ought reasonably to reach Jerusalem in about an hour, or two hours at the outside. Beirut is ten hours by steamer from Jaffa, and it has frequently happened that a person coming from Beirut to Jerusalem has sent a telegram announcing the fact, and arrived at his destination a day before the message. I have elsewhere shown that the Turks do not regard private messages as sacred, and it likewise seems impossible for them to comprehend the fact that messages should be sent and delivered with the utmost promptness.

Here are two men approaching from opposite directions. All of a sudden their steps become rapid, one drops the bundles he has in his hands, and in an instant they are in each other's arms. Is it a quarrel? All this has been done so quickly that we have had time neither to think nor to speak. But nothing unusual has happened. These men are friends who have not met in a long time, and here, regardless of the crowd, have fallen upon each other's necks and are kissing each other's cheeks. The many people about take no notice of what is going on between these men, and this phase of street life is strange only to people like ourselves.

At the next turn, we come upon a singular crowd. Men, boys, children, peasants, merchants, everybody has stopped to look. In the open space in the centre of the throng of people, a large dancing bear is entertaining an eager audience. Everybody is a little afraid and keeps at a safe distance, and yet everybody is intensely interested. Street shows of this kind are not very common in Jerusalem; it is the man with the monkey who appears most frequently. In either case there is plenty of excitement, and the amount of pleasure which multitudes appear to derive from such scenes cannot be measured by any American standard. By the masses, the advent of the bear is hailed with more joy than is the arrival of the greatest European general or prince. These shows appear at intervals and then disappear; but where they come from or go to is to me unknown; and a greater mystery is where the owners of these animals get money enough for their support. The impoverished crowds that enjoy such amusement cannot afford to give to it a total of ten cents a day.

In another part of the city we encounter another group of people not so large as that drawn together by the dancing bear, and not nearly so excited or enthusiastic. Still the bystanders are all curious to see what is being done. The attraction in this case is unique, something that would never be seen in America. We have here a snake-charmer. He has his live reptiles with him, two of them of medium size, and one fully six feet in length. These he carries in a bag slung under his arm, just such a bag as was used by David for carrying stones in his contest with Goliath. These bags are in common use to-day by the natives for their food and any small objects which they wish to take with them. Some natives still adhere to their own picturesque dress, while others have attempted to Europeanize themselves by wearing trousers which do not fit. In my large natural history collection, including all the birds, animals, reptiles, and insects of Palestine that I could obtain, I have thirty or more snakes which were all secured for me by these snake-charmers.

The snakes were brought alive in such bags as I have described, and sometimes the men would bring their bread and snakes in the same bag. These men were very black, they were strict Moslems, and when they came to put the snakes into the jars of alcohol which I had prepared for their abode, they dreaded the spatters of alcohol on their flesh more than they did the poison of the serpents. There are not so many snakes in Palestine as many persons suppose, and in making my collection these men were occupied, at least they were on the lookout for them for nearly three years. A peculiarity of these men was that they were very reticent. I never could learn much about the secret of their art, or why they should want to do this work. Their faces are far from attractive, the expression on them unusually strange, and I felt that I should not care to meet them in a lonely place at night.

As we pass along we notice at a sional door here and there a black standing, sitting, or perhaps half on a mat. He is the "porter" of the

ORIENTAL SERPENT-CHARMERS.

The name of a door is bab, and it is called barwab, which foreigners pronounce boab. His office is a humble one. The name for water is natoor, and mortal offence would be given if we were to speak inadvertently of a watchman proper as a "boab," though in the position of the two being so wide in Oriental eyes. Some families employ a door-keeper, they cannot afford even the trifling expense necessary for his wages, so keep up appearances, for the presence of the door of such a functionary is so to imply that the family has some means.

We are now approaching the Jewish quarter from the interior of the city, and in time to witness a wedding procession. Native wedding processions are common, but they generally occur at night, with torches, drums, and shouting necessary to make them a success. On the present occasion, natives participate to a certain extent, but the wedding is for foreigners, both English. The bride is unusual for Jerusalem. The bride is in the church and the bride's carriage, on the way thither with friends, and both horses and car-

WATCHING THE DANCING BEAR.

A WEDDING PROCESSION AND CONSULAR ESCORT.

lems, they take pride in the festive of a Christian wedding. The men stand in the second row from the front of the guards of the American Consulate. All the kawasses appreciate being upon to serve at a wedding or at a funeral in either case they receive a "present" according to the means of the family interested, and at a wedding they share liberally in the refreshment provided.

SELAH MERRILL

The Christian's Hardships. oub in New Aspects—Voluntary Submission to Burdens Imposed on the Christian for a Divine Purpose.

“Trouble can never be so tolerable to any one as it is to the man who can look at it as discipline. He is spared the irritation that results from regret. The self-reproach for something done, or omitted, or self pity for misfortune, are both to him. Accepting the trial from God's hand, he feels that it is sent for a definite purpose and that it is to him in the end. Bitter it may be to bear, but if it brings sweet results it is no longer an empty sorrow. Trouble invites us in the passage of the world with the topic (Heb. 12: 1-13) to a still more lofty view of it. He who looks at it as a token of divine love, a Christian whose lot is easy and who has no trouble has cause, according to the Apostle's reasoning, to doubt his faith. Every son is scourged; it is the discipline of the family. The word, discipline, is not used, but it is the meaning. The view in which the burdens of the Christian are met. Chastisement is not punishment, it is the process of eliminating the weakness and strengthening of good in God's children. Like the rough wind which sweeps the tree to spread its roots more firmly in the earth, trouble is intended for the child of God take firmer hold of his privileges and draw fuller from the inexhaustible treasury of God's love. The other view is that of witnessing. Children are witnesses for him in the world. When trial comes, how does the Christian act? Is he cheerful and content? The world sees him and wonders how he is able to bear so well the trial that crushes others. Whence comes his serene equanimity? The Christian directs every observer to God. He shows how God supports the sufferer in his sickness? The bed of pain may be a pulpit from which the lesson of God's support that God gives. Is it bereavement? The world wonders what there is unshaken love for him who has given and who has taken away. The Christian's property? The Christian is content, having a God who is able to supply all his need. The world needs to know what God does for a man and the support religion affords in a crisis. He heeds to words but when it comes to patience, the faith, the strength in trial, it realizes that there is a power in godliness that the world never gives. And we are encouraged by the example of witnesses by whom we are sustained. Not witnesses of our comfort, but sometimes understood, but witnesses for God who have gone before. They bore their testimony in their lives even to the shedding of their blood. Their example is to inspire us. What is the result to be achieved? To have we to aim at? Laying aside our sight, we are to run with patience the race that is set before us. Whatever would impede our progress in the divine life is ruthlessly put away. The inner life is that of a foot-race. The contestant is not concerned about his appearance; he is only concerned about the use of his strength. He avoids the sin which besets the racer avoids articles of diet, which reduce his strength and endurance. Everything is subsidiary to the one thing that he may run. The Christian is running. Things that others may laugh at he puts away from him, that he may win the prize. That is his one desire, which he is ready to sacrifice all to win. He finds that some amusement has been found to fill his mind and disturb his peace. He enjoys it and it is accounted for; others indulge in it and there is no cause to reproach him. But he puts it away; it is a candidate for higher honors. It has been bought with a price and is not the better things. It is hardship, it is denial; but if that is the way to win the prize, he will take it. He might have content with the half-and-half life of the selfish most Christians, but if he has set himself in the race for the prize, he will endure the hardship. It is worth the while, worth all it costs, and Christ is the path before him.

OUR SERVICE OF SONG

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

Pleasures Forevermore.

"At thy right hand."—Ps 16: 11.

JULIA H. JOHNSTON.

JAMES MCGRANAHAN.

1. I lift my thankful song To God, my Help and Guide; To Him my life and
2. In Him is life and peace; I trust His love and might; He bids the strife and
3. My heart is glad in Him. My portion He prepares; His watchful eye is
4. A - long the nar - row way, My Sav - iour goes be - fore; He leads to realms of way be - long; No e - vil shall be - tide. He will show me the path of life;

CHORUS
tum - ult cease, And makes the darkness light.
nev - er dim; For me, for me He cares.
end - less day, And pleasures ever - more.

In His pres - ence is ful - ness of joy: At His right hand there are pleas - ures, are pleas - ures for - ev - er - more; At pleasures ev - er - more, for - ev - er - more.

His right hand there are pleas - ures, There are pleasures for - ev - er - more.
pleasures ev - er - more,

Copyright, 1896, by James McGranahan.

From the new book "SACRED SONGS NO. 1" By per. of The Biglow & Main Co.

LET ME WIN A SOUL FOR JESUS!

(Written for "The Christian Herald.")

LET me win a soul for Jesus!
Win a dear and deathless soul;
I would count it higher honor
Than the grandest earthly goal.
Let me win a soul for Jesus!
Souls are of such priceless worth,
I would count it richer treasure
Than the richest gems of earth.

Let me win a soul for Jesus!
Let me point the longing eyes
To the Christ who died for sinners—
To the willing sacrifice.
I would catch the glad hosannas
Sounding from the harps of gold,
When another soul is ransomed,
And another name enrolled.

Let me win a soul for Jesus!
"He that winneth souls is wise."
I am longing for the honor
Of a bright, immortal prize.
Saviour, draw me nearer, nearer,
Till my soul is all aflame,
Till I long to win them, only
For the glory of thy name.

E. Corinith, Me. MARY B. WINGATE.

HIDDEN POWER.

AS the light reveals such marvels,
By its beams, themselves unseen;
So does Christ reveal his presence,
Shining from the lives of men;
As the Tree of Life Eternal
Far and wide its branches spreads;
With each century growing broader,
Fruits, with leaves of healing, sheds.

Seeds in lands remote all scattered;
Springing fair in every clime.
Banyan groves from single plantlets
Waving in perennial prime.
In the bell the chimes lie slumbering
Till the stroke that bids them wake;
Then, the distant echoes waiting,
Into joyous music break.

Thus the Lord of Life is working,
Thus we labor with our Lord;
Oft in silence, long in darkness,
Till he speaks his wondrous Word.
Then the gates of morn are opened,
Glow the earth with sunrise gold;
We behold a waving harvest,
Riches of the years unfold.

Berlin, Mass. —PHERE A. HOLDER.

Promises to the Jews.

Definite Pledges Given in Prophecy of the Return and Permanent Settlement of the Jews in Palestine.

By REV. B. D. CHARLES, D.D.*

That very remarkable prophecy, Jeremiah 32: 37-41, there is a carefulness of detail and an emphasis as to pledges which is seldom found anywhere but in a legal document or a business contract. Here the prophet states four distinct things in regard to his people. The first is, he asserts that he, God, will "gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in my anger." The second point is that he will "bring them into this place," Jerusalem, and "will cause them to dwell there in safety." The third is, "I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me." Now you can see that this third point has never taken place. At no time in the history of the Jews has such a covenant existed. For God has turned away from them for many, many years, and has not done them good. And at no time in their history has God put his fear in their hearts, that they have not departed from him. The Jews at this day still reject their Messiah, and as a nation have cast him out. Therefore this covenant is still a thing of the future, so far as the Jew is concerned. The fulfilment of this prophecy is reserved until his people are restored to their own land. This brings me to the fourth point. "I will plant them in this land assuredly," or, as the Hebrew expresses it, "in truth." Here you see the Lord uses a peculiar expression. "I will plant them." The idea is that he would make of them a fixed and organized population. He would establish them there that they would never again be rooted up. They would no longer be wanderers, but a permanent population, and he would prosper and increase them in their restored country. Read now Ezekiel 37: 21-28. There you will find further details. The Jews are to be gathered out of all nations. It seems to me there can be no mistake about this prophecy. There never was a time when the Jews were scattered among all the nations as they are now. Since they were despoiled by the Romans they have been without a home. In their previous captivity they were only taken to an individual country. This prophecy has reference to their present dispersion, over the whole world. Then what does it teach? The Lord will gather up his ancient people from among all nations and will reinstate them in their own land. They form part of all the kingdoms of earth and speak all languages. Then they will come together, and "David, my servant," or rather the descendant of David, who is Christ, shall rule over them. Here God reiterates his oft repeated declaration, "I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen . . . and will gather them on every side and bring them into their own land." Their own land is one definite country. All the world knows that Palestine is the land of the Jews. Then into that country God will gather them. Another characteristic is to be theirs when they return to their own land. They are to be made "one nation." This has not been true in their previous history. There were shameful jealousies among them when in their tribal state. They would wage war among themselves, and destroy thousands of their own people. And afterwards, when they became a great nation, they were divided for generations. They had ten tribes under one king and two under another. Wars, with all their evil consequences, were frequent. But when they are gathered back to "their own land," they will be governed by one king. The declaration is definitely made, "They shall be no more two nations," nor "divided into two kingdoms any more at all." "David my servant shall be king over them."

* From his new Lectures on Prophecy. A volume of sixteen lectures, embracing the whole course of prophecy from the earliest to the latest prophets; 325 pages; price $1.25. Published by The Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, Chicago and Toronto.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE.

Ireland's Peasant Homes.

Humble but Comfortable Dwellings of "Stone and Turf"—Simple Lives—The Shadow of Famine in the Land.

BRITISH royalty has recently been visiting Ireland, and the presence of the Duke and Duchess of York has aroused a feeling of hearty enthusiasm which has been shared throughout a very large part of the Emerald Isle. There is little doubt that the visit will have the effect of popularizing the reigning royal family in Ireland, whose people have justly complained that, though they contribute largely toward the royal exchequer, they are neglected as far as recognition is concerned. The Duke and Duchess seem to have resolved, by a brilliant programme during the tour, to make amends as far as possible for this neglect. They have been splendidly entertained at Dublin, and have visited many other cities, including some of the famous historic and picturesque places of the "Green Isle." Altogether, their reception has been most cordial and generous and their visit will probably be followed by others, for the purpose of cultivating closer ties of friendship with the Irish people.

But while all this merrymaking has been in progress, a shadow of impending trouble has been gradually gathering over Ireland. Is it the shadow of famine. Fifty years ago, as some still living there can doubtless remember, the country was prestrated, owing to the failure of the potato crop. One half the peasant population was starving and the government in 1847 had on its hands the support of three million souls, including women and children. That terrible experience, causing untold hardship and a multitude of deaths, was followed by an exodus of large proportions, chiefly directed toward our own shores.

The recent general failure of crops in a large section of the Irish agricultural districts has given rise to the apprehension of another season of privation, if not of actual famine. The present harvest is said to be the poorest in many years and it is more than probable that the coming winter will be the hardest the peasantry have had to face in a generation. It is announced that the government, being fully alive to the situation, has already taken the necessary steps to meet actual suffering.

Our photograph on this page presents a scene which will be familiar to all who have traveled in the rural districts of the "Emerald Isle." The itinerant milkmaid and her patient donkey as burden-bearer, is a figure common to many parishes. Even in the best of times, the poor find the winter struggle, and the women, no less than the men, have to perform their full share of arduous physical labor. Should famine come, there will be suffering in many a "stone and turf" dwelling.

A Ministering Angel.

It is related by a Western contemporary that the daughter of a Denver, Colorado millionaire has labored in missionary work on the west side of that city during the whole of the summer just ended, and when the atmosphere was most oppressive. Concerning her work, the writer says: "She was telling a class of women of the Christ who died on Calvary, that even little ragged poor boys must have everlasting life. She talked from the heart. They were impressed by her manner and by the simplicity she told them. My thought is naturally centered on the fact of that aristocratic young girl, who left an afternoon of leisure for work among the offspring of the toilers. When I listened I did not know who it was, but I afterward learned it was the daughter of one of our wealthiest bankers. I inquired further, and found that she was welcomed as a ministering angel in many a poor man's home. A friend told me that he knew of a family for whom she baked bread on more than one occasion. To take flowers to the sick, comfort to the distressed, food to the famished is her chief delight."

Chiding the Children.

We little know what effect our thoughtless and meaningless words of comment and chiding for every small matter that goes wrong produce upon the half-grown girl and boy, writes Florence Hull Wintergreen. They are apt to be reserved, and to become sullen under restraints they dislike, and when this sullen attitude once sets in we may say farewell to all confi-read the advertisements on the labels on the canned goods time after time. The way in which these men, who have come out from the wilderness, devour the news in a paper, is a sight to behold.

The method of keeping their supplies is unique, for of course there are no refrigerators in the Klondike country. The usual way is to build a 'cache,' a little enclosure set on eight poles from which the bark has been scraped. The provisions are placed on the 'cache,' and then all is covered with a tarpaulin. If the provisions were left in the cabin they would not be safe. Bears, if plentiful, will even tear the roof off a cabin to get at provisions, whereas they will not climb the thin posts, when the bark has been stripped off.

Right Uses of Wealth.

Our children should be taught early that all riches is a stewardship, and that they will be accountable for the uses to which they put their possessions and their opportunities; that wealth is not to be desired for the opportunities it brings for indulging personal gratification, but for the larger opportunities it affords its temporary owner for becoming a benefactor and a blessing to others. A right use of wealth has seldom been more practically exemplified than in the case of Miss Helen Culver, whose gift of four biological laboratories, costing $325,000, and an endowment fund of $700,000 to a medical university, was formally handed over to the

THE BOYLESS TOWN.

A CROSS old woman of long ago Declared that she hated noise; "The town would be so pleasant, you know, if only there were no boys." She scolded and fretted about it till Her eyes grew heavy as lead, And then, of a sudden, the town grew For all the boys had fled.

And all through the long and dusty street There wasn't a boy in view; The baseball lot, where they used to run, Was a sight to make one blue; The grass was growing on every base, And the paths that the runners made For there wasn't a soul in all the place Who knew how the game was played.

The dogs were sleeping the livelong day, Why should they bark or leap? They wasn't a whistle or call to play, And so they could only sleep. The pony neighed from his lonely stall And longed for saddle and rein; And even the birds on the garden wall Chirped only a dull refrain.

There was little, I ween, of frolic and There was less of cheer and mirth; The sad old town, since it lacked its boys, Was the dreariest place on earth. The poor old woman began to weep; Then woke with a sudden scream; "Dear me!" she cried; "I have been a And, oh! what a horrid dream!"

In a Court of Birds.

THOSE who are versed in bird lore and who make a study of its habits and peculiarities of our feathered friends, relate many singular instances of intelligent action—apparently the outcome of a sort of instinctive reasoning. In Animal Friends, George E. Mearns tells of a court of crows held near the Palisades on the Hudson River. He says:

Here the birds hold their court over and terminer, and dispute according to their notions of right and wrong. A few days ago an offense of the criminal was can conjectured, but the proceeding the trial were conducted in the manner possible. Every member of the court seemed to be extremely anxious to speak at once, the cawing was deafening. A sentinel on a neighboring rock so interested in the proceedings failed to see the stealthy approach of a stranger.

The crows were all assembled around a barren rock on which the criminal and a large black crow who seemed to be the leader of the flock. The criminal had his head and fluttered his wings, as if anxious to escape. Half an hour's wild cawing, the trial of the court was apparently concluded, suddenly there was a wild commotion and the whole flock pounced on the criminal and killed him. The court was satisfied with the proceeding and returned to their various duties, gathered in small groups, cuss in crow-fashion the result of the trial.

The sparrows also hold criminal trials upon offenders against their own tribe rarely kill a criminal outright, but the such severe punishment that the offender is not likely to repeat the crime. They are as noisy and quarrelsome as the and court proceedings are conducted in a manner that would distract any human. When the offender is found guilty, a number of the flock are detailed to punish him, which they usually do by upon the poor bird and pecking him severely. After losing most of his feathers, he is mitted back into the fold on probation long as the absence of the feathers makes a criminal, he is in disgrace, and he is not particularly cultivated. Few sparrows may be seen hovering on the top of many flocks. Occasionally other may have caused the loss of the feathers usually the bird is one that has been punished for some offense.

The offenses which deserve punishment among the birds differ according to species. Some are horn pilferers, and every is looked upon by them as legal, but most of our song birds respect the property. Martins will punish any member of their tribe that steals the nest or, in any way interferes with a young pair.

What must these little wayfarers of the men, who shoot, trap, stone and rob them without mercy? If it capable of thought, they must regard as types of a species of terrible m ing monsters, who exist only to t and slay. Their example ought to us to be humane to all creatures.

AN IRISH MILK-MAID AND HER PATIENT, FOUR-FOOTED CARRIER.

dential intercourse between parent and child. To avert such an evil we will do well to apply all our powers of tact and kindness. Let us avoid arousing the spirit of perverseness that stirs in every young creature at this period of life, and by enlarging his opportunities for action as his ambition extends, soothe any budding revolutionary ideas, and inspire in him the trust and confidence in parental benevolence that will be his safeguard when he needs advice and assistance. For youth never stands in deeper need of wise guidance than at this time when there is a desire to dispense with it. But the guidance must be so wise, so tactful, so gentle, that even the most independent young soul will feel that love, and not force, is the motive power that draws him toward what is best, and that he is restrained by nothing except his own honor and trained sense of right.

Klondike Miners' "Homes."

The homes of the Alaska gold miners are rough "shacks," or cabins, and in the winter it is a struggle to keep warm. In the long evenings they go to each other's "shacks," chat together and endeavor to make the time pass pleasantly. Reading matter is at a premium, and should any paper, periodical or book make its way to the camps, it is read and re-read by scores of the miners. So scarce is reading matter that the miners have been known to institution a few days ago. In consummating the enterprise, she said: "This is the happiest moment of my life. I believe this money could not have been utilized to a nobler purpose than to devote it to that science whose object is to assuage the sufferings of humanity and to make life endurable and enjoyable here on earth."

The Family System in India.

The family is a unit in India and lives by cohesion. Nathu is a soldier, Juma a chuprassie, Piroo a policeman, and the clever little Ram Charan a pleader. They all belong to the same village and plot of land. Africa, Benares, Lahore, Bombay may be their residences, but Kot Changa Manga is still their "home." There their wives and children are, and all their uncles, aunts, sisters, cousins to the last degree, and there all the wives, husbands and children of each gravitate. All live on a common fund. Whoso is not earning money lives on those who do earn. No distance, no occupation separate them or alter their position in the family government. The Indian family is as one man. The Englishman says every man for himself. The Indian says every man, woman, and child for the family to the uttermost edge. Hence there is no Poor Law in India. The intense and utter selfishness of the Indian is loosened only for his family. Beyond that his ideas do not go.

Home Talks with Mothers and Daughters.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

FINISHING TOUCHES.

THE little finishing touches which are given to the toilette have a great deal to do with its beauty. A pretty ribbon around the neck, a dainty bit of trimming, a gown in the afternoon, and a general neatness and tidiness go far to make every plain costume beautiful. Women sometimes grow indifferent to their dress, and while this is seldom true of young, it is deplorably true of those growing older. At the very time when a woman should care most to present attractive appearance in the eyes of her husband and children, when her own has lost some of the delicacy of her days and the texture of her dress is finer than formerly, she, so to speak, neglects herself to pieces, neglecting the dentist, taking no pains to keep in the fashion, and going about like a woman when she has still a right to be a model to all beholders.

There is a certain sort of chocolate-print much affected by women in the city, probably with the idea that it is smart, which it does not. I have seen a farmer's wife attired in an evening gown of this sort and wearing it along, while she had attractive things lying up in her closet which she had never slipped on, and in which she had been charming to her sons and daughters. One such woman I recalled with her in a summer long ago, and it used to trouble me first how much she had to do, and how hard a way she took to do it, and how little she cared about her dress when all was done.

One of linen around the neck costs nothing, and a collarless gown innocent of any appropriate finish suggests a toilette for an execution. My worthy neighbor by any chance had any sort of finish about the neck of her dress, her hair was tightly skewered up in a knot at the back of her head, and the whole appearance made one think that she must always have been deterred by vanity behind her. And yet, when her one could see that she had a face, that she still had soft eyes and features were regular, and that she had a little more care to bring her hair and give her more of the look which had borne in the days of her youth.

a garment which I would like to have forever if I could, and that is a style of apron also very much worn by middle-aged women about their houses. This forlorn-looking thing is usually of blue checked stuff, gathered into a band and finished with a band at the bottom and tied around the waist. Of all deforming, ugly creatures the most hideous. Once, some time when driving with a friend over the New Jersey, we met with an accident. Our horse balked at a certain point on the road, aware, I am afraid, that the man driving him. He backed up and possibly could over an embankment and into a meadow, where he was much the worse for the experience, the way of bruises and general discomfort, although we fared better.

than our carriage, which was broken to splinters.

I remember my search for help to disentangle the horse, who lay prone amid his harness, and in all the wretchedness of the disaster I still recall the figure of fun presented by the good woman who stood at the door of her little cabin receiving the story of our disaster with uplifted hands. She must have weighed more than two hundred pounds. She had on a chocolate-colored gown, around her waist was tied a blue checked apron, and she looked exactly like a feather-bed standing up with a string around the middle. I wondered then and I wonder now how anybody can be contented, even in the backwoods, dressed in such a way as that. Still she is one of a class, and her life passes with little recreation and small chance of change or excitement, so that a calamity at her doorstep is to her rather a boon than otherwise, giving her something to talk about for days to come. A pretty gown would not hurt her in the least.

Returning to our subject, every woman who cares about the finishing of her toilette, whether she be older or younger, should adopt some becoming style of hair-dressing and should cling to it unmindful of passing changes in the fashion. For elderly women nothing can be more beautiful than a soft, white cap such as we see in portraits of Queen Victoria. When the hair has grown thin on the top of the head and the back hair is scanty, certainly a pretty cap is a soft and beautiful adjunct to the toilette, though at present in America most old women scorn to wear one. In my girlhood we were very much given to the wearing of ribbons and rosettes, and every young woman possessed a number of head-dresses composed of lace, ribbon or feathers, without which she never thought of finishing her afternoon or evening dress. A favorite one was composed of a circlet of wire wound around with ribbon and finished on each side with a large and elaborate bow. We had these in pink, yellow, green, purple, and brown, and would no more have thought of dressing our hair without them than of not dressing it at all.

Then came in puff combs. These little combs were slipped in the hair, which was adjusted over them and made to look very wide and full at each side of the face.

A MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Rev. C. H. Smith of Plymouth, Conn., Gives the Experience of Himself and Little Girl in a Trying Season—What He Depends Upon.

The testimonials in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla come from a class of people whose words are worth considering. Many clergymen testify to the value of this medicine. Read this:

"By a severe attack of diphtheria I lost two of my children. I used Hood's Sarsaparilla as a tonic both for myself and little girl and found it most excellent as a means to restore the impoverished blood to its natural state and as a help to appetite and digestion. I depend upon it when I need a tonic and I find it at once efficacious." REV. C. H. SMITH, Congregational parsonage, Plymouth, Conn.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; easy to take, easy to operate. 25c.

"Brevity is the Soul of Wit."
Good Wife, You Need

You may often see this style in the portraits of women who were girls in the fifties. There is at present a sort of revival in the fashions of hair-dressing of thirty years ago, and a return to the elaboration of puffs, curls, braids and artificial hair, which then was in favor. Let us hope that it will be a passing fancy, because beautiful hair well kept is sufficient to itself and needs no addition in the way of braids and curls fastened on by the art of the hair-dresser. The hair needs a great deal of brushing to keep it nice and should be frequently washed.

Let no one think that consideration for the body is either foolish or sinful. The body is the soul's house, and we should at least care as much for the house in which we live as we do for the residences which we build for ourselves.

Margaret E. Sangster

Inside of a Hundred Homes

Glimpses into one hundred of the daintiest furnished homes in America, showing what good taste can do with little money. See October LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Other features: Stories by Mary E. Wilkins and Hamlin Garland; "Shams of the Modern Girl," by Ruth Ashmore; "A Chicago Girl in Europe," by Lillian Bell.

One Dollar a Year Ten Cents a Copy

The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia

The Royal is the highest grade baking powder known. Actual tests show it goes one-third further than any other brand.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

The Treatment of Rheumatism or Uric Acid Poisoning.

GOVERNOR STEPHENS of Missouri recently informed one of our representatives that Tartarilithine was the only remedy which gave him relief in uric acid poisoning. The governor speaks of the remedy in the highest terms.

Pamphlet on the treatment of Rheumatism by Tartarilithine sent free by McKesson & Robbins, 91 Fulton St., N. Y.

SOLE AGENTS FOR

The Tartarilithine Co.

Are the half-hose one should buy if one wants the best—the best-fitting, the best-looking, the best-wearing.

SHAW STOCKING CO., Lowell, Mass.

Sold by Leading Dealers Everywhere.

Descriptive Price-List to any Applicant.

•••The

Giant Lily Violet of California

(Erythronium Giganteum.)

Beautiful Winter Bloomer, also Hardy Outside.

Large Golden Lily-like flowers. Foliage like a Royal Velvet Robe, beautifully mottled.

Three for 12 Cents; Each 5 Cents.

1 New Giant Sweet-Scented Sacred Lily. 5c.
1 Bermuda Easter Lily, 5 to 8 flowers. 12c.
1 Black Calla of Palestine. 15c.
1 Roman or Christma. Hyacinth, white. 6c.

Total, 38c.

Or 1 each of the above Lily Collection of 5 Bulbs, 25c. When 41 collections are ordered, I send FREE 3 Little Gem Callas.

"SUCCESS WITH BULBS" is printed with my Catalogue—7 pages of the most explicit directions for growing Bulbs ever published—sent with every order and on application "JADDO," a new magic material for growing Plants and Bulbs. 10c., large trial package. Address:

Miss Mary E. Martin, Floral Park, New York

8% Absolutely Safe Municipal Security. Bought largely by best Banks and Trust Companies. Write for details. ROBERT E. STRAHOEN & CO., Equitable Building, Boston, Mass.

SAPOLIO

Parker's Arctic Sock, Best for RUBBER BOOTS. Absorbs perspiration. Recommended by Physicians for house, chamber and sick-room. Made in Men's, Women's and Children's. Ask shoe dealer or send 25c. with size to J.H. PARKER, 103 Bedford St., Boston, Mass. Room 11. Take no substitute. Parker Pays the Postage.

High Grade Sewing Machine for $5.00. Editor:—Please tell your readers that we have our high-grade Iowa sewing machine on to anyone who will assist us in distributing our big 928-page 3-pound catalogues. We give machines outright from $8.50 up, guarantee years and allow 30 days free trial. Particulars cut this notice out and send to S. Reuck & Co., (Inc.) Chicago, Ill.

GOOD CAUSES HELPED.

The following sums have been contributed by the readers of this journal to the various worthy causes mentioned below:

For the Deaf and Dumb.	Miss Emma Nason's
Prev. ackd. $17.00	Work among Lumb.
Anonymous 1.00	bermen.
Total $18.00
Foreign Missions.
Prev. ackd. $117.79
W. A. Wake 1.00
For the Heathen.
Erie 10
C. G. Amburg for Co- rea 1.00
Total $119.89
For Any Good Cause.
Prev. ackd. $129.01
M. A. Harriot 50
Unknown 2.00
Total $131.51
For Mrs. Jamal's School	Work among the Life-
for Syrian Girls.	Savers.
Prev. ackd. $41.00	Prev. ackd. $3.50
L. Lymonds 5.00	Mrs. K. H. Odenkirk 1.00
Total $46.00	Total $14.50
For the Mayeville	Florence Mission.
Institute.	Prev. ackd. $5.00
Prev. ackd. $85.00	Anonymous 1.00
P. H. Hill 5.00	Total $1.50
H. N. Moore's Mill 1.00
Mrs. M. A. Lewis 1.00	Mrs. Selchen for Cuba's
Thos. Dinsley 1.00	Helpless Children.
H. B. Benjamin 1.00	Prev. ackd. $5.00
Friends, Northfield, per J. A. Sankey 25.00	M. J. Rogers 2.00
Total $121.00	Total $2.50
A. B. C. F. M. for Africa.	New York Rescue Band
C. B. Portsmouth 6.00	Prev. ackd. $5.00
	Anonymous 1.00
	Total $9.00

GREECE'S SAD PLIGHT.

Ruined by the War, her Cities Devastated and her Faith in Christian Europe Shaken.

SELDOM has a sadder picture of the condition of a war-swept country been presented than that contained in the letter below, written by a native Protestant minister in Andros, Greece:

ANDROS, GREECE, July 2.

You have heard about the destructive Greco-Turkish war which began some time ago. Foolishly the Greek nation got involved in it, and after she began she found out that she was not only fighting the Turks, but all Europe. With what courage the Turks fought when they knew they had all Europe with them! They have ruined Armenia, they have ruined Crete, and to-day Greece is ruined. The Turks, from the frontier to Domokos, (where they are now), committed all the crimes against the Greeks that human minds could devise. And all this is done in or through the sanction of Christian Europe, so-called. We want to know how we can preach a Protestant Gospel here, after the Protestant nations have done what they have in the way of sanctioning the Turks in the terrible devastations. How can we tell the people here that the Bible is printed in England, when they have been so inhuman in Crete, where they bombarded the Greeks? England was the first to throw the bombs. For England to take Cyprus and Egypt, and for France to take Madagascar did not disturb the peace of Europe. But when Greece tried to stop the massacres by the Turks in Crete, the powers said it was disturbing the peace of Europe.

The islands and large cities are full of refugees from Crete and Thessaly, and the Greek subjects from Turkey have had to flee for their lives and leave their property. All these people are now poverty-stricken, and the Greek nation has now more than she can do. Besides the refugees, the Greek people are now in a suffering condition. The small crops which have been raised here are destroyed by the drought. The young men were taken to the war and some have been killed. In the towns and villages very few are left but old men, women and children, without any means of support. Work is scarce, and stealing and breaking open of houses has begun. It is heartbreaking! Some have lost husbands and sons; some have lost wives and daughters by the cruelty of the Turks. Wherever the Turkish army has passed, it is as though a fire or tornado or flood had swept.

The Greek people feel that they have been deserted by the European powers, but thank God that there is a Christian nation in the far West, and that is the American nation, who have always been and still are sympathizing with them! There are no words or language to express their gratitude to America, for not only are they now receiving help from them, but ever since the war in 1821 Armenia has shewn much kindness to the Greeks.

Your brother in Christ,

A. D. ZARAPHONITHES.

New Medical Discovery.

A Positive Cure for Dyspepsia.

This may read as though we were putting it a little strong because it is generally thought by the majority of people that Dyspepsia in its chronic form is incurable, or practically so. But we have long since shown that Dyspepsia is curable, nor is it such a difficult matter as at first appears.

The trouble with Dyspepsia is that they are continually dieting, starving themselves, or going to opposite extremes or else deluging the already overburdened stomach with "bitters," "after dinner pills," etc., which invariably increase the difficulty even in some cases they do give a slight temporary relief. Such treatment of the stomach simply makes matters worse. What the stomach wants is a rest. Now how can the stomach become rested, recuperated and at the same time the body nourished and sustained.

This is the great secret, and this is also the secret of the uniform success of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. This is a comparatively new remedy, but its success and popularity leaves no doubt as to its merits.

The Tablets will digest the food anyway, regardless of the condition of stomach.

The sufferer from Dyspepsia according to directions is to eat an abundance of good, wholesome food, and use the tablets before and after each meal and the result will be that the food will be digested no matter how bad your dyspepsia may be, because as before stated, the tablets will digest the food even if the stomach is wholly inactive. To illustrate our meaning plainly, if you take 1,000 grains of meat, eggs or ordinary food, and place it in a temperature of 98 degrees, and put with it one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, it will digest the meat or eggs almost as perfectly as if the meat was enclosed within the stomach.

The stomach may be ever so weak, yet these tablets will perform the work of digestion, and the body and brain will be properly nourished, and at the same time a radical, lasting cure of dyspepsia will be made, because the much abused stomach will be given, to some extent, a much needed rest. Your druggist will tell you that of the many remedies advertised to cure dyspepsia, none of them has given so complete and general satisfaction as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not least in importance in these hard times is the fact that, they are also the cheapest and give the most good for the least money.

A little book on cause and cure of stomach trouble sent free by addressing Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

TO THE LADY who wishes to dress well at moderate cost we will mail you our Fall and Winter Catalogue of Suits and Cloaks and more than eighty samples of the Suitings and Trimmings from which we make our garments to order. We make every garment to order and guarantee the perfection of fit, finish and style. Our styles and materials are exclusive and are shown by no other firm.

Our Catalogue Illustrates:

Tailor-Made Suits and Stylish Dresses, $5.00 up.

Jaunty Jackets and Capes, $3.00 up.

Bicycle Suits, $6.00 up. Separate Skirts, $4.00 up.

We also make finer garments and send samples of styles. We have express charges on any part of the world. Write to-day; you will get catalogue and samples by return mail.

THE NATIONAL CLOAK CO.,

Ladies' Tailors, 119 & 121 W. 23d St., New York.

Which costs most,

a sick baby, or a package of Pearlina? Without the Pearlina, there's always the prospect of sickness, and possibly worse, for your baby comes from nursing bottles that are not perfectly washed.

that can't be watched too closely. Pearlina will set your mind at rest. Nothing washes them so thoroughly as Pearlina. One of the largest makers of nursing bottles sends out circulars with his goods, recommending Pearlina washing. He is wise, for milk in any form cannot adhere to anything, if washed with Pearlina.

HENDERSON'S RAINBOW COLLECTION OF BULBS

OUR 1897 AUTUMN CATALOGUE OF BULB PLANTS & SEEDS MAILED FREE TO THOSE NAMING THIS PUBLICATION

Plant them this Fall in Your Garden, Or Grow them in Your House this Winter.

They are equally adapted for both purposes, and will delight you with their profusion of gorgeously beautiful flowers and delicious perfume.

100 FLOWERING BULBS (All up-to-date sorts and nearly all different, delivered free anywhere in the U. S. for $1.50)

THIS collection embraces: Hyacinths, Tulips, Daffodils, Crocus, Glory of the Snow, Orchid-flowered Iris, Giant Jonquils, Giant Snowdrops, Bermuda Easter Lily, Anemones, Fritillarias, etc.

PETER HENDERSON & CO. 35 AND 37 CORTLANDT ST. NEW YORK

CASH PAID FOR NAMES

YOUTH AND HOME is issued every Saturday at the subscription price of $1 per year in advance. It consists of eight or more beautifully illustrated clean, high-class literary matter by the foremost people of the world.

Our first issue contains stories, departments, and pictures by Mary E. Wilkins, Hayden Carruth, Orson Lowell, Ruth McEnery Stuart, Albert Bigelow Paine, Frank VerB., Margaret E. Sangster, Jno. Langdon Heaton, M. Woolf.

Special Offer Until October 15, Only!

Send plainly written, by card or letter, before Oct. 15, four names (not more) folks most likely to be interested in the best home paper published and read.

YOUTH AND HOME For Two Weeks Free, and 25 CENTS IN CASH for Each Name added to our subscription list by Nov. 15th. Pick best names to insure returns. We do the rest. No canvassing. Write your own name and town.

YOUTH AND HOME, 127 Fifth Avenue, Dept. C, New York City.

"Sanitas" Book Free.

The American & Continental "Sanitas" Co. Ltd.

636 to 642 West 25th St., New York City.

$200.00 IN GOLD GIVEN.

International News and Book Company, Baltimore, makes a most liberal offer of $200.00 in gold for selling 100 copies of "Talks to Children about Jesus." This book is among the most popular ever published, the aged sold in 2 days, another 50 the first week. Freight paid, credit given. They also publish titles, and other popular books, and a beautiful set of children's books for the Xmas holidays. A few General Agents wanted on salary.

LADIES' FINE SHOE

CUSTOM-MADE MAILED AT WHOLESALE

Fall and Winter Style like illustration. Made to any style toe, put trimmings, lace or buttons made to your order. We pay express charges guaranteed or money refunded.

Send for illustration of shoe of your own making.

$2.50

The J. C. TARRANT SHOE CO., Cincinnati, O.

SACRED SONGS No. 1

No other New book equal to it. 25¢ per copy. If by mail. THE HIGLOW & CO. Lakeside Building, Chicago.

Church Life and Fellowship.

Elements of Church Organization in the Communities of Gentile Believers, as seen in the Epistles. (Eph. 2: 1-6.)

From the Acts of the Apostles and from the Epistles we get only glimpses of the character of the churches which Paul founded. They seem to have been of a very simple kind. Original families meeting together in private house, belonging to the most prominent member of the group, constituted the church. (See Colossians 4: 15.)

Worship probably consisted in the singing of certain psalms, and together about the life and teaching as they had been recounted by him when he first preached in the city. The little companies may have had some fragments of the narrative in which the Gospels were afterwards compiled, and these would be read in the weekly assemblies. Some Christian visitor from Jerusalem would be present occasionally, who would give an address which only too often reflections on the Apostle, caused distressing doubt to the hearer. Probably the Lord's Supper was celebrated every Sunday, and the talk would be of Christ's coming again, which was to occur in a short time. Gradually, by casual references in Paul's letters, that a more formal organization of elders and teachers were appointed, and groups of churches were placed under the oversight of a bishop, Timothy. The letters Paul wrote were entirely copied, and the copies distributed among the churches. There is no mention in this fact in Colossians 4: 16, but it seems, however, to have been the order of worship, or any formal assembly.

The members were such as believed in Christ, and had been baptized. The Spirit was among them, and they were moulded and allowed to develop. The hostility of the world, on the one hand and the heathenism, on the other, would be likely to drive the church into closer union with each other, and the expectation of the coming of Christ would be liberal with each other, rich helping the poor, and a loving spirit prevailing. There seems to have been, in any of the churches, a community of goods, which was effected in Jerusalem (Acts 4: 34-35), but the sense of brotherhood and practical. From the epistles to the Corinthians we learn, too, of a system of church government, which was organized, as the church was kept discipline on an offending member, but it seems to have been done in a church, and not by any ecclesiastical authority. The church was alive, and was natural and unrestricted.

BOOKS RECEIVED.
On Prophecy. By Benjamin H. D. Pp. 320; price $1.25. Published by W. H. Revell Company, New York, & Toronto.
Soul Teaching of Jesus. An Essay on Sociology. By Shailer Mathews. A.M. Pp. 155. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York.

ITS CURES AT HAND COUNT.

Any so-called remedies are based on the public attention to a count of their claimed cures. But sales cannot be made on mere values. Sales simply of good salesmen, shrewdly, or enormous advertising of its cures that count. It is a fact that are counted on by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Its sales can be boasted. It has the reputation for its market. But to improve nothing. We point to the record of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, as proof of its merit.

50 YEARS OF CURES.

Where Cash Counts

GREAT SPECIAL OFFER

LIMITED TO OCT. 20, 1897.

Four massive volumes, each 9 in. wide, 11 1/2 in. long, 3 in. thick, containing 5,359 pages, 16,000 columns of clear type matter, 3,000 illustrations, 250,000 words defined, 80,000 encyclopædic topics. Weight, about 45 lbs.

The $42.00 Sets at $8
CLOTH BINDING.

The $52.50 Sets at $12
HALF-RUSSIA STYLE.

FOR CASH ONLY.

WE GUARANTEE that these books are perfect in every way excepting some slight rubs or abrasions on the binding. On some it will take a close examination to reveal it, and yet we cannot offer them as perfect stock, and our loss shall be your gain. This is

POSITIVELY THE GREATEST BARGAIN EVER OFFERED

The duplication of which is out of the question. To the economically inclined who have heretofore thought they could not afford the LATEST AND GREATEST OF ALL HOME LIBRARIES, this is really a wonderful opportunity.

WHAT THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY IS.

It contains over 250,000 defined words—nearly twice as many as the largest unabridged, giving the history, derivation, spelling, pronunciation, and varied meanings of each legitimate English word. It is now accepted as an unquestioned authority wherever the English language is spoken. It is one of the best of all Encyclopædias, because practically as useful as well as the latest and most scholarly. 50,000 encyclopædic subjects—the Britannica has about 27,000. Just think of it! The whole range of human knowledge condensed for your instant use by such world-famous scientists as Huxley, Proctor, and a hundred other educators of hardy less renown. It is a time-saver for busy men; a college education for plodding students; a brain developer for ambitious mechanics; an inexhaustible treasure-house of information for each member of every family. It easily takes the place of any half dozen other reference books that could be named. It is truly a family necessity. It is an ornament to any library; beautifully printed and substantially bound; four great volumes, profusely illustrated, costing more than $750.00 to produce, and never before offered, except during our recent introductory sale, for less than $42.00 to $52.50 a set.

WHAT THE ABLEST CRITICS SAY.

"The Encyclopædic Dictionary is a library condensed into four volumes, a ton of diffusiveness reduced to forty pounds of quintessence."—Rev. Dr. Chas. H. Parkhurst.
"It forms in itself a library for the busy man of affairs, the mechanic ambitious to advance himself in his line, or the student or apprentice just making a beginning."—Scientific American.
"Has no superior in any of the qualities that go to make up a good dictionary. I give the work my hearty commendation."—Ex-Judge Noah Davis.
"The work is undoubtedly an exceedingly useful and trustworthy one."—Sunday School Times.
"It has all the utility of a superior unabridged dictionary, and all the practical usefulness of a 25-volume encyclopædia without its diffusiveness."—Ram's Horn.
"The skill and judgment with which the dictionary and encyclopædia have been blended can be appreciated only by comparing The Encyclopædic with other dictionaries."—Public Opinion.

HOW TO SECURE THIS GREAT BARGAIN. Send $8.00 by draft or money order $12.00 if the Half Russia style is desired, and the full set of four volumes will be forwarded by freight or express, as you may direct. All freight or express charges are to be paid by purchaser. Remittances received after this special lot is exhausted will be immediately returned. The limited stock at our disposal cannot last long, and under no circumstances will an order be filled that reaches us later than October 20th. Our purpose in selling these sets at practically half the cost of binding is to favor worthy applicants of small means; hence, to protect ourselves against book-dealers, etc., we must decline to send more than 3 sets to any one party, and in every case we must require the full name and address of each person receiving a set. We have only two styles of binding in this lot—Cloth and Half Russia—about an equal quantity of each. Order at once, to make sure. We refer to any Commercial Agency, or to any bank or newspaper in Philadelphia.

REMEMBER
These sets are precisely as good, for all practical purposes, as those for which we are getting regular prices. We guarantee that the interiors are perfect, and the bindings of our standard grade. The most serious damage to any set is no greater than might occur in a single day's use. This is actually the chance of a lifetime.

SYNDICATE PUBLISHING CO., Dept No. 68, 234-236 South 8th St., Philadelphia.

COMFORT FOR COOL DAYS.

Banner Oil Heater $5.00

We take the chill off a room in a few minutes. As much or little heat as you want. Indispensable after its merits are tested. Handsomely made and a most powerful oil heater. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. When not kept by dealers, will send, freight paid, on receipt of $5.00, to any point east of the Rocky Mountains. NO SMOKE, ODOR, or CHIMNEY TO BREAK. FREE! Our booklet points on stoves and lamps. THE PLUME & ATWOOD MFG. CO., NEW YORK, BOSTON, CHICAGO, Waterbury and Thomaston, Conn.

Put it on The Roof and nothing but years of storm and sun and wind can wear it off. Dixon's Silica Graphite Roof Paint lasts 15 to 20 years. For roofs, bridges, walls, agricultural implements and anything that requires protection from the action of the elements, acids, smoke or gases. DIXON'S Silica Graphite ROOF PAINT is the most serviceable and the most economical paint ever mixed—covers most and wears longest. Write for booklets and practical information about paints. JOS. DIXON CRUCIBLE CO., Jersey City, N. J.

ASTHMA CURED!
Dr. Hayes' cure has brought happiness to sufferers. A $10.00 bottle and valuable treatise sent free, you pay the expressage. Address, Dept. 145, DR. B. W. HAYES, Cincinnati, O.
HOME STUDY Book-keeping, Penmanship, Arithmetic, Short-hand, etc. thoroughly taught by Mail at student's expense. Low rates; perfect satisfaction. Cat. free. Trial lesson free. BRYANT & STRATTON, D275 College Bldg. Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Hayes Cures Asthma to Stay Cured.
"It gives me pleasure to say that you have cured me of Asthma. I suffered several days a time every year for over ten years before I commenced Dr. Hayes' treatment. After a thorough trial I was cured, and haven't suffered a minute since. This was over six years ago. If you wish you may publish this."—G. L. CONNOR, M. D., Cokesbury, S. C.
Write for Details, Blank for Free Examination and other references, DR. HAYES, BUFFALO, N. Y.

A Breakfast at the Moody Bible Institute.

REV. R. A. TORREY.

ABOUT two hundred young men and women are seated about the neat and tasty tables in the big dining-hall of the Chicago Bible Institute. Grace is said, a familiar hymn is sung, and then follows cantaloupe, oat-meal, and milk, omelette and coffee, bread and butter. The chairs are moved back from the table. The hum of voices ceases and some one is called on by Dr. Newell, the Assistant Superintendent to lead in prayer. "His blood avails for me," is sung, and then Dr. Newell preaches a ten-minute sermon on "Liberty in right living." All then kneel a moment in prayer, and breakfast is over, giving food for body and soul. We see why this Institute has been called the "West Point of Christian work." It is a sort of spiritual arsenal, an oasis in Chicago's busy commercial life. 160 male and seventy-five female students are in attendance at the lectures of Rev. Dr. James Grey of Boston. In his lecture on "Preaching," delivered after breakfast, he urges practical points that are new to many. Such as dependence on the Holy Spirit in selecting the text, its division and simplification, synthetic reading of the Bible, etc.

The Y. P. S. C. E., Y. M. C. A. and the revival movements of the present time have opened up new fields of usefulness for devoted men and women. Around the breakfast table are men and women preparing for different fields. One young man is going to the Congo, another to Abyssinia, still another to South Africa. Among the 400 students enrolled during 1896, twenty-seven denominations were represented: eighty-nine were Presbyterians, eight-two Methodists, sixty-one Congregationalists, fifty-six Baptists. Twenty-seven different states and 108 professions and occupations were represented.

Rev. R. A. Torrey, Superintendent of the Bible Institute is a man of firmness of character, yet deeply spiritual, as his sermon at Northfield this summer indicated. Mr. Moody has the love and respect of all. The love of the Master pervades the entire institution. W. J. PECK.

Truth from a Great Soldier.

Count Von Moltke in his life time, told the Germans a plain, though not very acceptable truth, when he said: "Beer is a far more dangerous enemy to Germany than all the armies of France." Were France to invade her territory thousands would rally to the defence of the Fatherland; yet intemperance attacks the home and community and performs its destructive work year after year, and she looks on with blinded indifference and unconcern.

CHINESE SACRED LILY.

Immense bulbs imported from the Yalu River; sure to bloom in 4 weeks. By mail, 12c., 3 for 30c. 3 Giant Golden Sacred Lily, 10c. 2 Easter Lilies, 10c. 4 Mammoth Frezlia, 10c. 5 Glory of the Snow, 10c. 2 Roman Hyacinths, 10c. 100 bulbs of low priced and extra fine bulbs with every line. Address: P. J. Marshall, Hibernia, Dutchess Co., N. Y.

GEARHART'S FAMILY KNITTER.

PRICE REDUCED TO ONLY $7.50.

It is an excellent machine for knitting everything required in the household from a houseman or factory, wool or cotton yarn. The original, and now reliable, low priced knitting machine. A model of simplicity. A child can operate it. Over 100,000 in use. Satisfaction guaranteed. To secure agents, send a card to the nearest office. If you send me $2.00 I will allow the machine by express C. O. D. You can pay the balance $5.50 on receipt of machine. Don't miss this rare opportunity. As a standard machine has never before been sold at this low price. Address, GEARHART MACHINE CO., BOX 4, CLEARFIELD, PA.

HALL'S
Vegetable Sicilian
HAIR RENEWER

Beautifies and restores Gray Hair to its original color and vitality; prevents baldness; cures itching and dandruff. A fine hair dressing.

R. P. HALL & CO., Props., Nashua, N. H.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Dyspepsia

in a majority of cases is caused by a derangement of the nerve centers in the brain which control the action of the stomach. Bad news will often destroy a good appetite. The brain receives the news and through its nerve centers, communicates it to the different organs of the body. When the nerves of the stomach become over-worked and debilitated, it becomes unable to perform its duties, and soon gives signs of distress, followed by a refusal to withhold all that is forced upon it. The result is dyspepsia.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Restores Health.

Mr. Frank A. Bond, Middlebury, Vt., says: "Until 6 months ago I suffered from indigestion bordering on dyspepsia, producing such nervousness that at times I could not control myself. I used Dr. Miles' Nervine and Nerve and Liver pills, fully restoring my health." All druggists guarantee first bottle benefits or money refunded. Book free. Address, Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

LINE
TRADE MARK
REVERSIBLE
COLLARS and CUFFS.

ARE NOT TO BE WASHED.

Made of fine cloth in all styles. When soiled, reverse, wear again, then discard. Ten collars or five pairs of cuffs for 25 cents. They look and fit better than any other kind.

ASK THE DEALERS FOR THEM.

If not found at the stores send six cents for sample collar and cuffs, naming style and size. A trial invariably results in continued use. Reversible Collar Co., 79 Franklin St. New York

DAVE CHUBBY ANGIE MADEIRA MURIEL TASSO

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite WHITE BRONZE till you investigate. More artistic and enduring; less expensive. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

NO MOSS GROWING. NO CRUMBLING. NO CLEANING. NO CRACKING.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

$60 Sewing Machines for $18.

We sell every reliable sewing Machine made. We employ no agents, pay no commission, buy for cash. In large quantities, which enables us to save you from $25 to $40 on any Sewing Machine you may select. All machines brand new, guaranteed latest improved, with all attachments, and warranted for 10 years. (Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.) Our illustrated catalogue given full particulars, and will be mailed free. Don't think of buying a machine before investigating our catalogue. Address: J. N. HOOK & CO., A CINCINNATI, O.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Most Durable and Decorative.
Suitable for all buildings. Send us designs, suitable for all buildings. Send us designs, H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., New York for men with small capital. 250-page catalogue of Stamped Steel Ceilings, hereof, and new Household Goods, for men with small capital. 250-page catalogue of Stamped Steel Ceilings, hereof, and new Household Goods, for men with small capital. 250-page catalogue of Stamped Steel Ceilings, hereof, and new Household Goods, for men with small capital.

GOOD PAY

McALLISTER, Mfg. Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Bemis Sanitarium.

The home of the Original Absorption Treatment.

OFFICE NO. 1 AND MARION HOUSE.

THE BEMIS PLACE.

MARION COTTAGE

BEMIS COTTAGE

SUNSHINE COTTAGE.

OFFICE NO. 2.

Established 1880. The largest and most successful institution in America. Hundreds successfully treated without knife or risk.

Blindness Can Be Prevented.

There is no waiting to be blind. The Absorption Treatment has proven a boon to thousands, often said to have incurable diseases of eyes and lids. 9,000 treatments were given at above institution last month. Among those treated we find many prominent ministers and professional men from all parts of the country. Over 4,000 are now being successfully treated by mail—all free of charge. A new lease of life and health has been given them. A. B. COLVIN, Treasurer of New York, and a resident of Glens Falls, says: "The history of The Bemis Sanitarium and its advance by marvelous strides is due to Edward H. Bemis, Eye Specialist, whose marvelous success makes his name familiar to thousands all over the United States, and in many foreign lands, and of speed him."

PAMPHLETS FREE, explaining the treatment for impaired vision and diseased eyes. Address THE BEMIS SANITARIUM, Glens Falls, N. Y. We have no Branch Offices.

Skin Diseases are Positively Cured

BY

PALMER'S

"SKIN-SUCCESS"
TRADE MARK REGISTERED Ointment

For over 50 years this Ointment has been healing acute cases of Eczema, Salt Rheum, Scrofula, Acne, Erysipelas, or the simpler forms, Pimples, Blackheads, Dandruff, etc.

MAILED FOR 25 CENTS.

anywhere, and if you are not completely satisfied with its work after a trial, return it and

WE WILL REFUND YOUR MONEY.

Palmer's "SKIN SUCCESS" Ointment draws out the disease—does not drive it back into the blood. For sale by all druggists, or mailed on above offer. Pamphlets and full particulars sent free.

THE MORGAN DRUG CO.,
1512 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

You will get a new notion of what a lamp chimney can be, when you use a Macbeth; and of what it can do, when you get the right one. Get the Index.

Write Macbeth Pittsburgh Pa

AGENTS

Send 20 cents for sample of "Perfection Cake This." Catalog of new Household Goods, and sample free of our new specialty. Great seller. RICHARDSON MFG. CO., 6th St., Bath, N. Y.

FREE.

We direct special attention to the remarkable statement.

The late R. Penn, the noted oculist, to Mrs. J. H. Moore, New Albany, Ind. Dear Madam: I recommend the Macbeth, have tried it, and know it to be the best. He says it is so by it, and has so eight years known of my being cured of the worst cases. I all get it. Yours truly, R. Penn, Eureka Springs, Ark., May 1894. We have reliable assurance that the statement is genuine and that Dr. J. H. Moore, a reputable physician. — Cincinnati Standard.

MEDICINES

For Three Months' Treatment FREE.

This very liberal offer having been remarkably successful last year, I have decided to renew it, and will for a short time give medicines for three months' treatment of Asthma, Hay Fever, and other ailments. Question form and particulars, add J. H. Moore, M.D., Dept. K3, Cincinnati, O.

ASTHMA

and HAY FEVER
A Permanent Cure Guaranteed.
Circular for home treatment.
GEORGE J. WEST, M.D., 610 Fifth Avenue, New York.

WATCH AND CHAIN FOR ONE DOLLAR

Boys and Girls can get a Watch, also a Chain and Clasp, for one dollar. Packages of Blaine's Watch, also a Chain and Clasp, for one dollar. Send your full address by mail, and we will forward the Blaine's Watch, also a Chain and Clasp, for one dollar. BLAINE CO., Box 1, Concord, N. H.

Liquor Habit Cured

Wonderful recent discovery! Cured by and permanently. $10.00 or $15.00 more when cured. Are you looking for business? Will send the formula for $10.00. C. A. PARSONS, 154 Commercial St., Boston.

WEAK CHRISTIANS!

body Declares that Bible Study is the Church's Greatest Need.

MY I, through the columns of your paper, give voice to the profound conviction that the greatest need of the Church of Christ to-day is the study of the Word of God. Everywhere I go, meeting with weak Christians, those who "try" to be saved; those who have assurance of salvation and are utterly powerless to reach about them who are without God and help in the world—and that they are not grounded and settled in truth.

It is not need to be reminded of Paul's word to the Ephesian elders: "I commend you to God and to the Word of God, which is able to build you up and give you an inheritance among all who are sanctified?"

Some measure to meet this need and some who through the study of the Word of God desire to be "thoroughly furnished to every good work," there has been opened in Northfield a training school. Here young women and those desiring to enter on some form of Christian work, may prepare themselves to be "the Master's use," through study of the Word, methods of work and contact with experienced in winning souls and living others. This school being held in the large Northfield hotel, we are able to accommodate a large number of students. The fall term begins October 1st. We would be glad to hear from any who wish to fit themselves for work in the vineyard. Circulars will be supplied on application.

D. L. Moody.

THE BOWERY MISSION

and Young Men's Home.

Lited at 105 Bowery, New York City.

(operated under the auspices of The Christian Herald.)

One hundred and fifty beds, Restaurant, and Free Dispensary. Women's Tea and Gospel Service, Saturday 2 P. M.; Gospel Meetings every evening in the Sunday Services, 10 A. M. and 8 P. M.

Recitation of last Annual Statement.

Open Meetings Held	337
Aggregate Attendance	80,230
Individual Conversions	5,137
Out-Boys Sheltered in Lodging House	10,913
Caldered in Restaurant	628,673
Admitted to Free Dispensary	2,300
Emergency food for	1,200
Parties Attendance (three months)	770
Benefit at Mrs. Boyd's Women's
Reception	2,300
Individual Conversions at same	250
Receipts	50,850

Following contributions have been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the Mission since last issue:

Unacknowledged (corrected)	$540.90
From the readers of the C. H., E. Shelburne	1.00
Circle of K. D. & Sons, Oswego	2.00
W. Getchell	3.00
W. Getchell	1.00
W. Getchell	10.00
Lehrer	1.00
Needham	1.00
E. Brooklyn	3.00
Hohny Park	3.00
an	1.00
erchantville	2.00
dia Holmes	3.00
DeBower	2.00
Rockaway	1.00
hook	1.00
Needham	1.00
	592.90

Contributions will be duly acknowledged in these columns.

Buddhist Logic.

It is one of the strongest weapons of the Buddhists of India, in arguing in support of their peculiar beliefs. It sometimes happens that their logic recoils upon themselves unexpectedly. A Christian, in talking with a disciple of Buddha, the latter expressed an utter disbelief in the Christian's God and heaven, because he could be located anywhere. There his attention was called to a Buddhist sutra. "The Questions of King Mirabha." "Venerable Nagasena, where is wisdom dwell?" "where, O king?" "en, sir, there is no such thing as wisdom." "ere does the wind dwell, O king?" "anywhere, sir." "there is no such thing as the wind." "I answered, Nagasena."

The Oriental mind, the logic was irrelevant, and the Buddhist, though still believing, was silenced.

LIKE A MIRACLE

How a Locomotor Ataxia Sufferer Was Cured.

From the Evening News, Detroit, Mich.

James Crocket, a sturdy old Scotchman, living in Detroit, Mich., at 88 Montcalm Street, was asked about his wonderful cure.

"First," he said, "I must tell you something of my life before my almost fatal sickness. I was born in Scotland in 1822, and came to this country in 1848. I am a marine engineer by trade. In 1872 I was in the employ of the Cleveland Navigation Co., and for fifteen years I was chief engineer on one of their big passenger steamers. My first boat was the K. N. Rice, which was burned at the docks. Then I was transferred to the Rubie, which was chartered to make the run between Detroit and Cleveland.

"I bought out the new steamer the 'City of the Straits,' and for years acted as her chief engineer. It is a great responsibility, the position of chief engineer on those big passenger palaces. Thousands of lives are held in the keeping of the engineer. The anxiety causes a great nervous strain, and the strictest attention is necessary. Not for a moment must he lose his watchfulness.

"For fifteen years I carefully watched the big engines and boilers without a single accident, and only noticed that I was getting nervous. Suddenly without warning I was taken sick, and in less than a week I was prostrated. I had the best of physicians. I grew gradually worse, and at the council of doctors, they said I had nervous prostration, and had destroyed my whole nervous system and would never be able to be up again. They said I had worn myself out by the long nervous strain caused by watching and worrying about the machinery. For three long years I was unable to move from my bed without assistance. The doctor said I had locomotor ataxia, and would never be able to walk again.

"The pains and suffering I experienced during those years are almost indescribable. My wife used to put eight or ten hot water bags around me to stop the pain. Those that came to see me bid me good-bye when they left me, and I was given up. The doctors said nothing more could be done for me.

"We tried every known remedy, and my wife kept reading the articles about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People to me. Finally she said they only cost 50 cents, and she wanted to know if I would try them. To please her I consented, and the first box gave me relief. I continued to use them for about two years before I could get strength enough to walk. It came slow but sure, but what I am to-day is due wholly to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

"I am nearly seventy-five years old to-day, and there is not a man in the whole city that can kick higher or walk further than I can to-day. If any one has locomotor ataxia that reads this, let them come and see me to-day. Can you tell me a man to-day in this big city that can do better than that?" said Mr. Crocket, as he kicked the reporter's hat, which was held high above his head.

"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People made me what I am to-day. I only wish I could persuade others to do as I did, and take them before it is too late."

(Signed) "JAMES CROCKET."

Before me, a Notary Public, personally appeared James Crocket, who signed and swore to the above statement as being true in every particular.

ROBERT E. HULL, Jr., Notary Public, Wayne County, Mich.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N.Y., for 50c. a box, or six boxes for $2.50.

From the Land of the Kangaroo

Where Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption are Unknown.

"HYOMEI"

Nature's Own Remedy

It creates the same conditions in the atmosphere of your home as found in that distant land. The first and only treatment for diseases of the respiratory organs ever endorsed by the medical profession.

Physicians have found "Hyomei" the only germicide which kills the bacilli of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption. They have also discovered that the Australian Dry Air Treatment is the only way by which all the diseased parts of the head, throat and lungs can be reached and cured. So positive of this have they become that not one physician in good standing in medical society can be found to-day who will advise to treat these diseases by the old methods—sprays, douches, atomizers or steam vapors—all such treatments being considered worthless, as moisture of any kind can not enter the bronchial tubes or lungs. Not only this, they have proved positively dangerous, as nine out of every ten persons who suffer from deafness and loss of sense of taste and smell, can trace the beginning of these afflictions to the time when they commenced the use of such barbarous methods of treating the delicate air passages.

"HYOMEI" Cures by Inhalation.

It is the one treatment indorsed by the physicians. It is the one treatment which does not require the use of sprays and atomizers. It is the one treatment which the manufacturers have enough confidence in to guarantee.

It is Nature's own remedy. Taken with the air you breathe, it reaches all the parts affected, killing the disease germs of Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, Coughs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Rose Cold and Hay Fever at once, and bringing such relief to the sufferer as can be obtained in no other way.

There is no danger, no risk. Your money is refunded if it fails to relieve.

"Hyomei" Inhaler Outfit $1.00. Extra Bottles "Hyomei" 50c. "Hyomei" Balm, a wonderful healer, 25c. Sold by all druggists or sent by mail.

R. T. BOOTH & CO., 23 East 20th St., New York.

Don't fire your barn!

Drop a common lantern and it's done. The lanterns made by the STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN CO. have a Patent Safety Attachment, assuring entire freedom from this danger. They are perfect lanterns. They can be filled, lighted, regulated and extinguished without removing the globe.

Buy them of your dealer. He has them, or can get them if you insist. Send for our descriptive lamp catalogue. Mention this paper.

STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN COMPANY, Syracuse, N. Y.

FREE $150.00 IN CASH.

We print here a list of words. They are sets of letters jumbled together, from which can be made the names of cities in the United States. For instance, CGOIHAC can be transposed into Chicago, and so on down the list. We will give:

- First Prize in Cash—$50.00 to ten persons first sending correct answers.
- Second Prize in Cash—$50.00 to next 20 persons sending correct answers.
- Third Prize in Cash—$50.00 to next 50 persons sending correct answers.

Should more than the required number send correct answers, the awards will be made according to date letter is mailed, hence it is advisable that your letter should be among the first. You can win one of these prizes if you are quick and use your brains. The above rewards are given free as an inducement to read New Ideas, a handsome 16-page illustrated journal covering an entirely new field. It gives information about the latest inventions and progress in science, illustrating the most striking novelties for business and household use. Its subscription price is the only cheap thing about it. Send answer to-day!

OUR CONDITIONS.—You must send with your answer 25 cents (stamps or silver) for a Six Months' Trial Subscription to New Ideas.

ALL SURE OF A PRIZE.

Aside from the prizes above named, we will give a special prize to each person who sends an answer, whether correct or not, provided that 25 cents in silver or stamps are sent for six months' subscription to New Ideas. These special prizes are awarded along the line of Novelties, Music, Decorative Art, History and Fiction. Be sure to state in letter which you want. This contest will close Saturday, Oct. 30th, and names of prize winners will be announced in Dec. number of New Ideas. Address New Ideas, Sta. K, 115 Philadelphia, Pa.

SAVE 1/2 YOUR FUEL

By using our (store pipe) RADIATOR. With its 120 Cross Tubes, ONE stove or furnace does the work of TWO. Drop postal for proofs from prominent men.

TO INTRODUCE OUR RADIATOR, the first order from each neighborhood filled at WHOLESALE price, and secures an agency. Write at once.

ROCHESTER RADIATOR COMPANY, 12 Furnace St., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Bale Your Hay

A reliable HAND HAY PRESS. Cheap, Simple and very Strong. THREE SIZES. Manufactured only by HOBSON & CO., No. 4 Stone St., New York.

Hens with any Grit

Will lay eggs, but with MANN'S Granite Crystal Grit and MANN'S Green Bone Cutter, they lay twice as many. Get it now! Mann's Grit produces a foot that gives wonderful results as EGG MAKERS. They have no equal.

MANN'S BONE CUTTERS have world wide fame. Cash or installments. Catalog free if name this paper.

F. W. MANN CO., Milford, Mass.

"Eli" Baling Presses

38 Styles & Sizes for Horse and Steam Power. Hay or Straw. 46 Inch Feed Opening. Power Leverage 64 to 1. STEEL. Largest line in the world. Send for Catalogue. JOLLINS PLOW CO., 1137 Hampshire St., Quincy, Ill.

FREE TO BALD HEADS.

We will make a part of our information how to get rid of a bald head, stop falling hair, and restore the scalp to its original condition. Write for our free booklet.

Allenheim Medical Dispensary, Dept. N. A., Box 779, Chattanooga, O.

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 PURE

High priced toilet soaps cost more than the Ivory, not because the soap itself is any better, but by reason of the expensive wrappings, boxes and perfume. Then the profit on toilet soaps is much greater.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINT.

EXTRA SPECIAL OFFER!

Publication of THE AMERICAN EDUCATOR is unavoidably delayed until October 1 to 10. This delay would be much regretted but for the fact that it has enabled us to bring several important subjects right down to the present month—notably the new Klondike Gold Fields, of which a complete account will be given, with the only accurate map in existence, prepared since August 1 by our special expert of the U. S. Survey. We therefore extend our advance sale until October 15, at which date prices will positively be advanced, as already announced. Remember, this grand new work stands absolutely alone in its completeness, accuracy and up-to-date character. No other book, no matter how large or costly, will tell you one-half as much about the live questions of to-day—men and things you must know about.

EXTENDED TO OCTOBER 15

You Need this Work, Though You Have a Dozen Older Ones.

Send for Sample Pages.

UP TO DATE—1897

AMERICAN EDUCATOR

combines the essential features of a complete general Encyclopedia, a Pronouncing Dictionary, a Library of Biography and a Gazetteer of the World. It is the work of 200 prominent American scholars and specialists, is based upon the latest reports and statistics up to date of issue. Two thirds of the subject matter has been written since Jan. 1, 1897—a marvelous performance—and special attention has been given late subjects of 1897, on which all other books are necessarily silent. Until October 15 an advance deposit of only

$1.00

Secures the Set.

at less than one-third the regular price, the remainder being payable at the rate of a few cents daily. No other work will tell you how to photograph in 3 colors; how to calculate the gear of your "bike"; what Edison and Tesla have discovered in electrical science during 1897; meteorology, astronomy, bacteriology, agricultural chemistry, and all the other useful sciences up to date and by the greatest living specialists; Hawaii, Cuba and Greece, up to September, 1897; how to pitch a "curved" ball; farm insects and household pests—how to destroy them; Andreev's and Nansen's Polar researches; how microbes ripen cheese; population of countries, States, counties, cities, towns and villages; from special reports of 1897; biographies of living men of recent fame, &c. Nine out of every ten persons who have received sample pages have ordered the work, convinced that it is precisely what we claim, viz.: complete, reliable, practically helpful, and the only thoroughly up-to-date

Encyclopædia, Library of Biography, Dictionary and Gazetteer

Partial List of Editors and Contributors.

Prof. Chas. S. Morris, of Academy of Natural Sciences.
Prof. Daniel H. Branton, A. M., M. D., of University of Pa.
Prof. Marcus Benjamin Ph. D., of Smithsonian Institution.
